It in fine doth miniſter a raviſhing delight, abundantly able to ſupply the defect of any other pleaſures, and to allay the ſmart of any pains whatever; rendring thereby the meaneſt eſtate more acceptable and pleaſant, than any proſperity without it can be. So that if we be truly devout we can hardly be diſcontent: It is diſcoſting from God by a neglect of devotion, or by a negligence therein, that doth expoſe us to the incurſions of worldly regret and ſorrow.

Theſe are general Remedies and Duties both in this and all other regards neceſſary, the which yet we may be induced to perform in contemplation of this happy fruit (contentedneſs) ariſing from them. Farther,

4. It ſerveth toward production of contentedneſs to reflect much upon our imperfection, unworthineſs and guilt; ſo as thereby to work in our hearts a lively ſenſe of them, and a hearty ſorrow for them; this will divert our ſadneſs into its right channel, this will drown our leſſer grief by the influx of a greater. It is the nature of a greater apprehenſion or pain incumbent to extinguiſh in a manner, and ſwallow up the ſenſe of a leſſer, although in it ſelf grievous; as he that is under a fit of the ſtone doth ſcarce feel a pang of the gout; he that is aſſaulted by a wolf will not regard the biting of a flea. Whereas then of all evils and miſchiefs moral evils are incomparably far the greateſt, in nature the moſt ugly and abominable, in conſequence the moſt hurtful and horrible; ſeeing (in St. Chryſoſtome's language) Excepting ſin, there is nothing grievous or terrible among humane things; not poverty, not ſickneſs, not diſgrace, not that which ſeemeth the moſt extream of all evil, death it ſelf; thoſe being names only among ſuch as philoſophate, names of calamity, void of reality; but the real calamity this, to be at variance with God, and to do that which diſpleaſeth him; ſeeing evidently according to juſt eſtimation no evil beareth any proportion to the evil of Sin, if we have a due ſenſe thereof, we can hardly be affected with any other accident: If we can keep our minds intent upon the heinous nature, and the lamentable conſequences of Sin, all other evils cannot but ſeem exceedingly light and inconſiderable; we cannot but apprehend it a very ſilly and unhandſome thing to reſent or regard them: What (ſhall we then judge) is poverty in compariſon to the want of a good conſcience? what is Sickneſs compared to diſtemper of mind, and decay of ſpiritual ſtrength? what is any diſappointment to the being defeated and overthrown by temptation? what any loſs to the being deprived of God's love and favour? what any diſgrace to the being out of eſteem and reſpect with God? what any unfaithfulneſs or inconſtancy of friends to having deſerted or betrayed our own ſoul? what can any danger ſignify to that of eternal miſery, incurred by offending God? what preſſure can weigh againſt the load of guilt, or what pain equal that of ſtinging remorſe? In fine, what condition can be ſo bad as that of a wretched Sinner? any caſe ſurely is tolerable, is deſirable, Οὐδὲν δεινὸν τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων, ἀλλ' ἢ ἁμαρτία μόνη· οὐ πενία, οὐ νόσος, οὐχ ὕβρεις οὐκ ἐπήρεια, οὐκ ἀτιμία, &c. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. ε'. γ'. 6.

Vid. ad Olymp. *Ep.*13. ad Theod. 1.

deſirable, is lovely and ſweet in compariſon to this: Would to God, may a man in this caſe reaſonably ſay, that I were poor and forelorn as any beggar; that I were covered all over with botches and blains as any Lazar; that I were bound to paſs my days in an hoſpital or a dungeon; might I be chained to an oar, might I lye upon the rack, ſo I were clear and innocent: Such thoughts and affections if reflecting on our ſinful doings and ſtate do ſuggeſt and impreſs, what place can there be for reſentment of other petty croſſes?

Contrition alſo upon this ſcore is productive of a certain ſweetneſs and joy apt to quaſh or to allay all worldly grief: as it worketh a ſalutary repentance not to be repented of, ſo it therewith breedeth a ſatisfactory comfort, which doth ever attend repentance: He that is very ſenſible of his guilt, cannot but conſequently much value the remedy thereof, mercy; and thence earneſtly be moved to ſeek it; then in contemplation of divine goodneſs, and conſidering God's gracious promiſes, will be apt to conceive faith and hope, upon his imploring mercy, and reſolution to amend; thence will ſpring up a chearful ſatisfaction, ſo poſſeſſing the heart, as to expel or to exclude other diſpleaſures: A holy and a worldly ſadneſs cannot well conſiſt together.

2 Cor. 7. 10. Vid. Chryſ. ad Demet. & ad Steletch. Tom. 6.

5. Another good inſtrument of contentedneſs is ſedulous application of our minds to honeſt employment. Honeſt ſtudies and cares divert our minds, and drive ſad thoughts from them: They chear our ſpirits with wholeſome food and pleaſant entertainments; they yield good fruits, and a ſucceſs accompanied with ſatisfaction, which will extinguiſh or temper diſcontent: While we are ſtudious or active, diſcontent cannot eaſily creep in, and ſoon will be ſtifled.

Idleneſs is the great mother and the nurſe of diſcontent; it layeth the mind open for melancholly conceits to enter; it yieldeth harbour to them, and entertainment there; it depriveth of all the remedies and allays which buſineſs affordeth.

Reciprocally diſcontent alſo begetteth idleneſs, and by it groweth: They are like ice and water, ariſing each out of the other: We ſhould therefore not ſuffer any ſadneſs ſo to encroach upon us, as to hinder us from attending to our buſineſs (the honeſt works and ſtudies of our calling) for it thereby will grow ſtronger and more hardly vincible.

Mater me genuit.

6. A like expediment to remove diſcontent is good company. It not onely ſometimes miniſtreth advices and arguments for content, but raiſeth the drooping ſpirit, erecting it to a loving complaiſance, drawing it out towards others in expreſſions of kindneſs, and yielding delight in thoſe which we receive from others, infecting us by a kind of contagion with good humour, and inſtilling pleaſant Idea's into our fancy, agreeably diverting us from ſad and irkſome thoughts: Diſcontent affecteth retirement and ſolitude, as its element and food; good company partly ſtarveth it by ſmothering ſad thoughts, partly cureth it by exhilarating diſcourſe. No man hardly can find diſpleaſure, while friendly converſation entertaineth him; no man returneth from it without ſome refreſhment and eaſe of mind.

Ἀγαθὴ δὲ παραίφασις ἐστιν ἑταίρου.

7. Having right and lowly conceits of our ſelves is a moſt ſure guardian and procurer of content: For anſwerable to a man's judgment of himſelf are his reſentments of the dealing he meeteth with from God or man. He that thinks meanly as he ought of himſelf, will not eaſily be offended at any thing; any thing, will he think, is good enough for me; I deſerve nothing from God, I cannot deſerve much of man; if I have any competence of proviſion for my life, any tolerable uſage, any reſpect, it is more than my due, I am bound to be thankful : But he that conceiteth highly (that is vainly) of himſelf, nothing will ſatisfie him ; nothing, thinks he, is good enough for him, or anſwerable to his deſerts ; no body can yield him ſufficient reſpect ; any ſmall neglect diſturbeth and enrageth him ; he cannot endure that any man ſhould thwart his intereſt, ſhould croſs his humour, ſhould diſſent from his opinion ; Hence ſeeing the world will not eaſily be induced to conceit of him as he doth of himſelf, nor to comply with his humours and pretences, it is impoſſible that he ſhould be content.

8. It conduceth to this purpoſe to contemplate and reſent the publick ſtate of things, the intereſt of the World, of our Country, of God's Church. The ſenſe of publick calamities will drown that of private, as unworthy to be conſidered or compared with them : The ſenſe of publick proſperity will allay that of particular misfortune. How (will a wiſe and good man ſay) can I deſire to proſper and flouriſh, while the State is in danger or diſtreſs ? how can I grieve, ſeeing my Country is in good condition ? is it juſt, is it handſome that I ſhould be a Non-conformiſt either in the publick ſorrow or joy ? Indeed

9. All Hearty Charity doth greatly alleviate diſcontent. If we bear ſuch a good will to our Neighbour as to have a ſincere compaſſion of his evils, and complacence in his good, our caſe will not much afflict us. If we can appropriate and enjoy the proſperity, the wealth, the reputation, of our Neighbour, by delighting in them, what can we want ; what can diſpleaſe us? If our heart be enlarged in pity for the misfortunes of others, it cannot be contracted with grief for our own : Our ſorrow, like water, being thus diffuſed, cannot be ſo deep but it will be more fruitful ; it will produce ſuch effects as will comfort and pleaſe us ; It is a ſtingy ſelfiſhneſs which maketh us ſo very ſenſible of croſſes, and ſo uncapable of comfort.

10. Again, if we will attain contentment, we muſt take heed of ſetting our affection upon any worldly thing whatever, ſo as very highly to prize it, very paſſionately to affect it, very eagerly to purſue it ; ſo as to conceive our happineſs in any meaſure to hang on it, or ſtick thereto: If there be any ſuch thing, we ſhall be diſappointed in the acquiſt, or the retention of it ; or we ſhall be diſſatisfied in its enjoyment.

So to adhere in affection to any thing is an adulterous diſloyalty toward our Maker and beſt Friend ; from which it is expedient that we ſhould be reclaimed ; whence God (in juſt anger, or in kind mercy) will be apt to croſs us in our attempts to get it, or to deprive us of its poſſeſſion ; whence the diſpleaſure will follow, which always attendeth a ſeparation from things we love. But if we be ſuffered to obtain or to retain it, we ſhall ſoon find diſſatisfaction therein ; being either diſguſted with ſome bitterneſs in it (ſuch as doth lurk in every ſenſible good) or being cloyed with its luſciouſneſs : it after a ſmall enjoyment will become either diſtaſtful or inſipid.

This, according to continual experience, is the nature of all things, pleaſant onely to ſenſe or fancy, preſently to ſatiate : No beauty can long pleaſe the eye, no melody the ear, no delicacy the palate, no curioſity the fancy ; a little time doth waſt away, a ſmall uſe doth wear out the pleaſure, which at firſt they afford : Novelty commendeth and ingratiateth them ; diſtance repreſenteth them fair and lovely ; the want or abſence of them rendreth them deſirable ; but the preſence of them dulleth their grace, the poſſeſſion of them deadneth the appetite to them.

New objects with a gentle and grateful touch warble upon the corporeal organs, or excite the ſpirits into a pleaſant friſk of motion ; but when uſe hath levigated the organs, and made the way ſo ſmooth and eaſie that the ſpirits paſs without any ſtop, thoſe objects are no longer felt, or very faintly; ſo that the pleaſure ceaſeth.

Onely thoſe things which reaſon (religious and ſound reaſon) doth approve, do yield a laſting (undecaying, unalterable) ſatisfaction; if we ſet our affections on them, we cannot fail of content: In ſeeking them we cannot be diſappointed, for God (without any reſervation or exception) hath promiſed to beſtow them upon thoſe who ſeriouſly and diligently ſeek them: nor can we be diſpoſſeſſed of them; God will not take them away, and they lie beyond the reach of any other hand: Having them then we cannot but fully and durably be ſatisfied in the fruition of them; the longer we have them, the more we ſhall like them; the more we taſt them, the better we ſhall reliſh them: time waſteth not, but improveth the ſenſe of their unfading beauty and indefectible ſweetneſs.

11. It is of great influence toward contentedneſs with an earneſt and impartial regard to contemplate things, as they are in themſelves, deveſted of tragical appearances, in which they are wrapt by our own inconſiderate fancy, or which vulgar prejudices do throw upon them: As all things, looked upon by the corporeal eye through a miſt, do ſeem bigger then in reality they are, ſo to the eye of our mind all things (both good and evil) ſeem hugely enlarged, when viewed through the foggs of our dusky imagination, or of popular conceit. If we will eſteem that very good, which with a gay appearance dazleth our imagination, or which the common admiration and applauſe of men recommendeth, the moſt vain and worthleſs, the moſt dangerous, the moſt miſchievous things often will appear ſuch; and if we pleaſe to accompt thoſe things greatly bad which look ugly or horridly to imagination, which are defamed by the injudicious part of men; or which men commonly do loath, do fret at, do wail for, we ſhall take the beſt, moſt innocent, moſt uſeful, moſt wholeſome things for ſuch, and accordingly theſe errours of our minds will be followed by a perverſe practice, productive of diſſatisfaction and diſpleaſure to us. No man ever will be ſatisfied, who values things according to the price which fancy ſetteth on them, or according to the rate they bear in the common market; who diſtinguiſheth not between good and famous, bad and infamous; who is affected accordingly with the want of thoſe things, which men call good, with the preſence of thoſe which they term bad.

But if we judge of things as God declareth, as impartial and cautious reaſon dictateth, as experience diligently obſerved (by their fruits and conſequences) diſcovereth them to be, we ſhall have little cauſe to be affected by the want, or preſence of any ſuch thing which is wont to produce diſcontent.

12. We ſhould to this purpoſe take eſpecial care to ſearch out through our condition, and pick thence the good that is therein, making the beſt we can of it, enjoying and improving it; but what is inconvenient or offenſive therein declining it, diminiſhing it, tempering it ſo well as we may, always forbearing to aggravate it. There are in nature divers ſimples, which have in them ſome part, or ſome juice very noxious, which being ſevered and caſt away, the reſt becometh wholeſome food; neither indeed is there any thing in nature ſo venomous, but that from it by art and induſtry may be extracted ſomewhat medicinal, and of good uſe, when duly applied, ſo in moſt apparent evils lieth incloſed much good, which if we carefully ſeparate (caſting away the intermixed droſs and refuſe) refuſe) we ſhall find benefit, and taſt comfort thence ; there is nothing ſo throughly bad, as being well ordered, and opportunely miniſtred will not do us much good : So if from poverty we caſt away or bear quietly that which a little pincheth the ſenſe, or grateth on the fancy, and enjoy the undiſtractedneſs of mind, the liberty, the leiſure, the health, the ſecurity from envy, obloquy, ſtrife, which it affordeth, how ſatisfactory may it become to us ? The like conveniencies are in diſgrace, diſappointment, and other ſuch evils, which being improved may endear them to us : Even Sin it ſelf (the worſt of evils, the onely true evil) may yield great benefits to us ; it may render us ſober and lowly in our own eyes, devout in imploring mercy, and thankful to God for it ; merciful and charitable toward others in our opinions and cenſures ; more laborious in our good practice, and watchful over our ſteps : And if this deadly poiſon well adminiſtred yieldeth effects ſo exceedingly beneficial and ſalutary, what may other harmleſs (though unhandſome, and unpleaſant) things do, being skilfully managed ?

13. It is a moſt effectual means of procuring content, and curing diſcontent, to rowſe and fortify our faith in God, by, with moſt ſerious attention, reflecting upon the arguments and experiments, which aſſure us concerning God's particular providence over all, over us. It is really infidelity (in whole, or in part, no faith, or a ſmall and weak faith) which is at the root, as of all ſin, ſo particularly of diſcontent : For how is it poſſible, did we firmly believe, and with any meaſure of attention conſider that God taketh care of us, that he tendereth our good, that he is ready at hand to ſuccour us, (how then, I ſay, is it poſſible) that we ſhould fear any want, or grievouſly reſent any thing incident ? But we like St. Peter are ὀλιγόπιστοι, of little faith, therefore we cannot walk on the ſea ; but in deſpair ſink down : Sometimes our faith is buried in oblivion or careleſneſs ; we forget, or mind not that there is a Providence ; but look on things as if they fell out caſually or fatally ; thence expect no redreſs from Heaven, ſo tumble into deſpair and diſconſolateneſs. Sometimes becauſe God doth not in our time and our way relieve us or gratifie us we ſlip into profane doubt, queſtioning in our hearts whether he doth indeed regard us, or whether any relief is to be expected from him ; not conſidering, that onely God can tell when, and how it is beſt to proceed ; that often it is not expedient our wiſhes ſhould be granted ; that we are not wiſe enough, or juſt enough to appoint or chuſe for our ſelves ; that it is impoſſible for God to gratify every man ; that it would be a mad World, if God in his government thereof ſhonld ſatisfie all our deſires.

We forget how often God hath ſuccoured us in our needs and ſtraits, how continually he hath provided for us ; how patiently and mercifully he hath born with us, what miracles of bounty and mercy he hath performed in our behalf ; we are like that diſtruſtful and inconſiderate people, Pſal. 78. 42. who remembred not the hand of God, nor the day when he delivered them ;
Pſal. 106. 7, 13, 21. remembred not the multitude of his mercies ; but ſoon forgat his works, and waited not for his counſel ; They forgat God their Saviour, who had done great things in Egypt, wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things in the red Sea.

From ſuch diſpoſitions in us our diſcontents do ſpring ; and we cannot cure them, but by recollecting our ſelves from ſuch forgetfulneſs and neg-Pſal. 22. 19. 46. 1. 81. 1. 59. 7. 144. 1. ligence ; by ſhaking off ſuch wicked doubts and diſtruſts ; by fixing our hearts and hopes on him, who alone can help us ; who is our ſtrength, the Pſal. 73. 26. 27. 1. 140. 7. ſtrength of our heart, of our life, of our ſalvation.

Of him (to conclude) let us humbly implore, that he in mercy would beſtow upon us grace to ſubmit in all things to his Will, to acquieſce in all his diſpenſations, gladly to embrace and undergo whatever he allotteth to us; in every condition, and for all events befalling us heartily to adore, thank and bleſs him: Even ſo to the Ever-bleſſed God, our gracious maker and preſerver, be eternally rendred all glory, thankſgiving and praiſe. Amen.

SERMON X.

Of Patience.

1 PET. 2. 21.

Becauſe alſo Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye ſhould follow his ſteps.

IN theſe Words two things appear eſpecially obſervable; a duty implied (the duty of patience) and a reaſon expreſſed, which enforceth the practice of that duty (the example of Chriſt.) We ſhall (uſing no more Preface, or circumſtance) firſt briefly, in way of explication and direction, touch the duty it ſelf, then more largely deſcribe, and urge the example.

The word patience hath, in common uſage, a double meaning, taken from the reſpect it hath unto two ſorts of objects, ſomewhat different. As it reſpecteth provocations to anger, and revenge by injuries, or diſcourteſies, it ſignifieth a diſpoſition of mind to bear them with charitable meekneſs; as it relateth to adverſities and croſſes diſpoſed to us by providence, it importeth a pious undergoing and ſuſtaining them. That both theſe kinds of patience may here be underſtood, we may, conſulting and conſidering the context, eaſily diſcern: that which immediately precedeth, If when ye do well, and ſuffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable to God, relateth to good endurance of adverſity; that which preſently followeth, who when he was reviled, reviled not again, when he ſuffered he threatned not, referreth to meek comporting with provocations: The Text therefore, as it looketh backward, doth recommend the patience of adverſities, as forward, the patience of contumelies. But ſeeing both theſe objects are reducible to one more general, comprizing both, that is, things ſeeming evil to us, or offenſive to our ſenſe, we may ſo explicate the duty of patience, as to include them both.

Patience then is that vertue, which qualifieth us to bear all conditions, and all events, by God's diſpoſal incident to us, with ſuch apprehenſions and perſwaſions of mind, ſuch diſpoſitions and affections of heart, ſuch external deportments, and practices of life as God requireth, and good reaſon directeth. Its nature will, I conceive, be underſtood beſt by conſidering the chief acts which it produceth, and wherein eſpecially the practice thereof conſiſteth; the which briefly are theſe.

1. A thorough perſwaſion, that nothing befalleth us by fate, or by chance, or by the meer agency of inferiour cauſes, but that all proceed-
Job 5. 6. eth from the diſpenſation, or with the allowance of God, (that, Affliction
Lam. 3. 38. doth not come forth of the duſt, nor doth trouble ſpring out of the ground; but that all, both good and evil proceedeth out of the mouth of the moſt high)
2 Sam. 16. 10. according as David reflected, when Shimei reviled him; Let him (ſaith the good King) curſe, becauſe the Lord hath ſaid unto him, Curſe David;
Job 1. 21. and as Job, when he was ſpoiled of all his goods, acknowledged, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away.

2. A firm belief, that all occurrences (however adverſe, and croſs to our deſires) are well conſiſtent with the juſtice, wiſdom and goodneſs of God; ſo that we cannot reaſonably diſapprove, repine at, or complain of them; but are bound and ready to avow with the Pſalmiſt, that All his Pſal. 25. 10. 145. 17. paths are mercy and truth; He is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his 2 Kings 20. 19. works; to judge and ſay with Hezekiah, Good is the word of the Lord, Pſal. 119. 75. which thou haſt ſpoken; to confeſs with David unto him, I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right; and that thou in faithfulneſs haſt afflicted me.

3. A full ſatisfaction of mind, that all (even the moſt bitter, and ſad Job 5. 17. accidents) do (according to God's purpoſe) tend, and conduce to our Jam. 1. 12. good; acknowledging the truth of thoſe divine Aphoriſms; Happy is the Prov. 3. 12. man whom God correcteth; whom the Lord loveth he correcteth, even as a Fa-
Heb. 12. 5. Rev. 3. 19. ther the Son, in whom he delighteth. As many as I love I rebuke, and chaſten.

4. An entire ſubmiſſion, and reſignation of our wills to the will of God; ſuppreſſing all rebellious inſurrections, and grievous reſentments of heart againſt his providence; which may diſpoſe us heartily to ſay after Luke 22. 42. our Lord, Let not my will, but thine be done; with good Eli, It is the Lord, 1 Sam. 3. 18. 2 Sam. 15. 26. Let him do what ſeemeth him good; with David, Here I am, let him do to me as ſeemeth good to him; yea even with Socrates, If ſo it pleaſeth God, ſo let it be.

Bearing adverſities calmly, chearfully and courageouſly; ſo as not to be diſcompoſed with anger, or grief; not to be put out of humour, nor to be dejected or diſheartened; but in our diſpoſition of mind to reſemble
2 Cor. 6. 10. the primitive Saints, who were ὡς λυπούμενοι ἀεὶ δὲ χαίροντες, as grieved, but
Heb. 10. 34. always rejoicing; who took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, who accompt-
Jam. 1. 2. ed it all joy when they fell into divers tribulations.

6. A hopeful confidence in God for the removal or eaſement of our afflictions, and for his gracious aid to ſupport them well; agreeable to thoſe
Lam. 3. 26. good rules and precepts? It is good that a man ſhould both hope, and wait
Pſal. 37. 7. quietly for the ſalvation of the Lord; Reſt in the Lord, and wait patiently
27. 14. for him; wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen thine heart; according to the pattern of David, who, in ſuch a caſe, thus Pſal. 42. 5. rouſed and ſtaid himſelf: Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul, and why art thou diſquieted within me? hope thou in God, for I ſhall yet praiſe him for the help of his countenance; and after the holy Apoſtles, who in their moſt for-2 Cor. 4. 8. lorn eſtate could ſay, We are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed, but not in deſpair; perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed.

7. A willingneſs to continue, during God's pleaſure, in our afflicted ſtate, without wearineſs, or irkſome longings for alteration; according Prov. 3. 11. to that advice of the wiſe Man, My ſon, deſpiſe not the chaſtning of the Lord, neither be weary of his correction; and that of the Apoſtle, back'd with our

Lord

Lord's example ; Conſidering him that endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners Heb. 12. 3. againſt himſelf, leſt we be weary, and faint in our minds.

8. A lowly frame of mind (that is, being ſober in our conceits of our ſelves, ſenſible of our unworthineſs, and meanneſs, of our natural frailty, penury and wretchedneſs ; of our manifold defects and miſcarriages in practice ; being meek and gentle, tender and pliable in our temper and frame of ſpirit ; being deeply affected with reverence and dread toward the awful majeſty, mighty power, perfect juſtice and ſanctity of God ; all this) wrought by our adverſity effectually, according to its deſign, quelling our haughty ſtomach, ſoftning our hard hearts, mitigating our peeviſh humours ; according to St. Peter's injunction, Be humbled under 1 Pet. 5. 6. the mighty hand of God ; and God's own approbation joined with a gracious promiſe, To this man will I look ; even to him that is of a poor and con- Ez. 66. 2. trite ſpirit, and trembleth at my word.

9. Reſtraining our Tongues from all diſcontentful complaints, and murmurings, all profane, harſh, unſavoury expreſſions, importing diſpleaſure, or diſſatisfaction in God's dealing toward us, arguing deſparation or diſtruſt in him ; ſuch as were thoſe of the impatient and incredulous Iſraelites ; They ſpake againſt God, and ſaid, can God furniſh a table in Pſal. 78. 19, 20. the wilderneſs ? behold he ſmote the rock, that the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed ; can he give bread alſo, can he provide fleſh for his people ? Such as they uſed, of whom the Prophet ſaid —— When they ſhall be hun- Iſa. 8. 21. gry, they will fret themſelves, and curſe their King, and their God ; ſuch as they were guilty of, whom St. Jude calleth γογγυσαὶ ϗ μεμψίμοιροι, murmur- Jude 16. ers, and querulous perſons (or ſuch as found fault with their lot) that which is ſtiled, charging God fooliſhly ; for abſtaining from which (notwithſtanding the preſſure of his moſt grievous calamities) Job is commended (where 'tis ſaid, Job ſinned not, neither charged God fooliſhly) that Job 1. 22. which the Prophet condemneth as unreaſonable in that expoſtulation ; Wherefore doth the living man complain ? In ſuch caſes we ſhould ſmother Lam. 3. 39. our paſſions in a ſtill and ſilent demeanour, as the Pſalmiſt adviſed, and as Pſal. 37. 7. 46. 10. 4. 4. he practiſed himſelf : I was dumb (ſaith he) and opened not my mouth, becauſe Pſal. 39. 9. it was thy doings. Yea contrariwiſe patience requireth.

10. Bleſſing and praiſing God (that is, declaring our hearty ſatisfaction in God's proceedings with us, acknowledging his wiſdom, juſtice and goodneſs therein, expreſſing a grateful ſenſe thereof, as wholſome and beneficial to us) in conformity to Job, who, upon the loſs of all his comforts, did thus vent his mind : The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken Job 1. 21. away ; bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

11. Abſtaining from all irregular and unworthy courſes toward the removal, or redreſs of our croſſes ; chuſing rather to abide quietly under their preſſure, than by any unwarrantable means to relieve or relaxe our ſelves ; contentedly wearing, rather than violently breaking our yoke, or Jer. 5. 5. burſting our bonds ; rather continuing poor, than ſtriving to enrich our ſelves by fraud or rapine ; rather lying under contempt, than by ſinful or ſordid compliances attempting to gain the favour and reſpect of men ; rather embracing the meaneſt condition, than labouring by any turbulent, unjuſt, or uncharitable practices to amplifie our eſtate ; rather enduring any inconvenience, or diſtreſs, than ſetting our faces toward Egypt, or ha- Jer. 42. 15. ving recourſe to any ſuccour which God diſalloweth ; according to what is replied in that reprehenſion of St. Paul, Now therefore it is utterly a fault 1 Cor. 6. 7. among you, becauſe ye go to Law one with another ; Why do ye not rather take wrong ; why do ye not rather ſuffer your ſelves to be defrauded ? and in that advice of St. Peter ; Let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, com- 1 Pet. 4. 19.

mit the keeping of their ſouls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful creator.

12. A fair behaviour toward the inſtruments and abettors of our affliction; thoſe who brought us into it, or who detain us under it, by keeping off relief, or ſparing to yield the ſuccour which we might expect;
the forbearing to expreſs any wrath or diſpleaſure, to exerciſe any revenge, to retain any grudge, or enmity toward them; but rather even upon that ſcore bearing good-will, and ſhewing kindneſs unto them; unto them, not onely as to our brethren, whom according to the general law of charity we are bound to love, but as to the Servants of God in this particular caſe, or as to the inſtruments of his pleaſure toward us, conſidering that by maligning or miſchiefing them, we do ſignifie ill reſentment of God's dealings with us, and in effect through their ſides, do wound his Providence:
Thus did the pious King demean himſelf, when he was bitterly 2 Sam. 16. 7. reproached, and curſed by Shimei; not ſuffering (upon this accompt) any harm or requital to be offered to him; thus did the holy Apoſtles, who 1 Cor. 4. 12. being reviled did bleſs, being perſecuted did bear it, being defamed did intreat; thus did our Lord deport himſelf toward his ſpiteful adverſaries, who being 1 Pet. 2. 23. reviled did not revile again; when he ſuffered did not threaten, but committed
3. 9. it to him that judgeth righteouſly.

13. Particularly in regard to thoſe, who by injurious and offenſive uſage, do provoke us; patience importeth,

1. That we be not haſtily, over-eaſily, not immoderately, not pertinaciouſly incenſed with anger toward them; according to thoſe divine Jam. 1. 19. Precepts, and Aphoriſms; Be ſlow to wrath; Be not haſty in thy ſpirit to Eccleſ. 7. 9. be angry; for anger reſteth in the boſom of fools. Give place to wrath (that Prov. 16. 32. 14, 17, 29. is, remove it.) Let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and
Rom. 12. 19. evil-ſpeaking be put away from you, with all malice. Ceaſe from anger, let go
Eph. 4. 31, 26. Coloſſ. 3. 8. diſpleaſure, fret not thy ſelf any-wiſe to do evil.

Matt. 5. 21, 24. 2. That we do not in our hearts harbour any ill-will, or ill-wiſhes, or Pſal. 37. 8. ill-deſigns toward them, but that we truly deſire their good, and purpoſe to further it, as we ſhall have ability and occaſion; according to that Law Levit. 19. 18. (even charged on the Jews) Thou ſhalt not bear any grudge againſt the children of thy people; but thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf; and according Matt. 5. 44. to that noble command of our Saviour; Love your enemies, pray for Luke 6. 27. them which deſpitefully uſe you, and perſecute you.

3. That in effect we do not execute any revenge, or for requital do any miſchief to them, either in word or deed; but for their reproaches exchange bleſſings (or good words and wiſhes) for their outrages repay benefits and good turns; according to thoſe Evangelical Rules; Do good to Matt. 5. 44, 39. them that hate you, Bleſs them that curſe you: Bleſs them that perſecute you,
Rom. 12. 14. bleſs and curſe not: See that none render evil for evil: Be pitiful, be courteous,
1 Theſſ. 5. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 9. not rendring evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwiſe bleſſing: If Prov. 25. 21. thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink: Say not I will do to
Rom. 12. 20. him as he hath done to me; I will render to the man according to his work: Say
Prov. 24. 29. 20. 22. thou not I will recompenſe evil, but wait on the Lord, and he ſhall ſave thee,

14. In fine, Patience doth include and produce a general meekneſs and kindneſs of affection, together with an enlarged ſweetneſs, and pleaſantneſs in converſation and carriage toward all men; implying, that, how hard ſoever our caſe, how ſorry or ſad our condition is, we are not therefore angry with the World, becauſe we do not thrive, or flouriſh in it; that we are not diſſatisfied, or diſguſted with the proſperous eſtate of other men; that we are not become ſullen or froward toward any man, be-Rom. 12. 15. cauſe his fortune excelleth ours; but that rather we do rejoice with them that rejoice; we do find complacence, and delight in their good ſucceſs, we

we borrow ſatisfaction and pleaſure from their enjoyments.

In theſe and the like acts, the practice of this vertue (a vertue, which all men, in this ſtate of inward weakneſs, and outward trouble, ſhall have much need and frequent occaſion to exerciſe) conſiſteth; unto which practice, even Philoſophy, natural reaſon, and common ſenſe do ſuggeſt many inducements; the tenour of our holy Faith and Religion do ſupply more and better; but nothing can more clearly direct, or more powerfully excite thereto, than that admirable example, by which our Text doth enforce it: Some principal of thoſe rational inducements we ſhall curſorily touch, then inſiſt upon this example.

It will generally induce us to bear patiently all things incident, if we conſider, That it is the natural right and prerogative of God to diſpoſe of all things, to aſſign our ſtation here, and allot our portion to us; whence it is a moſt wrongful inſolence in us, by complaining of our ſtate, to conteſt his right, or impeach his management thereof: That we are obliged to God's free bounty for numberleſs great benefits and favours; whence it is vile ingratitude to be diſpleaſed for the want of ſome leſſer inconveniences: That God having undertaken, and promiſed to ſupport and ſuccour us, it is a heinous affront to diſtruſt him, and conſequently to be diſſatisfied with our condition: That ſeeing God doth infinitely better underſtand what is good for us, than we can do; he is better affected toward us, and more truly loveth us than we do our ſelves; he with an unqueſtionable right hath an uncontroulable power to diſpoſe of us, it is moſt reaſonable to acquieſce in his choice of our ſtate: That ſince we have no claim to any good, or any pleaſure, and thence in with-holding any, no wrong is done to us, 'tis unjuſt and frivolous to murmur, or grumble; ſince we are, by nature, God's ſervants, it is fit the appointment of our rank, our garb, our diet, all our accommodations, and employments in his family, ſhould be left entirely to his diſcretion and pleaſure: That we being grievous Sinners, leſs than the leaſt of God's mercies, meriting no good, but deſerving ſore puniſhment from him, it is juſt, that we ſhould be highly content and thankful for any thing on this ſide death and damnation: That our afflictions, being the natural fruits and reſults of our choice, or voluntary miſcarriages, it is reaſonable we ſhould blame our ſelves rather than pick quarrels with Providence for them. That our condition, be it what it will, cannot, being duly eſtimated, be extremely bad, or inſupportably grievous; for that as no condition here is perfectly and purely good (not deficient in ſome accommodations, not blended with ſome troubles) ſo there is none that hath not its conveniences and comforts; for that it is our fond conceits, our froward humours, our perverſe behaviours, which create the miſchiefs adherent to any ſtate; for that alſo how forelorn ſoever our caſe is, we cannot fail, if we pleaſe, of a capacity to enjoy goods far more than countervailing all poſſible want of theſe goods, or preſence of theſe evils; we may have the uſe of our reaſon, a good conſcience, hope in God, aſſurance of God's love and favour, abundance of ſpiritual bleſſings here, and a certain title to eternal glory and bliſs hereafter; which if we can have, our condition cannot be deemed uncomfortable. That indeed our adverſity is a thing very good and wholſome, very profitable and deſirable, as a means of breeding, improving and exerciſing the beſt vertues, of preparing us for, and entitling us to the beſt rewards. That our ſtate cannot ever be deſperate, our adverſity probably may not be laſting (there being no connexion between the preſent and the future, viciſſitudes being frequent, all things depending on the arbitrary diſpenſation of God, who doth always pity us, and is apt to relieve us.) That however our affliction will not outlive our ſelves, and certainly muſt ſoon expire with our life. That this World is not a place of perfect convenience, or pure delight; we come not hither to do our will, or enjoy our pleaſure, we are not born to make laws, or Job 5. 7. pick our condition here; but that trouble is natural and proper to us (We 1 Cor. 10. 13. are born thereto, as the ſparks flie upwards.) No tribulation ſeiſeth us, but ſuch as is humane; whence 'tis reaſonable that we contentedly bear the croſſes ſutable to our nature and ſtate. That no adverſity is in kind, or degree, peculiar to us, but if we ſurvey the conditions of other men (of our brethren every where, of our neighbours all about us) and compare our caſe with theirs, we ſhall find, that we have many conſorts and aſſociates in adverſity, moſt as ill, many far worſe beſtead than our ſelves; whence it muſt be a great fondneſs and perverſeneſs to be diſpleaſed that we are not exempted from, but expoſed to bear a ſhare in the common troubles and burthens of mankind. That it hath particularly been the lot of the beſt men (perſons moſt excellent in vertue, and moſt deep in God's favour) to ſuſtain adverſity; and it therefore becometh us willingly and chearfully to accept it. That, in fine, patience it ſelf is the beſt remedy to eaſe us in, to reſcue us from adverſity, for it cannot much annoy us, if we bear it patiently, God will, in mercy, remove it, if we pleaſe him, by demeaning our ſelves well under it; but that impatience doth not at all conduce to our relief, doth indeed exaſperate, and augment our pain: Such conſiderations may induce us to a patience in general reſpecting all ſorts of evils.

There are alſo reaſons particularly diſpoſing to bear injuries and contumelies from men calmly and meekly, without immoderate wrath, rancorous hatred, or ſpiteful revenge toward them: Becauſe they do proceed from divine providence, diſpoſing or permitting them (for the trial of our patience, the abaſing our pride, the exerciſing of ſome other vertues, or for other good purpoſes) to fall upon us: Becauſe vindication of miſdemeanours committed againſt us doth not appertain to us; we not being competent Judges of them, nor rightful executors of the puniſhments due to them; God having reſerved to himſelf the right of deciſion, and Rom. 12. 19. power of execution: Vengeance is mine, ſaith the Lord, I will repay it.
Heb. 10. 30. Becauſe we are obliged to interpret charitably the actions of our neighbour, Deut. 32. 35, 36. ſuppoſing his miſcarriages to proceed from infirmity, from miſtake, Vid. Tert. de pat. cap. 10. or from ſome cauſe, which we ſhould be rather inclinable to excuſe, than to proſecute with hatred, or revenge. Becauſe indeed our neighbours moſt culpable offences, as iſſuing from diſtemper of mind, are more reaſonably the objects of compaſſion, and charity, than of anger, or ill-will.
Becauſe we are bound to forgive all injuries by the command of God, and in conformity to his example, who paſſeth by innumerable moſt heinous Pſal. 145. 8. offences committed againſt himſelf: Gracious is the Lord, and full of com-
86. 15. paſſion, ſlow to anger, and of great mercy; long-ſuffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth; ſo muſt we be alſo, if we will be like him, or pleaſe him.
Becauſe we our ſelves, being ſubject to incur the ſame faults in kind, or greater in value, do need much pardon, and ſhould thence be ready to allow it unto others; both in equity, and in gratitude toward God; leſt Matt. 18. 32. that in the Goſpel be applied to us; O thou wicked ſervant, I forgave thee all that debt, becauſe thou deſiredſt me; Shouldſt not thou alſo have had com-paſſion upon thy fellow-ſervant, even as I had pity on thee? Becauſe God hath Matt. 6. 14. made it a neceſſary condition of our obtaining mercy; promiſing us favour Ecclus 8. 2. if we yield it, menacing us extremity, if we refuſe it: If ye forgive men Matt. 18. 35. Mark 11. 25. their treſpaſſes, our heavenly father will alſo forgive you; But if ye forgive not

not men their treſpaſſes, neither will your father forgive your treſpaſſes. Becauſe our neighbour ſuffering by our revenge in any manner (in his body, intereſt, or reputation) doth not any-wiſe profit us, or benefit our eſtate, but needleſly doth multiply and encreaſe the ſtock of miſchief in the World; yea commonly doth bring farther evil upon our ſelves, provoking him to go on in offending us, rendring him more implacably bent againſt us, engaging us conſequently deeper in ſtrife and trouble: Becauſe no wrong, no diſgrace, no prejudice we can receive from men is of much conſequence to us, if our mind be not diſorder'd, if we are free from thoſe bad paſſions, which really are the worſt evils that can befal us. Becauſe, in fine, impatience it ſelf is inſignificant, and ineffectual to any good purpoſe; or rather produceth ill effects: It doth not cure our wound, or aſſwage our grief; it removeth no inconvenience, nor repaireth any damage we have received; but rather enflameth our diſtemper, and aggravateth our pain; more really indeed moleſting and hurting us, than the injury or diſcourteſie which cauſeth it: Thus briefly doth reaſon dictate to us the practice of all patience.

Idcirco quis te lædit ut doleas, quia fructus lædentis in dolore læſi eſt. Tert. de pat. 8.

Si patientiæ incubabo, non dolebo; ſi non dolebo, ulciſci non deſiderabo. Ib. 10.

But the example propoſed by the Apoſtle here, and otherwhere by St. Paul (Let the ſame mind be in you, which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus——) by the Apoſtle to the Hebrews (Let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us, Looking unto Jeſus the authour and finiſher of our faith——) by our Lord himſelf (Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly) that doth in a more lively manner expreſs how in ſuch caſes we ſhould deport our ſelves, and moſt ſtrongly engageth us to comply with duties of this nature. Let us now therefore deſcribe it, and recommend it to your conſideration.

Phil. 2. 5.
Heb. 12. 1, 2.
Matt. 11. 22.

The example of our Lord was indeed in this kind the moſt remarkable that ever was preſented, the moſt perfect that can be imagined: He was, above all expreſſion, a man of ſorrows and acquainted with grief; he did undertake, as to perform the beſt works, ſo to endure the worſt accidents, to which humane nature is ſubject; his whole life being no other than one continual exerciſe of patience, and meekneſs, in all the parts, and to the utmoſt degrees of them: If we trace the footſteps of his life, from the ſordid Manger to the bloudy Croſs, we ſhall not be able to obſerve any matter of complacence, ſcarce any of comfort (in reſpect to his natural or worldly ſtate) to have befallen him.

Vid. Tertull. de Pat. c. 3. Cypr. de Pat. T. 2. p. 315.
Iſa. 53. 3.

His parentage was mean, to appearance, and his birth, in all exteriour circumſtances, deſpicable: Is not this the Carpenter's Son? were words of contempt and offence, upon all occaſions thrown upon him.

Matt. 13. 55.
Mark 6. 3.

His life was ſpent not onely in continual labour, and reſtleſs travel, but in hard poverty, yea in extream penury, beneath the ſtate, not onely of the meaneſt Men, but of the moſt ſhifting Beaſts: The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have neſts, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

Matt. 8. 20.

For his neceſſary ſubſiſtence we find him often deſtitute of ordinary proviſion (as when he ſought food from the barren Fig-tree) often indebted for it to the courteſie, and (as it were) alms of the vileſt people, of Publicans and Sinners: ſo δι' ἡμᾶς ἐπτώχευσε he was (as the Apoſtle ſaith) a beggar for us.

Matt. 21. 18, 19.
Nullius menſam, tectumve deſpexit. Tert.
2 Cor. 8. 9.

Yet may we never perceive him any-wiſe diſcontented with, or complaining of his condition; not diſcouraged, or depreſſed in ſpirit thereby, not ſolicitouſly endeavouring any correction or change thereof; but willingly embracing it, heartily acquieſcing therein; and, notwithſtanding all its inconveniences, chearfully diſcharging his duties, vigorouſly purſuing his main deſigns of procuring glory to God, and benefit to men:

Nor did he onely with content undergo the incommodities of a poor eſtate, but he was ſurrounded with continual dangers; the moſt powerful men of thoſe times (enraged with envy, ambition and avarice) deſperately maligning him; and being inceſſantly attentive upon all occaſions to moleſt, hurt and deſtroy him: The world (as he ſaith himſelf, that is, all the powerful and formidable part of the World) hating me; Yet did not this any-wiſe diſmay, or diſtemper him, nor cauſe him either to repine at his condition, or decline his duty. He utterly diſregarded all their ſpiteful machinations, perſiſting immoveable in the proſecution of his pious and charitable undertakings, to the admiration of thoſe who obſerved his demeanour: Is [illegible] this he (ſaid they) whom they ſeek to kill? but lo he ſpeaketh boldly.

John 15. 18.
John 7. 25.

He did indeed ſometimes opportunely ſhun their fury, and prudently did elude their ſnares, but never went violently to repel them, or to execute any revenge for them; improving the wonderful power he was endued with, altogether to the advantage of mankind, never to the bane or hurt of his malicious enemies.

Luke 4. 30.
Matt. 21. 27.
22. 18.

Senſible enough he was of the cauſeleſs hatred they bare him; (ἐμίσησάν με δωρεὰν, They, ſaid he, have hated me for nothing;) and of their extream ingratitude; yet never could he be provoked to reſent, or requite their dealing; ſee how mildly he did expoſtulate the caſe with them; Then (ſaith St. John) the Jews took up ſtones to ſtone him: Jeſus anſwered them, Many good things have I ſhewed you from my Father, for which of thoſe do ye ſtone me?

John 15. 25.
John 10. 31.

To be extremely hated, and inhumanely perſecuted without any fault committed, or juſt occaſion offered, is greatly incenſive of humane paſſion; but for the pureſt, and ſtrongeſt good-will, for the moſt unexpreſſible beneficence, to be recompenced with moſt virulent reproaches, moſt odious ſlanders, moſt outrageous miſuſages, How exceeding was that meekneſs, which without any ſignification of regret, or diſguſt, could endure it?

Out of moſt tender charity, and ardent deſire of their ſalvation, he inſtructed them, and inſtilled heavenly doctrine into their minds, what thanks, what reward did he receive for that great favour? to be reputed, and reported an Impoſtour: πλανᾷ τὸν ὄχλον, he (ſaid they) doth impoſe upon the people.

Matt. 23. 37.
John 7. 12.
Matt. 27. 63.

He took occaſion to impart the great bleſſing of pardon for Sin to ſome of them, confirming his authority of doing it by a miraculous work of goodneſs: How did they reſent ſuch an obligation? by accompting him a blaſphemer: Behold (ſaith St. Matthew) certain of the Scribes ſaid within themſelves, this man blaſphemeth: Which moſt harſh and uncharitable cenſure of theirs he did not fiercely reprehend, but calmly diſcuſſed, and refuted by a clear reaſoning; τί ἐνθυμεῖσθε πονηρὰ; Wherefore conceive ye evil in your hearts; for whether is eaſier to ſay, thy ſins are forgiven thee, or to ſay, ariſe and walk? that is, Is it not credible that he, who can perform the one, may diſpenſe the other?

Matt. 9. 3, &c.
Ingratos curavit, inſidiatoribus ceſſit. Tert.

He freed them from moſt grievous diſeaſes, yea reſcued them from the greateſt miſchief poſſible in nature, being poſſeſſed by the unclean Fiend; How did they entertain this mighty benefit, by moſt horrible calumny accuſing him of Sorcery, or conſpiracy with the Devil himſelf? The Phariſees ſaid, he caſteth out devils by the prince of the devils: yea thence attributing to him the very name and title of the grand Devil: If they have called the Maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more (ſhall they defame) them of his houſhold? Yet this moſt injurious defamation he no otherwiſe rebuked, than by a mild diſcourſe, ſtrongly confuting it; Every King-

Acts 10. 38.
Matt. 9. 34.
12. 24.
Matt. 10. 25.
Matt. 12. 25.

dom (ſaid he) divided againſt it ſelf is brought to deſolation —— and if Satan caſt out Satan, he is divided againſt himſelf; how then ſhall his Kingdom ſtand? that is, the Devil better underſtands his intereſt, than to aſſiſt any man in diſpoſſeſſing himſelf.

He did conſtantly labour in reclaiming them from errour and ſin; in converting them to God and goodneſs, in propoſing fair overtures of grace and mercy to them, in ſhewing them by word and practice the ſure way to happineſs; What iſſue was there of all his care and pains? What but neglect, diſtruſt, diſappointment; rejection of himſelf, of what he ſaid, and what he did? Who hath believed our report, and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed? was a Propheſy, abundantly verified by their carriage toward him.

John 12. 38.

Theſe, and the like uſages, which he perpetually did encounter, he conſtantly received without any paſſionate diſturbance of mind, any bitter reflections upon that Generation, any revengeful enterpriſes againſt them; yea requited them with continued earneſtneſs of hearty deſires, and laborious endeavours for their good.

We might obſerve the ingrateful diſreſpects of his own Countreymen, and Kindred toward him, which he paſſeth over without any grievous diſdain; rather excuſing it, by noting that entertainment to have been no peculiar accident to himſelf, but uſual to all of like employment; No Prophet (ſaid he) is acceptable in his own countrey.

Luke 4. 24.
Matt. 13. 57.

We might alſo mention his patient ſuffering repulſes from ſtrangers; as when being refuſed admittance into a Samaritane Village, and his Diſciples being incenſed with that rude diſcourteſie, would have fire called down from Heaven to conſume thoſe Churls, he reſtrained their unadviſed wrath, and thus expreſſed his admirable meekneſs; The Son of man is not come to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them.

Non illi ſaltem civitati quæ eum recipere noluerat iratus eſt, cum etiam diſcipuli tam contumelioſo oppido cæleſtes ignes repræſentari voluiſſent. Tert.

Luke 9.53,56.

We might likewiſe remark his meek comporting with the ſtupid and *perverſe incredulity of his Diſciples, notwithſtanding ſo many pregnant, and palpable inducements continually exhibited for confirmation of their faith; the which he no otherwiſe, than ſometime gently, admoniſheth them of, ſaying, τί δειλοί ἐστε ὀλιγόπιστοι; Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? ὀλιγόπιστε, τί ἐδίστασας; O thou of ſmall faith, why didſt thou doubt?

* Luke 9. 41.
Matt. 17. 17.
Non peccatores, non publicanos, aſpernatus eſt. Tert.
Matt. 8. 26.
14. 31.

What ſhould I inſiſt on theſe, although very remarkable inſtances? ſince that one ſcene of his moſt grievous (ſhall I ſay, or glorious) paſſion doth repreſent unto us a perfect, and moſt lively image of the higheſt patience and meekneſs poſſible: of the greateſt ſorrow that ever was or could be, yet of a patience ſurmounting it; of the extreameſt malice that ever was conceived, yet of a charity overſwaying it; of injury moſt intolerable, yet of a meekneſs willingly and ſweetly bearing it: There may we obſerve the greateſt provocations from all hands to paſſionate animoſity of ſpirit, and intemperate heat of ſpeech, yet no diſcovery of the leaſt diſorderly, angry, or revengeful thought, the leaſt raſh, bitter or reproachful word, but all undergone with cleareſt ſerenity of mind, and ſweetneſs of carriage toward all perſons.

To Judas, who betrayed him, How doth he addreſs himſelf? Doth he uſe ſuch terms as the Man deſerved, or as paſſion would have ſuggeſted, and reaſon would not have diſallowed; Did he ſay, Thou moſt perfidious Villain, thou monſter of iniquity and ingratitude; thou deſperately wicked Wretch; Doſt thou, prompted by thy baſe covetouſneſs, treacherouſly attempt to ruine thy gracious Maſter, and beſt Friend; thy moſt benign and bountiful Saviour? No, inſtead of ſuch proper language,

Matt. 26. 50. he uſed the moſt courteous and endearing terms: Ἑταῖρε, ἐφ' ᾧ πάρει; Friend (or companion) for what doſt thou come; Or what is thy buſineſs here?
a tacite charitable warning there is to reflect upon his unworthy and wicked action, but nothing apparent of wrath, or reproach.

From his own diſciples and ſervants, who had beheld his many miraculous works, and were indebted to him for the greateſt favours, he reaſonably might have expected a moſt faithful adherence, and moſt diligent attendance on him in that juncture; yet he found them careleſs, and ſlothful: What then? How did he take it? Was he angry, did he upbraid, did he ſtorm at them? Did he threaten to diſcard them? No;
Matt. 26. 40, 45. he onely firſt gently admoniſheth them: What, could ye not watch one hour with me? then a little exciteth them, Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: He withal ſuggeſted an excuſe for their drowſineſs and dulneſs; The Spirit is willing but the fleſh is weak: in fine, he indulgeth to their weakneſs, letting them alone, ſaying, Καθεύδετε λοιπὸν, Sleep on now and take your reſt.

Matt. 26. 31. When he foreſaw they would be offended at his (to appearance) diſaſtrous eſtate, and fearfully would deſert him, he yet expreſſed no indignation againſt them, or decreaſe of affection toward them upon that ſcore;
but ſimply mentioneth it, as unconcerned in it, and not affected thereby.

And the unworthy Apoſtaſie of that Diſciple, whom he had eſpecially favoured and dignified, he onely did mildly forewarn him of, requiting it foreſeen by the promiſe of his own effectual prayers for his ſupport and recovery;
Luke 22. 61, 62. Ἐνέβλεψε τῷ Πέτρῳ. and when St. Peter had committed that heinous fact, our good Lord onely looked on him with an eye of charity and compaſſion; which more efficaciouſly ſtruck him, than the moſt dreadful threat; or ſharp reprehenſion could have done; Peter thereupon went out, and wept bitterly.

When the High-Prieſts officer, upon no reaſonable occaſion, did injuriouſly and ignominiouſly ſtrike him, he returned onely this mild expoſtulation:
John 18. 23. Cypr. Ep. 65. If I have ſpoken evil, bear witneſs of the evil; if well, why ſmiteſt thou me? That is, I adviſe thee to proceed in a fair and legal way againſt me, not to deal thus boiſterouſly and wrongfully, to thy own harm.

Even careful and tender he was of thoſe, who were the inſtruments of his ſuffering; he protected them from harm, who conducted him to execution; Luke 22. 51, &c. as we ſee in the caſe of the High-Prieſts ſervant, whom (with more zeal, than wherewith he ever regarded his own ſafety) he defended from the fury of his own friend, and cured of the wounds received in the way of perſecuting himſelf.

All his demeanour under that great Trial was perfectly calm, not the leaſt regret, or reluctancy of mind, the leaſt contradiction, or obloquy Iſa. 53. 7. of ſpeech appearing therein; ſuch it was as became the lamb of God, who was to take away the ſins of the world, by a willing oblation of himſelf; ſuch Iſa. 50. 6. as did exactly correſpond to the ancient Prophecies; He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he was brought as a Lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before the ſhearer is dumb, ſo he opened not his mouth; and, I gave my back to the ſmiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from ſhame and ſpitting.

Neither did the wrongful ſlanders deviſed and alledged againſt him by ſuborned witneſſes, nor the virulent invectives of the Prieſts, nor the barbarous clamours of the people, nor the contemptuous ſpitting upon him, and buffeting him, nor the cruel ſcourgings, nor the contumelious mockeries, nor all the bloudy tortures inflicted upon him, wring from him one ſyllable importing any diſſatisfaction in his caſe, any wrath conceived for his miſuſages, any grudge or ill-will in his mind toward his perſecutors; tors; but on the contrary, inſtead of hatred and revenge he declared the greateſt kindneſs and charity toward them, praying heartily to God his Father for the pardon of their ſins. Inſtead of aggravating their crime and injury againſt him, he did in a ſort extenuate and excuſe it, by conſideration of their ignorance and miſtake: Lord, (ſaid he, in the height of Luke 23. 34. his ſufferings) forgive them, for they know not what they do. The life they ſo violently bereaved him of, he did willingly mean to lay down for the ranſom of their lives; the bloud they ſpilt he wiſhed to be a ſalutary Balſam for their wounds and maladies; he moſt chearfully did offer himſelf by their hands a ſacrifice for their offences. No ſmall part of his afflictions was a ſenſe of their ſo grievouſly diſpleaſing God, and pulling miſchief on their own heads, a foreſight of his kind intentions being fruſtrated by their obſtinate incredulity and impenitence, a reflection upon that inevitable vengeance, which from the divine Juſtice would attend them; this foreſeen did work in him a diſtaſtful ſenſe, (more grievous than what his own pain could produce) and drew from him tears of Compaſſion (ſuch as no reſentment of his own caſe could extort) for, When he was come near Luke 19. 41.

he beheld the City, and wept over it, ſaying, O that thou hadſt known, even 13. 34.
thou, at leaſt in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace.

If ever he did expreſs any commotion of mind in reference to this matter, it was onely then when one of his friends, out of a blind fondneſs of affection did preſume to diſſwade him from undergoing theſe evils; then indeed being ſomewhat moved with indignation he ſaid to St. Peter, Get Mat. 16. 23.
thee behind me, Satan, for thou art an offence unto me; for thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God, but thoſe that be of men.

Neither was it out of a ſtupid inſenſibility or ſtubborn reſolution that he did thus behave himſelf; for he had a moſt vigorous ſenſe of all thoſe Mat. 26. 37, 38.
grievances, and a ſtrong (natural) averſation from undergoing them; as Luke 22. 44. John 12. 27.
thoſe dolorous Agonies wherewith he ſtruggled; thoſe deadly groans he Mat. 26. 39.
uttered; thoſe monſtrous lumps of Bloud he ſwet out; thoſe earneſt Heb. 5. 7.
Prayers he made to be freed from them, declare; but from a perfect ſubmiſſion to the Divine Will, and entire command over his Paſſions, an exceſſive Charity toward Mankind this patient and meek behaviour did ſpring: The Cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it? O my John 18. 11.
Father, if it be poſſible, let this Cup paſs from me; nevertheleſs not as I will, Mat. 26. 39.
but as thou wilt; Let not my will, but thine be done. No man taketh away my Luke 22. 42. John 10. 18.
life, but I lay it down of my own accord; I will give my fleſh for the life of the 6. 51.
world: So doth our Lord himſelf expreſs the true grounds of his paſſion and his patience.

Such is the Example of our Lord; the ſerious conſideration whereof how can it otherwiſe than work patience and meekneſs in us; If he, that was the Lord of Glory (infinitely excellent in Dignity and Vertue) did ſo readily embrace, did ſo contentedly endure ſuch extremities of penury, hardſhip, diſgrace and pain, how can we refuſe them or repine at them?
Can we pretend to a better lot than he received, or preſume that God muſt deal better with us than he did with his own deareſt Son? Can we be diſpleaſed at a conformity to our Lord and Maſter? Can we without ſhame affect to live more ſplendidly, or to fare more deliciouſly than he choſe to do? Shall we fret or wail, becauſe our deſires are croſſed, our projects defeated, our intereſts any-wiſe prejudiced; when as his moſt earneſt deſires, and his moſt painful endeavours had ſo little of due and deſired ſucceſs: When he was ever ready, and had ſo conſtant occaſion to ſay, Let not my will be done? Can we deſpiſe that ſtate of meanneſs and ſorrow which he from the higheſt ſublimities of Glory and Beatitude was pleaſed to ſtoop unto ? Can we take our ſelves for the want of any Luke 14. 27. 9. 23. present conveniences or comforts to be wretched, when as the fountain of Mat. 10. 38. all happineſs was deſtitute of all ſuch things, and ſcarce did ever taſte any 16. 24. worldly pleaſure ? Are we fit or worthy to be his Diſciples, if we will not Heb. 5. 8. take up his Croſs and follow him; if we will not go to his School (that School wherein he is ſaid himſelf to have learnt obedience) if we will not con that leſſon which he ſo loudly hath read out, and tranſcribe that Copy which he ſo fairly hath ſet before us : Can we pretend to thoſe great benefits, thoſe high priviledges, thoſe rich and excellent rewards, which he hath Heb. 2. 9, 10. attained for us, and which he propoſeth to us, if we will not go on toward Phil. 2. 9. them in that way of patience which he hath trod before us?

Heb. 12. 3. Can we alſo, if we conſider him that endured ſuch contradiction of ſinners, be tranſported with any wrathful or revengeful paſſion, upon any Quam gravis cauſa ſit hominis Chriſtiani ſervum pati nolle cum prior paſſus ſit Dominus, &c. Cypr. Ep. 56. provocation from our brethren ? Can we hope, or wiſh for better uſage from men than our Lord did ever find ? Can we be much diſpleaſed with any man for thwarting our deſires or intereſts, for diſſenting from our conceits, for croſſing our humours, when as he (to whom all reſpect and obſervance was due) did meet with ſo little regard or compliance in any way ; continually did encounter repulſes, diſappointments, oppoſitions from the perverſe and ſpiteful world ? Can we be very jealous of our Credit, or furious when our imaginary honour (honour, that we never really deſerved, or can juſtly claim, being guilty of ſo many great faults and ſins) is touched with the leaſt diſgraceful reflection, if we do well obſerve and mind, that the moſt truly, and indeed onely honourable perſonage (onely honourable, becauſe onely innocent perſon) that ever was had his reputation aſperſed by the moſt odious reproaches, which deepeſt Envy and Malice could deviſe, without any grievous reſentment, or being ſolicitous otherwiſe to aſſert or clear it than by a conſtant ſilence?
Can we be exaſperated by every petty affront, (real or ſuppoſed) when the moſt noble, moſt courteous, moſt obliging perſon that ever breathed upon earth was treacherouſly expoſed to violence by his own ſervant, ſhamefully deſerted by his own moſt beloved friends, deſpitefully treated by thoſe whom he never had offended, by thoſe upon whom he had heaped the greateſt benefits, without expreſſing any anger or diſpleaſure againſt them, but yielding many ſignal teſtimonies of tendereſt pity and love toward them ? Can we ſee our Lord treated like a ſlave and a thief, without any diſturbance or commotion of heart ; and we vile wretches upon every ſlight occaſion ſwell with fierce diſdain, pour forth reproachful language, execute horrible miſchief upon our brethren ? He indeed was ſurrounded with injuries and affronts ; every ſin that ſince the foundation of things hath been committed was an offence againſt him, and a burthen Iſa. 53. 6. upon him ; (God laid upon him the iniquities of us all) ſo many declared enemies, ſo many Rebels, ſo many Perſecutors, ſo many Murtherers he had as there have lived men in the World ; for every ſinner did in truth conſpire to his affliction and deſtruction ; we all in effect did betray him, did accuſe him, did mock, did ſcourge, did pierce and crucifie him ; yet Rom 5.6,8,10 he forgave all offences, he died for all perſons ; while we were yet enemies, yet ſinners, he died for us, to reſcue us from death and miſery : And ſhall we not then in imitation of him, for his dear ſake, in gratitude, reſpect and Rependamus illi patientiam, quam pro nobis ipſe dependit. Ter. de pat. 16. obedience to him, be ready to bear the infirmities of our brethren, to forgive any ſmall wrongs or offences from them ; whatever they do to us, to love them, and do them what good we can ? If ſo admirable a pattern of patience and meekneſs ſo immenſe cannot, what is there that can oblige or move us ? I conclude with thoſe doxologies to our ſo patient and meek Redeemer :

Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing. Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him that ſitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever. Apoc. 5.12,13

Unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his blood, and hath made us Kings and Prieſts unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. Apoc. 1. 5.

SERMON XI.

Rejoyce evermore.

1 THESS. V. 16.

Rejoyce evermore.

R*Ejoyce evermore!* O good Apoſtle, how acceptable Rules doſt thou preſcribe? O bleſſed God, how gracious Laws doſt thou impoſe? This is a Rule to which one would think all men ſhould be forward to conform: This is a Law, which it may ſeem ſtrange that any man ſhould find in his heart to diſobey: for what can any Soul deſire more than to be always on the merry pin, or to lead a life in continual alacrity? who readily would not embrace a Duty, the obſervance whereof is not onely pleaſant, but pleaſure it ſelf? Who is ſo wild as to affect a ſin, which hath nothing in it but diſeaſe and diſguſt?

That joy ſhould be injoyned, that ſadneſs ſhould be prohibited, may it not be a plauſible exception againſt ſuch a Precept, that it is ſuperfluous and needleſs, ſeeing all the endeavours of men do aim at nothing elſe, but to procure joy and eſchew ſorrow; ſeeing all men do conſpire in opinion with Solomon, that a man hath nothing better under the ſun than——to be merry? Were it not rather expedient to recommend ſober ſadneſs, or to repreſs the inclinations of men to effuſe mirth and jollity? Eccl. 8. 15. 2. 24. 3. 12, 22. 5. 18, 26.

So it may ſeem; but yet alas, if we conſult experience, or obſerve the World, we ſhall find this Precept very ill obeyed; for do we not commonly ſee People in heavy dumps; do we not often hear doleful complaints? is not this World apparently a ſtage of continual trouble, and grief? Did not the Preacher, upon a diligent ſurvey of all the works done under the Sun, truly proclaim, Behold all is vanity and vexation of Spirit? Where, I pray, is any full or firm content; where is ſolid and durable joy to be found? Eccl. 1. 14.

It is true that men, after a confuſed manner, are very eager in the queſt, and earneſt in the purſuit of joy; they rove through all the Foreſt of Creatures, and beat every buſh of Nature for it, hoping to catch it either in natural endowments and improvements of Soul, or in the gifts of Fortune, or in the acquiſts of Induſtry; in Temporal Poſſeſſions, in ſenſual

Enjoyments, in ludicrous divertiſements and amuſements of Fancy; in gratification of their Appetites and Paſſions: They all hunt for it, though following a different ſcent, and running in various tracks, ſome in way of plodding for rare notions, ſome in compaſſing ambitious projects, ſome in amaſſing heaps of wealth, ſome in practice of over-reaching ſubtilties, ſome in wreeking their malice, their revenge, their envy; ſome in venting frothy conceits, bitter ſcoffs, or profane railleries; ſome in jovial converſation and quaffing the full bowls; ſome in muſick and dancing; ſome in gallantry and courting; ſome in all kinds of riotous exceſs, and wanton diſſoluteneſs; ſo each in his way doth inceſſantly prog for joy; But all much in vain, or without any conſiderable ſucceſs; finding at moſt inſtead of it ſome faint ſhadows, or tranſitory flaſhes of pleaſure; the which depending on cauſes very contingent and mutable, reſiding in a frail temper of fluid humours of body, conſiſting in ſlight touches upon the organs of ſenſe, in friſks of the corporeal ſpirits, or in fumes and vapours twitching the imagination, do ſoon flag and expire; their ſhort enjoyment being alſo tempered with regret, being eaſily daſhed by any croſs accident, ſoon declining into a nauſeous ſatiety, and in the end degenerating into gall and bitter remorſe; for Even (as Solomon obſerved) in laughter, the heart is ſorrowful, and the end of that mirth is heavineſs; and Though (as it is ſaid in Job) wickedneſs is ſweet in the mouth——yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of Aſps within him: So that indeed the uſual delights, which men affect are ſuch, that we ſhould not if we could, and we could not if we would conſtantly entertain them; ſuch rejoicing evermore being equally unreaſonable and impoſſible.

Prov. 14. 13.
Sunt quædam triſtes voluptates—Sen. Ep. 67.
Job 20. 12.——14. 20. 5.

Quaquaverſum ſe verterit anima hominis, ad dolores figitur alibi, præterquam in te. Aug. Conſ. 4. 10.

Wherefore there is ground more than enough, that we ſhould be put to ſeek for a true, ſubſtantial, and conſiſtent joy; it being withal implied, that we ſhould affect it in another way, or look for it in another box, than commonly men do; who therefore are ſo generally diſappointed, becauſe they would have it upon impoſſible or undue terms; and leaſt expect it there, where it is onely to be had.

It is a ſcandalous miſpriſion, vulgarly admitted, concerning Religion, that it is altogether ſullen and ſour, requiring a dull, lumpiſh, moroſe kind of life, barring all delight, all mirth, all good humour: Whereas on the contrary it alone is the never-failing ſource of true, pure, ſteady joy; ſuch as is deeply rooted in the heart, immoveably founded in the reaſon of things, permanent like the immortal ſpirit wherein it dwelleth, and like the eternal objects, whereon it is fixed; which is not apt to fade, or cloy; and is not ſubject to any impreſſions apt to corrupt, or impair it: Whereas in our Text, and in many Texts parallel to it, we ſee, that our Religion doth not onely allow us, but even doth oblige us to be joyful as much and often as can be, not permitting us to be ſad for one Minute, baniſhing the leaſt fit of Melancholly, charging us in all times, upon all occaſions to be chearful; ſuppoſing conſequently that it is in ſome manner poſſible to be ſo, and affording power to effect what it doth require.

Such indeed is the tranſcendent goodneſs of our God, that he maketh our delight to be our duty, and our ſorrow to be our ſin, adapting his holy Will to our principal inſtinct; that he would have us to reſemble himſelf as in all other perfections, ſo in a conſtant ſtate of happineſs; that as he hath provided a glorious Heaven of bliſs for us hereafter, ſo he would have us enjoy a comfortable paradiſe of delight here. He accordingly hath ordered the whole frame of our Religion in a tendency to produce joy in thoſe who embrace it; for what is the Goſpel, but (as the holy Angel, the firſt promulger of it, did report) good tydings of great Luke 2. 10.

joy to all people? How doth God repreſent himſelf therein, but as the Rom. 5. 33. 13. 5.
God of love, of hope, of peace, of all conſolation, chearfully ſmiling in fa- Eph. 2. 4.
vour on us, graciouſly inviting us to the moſt pleaſant enjoyments, boun- 2 Cor. 1. 3. 13. 11.
tifully diſpenſing moſt comfortable bleſſings of mercy, of grace, of ſal- 1 Pet. 5. 10.
vation to us? for what doth our Lord call us to him, but that he may give Jam. 5. 11.
us reſt, and refreſhment to our ſouls; that he may wipe away all tears from Matt. 11. 28. Apoc. 7. 17.
our eyes; that he may ſave us from moſt woful deſpair, and ſettle us in a 21. 4.
bleſſed hope; that we may enter into our Maſter's joy; that our joy may be full, Tit. 2.
and ſuch as no man can take from us? Matt. 25. 21. John 15. 11.

What is the great overture of the Goſpel, but the gift of a moſt bleſſed 16. 22, 24.
Comforter, to abide with us for ever, chearing our hearts with his lightſome John 14. 16.
preſence, and raviſhing conſolations? Wherein doth the Kingdom of Heaven conſiſt? not in meat and drink, but in righteouſneſs, and peace, and Rom. 14. 17.
joy in the Holy Ghoſt? What are the prime fruits ſprouting from that root of Chriſtian Life, the Divine Spirit? they are, as St. Paul telleth us, Love, Gal. 5. 22.
joy and peace: Are there not numberleſs declarations importing a joyful ſatisfaction granted to the obſervers of God's Commandments; that Light is ſown for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart? Doth Pſal. 97. 11.
not our Lord pronounce a ſpecial beatitude to the Practiſer of every ver- 118. 15. 32.
tue? And if we ſcan all the Doctrines, all the Inſtitutions, all the Pre- 11. 68. 3.
cepts, all the promiſes of Chriſtianity, will not each appear pregnant with matter of joy, will not each yield great reaſon, and ſtrong obligation to this duty of rejoycing evermore?

Wherefore a Chriſtian, as ſuch, (according to the deſign of his Religion, and in proportion to his compliance with its dictates) is the moſt jocund, blith, and gay perſon in the World; always in humour, and full of chear; continually bearing a mind well ſatisfied, a light heart and calm ſpirit, a ſmooth brow and ſerene countenance, a grateful accent of ſpeech, and a ſweetly compoſed tenour of carriage: No black thought, no irkſome deſire, no troubleſome paſſion ſhould lodge in his breaſt; any furrow, any frown, any cloud doth ſit ill upon his face; the leaſt fretful word, or froward behaviour doth utterly misbecome him: If at any time it appear otherwiſe, 'tis a deflection from his character; 'tis a blemiſh and wrong to his profeſſion; it argueth a prevarication in his judgment, or in his practice; He forgetteth that he is a Chriſtian, or hath not preſerved the innocence belonging to that Name. For, If a Chriſtian remembreth what he is, or is ſenſible of his condition; if he reflecteth on the Dignity of his Perſon, the Nobleneſs of his Relations, the ſublimity of his Priviledges, the greatneſs and certainty of his Hopes, how can he be out of humour? Is it not abſurd for him that is at peace with Heaven, with his own Conſcience, with all the World; for the poſſeſſor of the beſt goods, and the Heir of a bleſſed immortality; for the Friend, the Favourite, the Son of God, to fret or wail?

He that is ſettled in a moſt proſperous ſtate, that is (if he pleaſeth) ſecure of its continuance, that is well aſſured of its improvement; that hath whatever good he can wiſh in his reach, and more than he can conceive in ſure reverſion, what account can be given that he ſhould be ſad, or ſeem afflicted?

He that hath the unexhauſtible ſpring of good for his portion, that hath his welfare entruſted in God's moſt faithful hand; that hath God's infallible word for his ſupport; that hath free acceſs to him, in whoſe preſence Pſal. 16. 11.
is fulneſs of joy; that hath frequent taſts of God's goodneſs, in gracious diſpenſations of Providence, in entercourſes of devotion, in the influences of grace; that hath the infinite beauty and excellency for the perpetual object of his contemplation and affection; that enjoyeth the ſerenity of a ſound mind, of a pure heart, of a quiet conſcience, of a ſure hope, what can he want to refreſh or comfort him?

If a true and perfect Chriſtian hath no care to diſtract him, having diſcharged all his concerns on God's Providence; If he hath no fear to diſmay him, being guarded by the Almighty protection from all danger and miſchief; If he hath no deſpair to ſink him, having a ſure refuge in the divine mercy and help; If he hath no ſuperſtitious terrours or ſcruples to perplex him, being conſcious of his own upright intentions to pleaſe God, and confident of God's merciful willingneſs to accept his ſincere endeavours; If he hath no incurable remorſe to torment him, the ſting of guilt being pulled out by the merits of his Saviour, applied by his faith and repentance: If he hath no longing deſires to diſquiet him, being fully ſatisfied with that he doth poſſeſs, or may expect from God's bounty; all other things being far beneath his ambition, or coveting: If he hath no contentions to enflame him, knowing nought here worth paſſionately ſtriving for, and being reſolved to hold a friendly good-will toward all men; If he hath no repining envy, ſeeing that none can be more happy than he may be, and that every man's good by charity is made his own; If he hath no fretful diſcontent, ſince he gladly doth acquieſce in the condition, and ſucceſs allotted to him, reſigning his will to God's pleaſure, taking all for beſt which thence doth occur, being aſſured that all things ſhall work together for his good and advantage: If he hath no ſpiteful rancours to corrode his heart, no boiſterous paſſions to ruffle his mind, no inordinate appetites, perverſe humours, or corrupt deſigns to diſtemper his ſoul, and diſturb his life, whence then may ſorrow come, or how can ſadneſs creep into him?

Ἐπιθυμίας ἀπηλλαγείσης εὔδιος ἡ ψυχὴ ϗ γαληνιῶσα γίνεται. Juſt. Mart. ad Græc. Paræn. 2.

What is there belonging to a Chriſtian, whence grief naturally can ſpring? from God, our exceeding joy, the Fountain of Happineſs; from Heaven the region of light and bliſs; from divine truth, which illuſtrateth and cheareth the ſoul; from God's Law, which rejoiceth the heart, and is ſweeter than honey and the honey-comb; from wiſdom, whoſe ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all whoſe paths are peace; from vertue, which cureth our afflictive diſtempers, and compoſeth our vexatious paſſions; from theſe things, I ſay, above which a Chriſtian as ſuch is onely converſant, no ſorrow can be derived; from thoſe ſweet ſources no bitter ſtreams can flow; But hell, the fleſh, the world, darkneſs, errour, folly, ſin and irreligion (things with which a Chriſtian ſhould have nothing to do, from which he ſhould keep a-loof, which he doth pretend utterly to renounce and abandon) theſe, theſe alone, are the parents of diſcomfort and anguiſh.

Pſal. 43. 4.
Pſal. 19. 10.
119. 103.
Prov. 3. 17.

Wherefore there is the ſame reaſon, the ſame obligation, the ſame poſſibility, that we ſhould rejoice evermore, as that we ſhould always be Chriſtians, exactly performing duty, and totally forbearing ſin; for innocence and indolency do ever go together, both together making Paradiſe; perfect vertue and conſtant alacrity are inſeparable companions, both conſtituting beatitude; And as although from our infirmity we cannot attain the higheſt pitch of vertue, yet we muſt aſpire thereto endeavouring to perfect holineſs in the fear of God; ſo though it may not be poſſible to get, yet it is reaſonable to ſeek perpetual joy; which doing in the right way we ſhall not fail of procuring a good meaſure of it.

2 Cor. 7. 1.
Matt. 5. 48.
1 John 3. 3.

Indeed to exerciſe piety and to rejoice are the ſame things, or things ſo interwoven, that nothing can disjoin them; religious practice is like a river, the ſtreams whereof make glad the City of God, the holy place of the Tabernacle of the moſt High, that is, every pious ſoul: No good deed can be performed without ſatisfaction; each vertue hath a peculiar delight annexed to it; whence the acts of joy, which upon various objects, grounds, and occaſions, we may exert, being numberleſs, I ſhall onely touch a few principal inſtances.

Pſal. 46. 4.

1. We ſhould evermore rejoice in the exerciſe of our faith; according to that prayer of our Apoſtle for the Romans, Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing.

Rom. 15. 13.

Every kind of faith (that which embraceth divine truths, that which applieth God's mercy, that which enſureth God's promiſes, that which confideth in God's providence, each of them) is a clear ſpring of joy, ever ſtanding open to us; which he that drinketh, ſhall never thirſt.

Joh. 6. 35. 7. 38. 4. 14.

1. The faith, which embraceth God's heavenly truth, doth not onely enlighten our minds, but is apt to affect our hearts; there being no Article of Faith, or myſtery of our religion, which doth not involve ſome great advantage, ſome notable favour, ſome happy occurrence diſpenſed to us by the goodneſs of God, the which Faith doth apprehend and convey to our ſpiritual guſt, ſo that we cannot hardly but receive the word with joy. For is it not very ſweet with Faith to contemplate the rich bounty of God in the Creation of the World, and producing ſo goodly a Frame, ſo copious a ſtore of things, with a ſpecial regard to our ſuſtenance and accommodation? Is it not ſatisfactory to believe that God by his Almighty hand and vigilant care, with the ſame benign regard doth uphold and govern the ſame? Is it not extreamly pleaſant with faith to reflect on that great honour and happineſs, which God did vouchſafe, to confer on mankind, by ſending down from Heaven his onely Son to aſſume our nature, and to converſe with men, that we might be advanced to a participation of the divine nature, and to an enjoyment of communion with God? How without great delight can we be perſwaded, that our Saviour by his meritorious obedience and paſſion hath appeaſed God's wrath, and inclined his favour toward us, hath ſatisfied juſtice, hath expiated our offences, hath ranſomed and reſcued our ſouls from the dominion of Sin and Satan, from death and corruption, from Hell and everlaſting torment; hath purchaſed immortal life, and endleſs bliſs for us? What comfort is there in being aſſured by the reſurrection, and triumph of our Lord over death, that our ſouls are indeed immortal, that our bodies ſhall be raiſed from the duſt, that our perſons are capable of an eternal ſubſiſtence in happineſs? will it not much pleaſe us with an eye of faith to behold our Redeemer ſitting in glorious exaltation at God's right hand, governing the World for the benefit of his Church, diſpenſing benediction and grace to us; interceding as our merciful and faithful High prieſt for the pardon of our ſins, the acceptance of our prayers, the ſupply of our needs, and the relief of our diſtreſſes; If we be fully convinced, that our Lord Jeſus is the Chriſt, our Lord, and Saviour, the authour of eternal Salvation, to all that obey him, how can we otherwiſe than follow thoſe, of whom St. Peter ſaith, Whom having not ſeen ye love; in whom, though ye now ſee him not, yet believing ye rejoice with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory: So from the hearty belief of every Evangelical Truth we may ſuck conſolation; each of them is food to our Soul; and to believe it is to eat it; which how can we do without a delicious, or moſt ſavoury reliſh?

Matt. 13. 20.
Phil. 1. 25.
2 Pet. 1. 4.
1 John 1. 3.
εἰδότες—
2 Cor. 4. 14.
Heb. 2. 17.
1 John 2. 1.
Heb. 5. 9.
1 Pet. 1. 8.
Crede & manducaſti. Aug.

2. At leaſt methinks that faith greatly ſhould exhilarate us, which applieth thoſe verities (ſo worthy of all acceptation) wherein God doth open

1 Tim. 1. 15.

his arms wide to embrace us, propoſing moſt kind invitations, and favourable overtures of mercy, upon the faireſt terms poſſible; together with effectual remedies for all the maladies and miſeries of our ſouls: for if we are ſenſible of our heinous Guilts, if we are laden with the heavy burthen of our ſins, if our heart is galled with ſore compunction for our Pſ. 38. 1. 6. 1. miſdeeds; if we are ſtruck with the terrours of the Lord, and tremble with
102. 4. 143. 4. the fear of Gods judgments; how comfortable muſt it be to be perſwaded
119. 120. that God is fully reconcileable to us, is very deſirous to ſhew us mercy, 1 John 2. 1, 2. and gladly will accept our repentance; that we have an advocate with the Father, who hath propitiated for our ſins, doth mediate for our peace, hath both full power and certain will, if we ſincerely do renounce our offences, Rom. 8. 1. wholly to remit them? ſo that there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Rom. 5. 1. Spirit; and that being juſtified by faith we have peace with God, through our Pſal. 51. 8. Lord Jeſus Chriſt; Will not this belief revive us, and make the broken bones
90. 8, 14. to rejoyce; will not the Goſpel of peace be hence in truth a joyful ſound to Iſa. 40. 1, 2. us? might it not hence well be proclaimed in the Prophet, Comfort ye, Comfort ye my people; ſpeak ye comfortably to Jeruſalem, and cry unto her; that her warfare is accompliſhed, that her iniquity is pardoned.

And if we find our ſelves in habit of ſoul grievouſly diſtempered, labouring under great impotency and blindneſs, overborn and oppreſſed with the prevalency of corruption, peſtered with unreaſonable deſires and paſſions, unable to curb our inclinations and appetites, to reſiſt temptations, to diſcharge our duty in any tolerable meaſure, or with any eaſe; is it not then comfortable to believe, that we have a moſt faithful and skilful Phyſician at hand to cure our diſtempers; that we have a powerful ſuccour within ken, to relieve our infirmities; that God is ready to impart an abundant ſupply of grace, of light, of ſpiritual ſtrength to direct and aſſiſt us; that if any man doth lack wiſdom, he is encouraged with faith
Jam. 1. 5, 6. to ask it of God, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not? if any man want Luke 11. 13. ſtrength, God's Almighty Spirit is promiſed to thoſe, who with humble Phil. 4. 13. earneſtneſs do implore it; ſo that we may be able to do all things (incumbent Rom. 7. 25. on us) by Chriſt who ſtrengtheneth us.
2 Cor. 3. 5.
Ph. 2. 13. 3. And what more hearty ſatisfaction can we feel, than in a firm perſwaſion 2 Pet. 1. 4. concerning the real accompliſhment of thoſe exceedingly great and precious promiſes, whereby we become capable of the moſt excellent priviledges, the moſt ample benefits, the moſt happy rewards, that can be? how can the belief that by God's infallible word, or as ſurely as truth it ſelf is true, an eternal inheritance of a treaſure that cannot fail, of a glory that cannot fade, of a kingdom that cannot be ſhaken, of a felicity ſurpaſſing all expreſſion and all conceit, is reſerved for us, in recompence of our faithful obedience; how, I ſay, can that be a dead, dull, dry belief, void of ſprightly comfort and pleaſure?

Likewiſe the faith of confidence in God's good providence, and paternal care over us, (whatever our condition or circumſtances be) ſhould infuſe a chearful refreſhment of heart into us.

It is in holy Scripture moſt frequently aſſerted, that he who placeth his truſt in God, is a very bleſſed and happy Perſon; and can we without great ſatisfaction partake of that beatitude?

Can we by ſuch a truſt disburthen all our ſolicitous cares, all our anxious fears, all the troubles of our ſpirit, and preſſures of our condition upon God, with ſtrong aſſurance, that from his mighty power and watchful care, in due time, in the moſt expedient manner, we ſhall receive a competent ſupply of our wants, a riddance from our grievances, a protection from all danger and harm, a bleſſing upon all our good endeavours and undertakings, without feeling much eaſe and peace in our hearts?

What can be more chearing than a perſwaſion, that all our concerns are lodged in the hands of ſuch a Friend, ſo wiſe, ſo able, ſo faithful, ſo affectionate, ſo ever readily diſpoſed to help us, and further our good?
They who truſt in God, are ſaid to abide under the ſhadow of the Almighty, Pſal. 91. 1.
and to be covered with his wings; God is often ſtyled their rock, their for- Pſal. 61. 4. 91. 4. 57. 1. 17. 8. 36. 7.
treſs, their ſhield and buckler, their defence and refuge; And are they not then impregnably ſafe? why then ſhould they fear any diſaſter? at 18. 2. 62. 2.
what occurrence ſhould they be diſturbed? Have they not huge reaſon to Pſal. 112. 2.
ſay with the Pſalmiſt, In the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoyce; The Lord Pſal. 63. 7.
is my ſtrength and my ſhield, my heart truſteth in him, and I am helped; there- Pſal. 28. 7.
fore my heart danceth for joy, and in my Song will I praiſe him: May not (Pſal. 33. 21.)
each of thoſe confiders in God well repreſs all inſurrections of trouble and grief, with that holy charm, Why art thou ſo vexed, O my ſoul, and why Pſal. 42. 14.
art thou ſo diſquieted within me, O truſt in God—for he is the health of my 43. 5.
countenance, and my God.

II. We ſhould evermore rejoice in the practice of Chriſtian hope, making good that aphoriſm of Solomon, The hope of the righteous ſhall be glad- Prov. 10. 28.
neſs; and obeying thoſe Apoſtolical injunctions, that we ſhould rejoyce in hope; that we ſhould retain the confidence, and the rejoicing of hope firm to Rom. 12. 12.
the end. Thoſe excellent and moſt beneficial truths, thoſe ſweet propo- Heb. 3. 6.
ſitions of grace and mercy, thoſe rich promiſes, which faith doth apprehend as true in a general reference to all Chriſtians, hope doth appropriate, and apply as particularly touching our ſelves; improving the knowledge of our common capacity into a ſenſe of our ſpecial intereſt in them. God, ſaith our Faith, will aſſuredly receive all penitent Sinners to mercy, will crown all pious Chriſtians with glory, will faithfully perform whatever he hath graciouſly promiſed to all People, hath a tender care for all that love and fear him; But God, ſaith our hope, will have mercy on me, will render to me the wages of righteouſneſs, will verify his good word to 2 Tim. 4. 8.
me his ſervant, will protect, will deliver, will bleſs me in all exigencies: 1 Kings 8. 26.
If ſo, being conſcious of our ſincere endeavour to ſerve and pleaſe God; if diſcerning, from a careful reflection upon our heart and ways, that in ſome good meaſure with fidelity and diligence we have diſcharged the conditions required of us, we can entitle our ſelves to God's ſpecial affection, we can accommodate his word to our caſe, we can aſſume a propriety in his regard, how can we forbear conceiving joy?

All hope, in proportion to the worth of its object, and the ſolidity of its ground, is comfortable; it being the anchor of the ſoul, which ſtayeth Heb. 6. 19.
and ſupporteth it in undiſturbed reſt; it appeaſing un-quiet deſires, it ſetting abſent goods before us, and anticipating future enjoyments by a ſweet foretaſt; Seeing then if we have a good Conſcience, and our heart doth not condemn us, our hope is grounded on the rock of ages (on the immutable nature, and the infallible word of God) ſeeing it is the hope of the moſt worthy, the moſt ſublime, the moſt incomparable and ineſtimable goods, it muſt be moſt extremely delightful.

Καὶ περὶ τοῦ παραστῆσαι ὑπόσχεσιν πα-λιγγενεσίας αὐτῇ ἡ ψυχὴ τῇ ἐλπίδι γαυρουμένη διαφαίνεται. Conſt. Ap. 7. 33.
1 John 3. 31.
Iſa. 26. 4.

If it much pleaſeth men to conceit themſelves next heirs of a fair eſtate, to have the reverſion of a good office, to be probable expectants of a great preferment (although death may intercept, or other accidents may obſtruct the accompliſhment of ſuch hopes) how much more ſhall that lively hope (of which St. Peter ſpeaketh) of an inheritance, incorruptible, 1 Pet. 1. 4, 5. and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in Heaven for us; who are kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation, (which hope therefore can never be daſhed or defeated) breed a moſt chearful ſatisfaction, far tranſcending all other pleaſures, which ſpring from the moſt deſirable fru- Luke 10. 20. itions here; according to that admonition of our Lord, Notwithſtanding in this rejoice not that the ſpirits are ſubject unto you; but rather rejoice that your names are written in Heaven.

III. We ſhould evermore rejoice in the performing the duty of Charity; both that which we owe to God, and that which is due to our Neighbour.

Love is the ſweeteſt and moſt delectable of all Paſſions; and when by the conduct of wiſdom it is directed in a rational way toward a worthy, congruous, attainable object, it cannot otherwiſe than fill the heart with raviſhing delight.

And ſuch (in all reſpects ſuperlatively ſuch) an object is God: He infinitely beyond all other things deſerveth our affection, as moſt perfectly amiable and deſireable, as having obliged us by innumerable and ineſtimable benefits, all the good that we have ever enjoyed, or that we can ever expect, being derived from his pure bounty; all things in the world in competition with him, being pitifully mean, ugly and loathſome; all things without him, being vain, unprofitable, and hurtful to us; ſo that Pſal. 89. 6. the Pſalmiſt might well ſay, Who in Heaven can be compared unto the Lord? Pſal. 73. 25. who among the ſons of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord? whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I can deſire beſide thee. Matt. 22. 38. He is the moſt proper object of our love; for we chiefly were framed, and it is the prime law of our nature to love him; our Soul from original inſtinct vergeth toward him as its centre, and can have no reſt till it be fixed on him; he alone can ſatisfie the vaſt capacity of our minds, and fill our boundleſs deſires.

He of all lovely things, moſt certainly and eaſily may be attained; for whereas commonly men are croſſed in their affection, and their love is embittered from their affecting things imaginary, which they cannot reach, or coy things, which diſdain and reject their affection; it is concerning God quite otherwiſe; for,

John 6. 37. He is moſt ready to impart himſelf, and will not reject any that cometh Pſal. 70. 4. unto him; He moſt earneſtly deſireth, and woeth our love; 2 Cor. 5. 20. He is not onely moſt willing to correſpond in affection, but doth prevent us therein; John 14. 21, 23. for we love him, (ſaith the Apoſtle) becauſe he firſt loved us. Apoc. 3. 20. 1 John 4. 19.

He doth cheriſh and encourage our love by ſweeteſt influences, and moſt comfortable embraces, by kindeſt expreſſions of favour, by moſt Rom. 8. 28. beneficial returns, ordering that all things ſhall work together for good to thoſ 1 Cor. 2. 9. who love him: And whereas all other objects do in the enjoyment much fail our expectation, he doth ever far exceed it.

Wherefore in all affectionate motions of our hearts toward God, in deſiring him, or ſeeking his favour and friendſhip; in embracing him, or ſetting our eſteem, our good-will, our confidence on him; in enjoying him by devotional meditations, and addreſſes to him; in a reflective ſenſe 1 Cor. 6. 17. of our intereſt and propriety in him; in that myſterious union of ſpirit, Acts 11. 23. hereby we do cloſely adhere to him, and are (as it were) inſerted in him; Deut. 10. 20. John 15. 4, 6. in a hearty complacence in his benignity, a grateful reſentment of his kindneſs, and a zealous deſire of yeilding ſome requital for it, we cannot but feel very pleaſant tranſports, aſſuring to us the truth of that ſaying in Pſal. 5. 12. the Pſalm, They that love thy name ſhall be joyful in thee; and diſpoſing us to Pſal. 36. 7.— cry out with the Pſalmiſt, How excellent is thy loving-kindneſs, O Lord, Be- Pſal. 63. 3. cauſe thy loving-kindneſs is better than life, my lips ſhall praiſe thee.

Indeed that celeſtial flame (kindled in our hearts by the ſpirit of love) cannot be void of warmth ; we cannot fix our eyes upon infinite beauty, we cannot taſte infinite ſweetneſs, we cannot cleave to infinite felicity, without we ſhould alſo perpetually rejoice in the firſt daughter of love to God, charity toward men ; the which in complection and chearful diſpoſition doth much reſemble its mother : For it doth rid all thoſe gloomy, keen, turbulent imaginations and paſſions, which cloud our mind, which fret our heart, which diſcompoſe the frame of our ſoul ; (from burning anger, from ſtorming contention, from gnawing envy, from rankling ſpite, from racking ſuſpicion, from diſtracting ambition and avarice) It conſequently doth ſettle our mind in an even temper, in a ſedate humour, in an harmonious order, in that pleaſant ſtate of tranquillity, which naturally doth reſult from the voidance of irregular paſſions.

And who can enumerate or expreſs the pleaſures which do wait on every kind, on each act of Charity ?

How triumphant a joy is there in any-wiſe doing good ? whereby we feed good humour, and gratify our beſt inclinations, whereby we oblige our brethren and endear our ſelves to them, whereby we moſt reſemble the divine goodneſs, and attract the divine favour ?

St. Paul telleth us, that God loveth the chearful giver ; and he preſcribeth, that he who ſheweth mercy, ſhou'd do it ἐν ἱλαρότητι with merrineſs ; And in the Law it is commanded, Thine heart ſhall not grieve, when thou giveſt to thy poor brother ; And who indeed can out of charity give alms, or ſhew mercy, without chearfulneſs ? ſeeing that he thereby doth ſatisfy his own mind, and doth eaſe his own bowels ; conſidering that in doing good to his neighbour he receiveth far more good to himſelf ; that he then doth put forth his ſtock to very great and moſt certain advantage ; that he diſchargeth an office very acceptable to God, doth much oblige him, and render him a debter, doth engage him abundantly to requite and reward that beneficence.

2 Cor. 9. 7.
Rom. 12. 8.
Deut. 15. 10.
Eccluſ. 35. 10.

What ſatiſfaction is there in forgiving offences ; whereby we diſcharge our ſouls from vexatious inmates (black thoughts, and rancorous animoſities ;) whereby we clear our ſelves from the troubles attending feuds and ſtrifes ; whereby we imitate our moſt gracious Creatour, and tranſcribe the pattern of our meek Redeemer ; whereby we render our ſelves capable of divine mercy, and acquire a good title to the pardon of our own ſins : according to that divine word, If you forgive men their treſpaſſes, your heavenly Father will forgive you.

Matt. 11. 25. 25. 35.

How unconfinedly and inexhauſtibly vaſt is that delight, which a charitable complacence in the good of our neighbour (a rejoicing with thoſe that rejoice) may afford ? a man thence engroſſing all the good in the World, and appropriating to himſelf all the proſperous ſucceſſes, all the pleaſant entertainments, all the comfortable ſatisfactions of his neighbour. Even a charitable ſympathy, or condolency, in the adverſities of our neighbour, is not deſtitute of content ; for the ſoul is thereby melted into a gentle temper, ſuſceptive of the beſt impreſſions ; we ſhare in the comfort, which we miniſter to others ; we are refreſhed in that kindly ſubmiſſion to the good pleaſure of God, in that lightſome contemplation of God's mercy, in thoſe comfortable hopes of a happy iſſue, which we ſuggeſt to the afflicted ; We thence are expoſed to a grateful ſenſe of God's goodneſs, in preſerving our ſelves from thoſe calamities, and in qualifying us to comfort our brethren ; We feel ſatisfaction in reflecting upon this very practice, and obſerving that we do act conformably to good nature, to the dictates of reaſon, to the will of God, therein diſcharging a good conſcience, and enjoying a portion of that continual feaſt.

Rom. 12. 15.
1 Cor. 13. 6.
Rom. 12. 15.
2 Cor. 1. 6.
7. 7.
Συμπαρακληθῆναι.
Rom. 1. 12.

I ſhould, if the time would permit, farther declare how we ſhould find delight in the contemplation, of all God's Attributes, of his works, of his word; in thankful reſentment of all God's benefits; in willing obedience to all God's Laws; how joy is a proper fruit growing on the practice of humility, of juſtice, of temperance, of devotion, of every vertue and grace; More particularly I ſhould have evidenced how from a patient ſubmiſſion to God's afflicting hand, from penitential contrition of heart for our ſins, from a pious fear and ſolicitude in working out our ſalvation, moſt ſweet conſolations (ſo tempering thoſe ingredients, as to render their bitterneſs very ſavoury) may ſpring; But in recommending joy I would not produce grief; and therefore ſhall not farther annoy your patience.

SERMON XII.

Keep thy Heart with all diligence, &c.

PROV. IV. 23.

Keep thy Heart with all diligence, &c.

BEFORE we do apply our ſelves to inculcate this Precept, it is requiſite that we ſhould ſomewhat explain the terms, and ſettle the meaning thereof; in doing that, we begin with the laſt Words, which qualify the action injoined as to its degree, or extent: with all diligence; the words (מִכָּל־מִשְׁמָר) anſwering to theſe in the Hebrew, do, according to the various uſe, or force of the particle מן, admit a threefold acception. They may (1.) denote abſolutely the intenſeneſs in degree or extenſion in kind of the performance required in this Precept: πάσῃ φυλακῇ τήρει τὴν καρδί[illegible], Omni cuſtodia ſerva cor tuum; keep thy heart with all cuſtody, that is, with all ſorts, or with all degrees of care and diligence; ſo the LXX Interpreters, and the Vulgar Latin following them, render thoſe words. They may (2.) taking the particle for a Mem excellentiæ, as they call it, ſignify comparatively; præ omni cuſtodia ſerva cor tuum; keep thy heart above all keeping; that is, eſpecially and more than thou keepeſt any other thing; ſo doth Pagnin underſtand them, not without cauſe, both for the reaſon ſubjoined here, becauſe from it are the iſſues of life; that is, becauſe it is the principal part and fountain of all vital operations, and therefore deſerveth the beſt cuſtody; as alſo for that in what follows, and in other places of Scripture frequently we are injoyned to keep our tongues from bad diſcourſe, our eyes from wandring after bad objects, our feet from declining to bad courſes; and therefore probably in compariſon to theſe, although needful and inferiour cuſtodies, we are admoniſhed to this moſt eſpecially incumbent cuſtody of our hearts. They may alſo (3.) and that probably enough be taken ſo as to denote the univerſality of the object or matter of this keeping, or the adequate term and bound thereof, keep thy heart, ἀπὸ παντὸς φυλάγματος, ab omni re cuſtodienda, from every thing which it ſhould be kept from; that is, from every thing offenſive or hurtful to it: So did Aquila and Theodotion tranſlate the words. Theſe ſenſes are all of them good, and each may fairly pretend to find place in the meaning of the words; which of them with moſt likelihood I ſhall not diſcuſs, meaning only to inſiſt upon the ſubſtance of the precept; the nature of which being duly conſidered, will infer that it is to be obſerved according to the manner and meaſure preſcribed, underſtood according to any of thoſe ſenſes, or according to all of them conjointly.

As for the meaning of the words, Keep thy heart; two enquiries may be made: 1. what the heart is, which Solomon adviſeth us to keep; what to keep it doth import.

To the firſt I anſwer, that in the ſtile of Scripture the heart doth commonly import the whole inward man, the ὁ ἔσω ἄνθρωπος, the man within us, (as St. Paul ſpeaketh) the ὁ κρυπτὸς τῆς καρδίας ἄνθρωπος, the hidden man of the heart (as St. Peter calleth it) comprehending all the thoughts and imaginations, all the inclinations and diſpoſitions; all the judgments and opinions, all the paſſions and affections; all the reſolutions and purpoſes formed within us; in ſhort, all interiour, whether tendencies to move, or actual motions of humane Soul. For the Scripture (by the way we may obſerve it) ſeemeth to favour that anciently moſt common and current opinion (embraced by Ariſtotle himſelf, even as true in ſtrict Philoſophy, although rejected by moſt of the latter Schools) that the heart, that material part and principal entrail of the Body, is the chief ſeat of the Soul, and immediate inſtrument of its nobleſt operations. However, becauſe the heart in a man's breaſt is moſt inwardly ſeated, moſt ſecluded from ſight, guarded from acceſs, fenced from danger, thence whatever is inmoſt, moſt inviſible, moſt inacceſſible in any thing is called the heart thereof; and all a man's ſecret thoughts, inclinations, opinions, affections, deſigns are involved in this name; ſometimes all, or divers of them conjunctly are called his heart, ſometimes any one of them ſingly (as there is ſubject or occaſion of uſing the word) is ſo termed: Inſtances in every kind are innumerably many, and very obvious; and therefore I ſhall not ſpend time in producing any, but ſhall ſuppoſe that here the word may be underſtood in its utmoſt extent, ſo as to comprehend all the particulars intimated; there being no apparent reaſon for preferring, or excluding any; all of them being capable of moral quality, both ſimply and immediately in themſelves, and conſequentially as they may be the principles of good or bad actions; and becauſe all of them may be, and to be, ought to be the objects of the keeping here injoined.

Rom. 7. 22.
1 Pet. 3. 4.

But then what is this keeping? I anſwer, that the Word as applied to this matter is eſpecially capable of three ſenſes, each of which may be exemplified.

1. It may imply to obſerve, that is, to keep it under a conſtant view, as it were; to mark, or attend unto, to inquire into and ſtudy our heart. So, My ſon (ſaith the wiſe Man) give me thy heart, and let thine eyes keep (or obſerve) my ways; the ſame word which here, is there uſed both in the Hebrew and Greek, and can there well ſignifie no other cuſtody, but that of attending unto; it being the office of the eye only to look, and obſerve. Likewiſe, Obſerve (ſaith God in the Law) and hear all theſe words which I command thee; that is, hear them very attentively: And ſo in divers other places.

Prov. 23. 25.
Deut. 12. 28.

2. It may alſo denote the governance, or good management of our hearts; keeping all the motions thereof in due order, within fit compaſs; applying them to good, and reſtraining them from bad things: So the Pſal. 39. 1. Pſalmiſt uſeth the word, when he ſaith, I will keep my mouth with a bridle; that is, I will ſo rule and curb it, that no evil language ſhall iſſue from it: Eccleſ. 5. 1. So when the wiſe Man adviſeth to keep our foot when we go to the houſe of God; by keeping it, he means rightly to guide and order our proceedings; or well to diſpoſe our ſelves when we addreſs our ſelves to religious per- Prov. 27. 18. formances: So again, He (ſaith he) that keepeth the Fig-tree, ſhall eat the fruit thereof; he that keepeth it, that is, he that dreſſeth and ordereth it to advantage for bearing fruit.

3. Again, keeping may be taken for preſerving, guarding, ſecuring from miſchief or damage: which indeed is the moſt common uſe of the word; and therefore we need no inſtancing to countenance it.

Now any of theſe ſenſes may be intended here, or all of them together; and they indeed are in the nature of the thing ſo coherent, or ſo mutually dependent one on the other, that any one of them can hardly be practiſed without the reſt: For without heedfully obſerving our heart we cannot well govern it; and an ill-governed heart cannot eaſily be attended to; and without both watchful obſervation, and skilful management of it, we cannot guard it from evil; and reciprocally without guarding it, we cannot well rule it, or duly mind it: ſuch a complication there is in practice of theſe three cuſtodies.

I ſhall at preſent onely diſcourſe concerning the firſt of them, which ſeems in the nature of things, and according to our method of acting to precede. According to this expoſition, when 'tis ſaid, Keep thy heart with all diligence, we may underſtand it, as if each of us were thus adviſed: With a moſt conſtant and wary care obſerve all the interiour propenſions and motions of thy ſoul; whatever is done, or deſigned within thee; whither thy deſires lean, what thy affections are ſtirred by, to what thy judgment of things doth lead thee, with greateſt attention and aſſiduity mark and ponder it.

It is a peculiar excellency of humane nature, which ſeemeth more to diſtinguiſh a man from any inferiour rank of creatures, than bare reaſon it ſelf, that he can reflect upon all that is done within him, can diſcern the tendencies of his ſoul, is acquainted with his own purpoſes; ſome ſhadows of other rational operations are diſcoverable in beaſts, and 'tis not eaſie to convince them, who from plauſible experiments do affirm them ſometimes to ſyllogize; but no good reaſon or experience can (I ſuppoſe) make it probable, that they partake of this reflexive faculty; that they do ever regard, or remark upon their own imaginations; they ſeem always to march directly forward with a blind impetuouſneſs toward ſome pleaſing object, without attending to the fancy that guides them, or the appetite which excites them: neither indeed do they ſeem to need any ſuch power in order to the preſervation of their life, or gratifying of their ſenſe, which are the main ends they were deſigned and fitted for. But man being deſigned by his Maker, diſpoſed by the frame of his nature, and obliged by a Law impoſed on him not to follow caſual impulſes from exteriour objects, nor the bare conduct of his imagination, nor the ſway of his natural propenſities, but to regulate as well the internal workings of his ſoul, as his external actions according to certain Laws or Rules preſcribed him; to ſettle his thoughts upon due objects, to bend his inclinations into a right frame, to conſtrain his affections within due bounds, to rectify his judgments of things, to ground his purpoſes upon honeſt reaſons, and direct them unto lawful matters; it is needful, that he ſhould have this power of diſcerning whatever moveth, or paſſeth within him; what he thinks upon, whither he inclines, how he judgeth, whence he is affected, wherefore he doth reſolve; without this power he could not be a moral agent, not able to perform any duty, not properly ſubject to any Law, not liable to render an accompt of his doings: Did he not perceive his own thoughts, how could he diſpel them, when they are bad, or vain? might he not obſerve his own inclinations, how could he ſtrive to reſtrain them, or to reform them, when they draw to unlawful practices? were he not ſenſible of his affections, how could he endeavour to reduce or compoſe them, when they become exorbitant or tumultuous? were he not conſcious of his own opinions, how could he weigh, and examine them; how could he conform his actions to them, or practice according to the dictates of his conſcience? 'tis therefore plainly needful that man ſhould be endued with this power, for that without it he can neither perform the duty required of him, nor enjoy the benefits he is capacified, and deſigned for: Our Maker therefore hath conferred it upon us, our duty conſiſts in its right uſe, our advantage ariſeth from the conſtant and careful exerciſe of this excellent faculty: Conſtant and careful, I ſay: conſtant, for obſervation implies ſo much; for, if ever we ſhut our eyes, or turn our heads aſide, what we look to may be gone; much therefore will paſs away undiſcerned and unobſerved by us; eſpecially ſuch quick and fleeting things as are the interiour motions of our ſoul will eſcape; wherefore a continual vigilancy is requiſite to a keeper of the heart; It muſt alſo be careful, as the keeper of a thing ſo nimble and ſlippery muſt not ſleep, ſo he muſt not ſlumber; he muſt not be oſcitant, but very intent upon his charge; ſuperficial glances upon the outward face, as it were, of the ſoul will not ſuffice; to obſerve is with earneſt care to look through the matter; to diſcern whatever lurketh therein, to pierce into the very depth and bottom of it, to ſpy through every nook and corner therein; otherwiſe 'tis but ſlightly viewed rather than truly obſerved; eſpecially ſo ſubtile, ſo intricate, ſo obſcure a thing as a man's heart is requireth an extraordinary application of mind in obſerving it with judgment and fruit.

This is then our duty, recommended by the Wiſe Man, to be continually with extream diligence, looking inward upon our ſelves, obſerving what thoughts ſpring up within us, what imaginations find moſt welcome harbour in our breaſts, what objects moſt affect us with delight, or diſpleaſure (what it is that we love and readily embrace; what we diſtaſt and preſently reject) what prejudices do poſſeſs our minds; wherefore we propoſe to our ſelves ſuch undertakings; converſing with our ſelves, and as it were diſcourſing in this manner: What is it that I think upon, are my thoughts ſerious, ſeaſonable, and pure? Whither do I propend; are my inclinations compliant to God's Law, and good reaſon? What judgments do I make of things; are my apprehenſions clear, ſolid, ſure, built upon no corrupt prejudice? What doth moſt eaſily ſtir me, and how is my heart moved; are my affections calm, and orderly, and well placed? What plots do I contrive, what projects am I driving on; are my deſigns good, are my intentions upright and ſincere? let me throughly enquire into theſe points, let me be fully ſatisfied in them; thus ſhould we continually be doing. The holy Scripture doth often bid us to judge our ſelves, to examine our works; to ſearch and try; to weigh, to heed, to watch over our ways: If (ſaith St. Paul) we would judge (diſcern, or di-

1 Cor. 11. 31. ſtinguiſh) our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged; that is, we ſhould avoid Gal. 6. 4. thoſe miſcarriages, which bring the divine judgments upon us: and, Let Εἰ ἑαυτοὺς us (ſaith the Prophet Jeremy) ſearch and try our ways, and turn unto the διεκρίνομεν. Lord; and, I ſaid I will take heed to my ways (ſaith the Pſalmiſt); and,
Lam. 3. 40. Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be eſtabliſhed, is the Wiſe
Pſal. 39. 1. Man's advice: Search our ways, and ponder our paths, this implies, that Prov. 4. 26. we firſt do examine, and weigh our hearts; for there our ways begin; thence is motion derived to our feet, and to our hands alſo: All our actions depend as effects of them, all do receive their moral quality thence: Mark 7. 23. Whatever in our doings is good or bad ἔσωθεν ἐκπορεύεται, doth (as our Lord expreſſeth it) iſſue from within us; our actions are but ſtreams ſweet or bitter, clear or foul, according to the tincture they receive at thoſe inward ſources of good or evil inclinations, of true or falſe judgments, of pure or corrupt intention; there conſequently we are principally obliged, to exerciſe the ſcrutiny and trial required of us.

Socrates is reported to have much admired that Verſe in Homer,

Ὅττι τοι ἐν μεγάροισι κακόν τ' ἀγαθόν τε τέτυκται.

Gell. XIV. 6. affirming that in it the ſum of all Wiſdom is comprized: the ſenſe and drift thereof being this, as he took it: Seek and ſtudy what good or bad is at home, within thy houſe; ſee how all goes in thy breaſt; employ thy chief inquiry upon the affairs of thy ſoul; there confining thy curioſity and care.

Such is the duty; and the practice thereof is of huge profit and uſe; bringing many great benefits and advantages with it; the neglect of it is attended with many grievous inconveniences and miſchiefs, and for perſwading to the one, diſſwading from the other, I ſhall propound ſome of them, ſuch as are moſt obvious, and offer themſelves to my meditation.

The moſt general, and moſt immediate advantage ariſing hence is this, that by ſuch a conſtant and careful inſpection, or ſtudy upon our hearts, we may arrive to a competent knowledge of, and a true acquaintance with our ſelves (a moſt uſeful knowledge, a moſt beneficial acquaintance) Jer. 17. 9. neither of them being otherwiſe attainable. The heart (as you know the Prophet ſays) is deceitful above all things; and, who (adds he) can know it? who can know it: none it ſeems, but God that made it; and the man that hath it: he that hath it, muſt, I ſay, be able competently to know it; even in regard to him the queſtion may intimate ſome difficulty, but it doth not denote an abſolute impoſſibility: Hard it may be for us to know the heart by reaſon of its deceitfulneſs; but the ſlieſt impoſture, if narrowly looked into, may be detected: 'Tis a very ſubtle and abſtruſe, a very various and mutable thing; the multiplicity of objects it doth converſe with, the divers alterations it is ſubject to from bodily temper, cuſtom, company, example, other unaccomptable cauſes; eſpecially its proneneſs to comply with, and to ſute its judgments of things unto preſent circumſtances without, and preſent appetites within do render it ſuch; wherefore it is not indeed eaſie to know it; but yet poſſible it is; for under ſevere penalties we are obliged not to be deceived by it, or which is all one, not to ſuffer it to be deceived: Let no man (ſaith St.
1 Cor. 3. 18. Paul) deceive himſelf: ſee that ye be not deceived, ſaith our Saviour, Take Luke 21. 8. heed (ſaith Moſes) to your ſelves, that your heart be not deceived; ſuch Precepts Deut. 11. 16. there are many, obliging us to know our hearts, and to diſcover the fallacies put on them, or upon us by them; carrying with them directions how to compaſs it; that is, by looking about us, and taking heed; (by careful circumſpection and caution.) It is therefore a feaſible thing to avoid being impoſed upon, and well to underſtand our ſelves: But as other abſtruſe pieces of knowledge, ſo this eſpecially cannot be attained without induſtrious applications of our mind, and conſtant obſervations, to find the corners wherein the deceit lurks; we muſt purſue its ſecret windings and intrigues; we muſt trace it ſtep by ſtep, (as Hunters do wild Beaſts) into the utmoſt receſſes of its firſt deſires, and moſt deeply radicated prejudices; we muſt do as David did, when he ſtrove to free himſelf from diſtruſt and impatience in his ſtraits: I communed with my own heart (ſaith he) and my ſpirit made diligent ſearch; by which practice he found, as he farther acquaints us, that it was his infirmity, which moved him to doubt of God's mercy and benignity toward him. Cicero having ſomewhere commended Philoſophy as the moſt excellent gift by Heaven beſtowed upon man, aſſigns this reaſon; becauſe it teaches us, as all other things, ſo eſpecially this of all moſt difficult thing, to know our ſelves: but he, with his favour, doth ſeem to promiſe for his friend more than ſhe is able to perform; the main part of this knowledge doth lye beyond the reach of any particular method; the Empirick ſeems to have more to do here than the Doctor: Philoſophy may perhaps afford us ſome plauſible notions concerning the nature of our ſoul; its ſtate, its power, its manners of acting; it may preſcribe ſome wide directions about proceeding in the diſcovery of our ſelves; but the particular knowledge (and therein the chief difficulty lieth) of our ſelves, how our ſouls ſtand inclined and diſpoſed, that onely our particular earneſt ſtudy, and aſſiduous obſervation can yield unto us; and it is an ineſtimable advantage to obtain it. All men are very curious and inquiſitive after knowledge, the being endued therewith paſſeth for a goodly ornament, a rich poſſeſſion, a matter of great ſatisfaction, and much uſe: Men are commonly aſhamed of nothing ſo much as ignorance; but if any knowledge meriteth eſteem for its worth and uſefulneſs, this next to that concerning Almighty God, may ſurely beſt pretend thereto; if any ignorance deſerveth blame, this certainly is moſt liable thereto; to be ſtudious in contemplating natural effects, and the cauſes whence they proceed; to be verſed in the writings and ſtories of other mens doings; to be pragmatical obſervers of what is ſaid or done without us (that which perchance may little concern, little profit us to know) and in the mean while to be ſtrangers at home, to overlook what paſſeth in our own breaſts, to be ignorant of our moſt near and proper concernments, is a folly, if any, to be derided, or rather greatly to be pitied, as the ſource of many great inconveniences to us. For it is from ignorance of our ſelves that we miſtake our ſelves for other Perſons than we really are, and accordingly we behave our ſelves toward our ſelves with great indecency and injuſtice; we aſſume and attribute to our ſelves that which doth not any-wiſe belong unto us, or become us: As put caſe we are ignorant of the Perſons we converſe with, as to their quality, their merit, their humour; we ſhall be apt to miſcall, and miſtake them; to miſbehave our ſelves in our demeanour toward them; to yield them more or leſs reſpect than befits them; to croſs them rudely, or unhandſomely to humour them: In like manner, if we be ſtrangers to our hearts, ſhall we carry our ſelves toward our own ſelves: We ſhall hence, like men in a frenzy, take our ſelves for extraordinary People, rich and noble, and mighty, when indeed our condition being duly eſtimated, we are wretchedly mean and beggarly. We do frequently hug our ſelves (or rather ſhadows in our room) admiring our ſelves for qualities not really being in us; applauding our ſelves for actions nothing worth; ſuch as proceed from ill principles, and aim at bad ends, when as did we turn our thoughts inwards,

Pſ. 77. 6, 10.

Hæc enim una nos cum cæteras res omnes, tum quod eſt difficillimum docuit, ut noſmet ipſos noſceremus. Cic. de Leg. 1.

Rev. 3. 17.

Ut nemo in ſeſe tentat deſcendere, nemo.

wards, and regard what we find in our hearts, by what inclinations we are moved, upon what grounds we proceed, we ſhould be aſhamed, and ſee cauſe rather to bemoan, than to bleſs our ſelves: Deſcending into our ſelves we might perchance diſcern that moſt of our gallant performances (ſuch as not conſidering our hearts we preſume them to be) are derived from ſelf-love, or pride; from deſire of honour, or love of gain; from fear of damage or diſcredit in the World, rather than out of love, reverence, and gratitude toward God, of charity, compaſſion, and good-will toward our brethren, of ſober regard to our own true welfare and happineſs; which are the onely commendable principles, and grounds of action: St. Luke telleth us of certain men, who perſwaded themſelves that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others; upon occaſion of whom our Saviour dictateth the Parable of the Phariſee and Publican; whence think we came that fond confidence in themſelves, and proud contempt of others? from ignorance ſurely of themſelves, or from not obſerving thoſe bad diſpoſitions, thoſe wrong opinions, thoſe corrupt fountains within, from whence their ſuppoſed righteous deeds did flow. If any man (ſaith St. Paul, giving an account of ſuch preſumptions) thinks himſelf to be ſomething, when he is nothing, ἑαυτὸν φρεναπατᾷ, he cheats himſelf in his mind; but let every man examine his work, and then he ſhall have rejoicing in himſelf alone (or, privately with himſelf); ſome, he implieth, do impoſe upon, and delude themſelves, imagining themſelves ſome-bodies, (indued forſooth with admirable qualities, or to have atchieved very worthy deeds) when as, if they would enquire into themſelves, they ſhould find no ſuch matter; that themſelves were no ſuch Men, and their Works no ſuch Wonders: But if (ſaith he) a Man doth δοκιμάζειν ἑαυτοῦ τὸ ἔργον, implore and examine what he doeth, and in reſult thereof doth clearly perceive, that he acteth upon good reaſons, and with honeſt intentions, then may he indeed injoy a ſolid interiour ſatisfaction (a true καύχημα, or exultation of mind) whatever others, not acquainted with thoſe inward ſprings of his motion, do pleaſe to judge of him, and his proceedings. No man indeed can truly value himſelf, or well approve of his own doings, ſo as to find any perfect comfort in himſelf, or in them, who doth not by ſtudying himſelf diſcover whence, and why he acts: One may be a flatterer, but cannot be a true friend to himſelf, who doth not throughly acquaint himſelf with his own inward ſtate; who doth not frequently conſult, and converſe with himſelf: A friend to himſelf, I ſaid, and to be ſo is one of the greateſt benefits that humane life can enjoy; that which will moſt ſweeten and ſolace our life to us: friendſhip with others (with perſons honeſt and intelligent) is a great accommodation, helping much to allay the troubles, and eaſe the burthens of life; but friendſhip with our ſelves is much more neceſſary to our well-being: for we have continual opportunities and obligations to converſe with our ſelves; we do ever need aſſiſtance, advice and comfort at home: and as commonly 'tis long acquaintance, and familiar entercourſe together, which doth conciliate one man to another, begetting mutual dearneſs and confidence, ſo it is toward ones ſelf: As no man can be a friend to a meer ſtranger, or to one whoſe temper, whoſe humour, whoſe deſigns he is ignorant of; ſo cannot he be a friend to himſelf, if he be unacquainted with his own diſpoſition and meaning; he cannot in ſuch a caſe rely upon his own advice

Luke 18. 7.

Ῥᾷϛον ἑαυτὸν ἀπατῆσαι, καὶ οἴεσθαι εἶναι τι οὐδὲν ὄντα, ὑπὸ τῆς κενῆς δόξης φυσιώμενον. Nazianz. Orat. 27.

Gal. 6. 3.

Πρὸς ἑαυτὸν μόνον.

——patriæ quis exul ſe quoque fugit?
Αὐτὸς σεαυτῷ χρῶ συμβούλῳ, καὶ τῷ Θεῷ. Naz. Epiſt. 60.

Ἔνιοι τὸν ἴδιον βίον ὡς ἀτερπίστατον θέαμα προσιδεῖν οὐχ ὑπομένουσιν, οὐδ᾽ ἀνακλάσαι τὸν λογισμὸν ὡς φῶς ἐφ᾽ ἑαυτοὺς καὶ περιαγαγεῖν· ἀλλ᾽ ἡ ψυχὴ γέμουσα κακῶν παντοδαπῶν, καὶ φρίττουσα, καὶ φοβουμένη τὰ ἔνδον, ἐκπηδᾷ θύραζε, &c. Plut. de Curioſ. p. 916.

vice, or aid, when need is; but will ſuſpect, and diſtruſt himſelf; he cannot be pleaſant company to himſelf, but ſhall be ready to croſs, and fall out with himſelf; he cannot adminiſter conſolation to his own griefs and diſtreſſes; his privacy will become a deſertion, his retirement a mere ſolitude. But paſſing over this general advantage, I ſhall with ſome more minuteneſs of diſtinction conſider divers particular advantages accruing from the practice of this duty, together with the oppoſite inconveniences, which are conſequent upon the neglect thereof, in the following Diſcourſe.

SERMON XIII.

Keep thy Heart with all diligence, &c.

PROV. IV. 23.

Keep thy Heart with all diligence, &c.

I Proceed to the particular advantages of the practice of this duty, and the inconveniences of the neglect of it.

1. The conſtant and careful obſervation of our hearts will ſerve to prevent immoderate ſelf-love, and ſelf-conceit; to render us ſober and modeſt in our opinions concerning, and in our affections toward our ſelves; qualifying us to comply with the Apoſtolical Precept, μὴ φρονεῖν ὑπὲρ [illegible], that is, not to overween, or overvalue our ſelves, and our own things: for he that by ſerious inſpection upon his own heart, ſhall diſcern how many fond, impure, and ugly thoughts do ſwarm within him; how averſe his inclinations are from good, and how prone to evil; how much his affections are miſplaced, and diſtempered (while he vehemently delights in the poſſeſſion, and impotently frets for the want of trifles, having ſmall content in the fruition, and but ſlender diſpleaſure for the abſence of the greateſt goods; while empty hopes exalt him, and idle fears deject him; while other various paſſions, like ſo many tempeſts, drive, and toſs him all about) who ſhall obſerve, how clouds of darkneſs, errour and doubt do hover upon the face of his ſoul; ſo that he quickly taketh up opinions, and ſoon layeth them down, and often turneth from one miſtake unto another; how unſettled his reſolutions are, eſpecially in the purſuance of the beſt goods; and what corrupt mixtures cleave to his beſt purpoſes; who taketh notice how backward he is unto, and how cold in devotions toward God, how little ſenſible of his goodneſs, or fearful of his diſpleaſure, or zealous for his honour, or careful of performing his duty toward him; how little alſo it is that he deſireth, or delighteth in the good, that he pitieth and grieveth at the evil of his neighbour; how ſluggiſh alſo and remiſs he is in the purſuance of his own beſt affairs, and higheſt concernments; he that doth, I ſay, frequently with heedfulneſs regard theſe imperfections and obliquities in his own heart, how can he be raviſhed with ſelf-love? how can he be much taken with himſelf? can any man dote upon ſuch deformity, admire ſuch weakneſs and naughtineſs? No ſurely; that men are ſo amorous of themſelves, ſo haughty and arrogant in their conceits, doth conſtantly ariſe from not reflecting on their own hearts; not beholding themſelves wiſtly enough in that mirrour; not conſidering according to juſt repreſentation there how little lovely, or worthy they are: If they did practice that, they would ſee reaſon, and thence become inclinable rather to deſpiſe, to loath, to pity themſelves.

2. Upon that advantage is conſequent, that this practice will diſpoſe us with equanimity, and patience to bear all croſſes and grievances befalling us; ſo producing not onely an excellent vertue, but a conſiderable ſolace to us; for the being conſcious of ſo much unworthineſs, which obſervation of our heart will neceſſarily diſcover, will not onely juſtifie the providence, (ſo removing all juſt cauſe of complaint) but will commend the benignity of God unto us (ſo adminiſtring good matter of thanks) It will prompt us heartily to confeſs with thoſe in Ezra, that our puniſhments are leſs than our deſervings; to join in acknowledgment with the Pſalmiſt, that God hath not dealt with us after our ſins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities; to ſay with Jeremy, It is of the Lord's mercy, that we are not conſumed, becauſe his compaſſions fail not; with Jacob, I am leſs than any of thy mercies.

Leniter ex merito quicquid patiare ferendum eſt. Ovid. Ep. 5.

Ezra 9. 13.

Pſal. 103. 10.

Lam. 3. 22.

Gen. 32. 10.

3. Particularly this Practice will fence us againſt immoderate diſpleaſure occaſionable by Mens hard opinions, or raſh cenſures paſſed on us: For he that by inquiry into himſelf perceives ſo many defects in himſelf, will not ſo eaſily, nor ſo greatly be offended, if ſome of them (or ſome like to them) be objected to him; ſince he finds himſelf truly liable to many more, and greater. Epictetus, his advice is, when you are told, that any Man ſpeaks ill of you, that you ſhould not apologize, but anſwer onely, that he was ignorant of many other faults of yours, or he would not onely have mentioned thoſe: To be diſpoſed without diſſembling, or affection to follow his counſel would argue a man very intelligent of himſelf, and well prepared to endure happily and handſomely encounters of this kind, which every man ſhall be ſure to meet with. None indeed can ſo contentedly brook reproach, or blame, as he that by intimate acquaintance with his own heart doth know the cenſure paſſed on him to be in effect mild and favourable; as finding himſelf a witneſs of more faults, than any adverſary can accuſe him of; as being a ſtricter examiner, and ſeverer judge of himſelf than the moſt envious eye, or diſaffected mind can be. It is alſo ſome comfort, that if cenſures be very outragious, a Man by knowledge of himſelf (by knowing his own diſpoſitions, if his perſon be disfigured by a very ill character; by knowing his own purpoſes, if his actions be grievouſly aſperſed) is certain they are ſuch; that he can be as well a faithful witneſs, and juſt Judge for himſelf, as againſt himſelf.

4. Likewiſe this practice will defend us, as from the diſcomforts of harſh cenſure, ſo from the miſtakes and miſcarriages, to which the more favourable opinions of Men, or their flattering expreſſions (thoſe luſcious poiſons) may expoſe us.

Index ipſe ſui ſe totum explorat ad unguem
Quid proceres, vanique ferat quid opinio vulgi Securus——

——Nihil eſt quod credere de ſe
Non poſſit, cum laudatur——

'Tis not onely true of great men, but even of all men: The common nature of men diſpoſeth them to be credulous, when they are commended, or receive any ſignification of eſteem from others:

Every ear is tickled with this ἥδιστον ἄκουσμα, this ſweet muſick of applauſe: But we are not to relye upon others imperfect and ill-grounded judgment ſo much as upon our own more certain knowledge concerning our ſelves:

—— ne cui de te plus quam tibi credas.

Take no man's word before thine own ſenſe, in what concerns thine own caſe and character, is an advice deſerving our regard and practice: For that a man in queſtions of this kind is able to be a skilful and indifferent Umpire between himſelf and others; that he is neither elevated, nor depreſſed in mind by external weights, but keepeth himſelf equally poiſed in a juſt conſiſtence by his own well-informed conſcience; that neither his heart is exaſperated with the bittereſt gall of reproach, nor his head intoxicated with the ſweeteſt wine of flattery, is an invaluable convenience of life; or rather it is a vertue arguing a moſt ſtrong and healthful conſtitution of ſoul. How great a levity of mind, how great a vanity is it (ſaith a good Father) ſetting aſide a man's own conſcience to follow other mens opinions (and even that feigned and forged) to be ſnatched away by the wind of falſe praiſe, to rejoice in being circumvented, and to receive being mocked for a benefit? From being thus abuſed, this practice alone can ſecure us: If we know our ſelves well, we cannot ſo eaſily be deluded by the miſtakes of others concerning us, on either hand.

Quæ hæc tanta levitas eſt animi, quæ tanta vanitas relicta propria conſcientia alienam opinionem ſequi, & quidem fictam, atque ſimulatam; rapi vento falſæ laudationis, gaudere ad circumventionem ſuam, & illuſionem pro beneficio accipere? Hier. (vel Paulinus) ad Celant.

5. Likewiſe, farther upon the ſame this practice will conduce to qualifie our opinions, and moderate our paſſions toward others; ſo that without intemperate anger, or bitterneſs, we may bear the faults, errours, and infirmities of our brethren; that we ſhall be benign in our carriage, and gentle in our cenſures even toward them, who do not behave themſelves ſo well and wiſely as they ſhould do. St. Paul thus admoniſheth the Galatians, Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are ſpiritual (the more ſpiritual whether in truth, or in our own eſteem, the more eſpecially are we obliged hereto) reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs, conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou may be alſo tempted: σκοπῶν σεαυτόν, looking upon, or ſpying into thy ſelf; ſuch conſidering our ſelves, taking notice of our own infirmity within, perceiving how ſubject we are to the impreſſions of temptation, and that hence it may be our own caſe to fall and faulter, if occaſion concur with our weakneſs; diſcerning this, I ſay, as it will be a reaſon obliging, ſo it may be an inſtrument conducing to a mitigation of ſpirit toward thoſe, whom we ſee overtaken with miſtake, or overborn by frailty. Why doſt thou ſee a mote in thy brothers eye, but doſt not conſider the beam in thine own eye? is our Saviour's queſtion; why a man ſhould do ſo, there cannot (as he implies) any good reaſon be aſſigned; ('tis a very unreaſonable and inexcuſable miſcarriage) but whence a man doeth ſo, is obvious and plain; it is, becauſe he curiouſly pryes into other mens doings, and careleſly neglecteth the obſervation of his own heart: Did we reflect our ſight inwards, we ſhould be more apt to mark our own faults, and leſs ready to diſcover thoſe of others; or however we ſhould be more gently affected in regard to them: For he that knows himſelf a beggarly Wretch, will he reproach poverty to another? He that conſulting the glaſs doth find himſelf ill-favoured, will he upbraid another for want of grace or beauty? He that perceives that the dart will rebound, and thereby wound himſelf, will he not be careful of flinging it? Will a man be forward in pronouncing a heavy ſentence againſt another, who conſiders himſelf by plain conſequence involved in the condemnation thereof? Should a man do ſo, he doth at leaſt render him-

Gal. 6. 1.

Marc. Ant. XI. 18.

Matt. 7. 2.

ſelf

Rom. 2. 1.

2 Sam. 12.

ſelf uncapable of apology, or excuſe: So we are told by St. Paul: Every cenſurer (πᾶς ὁ κρίνων) is, ſaith he, inexcuſable; for that in arraigning another he condemns himſelf: guilty is he of inexcuſable folly, or impudence; of folly and blindneſs, if he ſee not; of extream impudence, if ſeeing his own obnoxiouſneſs he will not abſtain from judging others for that, of which himſelf is guilty in the ſame kind, or equivalently in ſome other. You know how David was caught by Nathan, and unwarily adjudged himſelf to death: And ſo may every man expoſe himſelf, that is rigorous in cenſure toward others without reflecting on himſelf, and conſidering his own heart; wherein he ſhall find ſo much ground and matter of being angry with, and judging himſelf. If we will be fierce and keen, 'tis reaſon we ſhould be ſo firſt, and chiefly there, where our greateſt enemies do abide, whence moſt miſchief ariſeth to us; where there is fitteſt matter, and juſteſt cauſe of paſſion: Thus is this practice a moſt proper and effectual remedy for thoſe baneful vices of pride and peeviſhneſs in our ſelves, of malignity and fury toward others. But farther,

Si volumus æqui rerum omnium judices eſſe, hoc primum nobis ſuadeamus, neminem eſſe noſtrum ſine culpa. Sen. de Ir.

Συγγνώμην ἔφη διδόναι πᾶσι τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσι, πλὴν ἑαυτῷ. Cato Maj. Plut. p. 624.

Pſal. 113. 1.

6. The obſervation of our heart yieldeth great advantage in being very conducible to render men truly wiſe and prudent; in thoſe things eſpecially, which moſt nearly concern them: Giving them to ſee before them, and to underſtand what they do; and to proceed without ſecurity; as contrarily the neglect thereof rendereth men unadviſed and uncertain in their doings. A main point of prudence conſiſteth in ſuiting a man's undertakings to his powers and capacities; in not attempting things ſurpaſſing his ability, or fitneſs; and in not declining ſuch uſeful, or beneficial attempts, as he may well compaſs. Some are overbold and raſh in ſetting upon things beyond their ſtrength to accompliſh, or skill to manage; whence commonly with ſhame and ſorrow they are defeated in their enterprizes; Others are overbackward and diffident, ſo as not to adventure upon what they may with good advantage, or perhaps ought to perform; thence depriving themſelves of the benefits they might obtain, or omitting the duties, which they are obliged to; both which inconveniences uſually do proceed from the not looking into, and ſtudying the heart; for the moſt and greateſt impediments of action do lye there; being grounded upon inward indiſpoſitions, or diſagreeableneſs of mens temper, capacity, inclination to the matters, to which they apply themſelves: A tender foot will be galled and lamed, if you ſet it going in rugged paths; a weak head will turn, if you place it high, or upon the brink of a precipice; a ſoft ſpirit cannot well comport with boiſterous employments; he that naturally affects calm and quiet, muſt not hope to come off well, if he engage himſelf upon affairs expoſed to abundance of care and tumult; nor will he if he be well ſtudied this way, and rightly underſtand himſelf, adventure thereupon. It was as well according to wiſdom, as modeſty, that David could ſay: My heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty, neither do I exerciſe my ſelf in great matters, or in things too high for me. In every undertaking two things occur to be conſidered, what of difficulty is found therein, and what of temptation; whether it can be done, and whether it ſhould be done: It is a folly to ſpend our care and pains upon that, which is too hard for us to effect, and 'tis worſe than ſo to adventure upon that, which moſt probably will bring us into ſin, and hurt our ſouls; onely the ſtudy of our ſelves, weighing our power, and trying our temper, will prevent both: He that doeth this may commonly foreſee what the caſe being put he ſhall do; that if ſuch a temptation doth aſſault him in ſuch circumſtances, his inclinations will be apt to comply therewith, and he ſhall ſcarce be able to reſiſt (that for inſtance he ſhall wax haughty in a ſtate of dignity, become luxurious in abundance of wealth, be diſtracted with care in a buſie employment) and therefore he will not be ſo forward to ingage himſelf upon ſuch occaſions; danger and miſchief being ſo vividly pre-repreſented to his ſight. But he that pondereth not his own heart is ready to preſume, that be the buſineſs what it will, he ſhall come off well; and ſo unadviſedly ruſheth into the ſnare; he aſſumes unweildy burthens upon his ſhoulders, which he ſoon feeleth ſorely to oppreſs and pain him; which he can neither bear with eaſe, nor put off with convenience; When, for inſtance, the Prophet told Hazael 2 Kings 12. 8. what Cruelties and Rapines, ſhould (when he got power and opportunity) be committed by him; you ſee how he was ſtartled at the report: am I a Dog, ſaith he; that is, can I be ſo vile and baſe; yes, he might himſelf have perceived that he ſhould in likelihood be ſo; the probability of his doing, as the Prophet ſaid, had been no great news to him, if he had obſerved his own inclinations. Good Agur on the other ſide did better underſtand himſelf, when he prayed; Give me neither poverty nor riches, Prov. 30. 8. but feed me with food convenient for me; he was conſcious of natural infirmity, and therefore afraid of being in a condition that might prevail upon it; of great wealth, leſt it ſhould tempt him to forgetfulneſs, and neglect of God (leſt, (ſaith he) I be full and deny thee, and ſay who is the Lord?) of extreme want, leſt it ſhould put him upon unjuſt, diſhoneſt and impious courſes to maintain his life; (leſt, adds he, I be poor and ſteal, and take the name of my God in vain;) he ſaw by looking into himſelf, that ſelf-love (the root of pride and injuſtice) was potent in him, and formidable, when occaſion ſhould favour it, and therefore by imploring divine aid, he ſtrove to decline the advantages and occaſions of it. It was good counſel which Xenophon tells us the Oracle gave Crœſus, conſulting about the ſucceſs of his attempt againſt Cyrus, Σαυτὸν γινώσκων εὐδαίμων Κροῖσε περάσεις· De Cyri Inſtit. 7. Knowing thy ſelf thou ſhalt paſs on happily (in the courſe of thy life and undertakings:) had he, conſidering his own ability, in relation to the dubious event of things (that as he could not promiſe himſelf good fortune, ſo he did not know how he ſhould comport with bad; being not ſure that he ſhould overcome either his enemies, or himſelf) thus, I ſay, had he complied with the Oracle's advice, he might have eſcaped the loſs and ſorrow which befell him. So is t with us; if we know not the burthen of our Veſſel, we ſhall either put more ſail to it than it can bear, or leſs than will ſuffice to carry it on, it will be overladen, or want fit balaſt: If we are ignorant of our capacities, we ſhall either ſoar too high with a dangerous confidence, or grovel below in a ſluggiſh liſtleſneſs: Studying our ſelves will help to preſerve us in a middle pitch, will direct us in a moderate courſe, wherein we may proceed with ſufficient courage and alacrity; with a prudent foreſight, or at leaſt with a comfortable hope of good ſucceſs.

7. Near to that lies another conſiderable benefit, attending this practice, which is, that it will help to render us expedite in our reſolutions, and conſtant to them; conſiſtent with our ſelves, and uniform in our proceedings; whence will ariſe both great convenience to our ſelves, and ſatisfaction to others with whom we deal or converſe: As on the contrary ſide from the neglect thereof we ſhall become ſlow in deliberation, doubtful in reſolution, and unſtable in performance. When any occaſion of acting is preſented, we ſhall be ready to cloſe with what is agreeable to our inclination, and not repugnant to our judgment, if by due ſtudy and experience we are acquainted with them; that acquaintance is a certain preparation to a ſpeedy choice; and we ſhall upon the ſame grounds conſtantly adhere to our choice, ſtanding upon ſo firm a baſe; and ſo ſhall neither diſcompoſe our ſelves, nor diſappoint others by our irreſolution and inconſtancy. But he that skills not his own heart, firſt will dwell long upon conſultation (not feeling perfectly whither his inward Bias doth draw him) and when he ſeems upon ſome ſuperficial reaſon to have determined on one ſide, ſome diſcordance to his own inclination, or ſome latent prejudice ſoon diſcovering it ſelf, he wavers, and at length falls off; finding that he hath promiſed to himſelf or others what he is unable or Jam. 1. 8. unwilling to perform; ſo like St. James his two-ſouled man, he is unſteady in all his ways. The hard Student of himſelf is like a man that hath his Eſtate in numerato, in ready Caſh, all in his hand, or at his command; he can preſently tell what he can do, and ſatisfie thoſe he hath to do with; go to him, you may know where to have him, even juſt where you left him, or where he uſes to be; you may expect a ſudden diſpatch, and you may rely upon his word; for he knows before-hand what he doeth, and ſhall continue to like; why he determines ſo or ſo; and cannot be removed from his well-grounded purpoſe (that which is by the Philoſopher Sen. de Vit. B. 8. termed ratio nec diſſidens, nec hæſitans, a reaſon that doth not ſtrive, nor ſtick, he is maſter of.) But he that neglects this practice, what he hath any title to, lieth diſperſed, and laid up in corners unknown to himſelf, ſo that himſelf cannot come readily by it; you can hardly tell where to find him; you muſt wait his reſolution, and when 'tis told you, you cannot be aſſured thereof; nor any-wiſe ſatisfied that he will ſtick to his word, or his mind; he knows not throughly what he would have himſelf, can you then hope for a certain anſwer from him? He cannot well truſt himſelf, can you then relie upon him? He will find himſelf miſtaken and croſſed in his own choice, can you expect leſs? Quid eſt ſapientia? ſemper

Sen. Ep. 20. idem velle, atque idem nolle: Conſtancy to a Man's ſelf is, ſaith he, the very being of Wiſdom; however nothing more beſeems a Man, more commends him to ſociety, and ſuits him to buſineſs, is more pleaſant and grateful to thoſe, who have to do with him, than ſuch a clear, uniform, ſteady diſpoſition of mind; ſuch a ſmooth and even tenour of action; nothing renders converſation and commerce more unpleaſant, than a fickle lubricity of humour, and unaccountable deformity of behaviour: That ſtudy therefore is very uſeful, which conduceth to breed and maintain the one, and which removeth the other.

8. Again, another valuable convenience of this practice is, that it diſpoſeth unto, and preſerveth a Man's mind in a ſober temper, agreeable to his ſtate, and to the circumſtances into which he is caſt; ſuch a temper I mean as that, which the Wiſe Man preſcribes, where he ſaith, In the Eccleſ. 7. 14. day of proſperity be joyful, but in the day of adverſity conſider. It is apt to beget either a comfortable joy, or a wholſome regret, according as the interiour condition of his ſoul (that wherein the chief cauſe of the one, or of the other affection is grounded) doth ſeaſonably and juſtly require. To be tranſported with mirth and jollity in a ſtate of grievous miſery, when reaſon it ſelf demands ſorrow and pity; to be ſad and dumpiſh when all things flow proſperouſly, either of thoſe will ſeem marvellouſly incongruous, and argue a kind of ſtupidity in him that ſo behaves himſelf. Now there is not in truth any calamity ſo diſaſtrous as that which befals us within our ſelves, no Proſperity ſo worthily delightful as the good proceeding of affairs in our ſouls: 'Tis the moſt excellent pleaſure a Man is capable of, that which doth ſpring from the being conſcious, that his mind doth that good thoughts freely do ſpring up, that good inclinations are ſtrong and prevalent, that good habits of mind wax vigorous; that the love of goodneſs is improved; that he generally doth thrive in health and ſtrength ſpiritual: No increaſe of treaſure can affect the covetous, no riſing in power and dignity can ſatisfie the ambitious, no enjoyment of ſenſual entertainments can raviſh the voluptuous man with ſo true or great content, as the ſenſible proficiency in vertuous and pious diſpoſitions of ſoul, growing richer unto God, and ſtronger in the hopes of his favour do produce in him that doth affect it, and can perceive it: 'Tis a joy in all reſpects incomparable; onely wiſe and reaſonable, pure and innocent, firm and durable. As on the other hand if it be ſo that we diſcern, that within our hearts bad thoughts do ſwarm and multiply, bad appetites do ſway, bad cuſtoms do encroach upon us; that deſire of, and delight in good things decay; that we become more dark, dull, unſettled in our ſpiritual apprehenſions, more feeble and languid in our proſecutions of vertue, 'tis a great benefit to have a timely remorſe prompting and urging us to endeavour a deliverance from ſo unhappy a condition: But no man can well either enjoy that comfortable delight, or be affected with this profitable ſorrow, who doth not with a careful attention view his heart, and deſcry how things go there. This conſideration mindeth of a farther and more general advantage accruing from this practice; which is this, that
3 John 1. 2. εὐοδοῦσθαι (as St John ſpeaks) that is, go well forward in a happy courſe;

9. A ſerious inſpection into our hearts doth much avail toward the reformation of our hearts and lives; curing the diſtempers, and correcting the vices of them. For to the curing any diſeaſe it is requiſite to know the complexion and temper of the Patient, and the part affected, and the next cauſes thereof: As the moſt grievous of bodily diſeaſes are ſeated in, or do proceed from the entrails; but not all of them from the ſame one of them; and the ſame diſeaſe depends upon the diſtemper ſometimes of one, ſometimes of another among them: So do all vices (as our Saviour expreſly teacheth) iſſue from the heart, or interiour man; ſome from one, ſome from another part or region thereof; and the ſame from different parts: Sometimes natural temper, ſometimes falſe opinion, ſometimes evil cuſtom is the root of the ſame kind of diſeaſe; and 'tis expedient we ſhould know diſtinctly which of them in particular caſes is the root, that accordingly we may underſtand what method of cure to uſe, whence to fetch the remedy, where to apply it; for unskilfulneſs in theſe points may fruſtrate our endeavours of amendment. If the miſchief proceed from natural inclination, we muſt not hope ever utterly to ſubdue it, nor to free our ſelves ſuddenly from the incurſions thereof; nor is bare reaſoning a proper Weapon againſt it; it being grounded in the original conſtitution of the ſoul, either immediately, or as linked to the body; which by no operation of our mind can be ſoon altered; for, No wiſdom (as Seneca ſpeaketh well) can remove the natural vices of body or mind; what is infixed and inbred may be allayed by art, not ſubdued. Reaſon alone and directly, is not able to grapple therewith; ſhe'll break her teeth upon ſo tough and knotty matter: It will weary her armes in vain to ſwim againſt the rapid current of natural propenſion; the violent eruptions thereof may indeed ſomewhat be reſtrained; occaſions of complying therewith may often be declined; it may in time, and by degrees, be weakned by ſubtracting the food and incentives thereof: But eſpecially Devils of this kind muſt, as our Saviour inſtructeth us, be ejected by humble, earneſt and frequent invocation of divine aſſiſtance; without which other means commonly will prove ineffectual: But if the vice

Matt. 15. 18.

Nulla ſapientia naturalia corporis, aut animi vitia ponuntur: quicquid infixum & ingenitum eſt leniter arte, non vincitur. Sen. Ep. 11.

Τί φθείρει τὸ ἔθος, ἐναντίον ἔθος. Epict.

proceed onely from ill habit, or the prevalency of bad cuſtom we are to oppoſe a contrary cuſtom thereto, preſently diſuſing that practice, and acting otherwiſe, ſo ſhall we eaſily remove and extirpate it: If neither of theſe cauſes are diſcernable, we may preſume our indiſpoſition is derived from ill opinion; and that conſequently our beſt courſe of redreſſing it, is to examine the reaſon of the thing; to get clear and right apprehenſions concerning it. For example, if we obſerve our ſelves apt to be frequently tranſported with anger, let us look into our hearts, and take notice, whether the root of that diſtemper be a cholerick complexion, or whether it ariſe from an habitual indulgence to our ſelves of being moved upon ſlight cauſes, whereby a peeviſh humour is grown upon us; or whether it cometh from vain conceits of our ſelves, as of Perſons unto whom extraordinary deference and obſervance is due, ſo that no man ſhould preſume to diſſent from our opinion, or contravene our deſire; and as we find, ſo we muſt reſpectively proceed in repreſſing the cauſes of this diſeaſe; praying, if it ariſe from nature, to the Omnipotent (the onely Lord and Commander of nature) that he would by his grace free us from that inflamable temper, and inable us to govern our paſſion; withal ſhunning occaſions of being provoked; abſtaining from ſuch diet, ſuch buſineſs, ſuch company, as naturally do kindle or ferment that humour: If the Malady grow from cuſtom, uſing our ſelves to bear patiently harſh words, unkind dealings, croſs accidents; if our opinion diſpoſe us thereto, reaſoning our ſelves into moderate conceits about our ſelves, conſidering the reaſons that may acquit or excuſe others to us upon occaſion of offence; Uſing all, or ſome of theſe means, or the like, ſuch as the obſervation of our heart ſhall diſcover to us to be moſt proper and ſuitable to the nature, or to the cauſe of this diſtemper infeſting us, we ſhall wholly, or in good part rid our ſelves from it. Again, (to adjoin another example, the matter ſeeming to deſerve our heed) ſuppoſe we experience our ſelves inclining to covetouſneſs; eager in getting, ſolicitous in keeping, unwilling to part with our goods upon reaſonable occaſion (for the maintenance of our convenient reſpect in the World, or for relieving the needs of our Brethren, or for ſerving the publick, or for promoting the intereſts of Piety and Vertue) let us then look, and ſee whether this ariſeth from a natural ſtraitneſs, hardneſs, ſuſpiciouſneſs, or diffidence of Heart (ſome ſuch diſpoſitions may be obſerved in men) or from being by our Education, or manner of life enured to ſuch a love of getting, or of ſparing, or of tenacity; or whether it ſprings from conceits about the worth, or the neceſſity of wealth (that without being furniſhed with heaps of treaſure, we ſhall come into danger of want or diſgrace; we ſhall not be able to maintain our life, or uphold our credit; we ſhall not enjoy any thing, or be any bodies among men) let us, I ſay, by examining our hearts find out from which of theſe ſprings this ſordid diſpoſition floweth, and accordingly ſtrive to correct it; either praying to Almighty God, that he would inlarge and ſupple our heart, if it be natural to us; or addicting our ſelves upon reaſonable occaſion to liberality and free expence, if cuſtom hath therein prevailed upon us; or, if vain ſurmiſes have ſeduced us, rectifying our judgments; as by other good diſcourſes, proper againſt that brutiſh vice, ſo eſpecially by conſidering that God is moſt good and bountiful, and tender of our being overwhelmed with need; that he continually watcheth over us, ſo that he cannot but ſee, and will regard what we want; and that he faithfully hath promiſed, if we endeavour to pleaſe him, and uſe a moderate diligence in honeſt ways to maintain our ſelves, that he will yield his bleſſing, and never will leave us

is deſtitute. So in all caſes we may proceed diſcreetly in the cure of our ſpiritual, and in withſtanding the temptations to ſin, that aſſault us, if we do but ſearch into our hearts, and learn thence, whence they flow, and by what they are nouriſhed.

10. This practice farther, doth particularly ſerve to regulate our devotions, and performances more immediately ſpiritual; by ſhewing us what we need to pray for, what we are obliged to give thanks for, what it becomes us to confeſs, and deprecate, for want thereof we ſhall be apt not onely to neglect, but indecently to confound, yea miſerably to pervert theſe duties; to confound them by praying for what is already given us, is put into our hand, or lies within our reach; for which therefore we are not to pray, but to render thanks; alſo by giving thanks formally for that, which perhaps we are far from poſſeſſing, and do moſt want; ſo, I ſay, we ſhall be apt to confound and miſplace, to render vain and chimerical in a ſort our ſpiritual addreſſes, as wanting due ground and object; yea to pervert them by asking for things really prejudicial and hurtful to us (in the circumſtances we ſtand) and thanking God for what in anger and judgment he diſpenſeth to us (ſo indeed are many appearing goods, grateful to preſent ſenſe) as alſo deprecating things moſt beneficial and uſeful, and healthful to our ſouls; neglecting to return thanks for what God diſpoſeth in mercy (ſo are many things at preſent bitter, and unſavoury to our carnal appetite and fancy) thus from ignorance of our ſelves, and what we truly need, are we apt to pervert our devotions, not onely defeating our ſelves of the advantages they might yield us; but (if God be not more gracious than to hearken to us, and to grant our wiſhes) bringing lamentable miſchief on our ſelves. Many examples of theſe confuſions and perverſe miſapplications of devotion both Scripture affords, and experience will ſuggeſt, if we obſerve them. You know the compariſon in the Goſpel between the devotions of the Phariſee and the Publican, with the different acceptance they found: The one was prompt enough to give thanks for the graces he had received, and the advantages he conceived that he had in his qualities, and in his performances above others; but not having duly ſtudied himſelf; did not perceive, that he was rather bound to ask pardon for the pride of his heart, and the vanity that adhered to his performances, which rendered his thankſgiving very improper and unſeaſonable: The other being conſcious of his demerits and wants, with a manner ſutable to his condition, in words few, but full and fit, did confeſs his unworthineſs (which to do did beſt beſeem him) and implored mercy (which was the thing he chiefly needed) ſo was his diſcreet Prayer better accepted, than the others impertinent thankſgiving: I tell you (ſaith our Saviour) this man went down to his houſe juſtified rather than the other. The two Sons of Zebedee, conceiting that our Lord would ſhortly become a great Prince, and affecting to become Favourites then, did confidently ſue for the next place of dignity about him; our Lord repreſſed their fond ambition by downright telling them firſt that they knew not what they asked; then by demanding of them whether they were able to undergo the trials they ſhould meet with; implying what they ſhould rather have requeſted; that they more needed humility and patience, than pomp and pleaſure: And it was the ſame two perſons, whoſe intemperate zeal he otherwhere checked with an οὐκ οἴδατε οἵου πνεύματος, Ye know not of what ſpirit ye are: And no wonder, if they who knew not what they were, did ask they knew not what; that being ignorant of their own hearts, they ſhould endite abſurd petitions; that in ſuch a caſe they ſhould deſire things not onely incongruous and inconvenient, but

Pſal. 73. 18.

Heb. 12. 11.

Evertere domos totas optantibus ipſis Dii faciles, &c. Juv. Sat. 10.

Luke 18.

Luke 18. 14.

Matt. 20. 21.

Luke 9. 55.

but dangerous and deſtructive to themſelves. For to make a right diſtinction of theſe duties; to be able diſcreetly and pertinently (if I may ſo ſpeak) to converſe with God it is requiſite to look into our hearts; and from them to take fit matter, due meaſure, right ſeaſon of requeſt, and of acknowledgment reſpectively; things commonly not being as they appear to our preſent ſenſe, or to our groſs conceit, in themſelves, or in their degree good or bad; but according to the diſpoſition of our hearts, and the effects they work upon them: That is not good, which pleaſeth our ſenſe and fancy, nor that bad, which diſguſts them; but that is good, which rendereth our heart wiſer and better; which correcteth our inclinations, compoſeth our affections, informeth our judgments rightly, and purifieth our intentions; that is bad, which hath contrary effects within us. We it's likely ſhould pray with greateſt ſeriouſneſs and earneſtneſs for the removal of thoſe infirmities, for eaſe from thoſe afflictions, which we ſee the Holy Apoſtles (being better inſtructed in things, being more acquainted with themſelves) did rejoice, did glory in, did give thanks for; as finding the wholſome operations they had upon their hearts (that by them their vertues were exerciſed, and improved, their faith tried, their patience increaſed, their hope confirmed; that, (to uſe the Apoſtles Words) they did in the ſequele return the peaceful fruit of righteouſneſs to thoſe who were exerciſed by them; but leaving this Point, though deſerving perhaps farther conſideration, I proceed, and ſay farther, that

Jam. 1. 2.
Rom. 5. 3.
2 Cor. 12. 9.
Gal. 6. 14.
1 Pet. 1. 6.
Heb. 12. 11.

11. The continual viſitation of our inward parts doth not onely yield much advantage, (as in ſome meaſure hath been ſhewed) at the long-run by influence at the ſpring-head upon the principles and cauſes of action, but doth immediately conduce to good practice, preventing and ſtifling in the very birth many ſinful and vain practices: That ſo many indiſcreet and impertinent, ſo many irregular and unſavoury, ſo many unjuſt and uncharitable ſpeeches do iſſue from our mouths, it is eſpecially becauſe we are not then imployed upon this duty; are not watching over our hearts, and obſerving thoſe inward fountains (levity and wantonneſs of thought, precipitancy and diſorder of paſſion) from whence they overflow; were we intent there, we ſhould perhaps endeavour to ſtop the current, and contain theſe inward bad motions from venting themſelves. The like we may ſay concerning many unwarrantable actions, into which we inconſiderately plunge our ſelves, not heeding whence they ſpring: Did we regard that ſuch actions were ariſing from ambitious, covetous, froward diſpoſitions; or from certain ill-grounded prejudices lurking in our minds, we ſhould often ſurely forbear them; but while we keep none, or bad ſentinels; while in the cuſtody of our hearts we ſleep, or are drowſie; while we neglect to examine and weigh our actions what they are, and whence they come, they (although very bad and hurtful) do ſteal by us, and paſs as friends, and we hear no more of them, but in their woful conſequences. What efficacy the conſideration of God's omnipreſent eye, beholding all our doings, hath, and how all wiſe men do preſs it as a powerful means to contain us from bad action, you cannot but well know; as likewiſe that ſome of them in order to the ſame purpoſe direct us to conceive our ſelves always under the inſpection of ſome perſon eſpecially venerable for his worth, or for his relation to us, whom we ſhould be afraid, or aſhamed to diſpleaſe: And ſurely were the faith concerning God's preſence, or the fancy concerning the preſence of a Cato, or a Lælius ſtrong enough, they could not but have great effect: However did we but live even in our own preſence, under the eye of our own judgment and conſcience; regarding not onely the matter and body, but the reaſon

Sen. Ep. 11. 25.

and ground (that is the ſoul) of our actings; even that would do much; the love and reverence of our ſelves would ſomewhat check and controll us; we ſhould fear to offend, we ſhould be aſhamed to vilify even our ſelves by fond or foul proceedings: It would (in the Philoſophers eſteem) ſupply the room of any other Keeper or Monitor, if we ſhould thus keep our ſelves: If (ſaith he) we have ſo far profited, as to have got a reverence of our ſelves, we may then well let go a Tutour, or Pedagogue.

Sen. Ep. 25.

Cum jam profeceris tantum, ut ſit tibi etiam tui reverentia, licebit dimittas pædagogum. Ibid.

12. This practice doth much conduce to the knowledge of humane nature, and the general diſpoſitions of mankind, which is an excellent and moſt uſeful part of Wiſdom: For the principal inclinations and firſt motions of the ſoul are alike in all men; whence he that by diligent ſtudy of himſelf hath obſerved them in his own ſoul, may thence collect them to be in others; he hath at leaſt a great advantage of eaſily tracing them, of ſoon deſcrying them, of clearly perceiving them in thoſe he converſeth with; the which knowledge is of great uſe, as directing us how to accommodate our ſelves in our behaviour and dealing with others.

No Man indeed can be a good Inſtructor or Adviſer in Moral Affairs, who hath not attained this Skill, and doth not well underſtand the nature of Man: His Precepts and Rules will certainly be fallacious, or miſapplied without it: This is that, which rendered the Dictates of the Stoicks and other ſuch Philoſophers ſo extravagant and unpracticable, becauſe they framed them not according to the real nature of Man, ſuch as is exiſtent in the World, but according to an Idea formed in their own Imaginations.

Some Caution indeed is in this matter to be uſed, that thoſe motions of Soul, which proceed from particular Temper and Complexion, from ſupervenient Principles or Habits, may be diſtinguiſhed from thoſe which are natural and common unto all: Which diſtinction to make is of great uſe and benefit, in order to the governing, reſtraining or correcting them.

If there be any in us, which are not obſervable in any other men; or in other men, which are not in us, thoſe do not ariſe from common nature, but from the particular diſpoſition of one or other reſpectively.

13. I add laſtly, that univerſally this Practice is requiſite and neceſſary for the well-governing of our Heart. Politicians inculcate much, that to the well-governing of a People, ſquaring fit Laws for it, and keeping it in good order, the nature and humour of that People ſhould be chiefly heeded and well underſtood, for that the grave Romans, and light Greeks; the ſoft Perſians, and ſtout Germans; the ſubtile Africans, and groſs Scythians would not be well managed in the ſame manner. So to govern any man's heart (ſince the hearts of men, as their faces, and as their voices, differ according to diverſities of complexion, of age, of education, of cuſtom and manner of living) it conduceth to know how it is diſpoſed from any of thoſe, or the like cauſes. (But how we are to guide and govern our hearts, and what particular influence this practice hath thereupon, I reſerve for other Meditations; when we ſhall endeavour more diſtinctly to ſhew how we may apply our thoughts to due objects; how curb and correct our inclinations; how order our paſſions; how rectify our opinions; how purify our intentions, now) I conclude with the good Pſalmiſt's Requeſts to God Almighty: Teach us thy way, O Lord, unite our hearts to fear thy name. Give us underſtanding, and we ſhall keep thy Law, yea we ſhall obſerve it with our whole heart. Search us O God, and know our hearts; try us, and know our thoughts; ſee if there be any wicked way in us, and lead us in the way everlaſting. Amen.

Vid. Naz. Orat. 1.

Pſal. 86. 11.
Pſal. 119. 34.
Pſal. 139. 23.

SER-

SERMON XIV.

The Conſideration of our Latter End.

PSAL. XC. 12.

So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wiſedom.

THIS Pſalm is upon ſeveral peculiar accompts very remarkable; for its antiquity, in which it perhaps doth not yield to any parcel of Scripture; for the eminency of its Authour, Moſes the Man of God; the greateſt of the ancient Prophets (moſt in favour, and (as it were) moſt intimate with God:) 'Tis alſo remarkable for the form and matter thereof, both affording much uſeful inſtruction. In it we have a great Prince, the Governour of a numerous People ſequeſtring his mind from the management of publick Affairs to private Meditations; from beholding the preſent outward appearances, to conſidering the real nature and ſecret cauſes of things: In the midſt of all the ſplendour and pomp, of all the ſtir and tumult about him he obſerves the frailty of humane condition, he diſcerns the Providence of God juſtly ordering all; this he does not onely in way of wiſe conſideration, but of ſerious devotion, moulding his obſervations into pious acknowledgments, and earneſt prayers to God; thus while he caſts one eye upon Earth viewing the occurrences there, liſting up the other to Heaven; there ſeeing God's all-governing Hand, thence ſeeking his gracious favour and mercy. Thus doth here that great and good Man teach us all, (more particularly Men of high Eſtate, and much Buſineſs) to find opportunities of withdrawing their thoughts from thoſe things, which commonly amuſe them, (the Cares, the Glories, the Pleaſures of this World) and fixing them upon matters more improvable to devotion; the tranſitorineſs of their Condition, and their ſubjection to God's juſt Providence; joining alſo to theſe Meditations ſutable acts of Religion, due acknowledgments to God and humble prayers. This was his practice among the greateſt encumbrances that any man could have; and it ſhould alſo be ours. Of thoſe his devotions, addreſſed to God, the Words are part, which I have choſen for the ſubject of my meditation and preſent diſcourſe; concerning the meaning of which I ſhall firſt touch ſomewhat; then propound that obſervable in them, which I deſign to inſiſt upon.

The Prophet David hath in the 39th Pſalm a Prayer very near in words, Pſal. 39. 4. and of kin (it ſeems) in ſenſe to this here; Lord, prays he, Make me to know my end, and the meaſure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am: Concerning the drift of which place, as well as of this here, it were obvious to conceive, that both theſe Prophets do requeſt of God, that he would diſcover to them the definite term of their life (which by his decree he had fixed, or however by his univerſal preſcience he did diſcern; concerning which we have theſe words in Job, Seeing man's days Job 14. 5. are determined, the number of his months are with thee, thou haſt appointed his bounds, that he cannot paſs) we might, I ſay, at firſt hearing be apt to imagine, that their Prayer unto God is, (for the comfort of their mind burthened with afflictions, or for their better direction in the management of their remaining time of life) that God would reveal unto them the determinate length of their life. But this ſenſe, which the Words ſeem ſo naturally to hold forth is by many of the Fathers rejected; for that the knowledge of our lives determinate meaſure is not a fit matter of Prayer to God; that being a ſecret reſerved by God to himſelf, which to inquire into ſavours of preſumptuous curioſity; the univerſal validity of which reaſon I will not debate; but ſhall defer ſo much to their judgment, as to ſuppoſe that the numbring of our days (according to their ſenſe) doth here onely imply a confuſed indefinite computation of our days number, or the length of our life; ſuch as, upon which it may appear, that neceſſarily our life cannot be long (not according to the accompt mentioned in this Pſalm) the ſame with that of Solon, in Heroditus (above 70 or 80 Years, eſpecially as to purpoſes of health, ſtrength, content) will probably by reaſon of various accidents, to which it is expoſed, be much ſhorter (7 or 10 Years according to a moderate eſteem) may poſſibly, from ſurpriſes undiſcoverable, be very near to its period; by few inſtants removed from death (a Year, a Month, a Day, it may be ſomewhat leſs.) This I ſhall allow to be the Arithmetick that Moſes here deſires to learn; whence it doth follow that teaching (or making to know, ſo it is in the Hebrew) doth import here (as it doth otherwhere frequently in Scripture) God's affording the Grace to know practically, or with ſerious regard to conſider this ſtate and meaſure of our life (for in ſpeculation no Man can be ignorant of humane lives brevity and uncertainty; but moſt Men are ſo negligent and ſtupid, as not to regard it ſufficiently, not to employ this knowledge to any good purpoſe). This Interpretation I chuſe, being in it ſelf plauſible enough, and countenanced by ſo good authority; yet the former might well enough (by good conſequence, if not ſo immediately) ſerve my deſign: Or be a ground able to ſupport the diſcourſe I intend to build upon the Words; the ſubject whereof briefly will be this, that the conſideration of our lives certain and neceſſary brevity and frailty, is a mean proper and apt to diſpoſe us toward the wiſe conduct of our remaining life; to which purpoſe ſuch a conſideration ſeems alike available, as the knowledge of its punctual or definite meaſure; or more than it; upon the ſame, or greater reaſons.

Οὐ γὰρ δήπου φρένας ἔχοντος ἀνθρώπου ἀγνοεῖν ὅτι ἄνθρωπος ζῶον ἐστὶ θνητὸν οὐδ᾽ ὅτι γέγονεν εἰς τὸ ἀποθανεῖν. Plut, ad Apoll. p. 202.

Quis eſt tam ſtultus, quamvis ſit adoleſcens, cui ſit exploratum ſe vel ad veſperum eſſe victurum. Cic. de Sen.

As for the latter clauſe, that we may apply our hearts to wiſedom; 'tis according to the Hebrew, and we ſhall bring the heart to wiſedom; implying, the application of our hearts to wiſedom to be conſequent upon the skill and practice (beſtowed by God) of thus computing our days. As for wiſedom, that may denote either ſapience, a habit of knowing what is true; or prudence, a diſpoſition of chuſing what is good; we may here underſtand both, eſpecially the latter; for, as Tully ſaith of Philoſophy, Omnis ſumma Philoſophia ad beatè vivendum refertur, The ſum or whole of Philoſophy refers to living happily; ſo all Divine Wiſedom doth reſpect good practice. The word alſo comprehends all the conſequences and adjuncts of ſuch wiſdom (for ſo commonly ſuch words are wont by way of metonymie to denote, together with the things primarily ſignified, all that naturally flow from, or that uſually are conjoined with them) in brief (to ceaſe from more explaining that, which is in it ſelf conſpicuous enough) I ſo underſtand the Text, as if the Prophet had thus expreſſed himſelf: Since, O Lord, all things are in thy hand, and ſovereign diſpoſal; ſince it appears that man's life is ſo ſhort and frail, ſo vexatious and miſerable; ſo expoſed to the juſt effects of thy diſpleaſure; we humbly beſeech thee, ſo to inſtruct us by thy wiſedom, ſo to diſpoſe us by thy grace; that we may effectually know; that we may ſeriouſly conſider the brevity and uncertainty of our lives durance; whence we may be induced to underſtand, regard, and chuſe thoſe things which good reaſon dictates beſt for us; which according to true wiſedom, it moſt concerns us to know and perform. From which ſenſe of the words we might infer many uſeful documents, and draw matter of much wholſome diſcourſe; but paſſing over all the reſt, I ſhall onely inſiſt upon that one point, which I before intimated, viz. that the ſerious conſideration of the ſhortneſs and frailty of our life is a proper inſtrument conducible to the bringing our hearts to wiſedom, to the making us to diſcern, attend unto, embrace and proſecute ſuch things as are truly beſt for us; that it is available to the prudent conduct and management of our life; the truth of which propoſition is grounded upon the divine Prophet his opinion: He apprehended ſuch a knowledge or conſideration to be a profitable means of inducing his heart to wiſedom; wherefore he prays God to grant it him in order to that end; ſuppoſing that effect would proceed from this cauſe. And that it is ſo in way of reaſonable influence I ſhall endeavour to ſhew by ſome following reaſons.

De fin. II. p. 95.

Natura dedit uſuram vitæ, tanquam pecuniæ, nulla præſtituta die. Tuſc. quæſt. I. p. 326.

I. The ſerious conſideration of our lives frailty and ſhortneſs will confer to our right valuation (or eſteem) of things, and conſequently to our well-placing, and our duly moderating our cares, affections and endeavours about them. For as we value things, ſo are we uſed to affect them, to ſpend our thoughts upon them, to be earneſt in purſuance or avoiding of them. There be two ſorts of things we converſe about, good and bad; the former, according to the degree of their appearance ſo to us (that is, according to our eſtimation of them) we naturally love, delight in, deſire and purſue; the other likewiſe in proportion to our opinion concerning them, we do more or leſs loath and ſhun. Our actions therefore being all thus directed and grounded, to eſteem things aright both in kind and degree (ἑκάςῳ ἀποδιδόναι τὴν ἀξίαν, to aſſign every thing its due price, as Epictetus ſpeaks; quanti quidque ſit judicare, to judge what each thing is worth as Seneca,) is in order the firſt, in degree a main part of wiſedom; and as ſo is frequently by wiſe men commended. Now among 1 John 1. 17. Love not the world; for—the world paſſeth away, and the deſire thereof.

Primum eſt, ut quanti quidque ſit judices; ſecundum, ut impetum ad illa capias ordinatum temperatumque; tertium, ut inter impetum tuum, actionemque conveniat, ut in omnibus iſtis tibi ipſi conſentias. Sen. Epiſt. 89.

among qualities that commend or vilifie things unto us, duration and certainty have a chief place; they often alone ſuffice to render things valuable or contemptible. Why is Gold more precious than Glaſs or Chryſtal; why prefer we a Ruby before a Roſe, or a Gilly-flower? 'tis not becauſe thoſe are more ſerviceable, more beautiful, more grateful to our ſenſes than theſe (it is plainly otherwiſe) but becauſe theſe are brittle and fading, thoſe ſolid and permanent; theſe we cannot hope to retain the uſe or pleaſure of long; thoſe we may promiſe our ſelves to enjoy ſo long as we pleaſe; whence on the other ſide is it, that we little fear or ſhun any thing how painful, how offenſive ſoever, being aſſured of its ſoon paſſing over, the biting of a flea, or the prick in letting bloud? The reaſon is evident; and that in general nothing can on either hand be conſiderable (either to value or diſeſteem) which is of a ſhort continuance. Upon this ground therefore let us tax the things concerning us whether good or bad, relating to this life, or to our future ſtate; and firſt the good things relating to this life; thence we ſhall be diſpoſed to judge truly concerning them, what their juſt price is, how much of affection, care and endeavour they deſerve to have expended on them. In general, and in the lump concerning them all St. Paul tells us, that τὸ σχῆμα τȣ̃ κόσμȣ παράγει, the ſhape or faſhion (all that is apparent or ſenſible) in this preſent world doth flit, and ſoon give us the go-by: We gaze a while upon theſe things, as in tranſitu, or intra conſpectum; as they paſs by us, and keep a while in ſight; but they are preſently gone from us, or we from them. They are but like objects repreſented in a Glaſs; which having viewed a-while, we muſt ſhortly turn our backs, or ſhut our eyes upon them, then all vaniſhes, and diſappears unto us. Whence he well infers an indifferency of affection toward them; a ſlackneſs in the enjoyment of them to be required of us; a uſing this world, as if we uſed it not; a buying, as if we were not to poſſeſs; a weeping, as if we wept not; and a rejoicing, as if we rejoiced not; a kind of negligence and unconcernedneſs about theſe things. The world (ſaith St. John) paſſeth away, and the deſire thereof; whatever ſeemeth moſt lovely and deſirable in the World is very flitting; however our deſire and our enjoyment thereof muſt ſuddenly ceaſe. Imagine a man therefore poſſeſſed of all worldly goods, arm'd with power, flouriſhing in credit, flowing with Plenty, ſwimming in all delight (ſuch as were ſometime Priamus, Polycrates, Cræſus, Pompey) yet ſince he is withal ſuppoſed a man and mortal; ſubject both to fortune and death; none of thoſe things can he reaſonably confide, or much ſatisfy himſelf in; they may be violently divorced from him by fortune, they muſt naturally be looſed from him by death; the cloſeſt union here cannot laſt longer than till death us depart; wherefore no man upon ſuch accompt can truly call or (if he conſider well) heartily eſteem himſelf happy; a man cannot hence (as the moſt able judge, and truſty voucher of the commodities doth pronounce) receive profit or content from any labour he taketh (upon theſe tranſitory things) under the ſun. Why then (let me inquire) do we ſo cumber our heads with care, ſo rack our hearts with paſſion, ſo waſt our ſpirits with inceſſant toil about theſe tranſitory things? why do we ſo highly value, ſo ardently deſire, ſo eagerly purſue, ſo fondly delight in, ſo impatiently want, or loſe, ſo paſſionately contend for and emulate one another in regard to theſe bubbles; forfeiting and foregoing our homebred moſt precious goods, tranquillity and repoſe, either of mind or body, for them? Why erect we ſuch mighty fabricks of expectation and confidence upon

1 Cor. 7. 31.

—— πάντα παρέρχεται ἡμᾶς,
Εἰ δὲ μή, ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ πάντα παρερχόμεθα. Gr. Epig. Anthol.

1 John 2. 17.
Ἐπιθυμία αὐτȣ̃.

Eccl. 1. 3. &c.

Commorandi natura nobis diverſortum dedit non habitandi locum. Cic. de Sen.
1 Pet. 2. 11.1.
Heb. 13. 11.
11. 15.
1 Chron. 29. 15.
Job 14. 1.
Pſal. 78. 39.
Jam. 4. 14.
Iſa. 64. 6.
Pſal. 102. 3.
90. 5. 9. 103. 15. 39. 5.
144. 4. 119. 19.
Pſal. 103. 15.
Iſa. 40. 6.

ſuch unſteady ſands? why dreſs we up theſe our Inns, as if they were our homes, and are as careful about a few nights lodging here, as if we deſigned an everlaſting aboad (we that are but ſojourners and pilgrims here, and have no fixed habitation upon earth; who come forth like a flower, and are ſoon cut down; flee like a ſhadow and continue not; are winds paſſing away, and coming not again; who fade all like a leaf, whoſe life is a vapour appearing for a little time, and then vaniſhing away; whoſe days are a hand-breadth, and age is nothing; whoſe days are conſumed like ſmoak, and years are ſpent as a tale. Who wither like the graſs, upon which we feed; and crumble as the duſt, of which we are compacted; for thus the Scripture by appoſite compariſons repreſents our condition) yet we build (like the Men of Agrigentum) as if we were to dwell here for ever; and hoard up, as if we were to enjoy after many ages; and inquire, as if we would never have done knowing? The Citizens of Croton (a Town in Italy) had a manner (it is ſaid) of inviting to Feaſts a Year before the time, that the Gueſts in appetite and garb might come well prepared to them; do we not uſually reſemble them in this ridiculous ſolicitude and curioſity; ſpes inchoando longas, commenſing deſigns, driving on projects, which a longer time than our life would not ſuffice to accompliſh? How deeply do we concern our ſelves in all that is ſaid or done; when the morrow all will be done away and forgotten? when (excepting what our duty to God, and charity towards men requires of us, and that which concerns our future eternal ſtate) what is done in the World, who gets or loſes, which of the ſpokes in fortune's wheel is up, and which down, is of very little conſequence to us. But the more to abſtract our minds from, and temper our affections about theſe ſecular matters, let us examine particularly by this ſtandard, whether the moſt valued things in this World deſerve that eſtimate which they bear in the common Market, or which popular opinion aſſigns them.

1 Pet. 2. 24.
Pſal. 62. 9.
Iſa. 14. 17.

1. To begin then with that which takes chief place, which the World moſt dotes on, which ſeems moſt great and eminent among men; ſecular ſtate and grandeur, might and proweſs, honour and reputation, favour and applauſe of men, all the objects of humane pride and ambition; of this kind, St. Peter thus pronounces πᾶσα δόξα ἀνθρώπου, All the glory of men is as the flower of the graſs; the graſs is dried up, and the flower thereof doth fall off; 'tis as the flower of the graſs, how ſpecious ſoever, yet the moſt fading and failing part thereof; the graſs it ſelf will ſoon wither, and the flower doth commonly fall off before that. We cannot hold this flower of worldly glory beyond our ſhort time of life; and we may eaſily much ſooner be deprived of it: Many tempeſts of fortune may beat it down, many violent hands may crop it, 'tis apt of its ſelf to fade upon the ſtalk; however the ſun (the influence of age and time) will aſſuredly burn and dry it up, with our life that upholds it. Surely (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lye: Men of high degree; The mighty Princes, the famous Captains, the ſubtile Stateſmen, the grave Senatours; they who turn and toſs about the World at their pleaſure; who, (in the Prophet's language) make the Earth tremble, and ſhake Kingdoms: Even theſe, they are a lie; (ſaid he, who himſelf was none of the leaſt conſiderable among them, and by experience well knew their condition, the greateſt and moſt glorious Man of his time King David.) They are a lie; that is, their ſtate preſents ſomething of brave and admirable to the eye of Men; but 'tis only deceptio viſus; a ſhew without a ſubſtance; it doth but delude the careleſs ſpectatours with falſe appearance; it hath nothing under it ſolid or ſtable; being laid in the balance (the royal Prophet there ſubjoins; that is, being weighed in the ſcales of right judgment, being thoroughly conſidered) it will prove lighter than vanity it ſelf; it is leſs valuable than mere emptineſs, and nothing it ſelf; that ſaying ſounds like an hyperbole, but it may be true in a ſtrict ſenſe: Seeing, that the care and pains in maintaining it, the fear and jealouſie of loſing it, the envy, obloquy and danger that ſurround it, the ſnares it hath in it, and temptations inclining men to be pufft up with Pride, to be inſolent and injurious, to be corrupted with pleaſure (with other bad concomitants thereof) do more than countervail what-ever either of imaginary worth or real convenience may be in it. Perhaps could it without much care, trouble and hazard continue for ever, or for a long time, it might be thought ſomewhat conſiderable; but ſince its duration is uncertain and ſhort; ſince man in honour abideth not, but is like Pſal. 82. 6.

the beaſts that periſh; that they who look ſo like Gods, and are called ſo, Pſal. 49. 12, and are worſhipped as ſo, yet muſt die like men (like men, yea like ſheep &c. ſhall be laid in the grave;) Since, as 'tis ſaid of the King of Babylon in Eſay; Iſa. 14. 11.
their pomp muſt be brought down to the grave, and the noiſe of their viols; the worm ſhall be ſpread under them, and the worm ſhall cover them; ſeeing that a moment of time ſhall extinguiſh all their luſtre, and ſtill all that tumult about them; that they muſt be diſrobed of their Purple, and be cloathed with Corruption; that their ſo ſpatious and ſplendid Palaces muſt ſoon be exchanged for cloſe darkſome Coffins; that both their own breath, and the breath of them who now applaud them muſt be ſtopped; that they who now bow to them, may preſently trample on them; and they who to day trembled at their preſence, may the morrow ſcornfully inſult upon their memory: Is this the man (will they ſay, as they did of Iſa. 14. 16.
that great King) who made the Earth to tremble; that did ſhake Kingdoms; that made the World as a Wilderneſs; and deſtroyed the Kingdoms thereof? Since this is the fate of the greateſt, and moſt glorious among Men, what reaſon can there be to admire their condition; to prize ſuch vain and ſhort-liv'd preeminences? For who can accompt it a great happineſs to be ſtyled and reſpected as a Prince, to enjoy all the Powers and Prerogatives of higheſt dignity for a day, or two; then being obliged to deſcend into a ſordid and deſpicable eſtate? Who values the fortune of him that is brought forth upon the Stage to act the Part of a Prince; though he be attired there, and attended as ſuch; hath all the garb and ceremony, the enſigns and appurtenances of Majeſty about him; ſpeaks and behaves himſelf imperiouſly; is flattered and worſhipped accordingly; yet, who in his heart doth adore this Idol; doth admire this mockery of greatneſs? Why not? becauſe after an hour or two the Play is over, and this Man's reign is done. And what great difference is there between this and the greateſt worldly ſtate? between Alexander in the Hiſtory, and Alexander on the Stage? Are not (in the Pſalmiſt's accompt) all our years ſpent as a Pſal. 90.
tale that is told; or, as a Fable, that is acted? This in compariſon of that, what is it at moſt, but telling the ſame ſtory, acting the ſame Part a few times over? What are a few years more than a few hours repeated not very often? not ſo often as to make any conſiderable difference; ſo a great Emperour reflected: τί διαφέρει τριήμερος τριγερηνίου; what (ſaid he) doth the age Anton. IV. 50.
of an infant, dying within three days, differ from that of Neſtor, who lived three ages of men; ſince both ſhall be paſt and ended; both then meet, Sen. Ep. 99.
and thereby become equal; ſince conſidering the immenſe time that runs 24.
on, and how little a part thereof any of us takes up (juvenes & ſenes in æquo ſumus) we are all alike young and old; as a drop and a Pint bottle in compare to the Ocean are in a ſort equal, that is, both altogether inconſiderable. Quid enim diu eſt, ubi finis eſt? ſaith St. Auſtine: what can be long that ſhall be ended; which coming to that paſs is as if it never had been?

Mihi ne diuturnum quidem quidquam videtur, in quo eſt aliquid extremum, &c. Cic. de Seneƈt.

Since then upon this accompt (upon worldly accompts, I ſpeak all this; and excepting that Dignity and Power may be Talents beſtowed by God, or advantages to ſerve God, and promote the good of Men; excepting alſo the relation Perſons juſtly inſtated in them bear to God as his Deputies and Miniſters; in which reſpects much reverence is due to their Perſons, much value to their Places; even the more, by how much leſs their preſent outward Eſtate is conſiderable, and becauſe at preſent they receive ſo ſlender a reward for all their cares and pains employ'd in the diſcharge of their Offices; this I interpoſe to prevent miſtakes, leſt our diſcourſe ſhould ſeem to diſparage, or detract from the reverence due to Perſons in eminent Place. But ſince, under this caution) all worldly Power and Glory appear ſo little valuable, the conſideration hereof may avail to moderate our affections about them; to quell all ambitious deſires of them, and all vain complacencies in them. For why ſhould we ſo eagerly ſeek and purſue ſuch empty ſhadows, which if we catch, we in effect catch nothing; and whatever it is, doth preſently ſlip out of our hands? Why do we pleaſe our ſelves in ſuch evanid dreams; is it not much better to reſt quiet and content in any ſtation wherein God hath placed us, than to trouble our ſelves and others in climbing higher to a Precipice, where we can hardly ſtand upright, and whence we ſhall certainly tumble down into the grave? This Conſideration is alſo a remedy, proper to remove all regret and envy grounded upon ſuch regards? For why, though ſuppoſe Men of ſmall worth, or vertue ſhould flouriſh in Honour and Power, ſhall we repine Pſal. 90. 6. thereat? Is it not as if one ſhould envy to a Butterfly, its gaudy Wings; to a Tulip its beautiful colours, to the Graſs its pleaſant verdure; that Graſs, to which in this Pſalm we are compared; which in the morning flouriſheth, and groweth up, in the evening is cut down and withereth? I may Ant. IV. 50. ſay of this diſcourſe with the Philoſopher, ἰδιωτικὸν μὲν, ὅμως δ' ἀνυτικὸν βοήθημα 'tis a homely remedy (there may be divers better ones) yet hath its efficacy; for David himſelf made uſe thereof more than once: Be not, ſaith Pſal. 49. 16. 73. 17. 37. 1. he, afraid (or troubled) when one is made rich, when the glory of his houſe is encreaſed; for when he dieth he ſhall carry nothing away, his glory ſhall not Prov. 23. 17. deſcend with him. I was (ſaith he again) envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked; but I went into the ſanctuary, then underſtood I their end; ſurely thou didſt ſet them in ſlippery places—how are they brought into deſolation as in a moment: Thus conſidering the lubricity and tranſitorineſs of that Proſperity, which fooliſh and wicked Men enjoyed, did ſerve to cure that envious diſtemper, which began to affect the good man's Heart.

2. But let us deſcend from Dignity and Power (that is, from names and ſhews) to ſomewhat ſeeming more real and ſubſtantial; to Riches; that great and general Idol, the moſt devoutly adored that ever any hath been in the World; which hath a Temple almoſt in every Houſe, an Altar in every Heart; to the gaining of which moſt of the thoughts, moſt of the labours of Men immediately tend; in the Poſſeſſion of which Men commonly deem the greateſt Happineſs doth conſiſt. But this conſideration we diſcourſe about, will eaſily diſcover, that even this, as all other Idols, 1 Cor. 8. 4. is nothing in the World, nothing true and ſolid; Will (I ſay) juſtify that advice and verifie that aſſertion of the Wiſe-man : Labour not for riches, wilt thou ſet thy heart upon that which is not? it well applied will pluck down the high places reared to this great Idol of Clay in Mens Hearts ; will confute the common Conceits and Phraſes, which ſo beautifie Wealth ; ſhewing that whoever dotes thereon is more truly and properly ſtyled a miſerable Man, than a happy, or bleſſed one : For is he not indeed miſerable, who makes lies his refuge, who confides in that which will deceive and diſappoint him? The Prophet aſſures us ſo : Woe (ſaith the Prophet Habakkuk) woe be to him, who coveteth an evil covetouſneſs to his houſe ; that he may ſet his neſt on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil : Men (he implies) imagine by getting Riches, they have ſecured and raiſed themſelves above the reach of all miſchief : But ye ſee it was in the Prophet's judgment a woful miſtake. St. Paul doth warn Men (very emphatically) not to hope ἐπὶ πλούτου ἀδηλότητι, in the uncertainty (or obſcurity) of riches ; intimating, that to truſt in them, is to truſt in darkneſs it ſelf; in that wherein we can diſcern nothing ; in we know not what? They are, we cannot but obſerve, ſubject to an infinity of chances, many of them obvious and notorious ; more of them ſecret and unaccomptable : They make (the Wiſe-man tells us) themſelves wings (they need it ſeems no help for that) and fly away like as an eagle toward heaven (quite out of ſight, and beyond our reach they of their own accord do ſwiftly fly away) however, ſhould they be diſpoſed to ſtay with us, we muſt fly from them ; were they inſeparably affixed to this life, yet muſt they together with that be ſevered from us ; as we came naked of them into this World, ſo naked ſhall we return : As he came, ſaith the Preacher, ſo ſhall he go ; and what profit (then) hath he that laboureth for the wind? From hence, that we muſt ſo ſoon part with riches, he infers them to be but wind ; a thing not any wiſe to be fixed or ſetled ; which 'tis vain to think we can appropriate, or retain ; and vain therefore greedily to covet, or purſue : So the Pſalmiſt alſo reaſons it : Surely, every man (ſaith he) walketh in a vain ſhew ; ſurely they are diſquieted in vain ; he heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who ſhall gather them. Men, in his accompt, that troubled themſelves in accumulating Wealth, did but idly delude themſelves, fanſying to receive content from ſuch things, which they muſt themſelves ſoon be ſeparated from ; and leave at uncertainties, to be diſpoſed of they know not how : That which in his wiſe Son's eſteem was ſufficient to make a man hate all his labour under the ſun : Becauſe, ſaith he, I ſhall leave it to the man that ſhall be after me, and who knoweth, whether he ſhall be a wiſe man or a fool? yet he ſhall have rule over all my labour, wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have ſhewed my ſelf wiſe under the ſun : All, it ſeems, that we are ſo wiſe, and ſo induſtrious about ; that we ſo beat our heads about, and ſpend our ſpirits upon, is at moſt but gaudium hæredis ; the joy of an heir, and that an uncertain one (for your Son, your Kinſman, your Friend may for all you can know dye before you, or ſoon after you) 'tis but a being at great pains and charges in tilling the Land, and ſowing and dreſſing it ; whence we are ſure not to reap any benefit to our ſelves, and cannot know who ſhall do it.

Prov. 23. 5.

Ὄλβιος, Beatus, &c. pro divite.

Hab. 2. 9.

1 Tim. 6. 19.

Prov. 23. 5.

Job 1. 21. 27. 19.

1 Tim. 6. 7.

Eccl. 5. 21.

Pſal. 39. 6.

Eccl. 2. 18.

In his elaborant, quæ ſciunt nihil omnino ad ſe pertinere ; ſerunt arbores quæ alteri ſeculo proſint. Cic. de Seneƈt.

The rich man (St. James tells us) as the flower of the graſs ſhall he paſs away ; for the ſun is no ſooner riſen with a burning heat, but it withereth the graſs, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the faſhion thereof periſheth ; So alſo ſhall the rich man fade in his ways ; all the comfort (we ſee by the Apoſtles diſcourſe) and the convenience, all the grace and ornament ornament that riches are ſuppoſed to yield will certainly wither and decay, either before, or with us; whenever the ſun (that is, either ſome extream miſchance in life, or the certain deſtiny of death) doth ariſe, and make impreſſion on them. But our Saviour hath beſt ſet out the nature Luke 12. 20. and condition of theſe things in that Parable concerning the man, who having had a plentiful crop of Corn, and having projected for the diſpoſal of it, reſolved then to bleſs himſelf, and entertain his mind with pleaſing diſcourſes, that having, in readineſs and ſecurity, ſo copious accommodations, he might now enjoy himſelf with full ſatisfaction and delight;

Jam. 1. 11.

not conſidering, that though his Barns were full, his life was not ſure; that God's Pleaſure might ſoon interrupt his Paſs-time; that the fearful ſentence might preſently be pronounced; Thou fool, this night thy life ſhall be required of thee, and what thou haſt prepared, to whom ſhall it fall? Euripides calls riches φιλόψυχον χρῆμα a thing which much endears life; or makes men greatly love it; but they do not enable at all to keep it: There is no Τινι ἔςαι. ἀντάλλαγμα τῆς ψυχῆς, no price, or ranſome equivalent to life; all that a man hath, he would give to redeem it, but it is a purchaſe too dear for all the riches in Pſal 49. the World to compaſs; ſo the Pſalmiſt tells us, They that truſt in their wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches, none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ranſome for him; for the redemption of their ſoul is precious: They cannot redeem their Brother's ſoul, or life; nor therefore their own; for all ſouls are of the ſame value, all greatly ſurpaſs the price of gold and ſilver. Life was not given us for Luke 12. 20. perpetuity, but lent, or depoſited with us; And without delay or evaſion it muſt be reſigned into the hand of its juſt Owner, when he ſhall pleaſe to demand it; and although righteouſneſs may, yet riches (as the Wiſeman Prov. 11. 4. tells us) cannot deliver from death, nor at all profit us in the day of wrath.
Could we probably retain our Poſſeſſions, for ever in our hands; nay, could we certainly foreſee ſome conſiderable long definite time, in which we might enjoy our ſtores, it were perhaps ſomewhat excuſable to ſcrape and hoard, it might look like rational Providence, it might yield ſome valuable ſatisfaction; but ſince, Rape, congere, aufer, poſſide, ſtatim relinquendum Prov. 27. 24. eſt; ſince, as Solomon tells us, Riches are not for ever, nor doth the crown endure to every generation; yea, ſince they muſt be left very ſoon, nor is there any certainty of keeping them any time; that one day may conſume them; one night may diſpoſſeſs us of them; and our life together with them, there can be no reaſon why we ſhould be ſolicitous about them; no accompt given of our ſetting ſo high a rate upon them. For who would much regard the having cuſtody of a rich treaſure for a day or two, then to be ſtripped of all, and left bare? To be to day inveſted in large demains, and to morrow to be diſpoſſeſſed of them? No Man ſurely would be ſo fond, as much to affect the condition. Yet this Sen. Ep. 98. is our caſe; whatever we call ours, we are but guardians thereof for a few days. This conſideration therefore may ſerve to repreſs, or moderate in us all covetous deſires, proud conceits, vain confidences and ſatisfactions Job 31. 24. in reſpect to worldly Wealth, to induce us (in Job's language) not to make gold our hope, nor to ſay to the fine gold, thou art my confidence; not to rejoyce becauſe our wealth is great, and becauſe our hand hath gotten much;
to extirpate from our hearts that root of all evil, the love of Money.
For if, as the Preacher thought, the greateſt pleaſure or benefit accruing from them, is but looking upon them for a while, (what good, ſaith he, is Eccl. 5. 11. there to the owners thereof, ſaving the beholding of them with their eyes?) if a little will, nay muſt ſuffice our natural appetites, and our preſent neceſſi-ties; if more than needs, is but (as the Scripture teaches us) a trouble diſquieting our minds with care; a dangerous ſnare, drawing us into miſchief and ſorrow; if this, I ſay, be their preſent quality; and were it better, yet could it laſt for any certain, or any long continuance, is it not evidently better to enjoy that pittance God hath allotted us with eaſe and contentation of mind; or if we want a neceſſary ſupply, to employ only a moderate diligence in getting thereof by the faireſt means, which with God's bleſſing promiſed thereto, will never fail to procure a competence, and with this to reſt content; than with thoſe in Amos, to pant after the duſt of the earth; to lade our ſelves with thick clay; to thirſt inſatiably after floods of gold, to heap up mountains of treaſure, to extend unmeaſurably our poſſeſſions, (joining houſe to houſe, and laying field to field, till there be no place, that we may be placed alone in the midſt of the earth; as the Prophet Eſay doth excellently deſcribe the covetous Man's humour) than, I ſay, thus inceſſantly to toil for the maintenance of this frail body, this flitting breath of ours? If Divine Bounty hath freely imparted a plentiful eſtate upon us, we ſhould indeed bleſs God for it; making our ſelves friends thereby (as our Saviour adviſes us) employing it to God's Praiſe and Service; to the relief and comfort of our Brethren that need; but to ſeek it earneſtly, to ſet our heart upon it, to relye thereon; to be greatly pleaſed or elevated in mind thereby, as it argues much infidelity and prophaneneſs of heart, ſo it ſignifies much inconſiderateneſs and folly, the ignorance of its nature, the forgetfulneſs of our own condition, upon the grounds diſcourſed upon.

Eccl. 5. 12.
1 Tim. 6. 9.
Simplici cura conſtant neceſſaria, in delicias laboratur. Sen. Ep. 89.
Matt. 6.
Heb. 13. 15.
1 Tim. 6. 8.
Pſal. 55. 26.
Amos 2. 6.
Hab. 2. 6.
Iſa. 5. 8.
Luke 15. 9.

3. Now, in the next place; for Pleaſure, that great Witch, which ſo enchants the World, and which by its miſchievous Baits ſo allures Mankind into ſin and miſery; although this conſideration be not altogether neceſſary to diſparage it (its own nature ſufficing to that; for it is more tranſitory than the ſhorteſt life, it dyes in the very enjoyment) yet it may conduce to our wiſe and good practice in reſpect thereto, by tempering the ſweetneſs thereof, yea ſouring its reliſh to us; minding us of its inſufficiency and unſerviceableneſs to the felicity of a mortal creature; yea, its extreamly dangerous conſequences to a ſoul, that muſt ſurvive the ſhort enjoyment thereof. Some Perſons indeed, ignorant or incredulous of a future eſtate; preſuming of no ſenſe remaining after death, nor regarding any accompt to be rendred of this life's actions, have encouraged themſelves, and others in the free enjoyment of preſent ſenſualities, upon the ſcore of our life's ſhortneſs and uncertainty; inculcating ſuch Maxims as theſe:

——Brevis eſt hic fructus homullis;
——poſt mortem nulla voluptas.

Lucr.

Quem fors dierum cunque dabit, lucro
Appone, nec dulces amores Sperne puer, &c.

Hor. l. 9.

Let us eat and drink for to morrow we ſhall dye; becauſe our life is ſhort, let us make the moſt advantageous uſe thereof we can; becauſe death is uncertain, let us prevent its ſurpriſal, and be beforehand with it, enjoying ſomewhat, before it ſnatches all from us. The Authour of Wiſedom obſerveth, and thus repreſents theſe Mens diſcourſe: Our life is ſhort and tedious; and in the death of a man there is no remedy; neither was there any man known to have returned from the grave: -——Come on, therefore let us enjoy the good things that are preſent; let us ſpeedily uſe the creatures like as in youth; Let us fill our ſelves with coſtly wine and ointments; and let no flower of the ſpring paſs by us, let us crown our ſelves with roſe-buds before they be withered; let none of us go without his part of voluptuouſneſs ——for this is our portion, and our lot

1 Cor. 15. 32.
Sap. 2. 1, &c.

is this. Thus, and no wonder, have ſome men conceiving themſelves beaſts, reſolved to live as ſuch; renouncing all ſober care becoming men, and drowning their reaſon in brutiſh ſenſualities; yet no queſtion, the very ſame reflexion, that this life would ſoon paſs away, and that death might ſpeedily attack them, did not a little quaſh their mirth, and damp their pleaſure. To think, that this perhaps might be the laſt Banquet they ſhould taſt of; that they ſhould themſelves ſhortly become the feaſt of Worms and Serpents; could not but ſomewhat ſpoil the guſt of their higheſt delicacies, and diſturb the ſport of their loudeſt jovialties; but Job 20. 14. in Job's expreſſion, make the meat in their bowels to turn, and be as the gall of Aſps within them. Thoſe cuſtomary enjoyments did ſo enamour them of ſenſual delight, that they could not without pungent regret imagine a neceſſity of ſoon for ever parting with them; and ſo their very Pleaſure was by this thought made diſtaſtful and embittered to them. So did the Wiſeman obſerve: O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at reſt in his poſſeſſions; unto the man that hath nothing to vex him; and that hath proſperity in all things; Te (adds he) unto him, that is yet able to receive meat: And how bitter then muſt the remembrance there-Ecclus 41. 1. of be to him, who walloweth in all kind of corporal ſatisfaction and delight; that placeth all his happineſs in ſenſual enjoyment? However, as to us, who are better inſtructed and effected; who know and believe a future ſtate; the conſideration, that the time of enjoying theſe delights
Eccles. 7. 6. will ſoon be over; that this World's jollity is but like the crackling of thorns under a pot (which yields a briſk ſound, and a chearful blaze, but heats little, and inſtantly paſſes away) that they leave no good fruits behind them, but do onely corrupt and enervate our minds; war againſt, and hurt our ſouls; tempt us to ſin, and involve us in guilt; that therefore Solomon was ſurely in the right, when he ſaid of laughter, that it is mad, Eccl. 2. 2. and of mirth, what doeth it? (that is, that the higheſt of theſe delights are very irrational impertinences) and of intemperance; that, at the Prov. 23. 32. laſt, it biteth like a Serpent, and ſtingeth like an Adder; with us, I ſay, Heb. 11. 25. who reflect thus, that (πρόσκαιρος ἁμαρτίας ἀπόλαυσις) enjoyment of ſinful pleaſure for a ſeaſon cannot obtain much eſteem and love; but will rather, I hope, be deſpiſed and abhorred by us. I will add onely

Δοκεῖ γοῦν ἡ σοφία θαυμαστὰς ἡδονὰς ἔχειν καθαρειότητι, ϗ τῷ βεβαίῳ Ariſt. Eth. X. 7.

4. Concerning ſecular Wiſdom and Knowledge; the which Men do alſo commonly with great earneſtneſs and ambition ſeek after, as the moſt ſpecious ornament, and pure content of their mind; this conſideration doth alſo detect the juſt value thereof; ſo as to allay intemperate ardour toward it, pride and conceitedneſs upon the having or ſeeming to have it, envy and emulation about it. For, imagine, if you pleaſe, a Man accompliſhed with all varieties of learning commendable, able to recompt all the ſtories, that have been ever written (or the deeds acted) ſince the World's beginning; to underſtand, or with the moſt delightful fluency and elegancy to ſpeak all the languages, that have at any time been in uſe among the ſons of men; skilful in twiſting and untwiſting all kinds of ſubtilties; verſed in all ſorts of natural experiments, and ready to aſſign plauſible conjectures about the cauſes of them; ſtudied in all Books whatever, and in all Monuments of Antiquity; deeply knowing in all the myſteries of art, or ſcience, or policy, ſuch as have ever been deviſed by humane wit, or ſtudy or obſervation; yet all this, ſuch is the pity, he muſt be forced preſently to abandon; all the uſe he could make of all his notions, the pleaſure he might find in them, the reputation accruing to him from them muſt at that fatal minute vaniſh; his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts periſh. There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſedom in the grave, whither he goeth. 'Tis ſeen (ſaith the Pſalmiſt, ſeen indeed every day, and obſerved by all) that wiſe men die; likewiſe the fool and brutiſh perſon periſheth; one event happeneth to them both; there is no remembrance of the wiſe more than of the fool for ever; (both dye alike, both alike are forgotten) as the wiſeſt man himſelf, did (not without ſome diſtaſt) obſerve and complain. All our ſubtile conceits, and nice criticiſms; all our fine inventions and goodly ſpeculations ſhall be ſwallowed up either in the utter darkneſs, or in the clearer light of the future ſtate. One Potion of that Lethean cup (which we muſt all take down upon our entrance into that Land of forgetfulneſs) will probably drown the memory, deface the ſhape of all thoſe Ideas, with which we have here ſtuffed our minds; however they are not like to be of uſe to us in that new, ſo different, ſtate; where none of our languages are ſpoken; none of our experience will ſute; where all things have quite another face unknown, unthought of by us. Where Ariſtotle, and Varro ſhall appear mere Idiots; Demoſthenes and Cicero ſhall become very infants; the wiſeſt and eloquenteſt Greeks will prove ſenſeleſs and dumb Barbarians; where all our Authours ſhall have no authority; where we muſt all go freſh to ſchool again; muſt unlearn perhaps, what in theſe miſty regions we thought our ſelves beſt to know; and begin to learn, what we not once ever dream'd of; Doth therefore, I pray you, ſo tranſitory and fruitleſs a good (for it ſelf I mean and excepting our duty to God, or the reaſonable diligence we are bound to uſe in our calling) deſerve ſuch anxious deſire; or ſo reſtleſs toil; ſo careful attention of mind, or aſſiduous pain of body about it? Doth it become us to contend, or emulate ſo much about it? Above all do we not moſt unreaſonably, and againſt the nature of the thing it ſelf we pretend to (that is ignorantly and fooliſhly) if we are proud and conceited, much value our ſelves or contemn others, in reſpect thereto? Solomon the moſt experienced in this matter, and beſt able to judge thereof (He that gave his heart to ſeek and ſearch out by wiſdom concerning all things, that had been done under Heaven, and this with extream ſucceſs; even he) paſſeth the ſame ſentence of vanity, vexation and unprofitableneſs, upon this, as upon all other ſubceleſtial things. True, he commends wiſdom as an excellent and uſeful thing comparatively; exceeding folly, ſo far as light exceedeth darkneſs; But ſince light it ſelf is not permanent, but muſt give way to darkneſs; the difference ſoon vaniſhed; and his opinion thereof abated; conſidering, that as it happened to the fool, ſo it happened to him, he breaks into that expoſtulation: And why then was I more wiſe? to what purpoſe was ſuch a diſtinction made, that ſignified in effect ſo little? And indeed the Teſtimony of this great perſonage may ſerve for a good Epilogue to all this diſcourſe, diſcovering ſufficiently the ſlender worth of all earthly things: Seeing he, that had given himſelf induſtriouſly to experiment the worth of all things here below, to ſound the depth of their utmoſt perfection and uſe; who had all the advantages imaginable of performing it; Who flouriſhed in the greateſt magnificences of worldly pomp and power; who enjoyed an incredible affluence of all riches; who taſted all varieties of moſt exquiſite pleaſure; whoſe heart was (by God's ſpecial gift, and by his own induſtrious care) enlarged with all kind of knowledge (furniſhed

Pſal. 46. 4.
Eccl. 9. 10.

Pſal. 49. 10.
Eccl. 2. 14, 15, &c.

Pſal. 88. 12.

Τὴν δ' Ἰσοκράτους διατριβὴν ἐπισκώπτων, γηρᾷν φησι παρ' αὐτῷ τοὺς μαθητὰς, ὡς ἐν ᾅδου χρησομένους ταῖς τέχναις, καὶ δίκας ἐροῦντας. Cato Sen. apud Plut. pag. 641.

Διπλοῦν ὁρῶσιν οἱ μαθόντες γράμματα.
Eccl. 2. 15.

1 Kings 4. 29. with notions many as the Sand upon the Sea ſhore) above all that were before him; who had poſſeſſed and enjoyed all that fancy could conceive, or heart could wiſh, and had arrived to the top of ſecular Happineſs; Yet even He with pathetical reiteration pronounces all to be vanity and vexation of ſpirit; altogether unprofitable and unſatisfactory to the mind of Man. And ſo therefore we may juſtly conclude them to be; ſo finiſhing the firſt grand advantage this preſent conſideration affordeth us in order to that wiſedom, to which we ſhould apply our hearts.

I ſhould proceed to gather other good fruits, which it is apt to produce and contribute to the ſame purpoſe; but ſince my thoughts have taken ſo large ſcope upon that former head, ſo that I have already too much, I fear, exerciſed your patience, I ſhall only mention the reſt. As this conſideration doth, as we have ſeen, Firſt, diſpoſe us rightly to value theſe temporal goods, and moderate our affections about them; ſo it doth, Secondly, in like manner, conduce to the right eſtimation of temporal evils; and thereby to the well tempering our paſſions in the reſentment of them; to the begetting of patience and contentedneſs in our minds. Alſo, Thirdly, it may help us to value, and excite us to regard thoſe things (good or evil) which relate to our future ſtate; being the things only of a permanent nature, and of an everlaſting conſequence to us. Fourthly, It will engage us to husband carefully, and well employ this ſhort time of our preſent life: Not to defer or procraſtinate our endeavours to live well; not to be lazy and loitering in the diſpatch of our only conſiderable buſineſs, relating to eternity; to embrace all opportunities, and improve all means; and follow the beſt compendiums of good practice leading to eternal bliſs. Fifthly, It will be apt to confer much toward the begetting and preſerving ſincerity in our thoughts, words and actions; cauſing us to decline all oblique deſigns upon preſent mean intereſts, or baſe regards to the opinions or affections of men; bearing ſingle reſpects to our conſcience and duty in our actions; Teaching us to ſpeak as we mean; and be what we would ſeem; to be in our hearts and in our cloſets, what we appear in our outward expreſſions and converſations with Men; For conſidering, that within a very ſhort time all the thoughts of our hearts ſhall be diſcloſed; and all the actions of our lives expoſed to publick view (being ſtrictly to be examined at the great bar of divine judgment before Angels and Men) we cannot but perceive it to be the greateſt folly in the World, for this ſhort preſent time to diſguiſe our ſelves; to conceal our intentions, or ſmother our actions. What hath occurred (upon theſe important ſubjects) to my meditation, I muſt at preſent, in regard to your patience, omit. I ſhall cloſe all with that good Collect of our Church.

Almighty God, give us grace, that we may caſt away the works of darkneſs, and put upon us the armour of light now in the time of this mortal life, in which thy Son Jeſus Chriſt came to viſit us in great humility; that in the laſt day, when he ſhall come again in his glorious Majeſty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may riſe to the life immortal, through him, who liveth and reigneth with thee, and the Holy Ghoſt, now and ever. Amen.

SERMON XV.

The Conſideration of our Latter End.

PSAL. XC. 12.

So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wiſedom.

IN diſcourſing formerly upon theſe words (expounded according to the moſt common and paſſable interpretation) that which I chiefly obſerved was this: That the ſerious conſideration of the ſhortneſs and frailty of our life is a fit mean or rational inſtrument ſubſervient to the bringing our hearts to wiſedom; that is, to the making us diſcern, attend unto, embrace, and proſecute ſuch things, as according to the dictates of right reaſon are truly beſt for us.

Job 14. 14. All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come.

I. The truth of which obſervation I largely declared from hence, that the ſaid conſideration diſpoſeth us to judge rightly about thoſe goods (which ordinarily court and tempt us, viz worldly glory and honour; riches, pleaſure, knowledge; to which I might have added wit, ſtrength and beauty) what their juſt worth and value is; and conſequently to moderate our affections, our cares, our endeavours about them; for that if all thoſe goods be uncertain and tranſitory, there can be no great reaſon to prize them much, or to affect them vehemently, or to ſpend much care and pains about them.

II. I ſhall next in the ſame ſcales weigh our temporal evils; and ſay, that alſo, The conſideration of our lives brevity and frailty doth avail to the paſſing a true judgment of, and conſequently to the governing our paſſions, and ordering our behaviour in reſpect to all thoſe temporal evils, which either according to the Law of our nature, or the fortuitous courſe of things, or the particular diſpenſation of providence do befal us. Upon the declaration of which point I need not inſiſt much, ſince what was before diſcourſed concerning the oppoſite goods doth plainly enough infer it; more immediately indeed in regard to the mala damni, or privationis (the evils, which conſiſt onely in the want, or loſs of temporal goods) yet ſufficiently alſo by a manifeſt parity of reaſon in reſpect to the mala ſenſus, the real pains, croſſes and inconveniences, that aſſail us in this life. For if worldly glory do hence appear to be no more than a tranſient blaze, a fading ſhew, a hollow ſound, a piece of theatrical pageantry, the want thereof cannot be very conſiderable to us. Obſcurity of condition (living in a valley beneath that dangerous height, and deceitful luſtre) cannot in reaſon be deemed a very ſad or pitiful thing; which ſhould diſpleaſe, or diſcompoſe us; if we may thence learn that abundant wealth is rather a needleſs clog, or a perillous ſnare, than any great convenience to us; we cannot well eſteem to be poor a great infelicity, or to undergo loſſes a grievous calamity; but rather a benefit to be free from the diſtractions that attend it; to have little to keep for others, little to care for our ſelves. If theſe preſent pleaſures be diſcerned hence to be only wild fugitive dreams; out of which being ſoon rouſed we ſhall only find better regrets to abide; why ſhould not the wanting opportunities of enjoying them be rather accompted a happy advantage, than any part of miſery to us? If it ſeem, that the greateſt perfection of curious knowledge (of what uſe or ornament ſoever) after it is hardly purchaſed, muſt ſoon be parted with; to be ſimple or ignorant will be no great matter of lamentation: as thoſe will appear no ſolid goods, ſo theſe conſequently muſt be onely umbræ malorum, phantaſms, or ſhadows of evil, rather than truly or ſubſtantially ſo; (evils created by fancy and ſubſiſting thereby; which reaſon ſhould, and time will ſurely remove.) That in being impatient or diſconſolate for them, we are but like children, that fret and wail for the want of petty toys. And for the more real or poſitive evils ſuch as violently aſſault nature, whoſe impreſſions no reaſon can ſo withſtand, as to diſtinguiſh all diſtaſt or afflictive ſenſe of them; yet this conſideration will aid to abate and aſſwage them; affording a certain hope and proſpect of approaching redreſs. It is often ſeen at Sea, that Men (from unacquaintance with ſuch agitations, or from brackiſh ſtreams ariſing from the ſalt Water) are heartily ſick, and diſcover themſelves to be ſo by apparently grievous ſymptomes; yet no man hardly there doth mind or pity them, becauſe the malady is not ſuppoſed dangerous, and within a while will probably of it ſelf paſs over; or that however, the remedy is not far off; the ſight of Land, a taſt of the freſh air will relieve them: 'Tis near our Caſe: We paſſing over this troubleſome Sea of life; from unexperience, joined with the tenderneſs of our conſtitution, we cannot well endure the changes and croſſes of fortune; to be toſs'd up and down; to ſuck in the ſharp vapours of penury, diſgrace, ſickneſs, and the like, doth beget a qualm in our ſtomachs; make us nauſeate all things, and appear ſorely diſtempered; yet is not our condition ſo diſmal, as it ſeems; we may grow hardier, and wear out our ſenſe of affliction; however, the Land is not far off, and by diſembarking hence we ſhall ſuddenly be diſcharged of all our moleſtations. 'Tis a common ſolace of grief, approved by wiſe men, ſi gravis, brevis eſt; ſi longus, levis; if it be very grievous and acute, it cannot continue long, without intermiſſion or reſpit; if it abide long, it is ſupportable; intolerable pain is like lightening, it deſtroys us, or is it ſelf inſtantly deſtroyed. However, death at length (which never is far off) will free us; be we never ſo much toſſed with ſtorms of misfortune, that is a ſure haven; be we perſecuted with never ſo many enemies, that is a ſafe refuge; let what pains or diſeaſes ſoever infeſt us, that is an aſſured Anodynon, and infallible remedy for them all; however we be wearied with the labours of the day, the night will come and eaſe us; the grave will become a bed of reſt unto us.

Sen. Ep 89.

Θάρσει πόνου γὰρ ἄκρον οὐκ ἔχει χρόνον.

Τὸ μὲν ἀφόρητον ἐξάγει· τὸ δὲ χρονίζον φορητόν Ant. VII. Sect. 33.

Summi doloris intentio invenit finem: nemo poteſt valde dolore, & diu: ſic nos amantiſſima noſtri natura diſpoſuit, ut dolorem aut tolerabilem, aut brevem faceret. Sen. Ep. 24.

Dolore perculſi mortem impleramus, eamque unam, ut miſeriarum malorumque terminum, exoptamus. Cic. conſ.

Moriar? hoc dicis; deſinam ægrotare poſſe, &c. Sen.

us. Shall I dye? I ſhall then ceaſe to be ſick; I ſhall be exempted from diſgrace; I ſhall be enlarged from priſon; I ſhall be no more pinched with want; no more tormented with pain. Death is a Winter, that as it withers the Roſe and Lilly, ſo it kills the Nettle and Thiſtle; as it ſtifles all worldly joy and pleaſure, ſo it ſuppreſſes all care and grief; as it huſhes the voice of mirth and melody, ſo it ſtills the clamours, and the ſighs of miſery; as it defaces all the World's glory, ſo it covers all diſgrace, wipes off all tears, ſilences all complaint, buries all diſquiet and diſcontent. King Philip of Macedon once threatened the Spartans to vex them ſorely, and bring them into great ſtraits; but, anſwered they, can he hinder us from dying; that indeed is a way of evading, which no enemy can obſtruct, no Tyrant can debar Men from; they who can deprive of life, and its conveniences, cannot take away death from them. There is a place, Job tells us, where the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and where the weary be at reſt; where the priſoners reſt together; they hear not the voice of the oppreſſour; the ſmall and great are there; and the ſervant is free from his Maſter. 'Tis therefore but holding out a while, and a deliverance from the worſt this World can moleſt us with, ſhall of its own accord arrive unto us: in the mean time 'tis better that we at preſent owe the benefit of our comfort to reaſon, than afterward to time; by rational conſideration to work patience and contentment in our ſelves; and to uſe the ſhortneſs of our life as an argument to ſuſtain us in our affliction, than to find the end thereof onely a natural and neceſſary means of our reſcue from it. The contemplation of this cannot fail to yield ſomething of courage and ſolace to us in the greateſt preſſures; theſe tranſient, and ſhort-liv'd evils, if we conſider them as ſo, cannot appear ſuch horrid bugbears, as much to affright or diſmay us; if we remember how ſhort they are, we cannot eſteem them ſo great, or ſo intolerable. There be, I muſt confeſs, divers more noble conſiderations, proper and available to cure diſcontent and impatience. The conſidering, that all theſe evils proceed from God's juſt will, and wiſe providence; unto which it is fit, and we upon all accompts are obliged readily to ſubmit; that they do ordinarily come from God's goodneſs, and gracious deſign toward us; that they are medicines (although ungrateful, yet wholſome) adminiſtred by the Divine Wiſdom to prevent, remove or abate our diſtempers of ſoul (to allay the tumours of pride, to cool the fevers of intemperate deſire; to rouſe us from the lethargy of ſloath; to ſtop the gangrene of bad conſcience) that they are fatherly corrections intended to reclaim us from ſin, and excite us to duty; that they ſerve as inſtruments or occaſions to exerciſe, to try, to refine our vertue; to beget in us the hope, to qualify us for the reception of better rewards; ſuch diſcourſes indeed are of a better nature, and have a more excellent kind of efficacy; yet no fit help, no good art, no juſt weapon is to be quite neglected in the combat againſt our ſpiritual foes. A Pebble-ſtone hath been ſometimes found more convenient than a Sword or a Spear to ſlay a Giant. Baſer remedies (by reaſon of the Patient's conſtitution, or circumſtances) do ſometime produce good effect, when others in their own nature more rich and potent want efficacy. And ſurely frequent reflexions upon our mortality, and living under the ſenſe of our lives frailty cannot but conduce ſomewhat to the begetting in us an indifferency of mind toward all theſe temporal occurrents; to extenuate both the goods and the evils we here meet with; conſequently therefore to compoſe and calm our paſſions about them.

ᾍδην ἔχων βοηθὸν, οὐ τρέμω σκιάς. Eripere vitam nemo non homini poteſt; At nemo mortem. Sen. Trag.

Job 3. 17.

Ὃ μέλλεις τῷ χρόνῳ χαρίζεσθαι, τοῦτο χαρίζεσθαι τῷ λόγῳ. Plut. ad Apol. p. 195.

Omnia brevia tolerabilia eſſe debent, etiamſi magna. Cic. Læl. ad fin.

III. But I proceed to another uſe of that conſideration we ſpeak of emergent from the former, but ſo as to improve it to higher purpoſes.
For ſince it is uſeful to the diminiſhing our admiration of theſe worldly things, to the withdrawing our affections from them, to the ſlackning our endeavours about them; it will follow that it muſt conduce alſo to beget an eſteem, a deſire, a proſecution of things conducing to our future welfare; both by removing the obſtacles of doing ſo, and by engaging us to conſider the importance of thoſe things in compariſon with theſe. By removing obſtacles I ſay; for while our hearts are poſſeſſed with regard and paſſion toward theſe preſent things, there can be no room left in them for reſpect and affection toward things future. 'Tis in our ſoul as in the reſt of nature; there can be no penetration of objects (as it were) in our hearts, nor any vacuity in them; our mind no more than our body can be in ſeveral places, or tend ſeveral ways, or abide in perfect reſt; yet ſome-where it will always be; ſome-whither it will always go; ſome-what it Matt. 6. 21. will ever be doing. If we have a treaſure here (ſome-what we greatly like and much confide in) our hearts will be here with it; and if here, they cannot be otherwhere; they will be taken up; they will reſt ſatisfied; they will not care to ſeek farther. If we affect worldly glory and delight John 5. 44. in the applauſe of men, we ſhall not be ſo careful to pleaſe God, and 12. 43. ſeek his favour. If we admire and repoſe confidence in riches, it will
Mat. 6. 24. make us neglectful of God, and diſtruſtful of his Providence; if our mind
Rom. 8. 5. thirſts after, and ſucks in greedily ſenſual pleaſures, we ſhall not reliſh ſpiritual delights, attending the practice of vertue and piety, or ariſing from good conſcience; adhering to, attending upon Maſters of ſo different, ſo oppoſite a quality is inconſiſtent; they cannot abide peaceably together, they cannot both rule in our narrow breaſts; we ſhall love and hold to the 1 John 2. 15. one; hate and deſpiſe the other. If any man love the World, the love of the Father is not in him; the love of the World, as the preſent gueſt, ſo occupies and fills the room; that it will not admit, cannot hold the love of God. But when the heart is diſcharged and emptied of theſe things; when we begin to deſpiſe them as baſe and vain; to diſtaſt them as inſipid and unſavoury; then naturally will ſucceed a deſire after other things promiſing a more ſolid content; and deſire will breed endeavour; and endeavour (furthered by God's aſſiſtance always ready to back it) will yeild ſuch a glimps and taſte of thoſe things, as will ſo comfort and ſatisfie our minds, that thereby they will be drawn and engaged into a more earneſt proſecution of them. When (I ſay) driving on ambitious Projects, heaping up Wealth, providing for the fleſh (by our reflecting on the ſhortneſs and frailty of our life) become ſo inſipid to us, that we find little appetite to them, or reliſh in them; our reſtleſs minds will begin to hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, deſiring ſome ſatisfaction thence: Luke 22. 5. Diſcerning theſe ſecular and carnal fruitions to be meer husks (the proper food of ſwine) we ſhall bethink our ſelves of that better nouriſhment (of rational or ſpiritual comfort) which our Fathers houſe doth afford to his children and ſervants. Being ſomewhat diſentangled from the care of our farms and our trafficks; from yoaking our oxen and being married to our preſent delights; we may be at leaſure, and in diſpoſition to comply Matt. 22. 5. with divine invitations to entertainment ſpiritual. Experiencing, that our trade about theſe petty commodities turns to ſmall accompt, and that in the end we ſhall be nothing richer thereby; reaſon will induce us with Matt. 13. 46. the Merchant in the Goſpel to ſell all that we have (to forego our preſent intereſts and deſigns) for the purchaſing that rich Pearl of God's Kingdom, dom, which will yield ſo exceeding profit; the gain of preſent comfort to our conſcience, and eternal happineſs to our ſouls, In fine, when we conſider ſeriouſly, that we have here no abiding City, but are onely ſojourners and pilgrims upon Earth; that all our care and pain here do regard onely an uncertain and tranſitory ſtate; and will therefore ſuddenly as to all fruit and benefit be loſt unto us; this will ſuggeſt unto us, with the good Patriarchs, κρείττονος ὀρέγεσθαι πατρίδος, to long after a better Countrey; a more aſſured, and laſting ſtate of life; where we may enjoy ſome certain and durable repoſe; to tend homeward, in our deſires and hopes, toward thoſe eternal manſions of joy and reſt prepared for God's faithful ſervants in Heaven. Thus will this conſideration help toward the bringing us to inquire after and regard the things concerning our future ſtate; and in the reſult will engage us to compare them with theſe preſent things, as to our concernment in them and the conſequence of them to our advantage or damage, whence a right judgment, and a congruous practice will naturally follow. There be four ways of comparing the things relating to this preſent life with thoſe which reſpect our future ſtate: Comparing the goods of this with the goods of that; the evils of this with the evils of that; the goods of this with the evils of that; the evils of this with the goods of that. All theſe compariſons we may find often made in Scripture; in order to the informing our judgment about the reſpective value of both ſorts; the preſent conſideration intervening, as a ſtandard to meaſure and try them by.

Heb. 13. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 11. Heb. 11. 16.

Firſt then; comparing the preſent goods with thoſe which concern our future ſtate, ſince the tranſitorineſs and uncertainty of temporal goods detract from their worth, and render them in great degree contemptible; but the durability and certainty of ſpiritual goods doth encreaſe their rate, and make them exceedingly valuable; 'tis evident hence, that ſpiritual goods are infinitely to be preferred in our opinion, to be more willingly embraced, to be more zealouſly purſued than temporal goods, that, in caſe of competition, when both cannot be enjoyed, we are in reaſon obliged readily to part with all theſe, rather than to forfeit our title unto, or hazard our hope of thoſe. Thus in the Scripture it is often diſcourſed: The world (ſaith St. John) paſſeth away, and the deſire thereof; but he that doth the will of God, abideth for ever: The World, and all that is deſirable therein is tranſient; but obedience to God's commandments is of an everlaſting conſequence; whence he infers, that we ſhould not love the world; that is, not entertain ſuch an affection thereto, as may any way prejudice the love of God, or hinder the obedience ſpringing thence, or ſuitable thereto. 1 John 2. 17.

All fleſh is graſs (ſaith St. Peter) and all the glory of man as the flower of the graſs; the graſs withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; But the word of the Lord endureth for ever: All worldly glory is frail and fading, but the Word of God is eternally firm and permanent; that is, the good things by God promiſed to them, who faithfully ſerve him, ſhall infallibly be conferred on them to their everlaſting benefit; whence it follows, that as he exhorts, we are bound to gird up the loins of our mind, to be ſober, and hope to the end; to proceed and perſiſt conſtantly in faithful obedience to God. Charge thoſe (ſaith St. Paul) who are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in uncertain riches, but in the living God, that they do good, be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate; treaſuring up for themſelves a good foundation for the future; that they may attain everlaſting life: Since, argues he, preſent riches are of uncertain, and ſhort continuance; but faith and obedience to God, exerciſed in our charity and mercy toward men, are a certain ſtock improve-able to our eternal intereſt; therefore be not proud of, nor relye upon thoſe, but regard eſpecially, and employ our ſelves upon theſe. Our Saviour himſelf doth often inſiſt upon, and inculcate this compariſon: Trea- Matt. 6. 20. ſure not unto your ſelves treaſures upon earth, where moth and ruſt do corrupt; and where thieves break through and ſteal; but treaſure up to your ſelves treaſures in heaven, where moth and ruſt do not corrupt, and where thieves do not

1 Pet. 1. 24. v. 13. 1 Tim. 6. 19.

v. 25. break through and ſteal. Do not take care for your ſoul, what ye ſhall eat, and what ye ſhall drink; nor for your body, what ye ſhall put on; but ſeek firſt the John 6. 27. kingdom of God. Labour not for the food that periſheth, but for the food that Luke 12. 33. abideth to eternal life; ſell your ſubſtance, and give alms; provide your ſelves θησαυρὸν ἀνέκλειπτον bags that wax not old; an indefectible treaſure in the heavens: Thus doth the Holy Scripture, ſetting forth the uncertainty and tranſitorineſs of the preſent, the certainty and permanency of future goods, declare the excellency of theſe above thoſe; adviſing thereupon, with higheſt reaſon, that we willingly reject thoſe (in real effect, if need be, however always in ready diſpoſition of mind) in order to the procuring or ſecuring of theſe.
It alſo, for our example and encouragement, commends to us the wiſdom and vertue of thoſe Perſons, who have effectually practiſed this duty; Heb. 11. 10. of Abraham, our Father, who, in expectation of that well-founded City made and built by God, did readily deſert his Countrey and Kindred, with all preſent accommodations of life; of Moſes, who diſregarded the
v. 23. ſplendours and delights of a great Court; rejected the alliance of a great Princeſs, and refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter; in reſpect to the μισθαποδοσία, that future diſtribution of reward; a ſhare wherein ſhall aſſuredly fall to them, who above all other conſiderations regard the performance of their duty to God; of the Apoſtles, who forſook all, Matt. 19. 27. Parents, Brethren, Lands, Houſes, Trades, receits of Cuſtome, to fol-Luke 18. 28. low Chriſt; him at preſent poor, and naked of all ſecular honour, power, wealth and delight; in hope onely to receive from him divine benefits, Luke 10. 39. and future preferments in his Kingdom; of Mary, who neglecting preſent affairs, and ſeating her ſelf at Jeſus his feet, attending to his diſcipline; is commended for her wiſdom, in minding the only neceſſary thing; in chuſing the better part, which could never be taken from her: of St Paul, Phil. 3. 7, 8. who accompted all his gains (all his worldly intereſts and priviledges) to be damage, to be dung in reſpect to Chriſt, and the excellent knowledge of him, with the benefits thence accruing to him. On the contrary there we have Eſau condemned and ſtigmatized for a profane and a vain perſon, who Heb. 12. 16. (ἀντὶ μιᾶς βρώσεως) for one little eating-bout; one meſs of Pottage (for a little preſent ſatisfaction of ſenſe, or for the ſuſtenance of this frail life) did withgo his birthright, that embleme of ſpiritual bleſſings and priviledges.
We have again repreſented to us that unhappy young Gentleman; who,
Mark 10. 18. though he had good qualities, rendring him amiable even to our Saviour;
and had been trained up in the obſervance of God's Commandments;
yet not being content to part with his large Poſſeſſions, in lieu of the trea-ſure by Chriſt offered in Heaven, was reputed deficient; could find no acceptance with God, nor admiſſion into his Kingdom; for a petty temporal commodity forfeiting an infinite eternal advantage. For, ſaith our Saviour, He that loveth father or mother above me; he that doth not hate fa- Matt. 10. 37. Luke 14. 26. ther and mother, wife and children, brothers and ſiſters, yea his own life (for me and the Goſpel) is not worthy of me, nor can be my diſciple. He that in Mark 10. 29. his eſteem or affection doth prefer any temporal advantages before the benefits tendred by our Saviour (yea doth not in compariſon deſpiſe, renounce and reject his deareſt contents of life, and the very capacity of enjoying them, his life it ſelf) doth not deſerve to be reckoned among the Diſciples of Chriſt; to be ſo much as a Pretender to eternal joy, or a candidate of immortality. Our Saviour rejects all ſuch unwiſe and perverſe traders, who will not exchange brittle glaſs for ſolid gold; counterfeit gliſtering ſtones for genuine moſt precious jewels; a garland of fading flowers for an incorruptible crown of Glory; a ſmall temporary penſion for a vaſtly rich freehold; an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in the heavens. 1 Pet. 1. 4. Thus doth the Holy Scripture teach us to compare theſe ſorts of good things;

And, ſecondly, ſo alſo doth it to compare the evils of both ſtates; for that ſeeing, as the ſoon ceaſing of temporal miſchiefs ſhould (in reaſonable proceeding) diminiſh the fear of them, and mitigate the grief for them; ſo the inceſſant continuance of ſpiritual evils doth (according to juſt eſtimation) render them hugely grievous and formidable; 'tis plain, that we ſhould much more diſlike, abominate, and ſhun ſpiritual evils, than temporal; that we ſhould make no queſtion rather to endure theſe paroxyſms of momentany pain, than incur thoſe chronical and (indeed) incurable maladies; that we ſhould run willingly into theſe ſhallow plaſhes of preſent inconvenience, rather than plunge our ſelves into thoſe unfathomable depths of eternal miſery. There is (I ſuppoſe) no man, who would not accompt it a very great calamity (ſuch as hardly greater could befal him here) to have his right eye plucked out, and his right hand cut off, Matt. 5. 29. 18. 8. and his foot taken from him; to be deformed and maimed, ſo that he can do nothing, or ſtir any whither; yet our Lord repreſents theſe to us as inconſiderable evils, yea as things very eligible and advantageous in compariſon of thoſe miſchiefs, which the voluntary not embracing them, in caſe we cannot otherwiſe than by ſo doing avoid ſin, will bring on us: συμφέρει σοι, it is (ſaith he) profitable for thee, that one of thy members be loſt, rather than that thy whole body be caſt into hell; καλόν σοι ἐστὶ, 'tis good, 'tis excellent for thee to enter into life lame and maimed, and one ey'd, rather than having two hands, and two feet, and two eyes (in all integrity and beauty of this temporal, or corporal ſtate) to be caſt into eternal fire. To be baniſhed from ones native ſoil, ſecluded from all comforts of friendly acquaintance, deveſted irrecoverably of great eſtate and dignity; becoming a vagrant and a ſervant in vile employment, in a ſtrange Countrey, every Man would be apt to deem a wretched condition; yet Moſes, we Heb. 11. 25. ſee, freely choſe it, rather than by enjoying unlawful pleaſures at home, in Pharaoh's Court, to incur God's diſpleaſure and vengeance: συγκακουχεῖσθαι μᾶλλον ἑλών, chuſing rather to undergo evil together with God's people, than to have πρόσκαιρον ἁμαρτίας ἀπόλαυσιν, a temporary fruition of ſinful delight, dangerous to the welfare of his ſoul. Death is commonly eſteemed the moſt extream and terrible of evils incident to man; yet our Saviour bids us not to regard or fear it, in compariſon of that deadly ruine, which we adventure on by offending God: I ſay unto you my friends (ſaith he, he intended Luke 12. 4. it for the moſt friendly advice) Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and Matt. 10. 28. after that have nothing farther to do; but I will ſhew you whom ye ſhall fear; Ἀποκτεῖναι δύνανται, βλάψαι δ' οὔ. Fear him, who after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell, to caſt both body and ſoul into Hell, and deſtroy them therein; Yea, I ſay unto you (ſo he inculcates and impreſſes it upon them) fear him.

But thirdly; Conſidering the good things of this life together with the evils of that, which is to come; Since enjoying theſe goods in compa-riſon with enduring thoſe evils is but rejoicing for a moment in reſpect of mourning to eternity ; if upon the ſeeming ſweetneſs of theſe enjoyments to our carnal appetite be conſequent a remedileſs diſtempering of our ſoul ; ſo that what taſts like honey proves gall in the digeſtion ; gripes our bowels, gnaws our heart, and ſtings our conſcience for ever ; if preſent mirth and jollity have a tendency to that dreadful weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of teeth threatned in the Goſpel ; if for the praiſe and favour of a few giddy men here we venture eternal ſhame and confuſion before God and Angels and all good men hereafter ; if for attaining or preſerving a ſmall ſtock of uncertain riches in this World we ſhall reduce our ſelves into a ſtate of moſt uncomfortable nakedneſs and penury in the other. 'Tis clear as the Sun that we are downright fools and mad men, if we do not upon theſe accompts rather willingly reject all theſe good things, than hazard incurring any of thoſe evils ; for, ſaith truth it ſelf, Mark 8. 36. What will it profit a man, if he gain the whole World (καὶ ζημιωθῇ τὴν ψυχὴν) and Luke 9. 25. be endamaged as to his ſoul, or loſe his ſoul as a mulct. 'Tis a very diſadvantageous bargain for all the conveniencies this World can afford to be deprived of the comforts of our immortal ſtate. But,

Laſtly, comparing the evils of this life with the benefits of the future, ſince the worſt tempeſts of this life will be ſoon blown over, the bittereſt croſſes muſt expire (if not before, however) with our breath ; but the good things of the future ſtate are immutable and perpetual ; 'tis in evident conſequence moſt reaſonable ; that we freely (if need be) undertake, and patiently endure theſe for the ſake of thoſe ; that in hope of 1 Pet. 1. 4. that incorruptible inheritance, laid up for us in Heaven, we not only ſupport and comfort our ſelves, but even rejoyce and exult in all the afflictions by God's wiſe and juſt diſpenſation impoſed on us here ; as they in Ibid. St. Peter ; wherein (ſaith he) ye greatly rejoyce (or exult,) being for a little Ἀγαλλιᾶσθε ὀλίγον ἄρτι *while as in heavineſs through manifold * afflictions or trials. Accompting it* * Πειρασμοῖς. all joy (ſaith St. James) when ye fall into divers temptations (that is, affli-Jam. 1. 2. ctions or trials) knowing that the trial of your faith perfecteth patience ; that is, ſeeing the ſufferance of theſe preſent evils conduceth to the furtherance Rom. 5. 8. of your ſpiritual and eternal welfare. And, We glory in tribulation, ſaith St. Paul ; rendring the ſame accompt, becauſe it tended to their ſouls advantage : St. Paul, than whom no man perhaps ever more deeply taſted of the cup of affliction ; and that tempered with all the moſt bitter ingre-Ἐν ἀκαταστασίαις. dients which this World can produce ; Whoſe life was ſpent in continual agitation and unſettledneſs ; in all hardſhips of travel and labour and care ; in extreme ſufferance of all pains both of body and mind ; in all imaginable dangers and difficulties and diſtreſſes, that nature expoſes man unto, or humane malice can bring upon him ; in all wants of natural comfort (food, ſleep, ſhelter, liberty, health) in all kinds of diſgrace and contumely ; as you may ſee in thoſe large inventories of his ſufferings, 2 Cor. 11. 23. regiſtred by himſelf, in the 6th and 11th Chapters of his 2d Epiſtle to the
6. 5. Corinthians ; Yet all this conſidering the good things he expected after-2 Cor. 4. 17. ward to enjoy, he accompted very ſlight and tolerable : For (ſaith he)
5. 1. our lightneſs of affliction, that is for a little while here, worketh for us a far Τὸ γὰρ παραυτίκα ἐλαφρὸν more exceeding weight of glory ; while we look not at the things which are ſeen ;
τῆς θλίψεως. but at thoſe, which are not ſeen ; for the things which are ſeen are temporal ;
but the things which are not ſeen are eternal. For we know, that when our earthly houſe of this tabernacle (of this unſteady tranſitory abode) is diſſol- ved we are to have a tabernacle from God, a houſe not made with hands, eternal Rom. 8. 18. in the Heavens. I reckon, ſaith he again, that is having made a due compariſon and computation I find) that the ſufferings of this preſent time are not worthy (that is are not conſiderable, come under no rate or proportion) in reſpect of the glory which ſhall be revealed (or openly conferred) upon us. The like opinion had thoſe faithful Chriſtians, in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, of whom 'tis ſaid, that being expoſed to publick ſcorn as in the theatre, Heb: 10. 34. Θεατριζόμενοι with reproaches and afflictions, they did with gladneſs accept the ſpoiling * (or rapine) of their goods; knowing that they had in Heaven a better and more * Ἁρπαγὴν enduring ſubſtance. But the principal example (moſt obliging our imitation) of this wiſe choice is that of our Lord himſelf; who, in contemplation of the future great ſatisfaction and reward of patient ſubmiſſion to the divine will, did willingly undergo the greateſt of temporal ſorrows and ignominies; Who (ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, propounding his Heb. 12. 2. example to us) for the joy that was ſet before him endured the Croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of God.

Thus immediately, or by an eaſie inference doth the conſideration of this lifes ſhortneſs and uncertainty confer to that main part of wiſdom, rightly to value the things about which we are converſant; diſpoſing us conſequently to moderate our affections, and rightly to guide our actions about them; fitting us therefore for the performance of thoſe duties ſo often enjoined us; of not caring for, not truſting in, not minding (unduly that is, and immoderately) things below; of dying to this World, and taking up our croſs, or contentedly ſuffering (in ſubmiſſion to God's will) all loſs and inconvenience; as alſo to the placing our meditation and care; our love and deſire; our hope and confidence; our joy and ſatisfaction; our moſt earneſt pains and endeavours upon things divine, ſpiritual and eternal.

IV. I proceed to another general benefit of that general conſideration; which is that it may engage us to a good improvement of our time; the thing which is a very conſiderable piece of wiſdom. For if time be, (as Theophraſtus called it truely) a thing of moſt precious value (or expence) Πολυτελέστατον ἀνάλωμα. as it were a great folly to laviſh it away unprofitably; ſo to be frugal thereof, and careful to lay it out for the beſt advantage, eſpecially every Man having ſo little ſtore thereof, muſt be a ſpecial point of Prudence. To be covetous of time (Seneca tells us) is a commendable avarice; it being Nulla niſi temporis honeſta eſt avaritia. Sen. neceſſary for the accompliſhment of any worthy enterprize; there being nothing exellent, that can ſoon or eaſily be effected. Surely he that hath much and great buſineſs to diſpatch; and but a little time allowed for it, is concerned to husband it well; not to loſe it wholly in idleneſs; not to trifle it away in unneceſſary divertiſements; not to put himſelf upon other impertinent affairs; above all not to create obſtacles to himſelf, by purſuing matters of a tendency quite contrary to the ſucceſs of his main undertakings. 'Tis our caſe; we are obliged here to negotiate in buſineſs of infinite price and conſequence to us; no leſs than the ſalvation of our ſouls and eternal happineſs; and we ſee, that our time to drive it on and bring it to a happy iſſue is very ſcant and ſhort; ſhort in it ſelf; and very ſhort in reſpect to the nature of thoſe affairs; the great variety, and the great difficulty of them: The great father of Phyſicians did quicken the ſtudents of that faculty to diligence, by admoniſhing them (in the firſt place, ſetting it in the front of his famous Aphoriſms) that, life is ſhort, and art is long. And how much more ſo is the art of living well Non enim dat natura virtutem; ars eſt bonum fieri. Sen. Ep. 89. (that moſt excellent and moſt neceſſary art; for indeed vertue is not a gift of nature, but a work of art; an effect of labour and ſtudy) this, I ſay moſt needful and uſeful art of living vertuouſly and piouſly; this art of ſpiritual Phyſick; (of preſerving and recovering our ſouls health) how much longer is it? how many rules are to be learnt? how many precepts to be obſerved in order thereto? We are bound to furniſh our minds with needful knowledge of God's will and our duty; we are to bend our unwilling wills to a ready compliance with them; we are to adorn our ſouls with diſpoſitions ſutable to the future ſtate (ſuch as may qualify us for the preſence of God, and converſation with the bleſſed ſpirits above) it is incumbent on us to mortify corrupt deſires, to reſtrain inordinate paſſions, to ſubdue natural propenſities, to extirpate vitious habits; in order to the effecting theſe things, to uſe all fit means; devotion toward God, ſtudy of his Law, reflexion upon our actions, with all ſuch ſpiritual inſtruments; the performing which duties, as it doth require great care and pains, ſo it needs much time; all this is not dictum factum, as ſoon done as ſaid; a few ſpare minutes will not ſuffice to accompliſh it. Natural inclination, that wild beaſt within us, will not ſo preſently be tamed, and made tractable by us. Ill habits cannot be removed without much exerciſe and attendance; as they were begot, ſo they muſt be deſtroyed, by a conſtant ſucceſſion, and frequency of acts. Fleſhly luſt is not to be killed with a ſtab or two; it will fight ſtoutly, and rebel often, an hold out long, before with our utmoſt endeavour we can obtain an entire victory over it. No vertue is acquired in an inſtant, but by degrees, ſtep by ſtep; from the ſeeds of right inſtruction and good reſolution it ſprings up, and grows forward by a continual progreſs of cuſtomary practice; 'tis a child of patience, a fruit of perſeverance (that ὑπομονὴ ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ, enduring in doing well, St. Paul ſpeaks of) and conſequently a work of time, for enduring implies a good ſpace of time. Having therefore ſo much to doe, and of ſo great concernment, and ſo little a portion of time for it, it behoves us to be careful in the improvement of what time is allowed us; to embrace all opportunities and advantages offered; to go the neareſt way, to uſe the beſt compendiums in the tranſaction of our buſineſs; not to be ſlothful and negligent, but active and intent about it; (for as time is diminiſhed, and in part loſt by ſloth or ſlackneſs; ſo it is enlarged, and, as it were, multiplied by induſtry; my day is two in reſpect of his, who doeth but half my work.) Not (alſo) to conſume our time in fruitleſs paſtimes, and curious entertainments of fancy; being idly buſie about impertinences and trifles (we call it ſport, but 'tis a ſerious damage to us;) not to immerſe our ſelves in multiplicities of needleſs care about ſecular matters, which may diſtract us, and bereave us of fit leiſure for our great employment; that which our Saviour calls τυρβάζεσθαι περὶ πολλά, to keep a great deal of doe and ſtir (to be jumbled about as it were, and confounded) about many things; and, περισπᾶσθαι περὶ πολλὴν διακονίαν, to be diſtracted and perplexed about much comberſome ſervice; which St. Paul calls ἐμπλέκεσθαι ταῖς τοῦ βίου πραγματείαις, to be implicated and entangled (as in a net) with the negotiations of this preſent life; ſo that we ſhall not be expedite, or free to beſtir our ſelves about our more weighty affairs. The ſpending much time about thoſe things doth ſteal it from theſe; yea doth more than ſo, by diſcompoſing our minds ſo that we cannot well employ what time remains upon our ſpiritual concernments. But eſpecially we ſhould not proſtitute our time upon vitious projects and practices; doing which is not onely a prodigality of the preſent time, but an abridgment of the future; it not onely doth not promote or ſet forward our buſineſs, but brings it backward; and makes us more work than we had before; 'tis

Τί φθείρει ἔθος; ἐναντίον ἔθος. Epict.

Rom. 2. 7.

Luke 10. 40.

1 Tim. 2. 4.

'tis a going in a way directly contrary to our journeys-end. The Scripture aptly reſembles our life to a wayfaring, a condition of travel and pilgrimage; now he that hath a long journey to make, and but a little time of day to paſs it in, muſt in reaſon ſtrive to ſet out ſoon, and then to make good ſpeed; muſt proceed on directly, making no ſtops or deflections (not calling in at every ſign that invites him, not ſtanding to gaze at every object ſeeming new or ſtrange to him; not ſtaying to talk with every Paſſenger that meets him; but rather avoiding all occaſions of diverſion and delay) leſt he be ſurpriſed by the night, be left to wander in the dark, be excluded finally from the place whither he tends: So muſt we in our courſe towards Heaven and happineſs, take care that we ſet out ſoon (procraſtinating no time, but beginning inſtantly to inſiſt in the ways of Piety and Vertue) then proceed on ſpeedily, and perſiſt conſtantly; no where ſtaying or loitering, ſhunning all impediments and avocations from our Progreſs; leſt we never arrive near, or come too late unto the gate of Heaven. St. Peter tells us, that the end of all things doth approach, and thereupon adviſes us to be ſober, and to watch unto 1 Pet. 4. 7. prayer; for that the leſs our time is, the more intent and induſtrious it concerns us to be. And, St. Paul injoins us to redeem the time, becauſe the Eph. 5. 15. days are evil; that is, ſince we can enjoy no true quiet or comfort here, we ſhould improve our time to the beſt advantage for the future; he might have alſo adjoined, with the Patriarch Jacob, the paucity of the days to their badneſs; becauſe the days of our life are few and evil, let us Gen. 47. 9. redeem the time; Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of Job 14. 1. trouble. So few indeed they are, that 'tis fit we ſhould loſe none of them, but uſe them all in preparation toward that great change we are to make; that fatal paſſage out of this ſtrait time into that boundleſs eternity. So, it ſeems, we have Job's example of doing: All the days (ſays he) of my Job 14. 14. appointed time will I wait till my change come. I end this Point with that ſo comprehenſive warning of our Saviour: Take heed to your ſelves, leſt at any Luke 21. 34. time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, and cares of this life, and ſo that day come upon you unawares. Watch ye therefore and pray that ye may be counted worthy to eſcape —— and to ſtand before the ſon of man.

V. I ſhall adjoin but one uſe more, to which this conſideration may be ſubſervient, which is, that it may help to beget and maintain in us (that which is the very heart and ſoul of all goodneſs) Sincerity. Sincerity in all kinds, in our thoughts, words and actions. To keep us from harbouring in our breaſts ſuch thoughts, as we would be afraid or aſhamed to own: from ſpeaking otherwiſe than we mean, than we intend to doe, than we are ready any-where openly to avow; from endeavouring to ſeem what we are not; from being one thing in our expreſſions and converſations with men; another in our hearts, or in our cloſets. From acting with oblique reſpects to private intereſts or paſſions, to humane favour or cenſure (in matters, I mean, where duty doth intervene, and where pure conſcience ought to guide and govern us) from making profeſſions and oſtentations (void of ſubſtance, of truth, of knowledge, of good purpoſe) great ſemblances of peculiar ſanctimony, integrity, ſcrupuloſity, ſpirituality, refinedneſs, like thoſe Phariſees ſo often therefore noted in the Goſpel; as alſo from palliating, as thoſe men did, deſigns of ambition, avarice, envy, animoſity, revenge, perverſe humour, with pretences of zeal and conſcience. We ſhould indeed ſtrive to be good

(and that in all real ſtrictneſs, aiming at utmoſt perfection) in outward act, and appearance, as well as in heart and reality; for the glory of God and example of men (providing things honeſt in the ſight of all men) Rom. 12. 17. but we muſt not ſhine with a falſe luſtre, nor care to ſeem better than we are, nor intend to ſerve our ſelves in ſeeming to ſerve God; bartering ſpiritual commodities for our own glory or gain. For ſince the day approaches Rom. 2. 16. when God will judge τὰ κρυπτὰ ἀνθρώπων, the things men do ſo ſtudiouſly conceal;
Eccl. 12. 14. when God ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil; ſince we muſt all appear (or rather 2 Cor. 5. 10. be all made apparent, be manifeſted and diſcovered) at the tribunal of Ὀυ γὰρ παρα- Chriſt: ſince there is nothing covered, which ſhall not be revealed, nor hid ςῆναι ἡμᾶς that ſhall not be known; ſo that whatever is ſpoken in the ear in cloſets, ſhall be ἁπλῶς δεῖ, ἀλλὰ ϗ φανε- proclaimed on the houſe tops: Since at length, and that within a very ſhort ρωθῆναι. Chryſoſt. time (no man knows how ſoon) the whiſpers of every mouth (the cloſeſt Luke 12. 2, 3. murmurs of detraction, ſlander and ſychophantry) ſhall become audible to every ear; the abſtruſeſt thoughts of all hearts (the cloſeſt malice and envy) ſhall be diſcloſed in the moſt publick Theatre before innumerable ſpectatours; the truth of all pretences ſhall be throughly examined; the juſt merit of every Perſon, and every cauſe ſhall with a moſt exact ſcrutiny be ſcann'd openly in the face of all the World; to what purpoſe can it be to juggle or baffle for a time; for a few days (perhaps for a few minutes) to abuſe, or to amuſe thoſe about us with crafty diſſimulation or deceit? Is it worth the pains to deviſe plauſible ſhifts, which ſhall inſtantly, we know, be detected and defeated; to bedaub foul deſigns with a fair varniſh, which death will preſently wipe off; to be dark and cloudy in our proceedings, when as a clear day (that will certainly diſpel all darkneſs and ſcatter all miſts) is breaking in upon us; to make vizors for our faces, and cloaks for our actions, whenas we muſt very ſhortly be expoſed, perfectly naked and undiſguiſed, in our true colours, to the general view of Angels and Men? Heaven ſees at preſent what we think and doe, and our conſcience cannot be wholly ignorant or inſenſible; nor can Earth it ſelf be long unacquainted therewith. Is it not much better, and more eaſie (ſince it requires no pains or ſtudy) to act our ſelves, than to accommodate our ſelves to other unbeſeeming and undue parts; to be upright in our intentions, conſiſtent in our diſcourſes, plain in our dealings, following the ſingle and uniform guidance of our reaſon and conſcience, than to ſhuffle and ſhift, wandring after the various uncertain and inconſtant opinions or humours of men? What matter is it, what cloaths we wear, what garb we appear in, during this poſture of travel and ſojourning here; what for the preſent we go for; how men eſteem us, what they think of our actions? St. Paul at 1 Cor. 4. 3. leaſt did not much ſtand upon it; for with me, ſaid he, 'tis a very ſmall thing (ἐλάχιςον, the leaſt thing that can come under conſideration) to be judged of you, or of humane day (that is, of this preſent tranſitory, fallible, reverſible judgment of men.) If we mean well and do righteouſly our conſcience will at preſent ſatisfie us, and the divine (unerring and impartial) ſentence will hereafter acquit us; no unjuſt or uncharitable cenſure ſhall prejudice us; if we entertain baſe deſigns, and deal unrighteouſly; as our conſcience will accuſe and vex us here, ſo God will ſhortly condemn and puniſh us; neither ſhall the moſt favourable conceit of men 1 Cor. 3. 13. ſtand us in ſtead. Every man's work ſhall become manifeſt; for the day ſhall declare it; becauſe it ſhall be revealed by fire; and the fire (that is, a ſevere and ſtrict inquiry) ſhall try every man's work, of what ſort it is. I cannot inſiſt more on this Point; I ſhall onely ſay, that conſidering the brevity and uncertainty of our preſent ſtate, the greateſt ſimplicity may juſtly be deemed the trueſt wiſdom; that who deceives others doth cozen himſelf moſt; that the deepeſt policy (uſed to compaſs, or to conceal bad deſigns) will in the end appear the moſt downright folly.

I might add to the precedent diſcourſes, that Philoſophy it ſelf hath commended this conſideration as a proper and powerful inſtrument of vertue; reckoning the practice thereof a main part of wiſdom; the greateſt proficient therein in common eſteem, Socrates, having defined Philoſophy (or the ſtudy of wiſdom) to be nothing elſe, but (μελέτη θανάτου) the ſtudy of death; intimating alſo (in Plato's Phædon) that this ſtudy, the meditation of death and preparation of his mind to leave this World, had been the conſtant and chief employment of his life. That likewiſe, according to experience, nothing more avails to render the minds of men ſober and well compoſed, than ſuch ſpectacles of Mortality, as do impreſs this conſideration upon them. For whom doth not the ſight of a Coffin or of a Grave gaping to receive a friend perhaps, or an ancient Aquaintance; however a man in nature and ſtate altogether like our ſelves; of the mournful looks and habits, of all the ſad pomps and ſolemnities attending man unto his long home, by minding him of his own frail condition, affect with ſome ſerious, ſome honeſt, ſome wiſe thoughts? And if we be reaſonable men we may every day ſupply the need of ſuch occaſions, by repreſenting to our ſelves the neceſſity of our ſoon returning to the duſt; dreſſing in thought our own Herſes, and celebrating our own Funerals; by living under the continual apprehenſion and ſenſe of our tranſitory and uncertain condition; dying daily, or becoming already dead unto this World. The doing which effectually being the gift of God, and an eſpecial work of his Grace, let us of him humbly implore it, ſaying after the Holy Prophet, Lord, ſo teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wiſedom. Amen.

Τοῦτο ἔχει ἡ τελειότης τοῦ ἤθους τὸ πᾶσαν ἡμέραν ὡς τελευταίαν διεξάγειν. Anton. lib. 7.

SERMON XVI.

The Danger and miſchief of delaying Repentance.

PSAL. CXIX. 60.

I made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments.

THIS Pſalm (no leſs excellent in vertue, than large in bulk) containeth manifold reflexions upon the nature, the properties, the adjuncts and effects of God's Law, many ſprightly ejaculations about it (conceived in different forms of ſpeech; ſome in way of petition, ſome of thanksgiving, ſome of reſolution, ſome of aſſertion or aphoriſm) many uſefull directions, many zealous exhortations to the obſervance of it; the which are not ranged in any ſtrict order, but, (like a variety of fair flowers and wholſome herbs in a wide field) do with a grateful confuſion lie diſperſed, as they freely did ſpring up in the heart, or were ſuggeſted by the devout ſpirit of him, who indited the Pſalm; whence no coherence of ſentences being deſigned, we may conſider any one of them abſolutely or ſingly by it ſelf,

Among them, that which I have picked out for the ſubject of my diſcourſe, implieth an excellent rule of practice, authoriſed by the Pſalmiſt's example; it is propounded in way of devotion or immediate addreſs to God; unto whoſe infallible knowledge his conſcience maketh an appeal concerning his practice; not as boaſting thereof, but as praiſing God for it, unto whoſe gratious inſtruction and ſuccour he frequently doth aſcribe all his performances: But the manner of propounding I ſhall not inſiſt upon; the rule it ſelf is, that ſpeedily, without any procraſtination or delay, we ſhould apply our ſelves to the obſervance of God's Commandments; the practice of which rule it ſhall be my endeavour to recommend and preſs.

It is a common practice of men, that are engaged in bad courſes, which their own conſcience diſcerneth and diſapproveth, to adjourn the reformation of their lives to a farther time, ſo indulging themſelves in the preſent commiſſion of ſin, that yet they would ſeem to purpoſe, and promiſe themſelves hereafter to repent, and take up: Few reſolve to perſiſt finally in an evil way, or deſpair of being one day reclaimed, but immediately and effectually to ſet upon it, many deem unſeaſonable or needleſs; it will, they preſume, be ſoon enough to begin to morrow or next day, a month or a year hence, when they ſhall find more commodious opportunity, or ſhall prove better diſpoſed thereto; in the mean time with Solomon's ſluggard, Yet, ſay they, a little ſleep, a little ſlumber, a little folding of the hands; let us but neglect this duty, let us but ſatisfie this appetite, let us but enjoy this bout of pleaſure; hereafter God willing we mean to be more careful, we hope that we ſhall become more ſober: So like bad debtours: when our conſcience dunneth us, we always mean, we always promiſe to pay; if ſhe will ſtay a while, ſhe ſhall, we tell her, be ſatisfied; or like vain ſpendthrifts, we ſee our eſtate fly, yet preſume that it will hold out, and at length we ſhall reſerve enough for our uſe. Εἰς αὔριον τὰ σπουδαῖα, Let ſerious buſineſs ſtay till the morrow, was a ſaying that coſt dear to him who ſaid it; yet we in our greateſt concerns follow him.

Recognoſce ſingulos, conſidera univerſos, nullius non vita ſpectat in craſtinum; non enim vivunt, ſed victuri ſunt. Sen Ep. 45.

Victuros agimus ſemper, nec vivimus unquam. Manil. 4.

Prov. 6. 10.

Plut. in Pelop.

But how fallacious, how dangerous and how miſchievous this manner of proceeding is; how much better and more adviſable it is, after the example propounded in our Text, ſpeedily to betake our ſelves unto the diſcharge of our debt and duty to God, the following conſiderations will plainly declare.

Non eſt crede mihi ſapientis dicere, vivam. Mart. I. 16.

I. We may conſider, that the obſervance of God's Commandments (an obſervance of them proceeding from an habitual diſpoſition of mind, in a conſtant tenour of practice) is our indiſpenſable duty, our main concernment, our only way to happineſs; the neceſſary condition of our attaining ſalvation; that alone which can procure God's love and favour toward us; that unto which all real bleſſings here, and all bliſs hereafter are inſeparably annexed: Fear God and keep his Commandments, for this is the whole of man; (the whole duty, the whole deſign, the whole perfection ction, the ſum of our wiſdom, and our happineſs.) If thou wilt enter into life, keep the Commandments: The righteous Lord loveth righteouſneſs, his countenance doth behold the upright; God will render to every man according to his works; theſe are Oracles indubitably clear, and infallibly certain; theſe are immoveable terms of juſtice between God and Man, (which never will, never can be relaxed; being grounded on the immutable nature of God, and eternal reaſon of things; if God had not decreed, if he had not ſaid theſe things, they would not aſſuredly be true; for it is a foul contradiction to reaſon, that a Man ever ſhould pleaſe God without obeying him; 'tis a groſs abſurdity in nature, that a Man ſhould be happy without being good; wherefore all the wit in the World cannot deviſe a way, all the authority upon Earth (yea, I dare ſay, even in Heaven it ſelf) cannot eſtabliſh a condition, beſide faithful obſervance of God's Law, that can ſave, or make us happy; from it there can be no valid diſpenſation, without it there can be no effectual abſolution, for it there can be no acceptable commutation; nor in defect thereof will any faith, any profeſſion, any trick or pretence whatever avail, or ſignify any thing; Whatever expedient to ſupply its room ſuperſtition, miſtake, craſt, or preſumption may recommend, we ſhall, relying thereon, be certainly deluded: If therefore we mean to be ſaved (and are we ſo wild as not to mean it?) if we do not renounce felicity (and do we not then renounce our wits?) to become vertuous, to proceed in a courſe of obedience, is a work that neceſſarily muſt be performed; and why then ſhould we not inſtantly undertake it; wherefore do we demur or ſtick at it; how can we at all reſt quiet, while an affair of ſo vaſt importance lieth upon our hands, or until our mind be freed of all uncertainty and ſuſpence about it? Were a probable way ſuggeſted to us of acquiring great wealth, honour or pleaſure, ſhould we not quickly run about it, could we contentedly ſleep, till we had brought the buſineſs to a ſure or hopeleſs iſſue? and why with leſs expedition or urgency ſhould we purſue the certain means of our preſent ſecurity and comfort, of our final ſalvation and happineſs? in doing ſo, are we not ſtrangely inconſiſtent with our ſelves?

Eccl. 12. 13.

Matt. 19. 17.
Pſal. 11. 7.
Prov. 15. 9.
Rom. 2. 6.
Matt. 5. 18.
Luke 16. 17.
Pſal. 119. 15.

Again, diſobedience is the certain road to perdition; that which involveth us in guilt and condemnation, that which provoketh God's wrath and hatred againſt us, that which aſſuredly will throw us into a ſtate of eternal ſorrow and wretchedneſs: The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in God's ſight, he hateth all the workers of iniquity; If ye do not repent, ye ſhall periſh. The wicked ſhall be turned into Hell, and all the people that forget God; The unrighteous ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God; The wicked ſhall go into everlaſting puniſhment, theſe are denunciations no leſs ſure than ſevere, from that mouth, which is never opened in vain; from the execution whereof there can be no ſhelter or refuge; And what wiſe man, what man in his right ſenſes would for one minute ſtand obnoxious to them? Who that any wiſe tendereth his own welfare would move one ſtep forward in ſo perillous and deſtructive a courſe? the farther in which he proceedeth, the more he diſcoſteth from happineſs, the nearer he approacheth to ruine.

Pſal. 5. 5.
Luke 13. 3.
Pſal. 9. 17.
1 Cor. 6. 9.
Matt. 25. 46.
7. 21.

In other caſes common ſenſe prompteth men to proceed otherwiſe; for who, having rendred one his enemy, that far overmatcheth him, and at whoſe mercy he ſtandeth, will not inſtantly ſue to be reconciled? who being ſeiſed by a pernicious diſeaſe, will not haſte to ſeek a cure? who being fallen into the jaws of a terrible danger, will not nimbly leap out thence? and ſuch plainly is our caſe; while we perſiſt in ſin, we live in enmity and defiance with the Almighty, who can at his Pleaſure cruſh us;

we lie under a fatal plague, which, if we do not ſeaſonably repent, will certainly deſtroy us; we incur the moſt dreadful of all hazards, abiding in the confines of death and deſtruction; God frowning at us, guilt holding us, Hell gaping for us: Every Sinner is (according to the Wiſe-man's Prov. 23. 34. expreſſion) as he that lieth down in the midſt of the ſea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a maſt; and he that is in ſuch a caſe, is he not mad or ſenſeleſs, if he will not forthwith labour to ſwim out thence, or make all ſpeed to get down into a ſafer place? can any man with comfort lodge in a condition ſo diſmally ticklish?

2. We may conſider, that in order to our final welfare we have much work to diſpatch, the which requireth as earneſt care and painful induſtry, ſo a competent long time; which, if we do not preſently fall on, may be wanting, and thence our work be left undone, or imperfect: To conquer and correct bad inclinations, to render our ſenſual appetites obſequious to reaſon, to compoſe our paſſions into a right and ſteady order, to cleanſe our ſouls from vanity, from perverſeneſs, from ſloth, from all vitious diſtempers, and in their room to implant firm habits of vertue; to get a clear knowledge of our duty, with a ready diſpoſition to perform it; in fine, to ſeaſon our minds with holy affections, qualifying us for the preſence of God, and converſation with the bleſſed Spirits above; theſe are things that muſt be done, but cannot be done in a trice; it is not dictum Rom. 2. 7. factum, as ſoon done as ſaid; but ὑπομονὴ ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ, a patient continuance in well-doing is needful to atchieve it; for it no time can be redundant, the longeſt life can hardly be ſufficient: Art is long, and life is ſhort, may be an Aphoriſm in Divinity as well as in Phyſick; the art of living well, of preſerving our Soul's health, and curing its diſtempers, requireth no leſs time to compaſs it, than any other Art or Science.

'Ου καθεύδουσιν ἡμῖν χορηγεῖ βοήθειαν ὁ Θεὸς, ἀλλὰ πονουμένοις. Chryſ. ad Eph. λογ. κγ.

Vertue is not a Muſhrome, that ſpringeth up of it ſelf in one Night, when we are aſleep or regard it not: But a delicate Plant, that groweth ſlowly and tenderly, needing much pains to cultivate it, much care to guard it, much time to mature it, in our untoward ſoil, in this World's unkindly weather; happineſs is a thing too pretious to be purchaſed at an eaſie rate, Heaven is too high to be come at without much climbing; the crown of bliſs is a Prize too noble to be won without a long and a tough conflict. Neither is a vice a ſpirit, that will be conjured down by a charm, or with a Preſto driven away; it is not an adverſary, that can be knocked down at a blow, or diſpatched with a ſtab. Whoſoever ſhall pretend at any time eaſily with a celerity, by a kind of Legerdemain, or by any miſterious knack, a Man may be ſettled in vertue, or converted from vice, common experience abundantly will confute him; which ſheweth, that a habit otherwiſe (ſetting miracles aſide) cannot be produced or deſtroyed, than by a conſtant exerciſe of acts ſutable or oppoſite thereto; and that ſuch acts cannot be exerciſed without voiding all impediments and framing all Principles of action (ſuch as temper of body, judgment of mind, influence of cuſtome) to a compliance; that who by temper is peeviſh or cholerick, cannot without maſtering that temper become patient or meek; that who from vain opinions is proud, cannot without conſidering away thoſe opinions prove humble; that who by cuſtome is grown intemperate, cannot without weaning himſelf from that cuſtome come to be ſober; that who from the concurrence of a ſorry nature, fond conceits, mean breeding and ſcurvy uſage is covetous; cannot without draining all thoſe ſources of his fault, be turned into liberal. The change of our mind is one of the greateſt alterations in nature, which cannot cannot be compaſſed in any way, or within any time we pleaſe; but it muſt proceed on leiſurely and regularly, in ſuch order, by ſuch ſteps, as the nature of things doth permit; it muſt be wrought by a reſolute and laborious perſeverance; by a watchful application of mind in voiding Prejudices, in waiting for advantages, in attending to all we do; by forcible wreſting our nature from its bent, and ſwimming againſt the current of impetuous deſires; by a patient diſentangling our ſelves from practices moſt agreeable and familiar to us; by a wary fencing with temptations, by long ſtruggling with manifold oppoſitions and difficulties; whence the Holy Scripture termeth our practice a warfare, wherein we are to fight many a bloody battel with moſt redoubtable foes; a combat, which muſt be managed with our beſt skill, and utmoſt might; a race, which we muſt paſs through with inceſſant activity and ſwiftneſs.

O quam iſtud parum putant, quibus tam facile videtur! Quint. 12. 1.

If therefore we mean to be good or to be happy, it behoveth us to loſe no time; to be preſently up at our great task; to ſnatch all occaſions, to embrace all means incident of reforming our hearts and lives. As thoſe, who have a long journey to go, do take care to ſet out early and in their way make good ſpeed, leſt the night overtake them before they reach their home; ſo it being a great way from hence to Heaven, ſeeing we muſt paſs over ſo many obſtacles, through ſo many Paths of duty before we arrive thither, it is expedient to ſet forward as ſoon as can be, and to proceed with all expedition; the longer we ſtay, the more time we ſhall need, and the leſs we ſhall have.

Ἀλλ' ἄγε νῦν ἴομεν, δὴ γὰρ μέμβλωκε μάλιστα Ἦμαρ, ἀτὰρ τάχα τοι ποτὶ ἕσπερα ῥίγιον ἔσται. Hom. Od. ρ.

3. We may conſider, that no future time which we can fix upon will be more convenient than the preſent is for our reformation. Let us pitch on what time we pleaſe, we ſhall be as unwilling and unfit to begin as we are now; we ſhall find in our ſelves the ſame indiſpoſitions, the ſame averſeneſs, or the ſame liſtleſneſs toward it as now: There will occur the like hardſhips to deter us, and the like Pleaſures to allure us from our duty; objects will then be as preſent and will ſtrike as ſmartly upon our ſenſes; the caſe will appear juſt the ſame, and the ſame Pretences for delay will obtrude themſelves; ſo that we ſhall be as apt then as now to prorogue the buſineſs. We ſhall ſay then, to morrow I will mend; and when that morrow cometh, it will be ſtill to morrow, and ſo the morrow will prove endleſs. If like the ſimple Ruſtick, (who ſtay'd by the River ſide waiting till it had done running, that ſo he might paſs dry-foot over the chanel) we do conceit, that the ſources of ſin (bad inclinations within, and ſtrong temptations abroad) will of themſelves be ſpent or fail, we ſhall find our ſelves deluded. If ever we come to take up, we muſt have a beginning with ſome difficulty and trouble; we muſt courageouſly break through the preſent with all its enchantments; we muſt undauntedly plunge into the cold ſtream; we muſt rouſe our ſelves from our bed of ſloth; we muſt ſhake off that brutiſh improvidence which detaineth us, and why ſhould we not eſſay it now? there is the ſame reaſon now that ever we can have; yea, far more reaſon now; for if that we now begin, hereafter at any determinate time, ſome of the work will be done, what remaineth will be ſhorter and eaſier to us. Nay farther, Cras hoc fiet; idem cras fiet, &c.

Perſ. Sat. 5.

Qui non eſt hodie, cras minus aptus erit.
Ovid. de Rom. I. Epiſt. 4. 12.

——qui recte vivendi prorogat horam,
Ruſticus expectat dum defluat amnis, at ille
Labitur, & labetur in omne volubilis ævum.
Hor. Ep. I. 2.

Εἰ μὲν λυσιτελὴς ἡ ὑπέρθεσις ἐστιν, ἡ παντελὴς ἀπόστασις αὐτῆς ἔτι λυσιτελεστέρα. Epict. 4. 12.

For the ſame reaſon we put it off, we ſhould put it away. If it be good at all, it is good at preſent.

4. We

Παρὰ τὸ σήμερον ἁμαρτηθὲν εἰς τἄλλα χεῖρον ἀνάγκη σοι τὰ πράγματα ἔχειν Epict. 4. 12.

4. We may conſider, that the more we defer, the more difficult and painful our work muſt needs prove; every day will both enlarge our task, and diminiſh our ability to perform it: Sin is never at a ſtay; if we do not retreat from it, we ſhall advance in it; and the farther on we go, the more we have to come back; every ſtep we take forward, (even before we can return hither, into the ſtate wherein we are at preſent) muſt be repeated; all the web we ſpin muſt be unravelled; we muſt vomit up all we take in; which to do we ſhall find very tedious and grievous.

Falſis opinionibus tanto quiſque inſeritur, quanto magis in eis, familiariuſque volutatur. Aug. Ep. 117.

Vice as it groweth in age, ſo it improveth in ſtature and ſtrength; from a puny Child it ſoon waxeth a luſty Stripling, then riſeth to be a ſturdy Man, and after a-while becometh a maſſy Giant, whom we ſhall ſcarce dare to encounter, whom we ſhall be very hardly able to vanquiſh; eſpecially ſeeing that as it groweth taller and ſtouter, ſo we ſhall dwindle and prove more impotent; for it feedeth upon our vitals, and thriveth by our decay; it waxeth mighty by ſtripping us of our beſt forces; by enfeebling our reaſon, by perverting our will, by corrupting our temper, by debaſing our courage, by ſeducing all our appetites and paſſions to a treacherous compliance with it ſelf; every day our mind groweth more blind, our will more reſty, our ſpirit more faint, our appetites more fierce, our paſſions more headſtrong and untameable: The power and empire of ſin do ſtrangely by degrees encroach, and continually get ground upon us, till it hath quite ſubdued and enthralled us; firſt we learn to bear it, then we come to like it, by and by we contract a friendſhip with it, then we dote upon it, at laſt we become enſlaved to it in a bondage, which we ſhall hardly be able, or willing to ſhake off; when not onely our necks are fitted to the yoke, our hands are manacled, and our feet ſhackled thereby; but our heads and hearts do conſpire in a baſe ſubmiſſion thereto: When vice hath made ſuch impreſſion on us, when this pernicious weed hath taken ſo deep root in our mind, will and affection, it will demand an extremely toilſome labour to extirpate it.

Indeed by continuance in ſin, the chief means (afforded by nature, or by grace) of reſtraining, or reducing us from it, are either cut off, or enervated and rendred ineffectual.

Μέγιστον πρὸς ἀρετὴν βοήθημα ἡ αἰδώς, Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

——nam quis
Peccandi finem poſuit ſibi, quando recepit
Ejectum ſemel attrita de fronte ruborem
Juv. Sat. 18.

Ezek. 2. 4. 3. 7.
Iſa. 48. 4.
Jer. 5. 3.
Prov. 21. 29.

Phil. 3. 19.

Natural modeſty, while it laſteth, is a curb from doing ill; Men in their firſt deflexions from vertue are baſhful and ſhy; out of regard to other Mens opinion, and tenderneſs of their own honour they are afraid, or aſhamed to tranſgreſs plain rules of duty; but in proceſs this diſpoſition weareth out; by little and little they arrive to that character of the degenerate Jews, whom the Prophets call impudent children, having a brow of braſs, and faces harder than a rock; ſo that they commit ſin with open face, and in broad day, without any mask, without a bluſh; they deſpiſe their own reputation, and defy all cenſure of others; they outface and outbrave the World, till at length with prodigious inſolence they come to boaſt of wickedneſs, and glory in their ſhame, as an inſtance of high courage, and ſpecial gallantry.

Ψυχὴ ἅπαξ ἁμαρτίας γευσαμένη, καὶ ἀναλγήτως διατεθεῖσα πολλὴν παρέχει τῷ νοσήματι τὴν προσθήκην, &c. Chryſ. Tom. Orat. 64.

Conſcience is a check to beginners in ſin, reclaiming them from it, and rating them for it; but this in long ſtanders becometh uſeleſs, either failing to diſcharge its office, or aſſaying it to no purpoſe, having often been ſlighted, it will be weary of chiding; or if it be not wholly dumb, we ſhall be deaf to its reproof: As thoſe who live by cataracts or downfalls of Water are by continual noiſe ſo deafened as not to hear or mind it, ſo ſhall we in time grow ſenſeleſs, not regarding the loudeſt Peals and Rattlings of our conſcience.

The Heart of a raw Novice in impiety is ſomewhat tender and ſoft, ſo that remorſe can pierce and ſting it; his neck is yeilding and ſenſible, ſo that the yoke of ſin doth gall it; but in ſtout Proficients the heart becometh hard and ſtony, the neck ſtiff and brawny; (an iron ſinew, as the Prophet termeth it) ſo that they do not feel or reſent any thing; but are like thoſe of whom St. Paul ſpeaketh; οἵτινες ἀπηλγηκότες, who being paſt feeling all ſorrow or ſmart, have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs.

(Ezek. 2. 4. 3. 7. Neh. 9. 29. 2 Chron. 36. 13. Dan. 5. 20.) Iſa. 48. 4. Quo quis pejus ſe habet, minus ſentit. Sen. Ep. 53. Eph. 4. 19.

When firſt we nibble at the Bait, or enter into bad courſes, our reaſon doth conteſt and remonſtrate againſt it, faithfully repreſenting to us the folly, the uglineſs, the baſeneſs, the manifold ill conſequences of ſinning; but that by continuance is muffled ſo as not to diſcern, or muzled ſo as not to declare; yea, often is ſo debauched as to excuſe, to avow and maintain, yea, to applaud and extol our miſcarriages.

For a time a Man retaineth ſome courage, and a hope that he may repent; but progreſs in ſin diſpiriteth and caſteth into deſpair; whether God be placable, whether himſelf be corrigible; an apprehenſion concerning the length of the way, or the difficulty of the work diſcourageth, and deſpondency rendreth him heartleſs and careleſs to attempt it. There is no Man that hath heard of God, who hath not at firſt ſome dread of offending him, and ſome diſſatisfaction in tranſgreſſing his will; it appearing to his mind (not yet utterly blinded and depraved) a deſperate thing to brave his irreſiſtible Power, an abſurd thing to thwart his infallible Wiſdom, a deteſtable thing to abuſe his immenſe Goodneſs; but obſtinacy in ſin doth quaſh this conſcientious awe; ſo that at length God is not in all his thoughts, the fear of God is not before his eyes; The Wrath of the Almighty ſeemeth a Bugbear, the fierceſt menaces of Religion ſound but as Rattles to him.

Pſal. 10. 4. 36. 1.

As for the gentle Whiſpers and Touches of Divine Grace, the monitory Diſpenſations of Providence, the good advices and wholſome reproofs of Friends, with the like means of reclaiming ſinners; theſe to Perſons ſettled on their lees, or fixed in bad cuſtome, are but as guſts of Wind bruſhing an old Oak, or as Waves daſhing on a Rock, without at all ſhaking or ſtirring it.

Jer. 48. 11. Zeph. 1. 12.

Now when any Perſon is come to this paſs, it muſt be hugely difficult to reduce him; to retrieve a defloured Modeſty, to quicken a jaded Conſcience, to ſupple a callous Heart, to reſettle a baffled Reaſon, to rear a dejected Courage, to recover a Soul miſerably benummed and broken, to its former vigour and integrity, can be no eaſie matter.

The diſeaſes of our Soul no leſs than thoſe of our Body, when once they are inveterate, they are become more incurable; the longer we forbear to apply due remedy, the more hard their cure will prove; if we let them proceed far, we muſt e're we can be rid of them, undergo a courſe of Phyſick very tedious and offenſive to us; many a rough Purge, many a ſore Phlebotomy, many an irkſome ſweat we muſt endure. Yea farther,

——fruſtra medicina paratur,
Cum mala per longas invaluere moras.
Ovid.

Ῥᾷον δ' ἀπ' ἀρχῆς μὴ ἐνδῦναι κακίᾳ, καὶ προσπῦσαν διαφυγεῖν, ἢ προβαίνουσαν ἀνακόψαι. Greg. Naz. Orat. 26.

5. We may conſider, that by delaying to amend, to do it may become quite impoſſible; it may be ſo in the nature of the thing, it may be ſo by the will of God: The thing may become naturally impoſſible; for vice

by Ἐπειδὰν εἰς φρενῖτιν ἐκπεσόντες λακτίζωσι ϗ δάκνωσι τοὺς βουλομένους ἀπαλλάξαι τῆς ἀῤῥωστίας αὐτοὺς, τότε νοσοῦσιν ἀνίατα. Chryſ. in Babyl. Orat. 2.

Prov. 6. 9.

Eph. 2. 1. Apoc. 3. 1. 1 Tim. 5. 6.

Frangas citius quam corrigas quæ in pravum induruerunt. Quintil. 1. 3.

Jer. 13. 23.

by cuſtom may paſs into nature, and prove ſo congeneal, as if it were born with us; ſo that we ſhall propend to it as a ſtone falleth down, or as a ſpark flieth upward: By ſoaking in Voluptuouſneſs we may be ſo transformed into Brutes, by ſleeping in malice ſo converted into Fiends, that we neceſſarily ſhall act like creatures of that kind, into which we are degenerated; and then in no-wiſe without a downright Miracle are we capable of being reformed. How long, ſaith Solomon, wilt thou ſleep, O Sluggard, when wilt thou ariſe out of thy ſleep? We may be ſo often called on, and 'tis not eaſie to awaken us, when we are got into a ſpiritual ſlumber; but when we are, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, ſo that all breath of holy affection is ſtopt, and no ſpiritual pulſe from our heart doth appear; that all ſenſe of duty is loſt, all appetite to good doth fail, no ſtrength or activity to move in a good courſe doth exert it ſelf, that our good complexion is diſſolved, and all our finer ſpirits are diſſipated; that our mind is quite crazed, and all its Powers are ſhattered or ſpoiled, when thus, I ſay, we are ſpiritually dead, how can we raiſe our ſelves, what beneath omnipotency can effect it? as a ſtick, when once 'tis dry and ſtiff, you may break it, but you can never bend it into a ſtreighter poſture, ſo doth the Man become incorrigible, who is ſettled and ſtiffned in vice. The ſtain of habitual ſin may ſink in ſo deep, and ſo throughly tincture all our Soul, that we may be like thoſe People, of whom the Prophet ſaith, Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the Leopard his ſpots? then may ye do, good, that are accuſtomed to doe evil: Such an impoſſibility may ariſe from nature; one greater and more inſuperable may come from God.

John. 3. 8.

Τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβρίσας. Heb. 10. 29.

To an effectual repentance the ſuccour of divine grace is neceſſary; but that is arbitrarily diſpenſed; the ſpirit bloweth where it liſteth, yet it liſteth wiſely, with regard both to the paſt behaviour, and preſent capacities of Men; ſo that to ſuch who have abuſed it, and to ſuch who will not treat it well, it ſhall not be imparted: And can we be well aſſured, can we reaſonably hope, that after we by our preſumptuous delays have put off God and dallied with his grace; after that he long in vain hath waited to be gracious; after that he hath endured ſo many neglects, and ſo many repulſes from us; after that we frequently have ſlighted his open invitations, and ſmothered his kindly motions in us; in ſhort, after we ſo unworthily have miſuſed his goodneſs and patience, that he farther will vouchſafe his grace to us? when we have forfeited it, when we have rejected it, when we have ſpurned and driven it away, can we hope to recover it?

Ἀδύνατον. Heb. 6. 4.

Luke 19. 42, 44. 2 Cor. 6. 2. Heb. 3. 13. John. 9. 4. Luke 19. 42. Iſa. 59. 10.

Jer. 15. 6. Mal. 2. 17. Iſ. 1. 14. 7. 13. Rom. 1. 24, 26, 28. Pſal. 81. 12. Iſa. 63. 17.

There is a time, a ſeaſon, a day allotted to us; our day it is termed, a day of ſalvation, the ſeaſon of our viſitation, an acceptable time; wherein God freely doth exhibit grace, and preſenteth his mercy to us; if we let this day ſlip, the night cometh when no man can work; when the things belonging to our peace will be hidden from our eyes; when (as the Prophet expreſſeth it) we ſhall grope for the wall like the blind, and ſtumble at noon day as in the night, and be in deſolate places as dead men; after that day is ſpent, and that comfortable light is ſet, a diſmal night of darkneſs, of cold, of diſconſolateneſs will ſucceed; when God being weary of bearing with Men doth utterly deſert them, and delivereth them over to a reprobate mind; when ſubtracting his gratious direction and aſſiſtence, he giveth them over to their own hearts luſts, and to walk in their own counſels; when they are brought to complain with thoſe in the Prophet, O Lord, why haſt thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our heart from thy fear? when like Pharaoh they ſurvive only as objects of God's juſtice, or occaſions to glorify his power; when like Eſau, they cannot find a place of repentance, although they ſeek it carefully with tears; when as to the fooliſh loitering Virgins, the door of mercy is ſhut upon them; when the maſter of the houſe doth riſe and ſhut the door, &c. when that menace of divine wiſedom cometh to be executed; They ſhall call upon me, but I will not anſwer; they ſhall ſeek me early, but they ſhall not find me; for that they hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the Lord: And if neglecting our ſeaſon, and preſent means, we once fall into this ſtate, then is our caſe moſt deplorable; we are dead Men irreverſibly doomed, and onely for a few moments reprieved from the ſtroak of final vengeance; we are veſſels of wrath fitted (or made up) for deſtruction; by a fatal blindneſs and obduration ſealed up to ruine; we are like the terra damnata, that earth (in the Apoſtle) which drinking up the rain, that cometh oft upon it, and bearing thorns and briers, is rejected, and is nigh unto curſing, and whoſe end is to be burned. Wherefore according to the advice of the Prophet, Seek ye the Lord, when he may be found, call ye upon him, while he is near.

Rom. 9. 17.
Heb. 13. 17.
Matt. 25. 10.
Luke 13. 25.
Prov. 1. 28.
Rom. 9. 22.
Κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν.
Heb. 6. 7, 8.
Iſa. 55. 6.

It is true, that God is ever ready upon our true converſion to receive us into favour, that his arms are always open to embrace a ſincere Penitent; that he hath declared, whenever a wicked man turneth from his wickedneſs, and doeth that which is right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive; that if we do waſh our ſelves, make us clean, put away the evil of our doings, and ceaſe to do evil, then although our ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be white as ſnow, though they be like crimſon they ſhall be as wool; that if we rend our hearts, and turn unto the Lord, he is gratious and merciful, and will repent of the evil; that God is good and ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy unto all that call upon him; that whenever a prodigal ſon with humble confeſſion and hearty contrition for his ſin doth ariſe and go to his father, he will embrace him tenderly, and entertain him kindly; that even a profane Apoſtate, and a bloody Oppreſſour (as Manaſſes) a lewd Strumpet (as Magdalene) a notable Thief (as he upon the Croſs) a timorous Renouncer (as St. Peter) a furious Perſecutor (as St. Paul) a ſtupid Idolater (as all the Heathen World, when the Goſpel came to them, was) the moſt heinous Sinner that ever hath been, or can be imagined to be, if he be diſpoſed to repent, is capable of mercy; thoſe declarations and promiſes are infallibly true, thoſe inſtances peremptorily do evince, that repentance is never ſuperannuated; that if we can turn at all, we ſhall not turn too late; that pænitentia nunquam ſera, modo ſeria, is an irrefragable rule; yet nevertheleſs delay is very unſafe; for what aſſurance can we have, that God hereafter will enable us to perform thoſe conditions of bewailing our ſins, and forſaking them? have we not cauſe rather to fear that he will chaſtiſe our preſumption by with-holding his Grace? for although God faileth not to yeild competent aids to Perſons who have not deſpiſed his goodneſs and long-ſuffering that leadeth them to repentance; yet he that wilfully or wantonly loitereth away the time, and ſquandereth the means allowed him; who refuſeth to come when God calleth, yea woeth and courteth him to repentance, how can he pretend to find ſuch favour?

Ezek. 18. 27.
Iſa. 1. 16.
Joel 2. 13.
Pſal. 86. 5.
Luke 15. 18.
Vid. Chryſ. ad Theod. 2. Judas (ſaith he there) was capable of pardon.
Rom. 2. 4.

We might add, that ſuppoſing God in ſuperabundance of mercy might be preſumed never to with-hold his grace; yet ſeeing his grace doth not work by irreſiſtible compulſion; ſeeing the worſe qualified we are, the more apt we ſhall be to croſs and defeat its operation; ſeeing that we cannot hope that hereafter we ſhall be more fit than now to comply with it: Yea ſeeing we may be ſure, that after our hearts are hardned by perſeverance in ſin, we ſhall be more indiſpoſed thereto; we by delay of repentance do not only venture the forfeiture of divine grace, but the danger of abuſing it, which heinouſly will aggravate our guilt, and hugely augment our puniſhment.

We ſhould do well therefore moſt ſeriouſly to regard the Apoſtle's admonition; Exhort one another to day, while it is called to day, leſt any of you be hardened by the deceitfulneſs of ſin: Now that we find our ſelves invited to repent, now that we apprehend ſo much reaſon for it; now that we feel our hearts ſomewhat enclined thereto; now that we have time in our hands, and are not barr'd from hopes of mercy; now that it is not extremely difficult, or not abſolutely impoſſible, let us in God's name lay hold on the occaſion, let us ſpeedily and earneſtly ſet upon the work. Farther yet,

Heb. 3. 13.

6. We ſhould conſider, that we are mortal and frail, and thence any deſigns of future reformation may be clipt off, or intercepted by death; which is always creeping toward us, and may for all we can tell be very near at hand. You ſay you will repent to morrow; but are you ſure you ſhall have a morrow to repent in? have you an hour in your hand, or one minute at your diſpoſal? have you a leaſe to ſhew for any term of life; can you claim or reckon upon the leaſt portion of time without his leave, who beſtoweth life, and dealeth out time, and ordereth all things as he pleaſeth? Can you any wiſe deſcry the juſt meaſure of your days, or the bounds of your appointed time without a ſpecial revelation from him, in whoſe hands is your breath; and with whom alone the number of your months is regiſtred? Boaſt not thy ſelf of to morrow, for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth, ſaith the Wiſe-man: boaſt not of it, that is, do not pretend it to be at thy diſpoſal, preſume not upon any thing that may befal therein; for whilſt thou preſumeſt thereon, may it not be ſaid unto thee, as to the rich Projectour in the Goſpel, * Thou fool, this night ſhall thy ſoul be required of thee. Doth not, ſecluding hidden decrees, every Man's life hang upon a thread very ſlender and frail? is it not ſubject to many diſeaſes lurking within, and to a thouſand accidents flying about us? how many, that might have promiſed themſelves as fair ſcope as we can, have been unexpectedly ſnapt away? How many have been cropt in the flower of their age and vigour of their ſtrength? Doth not every day preſent experiments of ſudden death? Do we not continually ſee that obſervation of the Preacher verified, Man knoweth not his time; as the fiſhes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds are caught in the ſnare, ſo are the ſons of men ſnared in an evil time, when it cometh ſuddenly upon them? Old men are ready to drop of themſelves, and young men are eaſily bruſhed or ſhaken down; the former viſibly ſtand upon the brink of Eternity, the latter walk upon a bottomleſs Quag, into which unawares they may ſlump; who then can anywiſe be ſecure?

Qui pœnitenti veniam ſpoſpondit, peccanti craſtinum diem non promiſit. Greg. in Evang. Hom. IX.

Job 12. 10.
14. 5. 7. 1.
Pſal. 39. 4.
90. 12.
Dan. 5. 23.
Prov. 27. 1.
Οὐκ οἶδας τί τέξεται ἡ ἐπιοῦσα· μὴ ἐπαγγέλλου τὰ μὴ σά. Baſ. M. exh. ad Bapt.
* Luke 12. 10.

Eccles 9. 12.

Τί γὰρ οἶδας ἄνθρωπε ἁμαρτήσας, εἰ ἡμέρας ζήσεις ἐν τῷδε τῷ βίῳ, ἵνα καὶ μετανοήσης, &c.

Ὅτι ἄδηλος ἡ ἔξοδός σου ἐκ τοῦ βίου ὑπάρχει, καὶ ἐν ἁμαρτίᾳ τελευτήσαντι μετάνοια οὐκ ἔσται, &c. Conſt. Ap. 2. 13.

We are all therefore highly concerned to uſe our life, while we have it; to catch the firſt opportunity, leſt all opportunity forſake us; to cut off our ſinning, leſt our ſelves be cut off before it: And that the rather, becauſe by laviſhing, or miſemploying our preſent time, we may loſe the future, provoking God to bereave us of it; for as prolongation of time is a reward of Piety; as to obſervance of the Commandments it is promiſed, Length of days, and long life, and peace ſhall be added unto thee; ſo being immaturely ſnatched hence is the puniſhment awarded to impious practice; ſo it is threatned that Evil men ſhall be cut off; Pſal. 37. 9.

Prov. 3. 2.

that bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out half their days; that God will Pſal. 55. 23.
wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy ſcalp of ſuch an one as goeth on Pſal. 68. 21.
ſtill in his wickedneſs: the very being unmindful of their duty is the cauſe, why men are thus ſurpriſed; for, If, ſaith God, thou doſt not watch, I Rev. 3. 3.
ſhall come upon thee as a thief, and thou ſhalt not know when I come upon thee. 16. 5.
And If (ſaith our Lord) that ſervant doth ſay in his heart, my Lord delay- eth his coming, &c. The Lord of that ſervant will come in a day, when he look- Luke 12. 45.
eth not for him, &c. 46.

If then it be certain, that we muſt render a ſtrict accompt of all our doings here; if by reaſon of our frail nature and ſlippery ſtate, it be uncertain when we ſhall be ſummoned thereto; if our negligence may abridge and accelerate the term, is it not very reaſonable to obſerve thoſe advices of our Lord; Watch, for ye do not know the day, nor the hour, when Matt. 25. 13.
the ſon of man cometh; Take heed to your ſelves, leſt at any time your heart be 24. 42.
overcharged with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, and cares of this life, and ſo Mark 13. 33.
that day come upon you unawares. Let your loins be girded about, and your Luke 12. 15, lamps burning, and ye your ſelves like men, that wait for your Lord: And to 35.
take the counſel of the Wiſe-man, Make no tarrying to turn unto the Lord, Ecclus 5. 7.
and put not off from day to day; for ſuddenly ſhall the wrath of the Lord come forth, and in thy ſecurity ſhalt thou be deſtroyed, and periſh in the day of vengeance.

Theſe conſiderations plainly do ſhew how very fooliſh, how extremely dangerous and deſtructive the procraſtinating our reformation of life is: there are ſome others of good moment, which we ſhall reſerve.

SERMON XVII.

The Danger and miſchief of delaying Repentance.

PSAL. CXIX. 60.

I made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments.

I Proceed to the Conſiderations which yet remain to be ſpoken to.

1. We may conſider the cauſes of delay in this caſe (as in all caſes of moment) to be bad and unworthy of a Man: What can they be but either ſtupidity, that we do not apprehend the importance of the affair; or improvidence that we do not attend to the danger of perſiſting in ſin; or negligence that we do not mind our concernments; or ſloth that Ἀργίας πρόφασις ἡ ἀναβολή, Simpl.

Animal hoc providum, ſagax, Cic. de leg. 1.

Cic. de offic. 1.

keepeth us from rowſing and beſtirring our ſelves in purſuance of what appeareth expedient; or faint-heartedneſs and cowardice, that we dare not attempt to croſs our appetite, or our fancy? all which diſpoſitions are very baſe and ſhameful: It is the prerogative of humane nature to be ſagacious in eſtimating the worth, and provident in deſcrying the conſequences of things; whereas other creatures, by impulſe of ſence, do onely fix their regard on preſent appearances; which peculiar excellency by ſtupidity and improvidence we forfeit, degenerating into brutes; and negligence of that, which we diſcern mainly to concern us is a quality ſomewhat beneath thoſe, depreſſing us below beaſts, which cannot be charged with ſuch a fault; ſloth is no leſs deſpicable, rendring a man fit for nothing; nor is there any thing commonly more reproachful than want of courage: ſo bad are the cauſes of delay.

Μηδὲν ἀναβαλλόμενος. Succeſſus urgere ſuos, inſtare, &c. Luc. 1.

Pleriſque in rebus tarditas & procraſtinatio odioſa eſt. Cic. Philip. 6.

Αἰεὶ δ' ἀμβολιεργὸς ἀνὴρ ἄτῃσι παλαίει. Heſ.

Dum deliberamus quando incipiendum eſt, incipere jam ſerum eſt. Quint. 12.7.

2. And the effects are no leſs unhappy, being diſappointment, damage, trouble and ſorrow: As expedition (catching advantages and opportunities, keeping the ſpirit up in its heat and vigour, making forcible impreſſions where-ever it lighteth, driving on the current of ſucceſs) doth ſubdue buſineſs, and atchieve great exploits (as by practiſing his Motto, to defer nothing, Alexander did accompliſh thoſe mighty feats which make ſuch a clatter in ſtory; and Cæſar more by the rapid quickneſs and forwardneſs of undertaking, than by the greatneſs of courage, and skilfulneſs of conduct, did work out thoſe enterpriſes, which purchaſed to his Name ſo much glory and renown) ſo delay and ſlowneſs do ſpoil all buſineſs, do keep off ſucceſs at diſtance from us, thereby opportunity is loſt, and advantages ſlip away; our courage doth flag, and our ſpirit languiſheth; our endeavours ſtrike faintly, and are eaſily repelled; whence diſappointment neceſſarily doth ſpring, attended with vexation.

Dimidium facti qui cœpit habet. Hor. Ep. 1. 2.

Μόνον ἀρχὴν ἐπιθεὶς τῷ πράγματι, &c. Chryſ. Tom.6. Orat.p. 68.

Τὸ δυσχερὲς καὶ δυσκατόρθωτον τοῦτό ἐστι, τὸ δυνηθῆναι ἐπιβῆναι τῆς εἰσόδου καὶ τῶν προθύρων ἅψασθαι τῆς μετανοίας. Ib. p. 79.

Honeſtas, quæ principio anxia habetur, ubi contigerit, voluptati luxuriæque habetur. Vict. in Sept. Sev.

3. Again, we may conſider, that to ſet upon our duty is a great ſtep toward the performance of it; if we can reſolve well, and a little puſh forward, we are in a fair way to diſpatch; to begin (they ſay) is to have half done; to ſet out, is a good part of the journey; to riſe betimes, is oftner harder than to doe all the day's work; entring the Town, is almoſt the ſame with taking it; it is ſo in all buſineſs, it is chiefly ſo in moral practice: For if we can find in our hearts to take our leave of ſin, if we can diſengage our ſelves from the witcheries of preſent allurement; if we can but get over the threſhold, of vertuous converſation, we ſhall find the reſt beyond expectation ſmooth and expedite; we ſhall diſcover ſuch beauty in vertue, we ſhall taſt ſo much ſweetneſs in obedience as greatly will encourage us to proceed therein.

Eph. 5. 16.
Col. 4. 5.

4. Again, we may conſider, that our time it ſelf is a gift, or a talent committed to us, for the improvement whereof we are reſponſible no leſs than for our Wealth, our Power, our Credit, our Parts, and other ſuch advantages, wherewith for the ſerving of God, and furthering our own ſalvation we are inſtruſted: To redeem the time is a Precept; and of all Precepts the moſt neceſſary to be obſerved, for that without redeeming (that is embracing and well employing) time we can do nothing well; no good action can be performed, no good reward can be procured by us: Well may we be adviſed to take our beſt care in husbanding it, ſeeing juſtly of all things it may be reckoned moſt pretious; its price being ineſtimable, and its loſs irreparable; for all the World cannot purchaſe one Moment of it more than is allowed us, neither can it, when once gone, by any means be recovered: So much indeed as we ſave thereof, ſo much we preſerve of our ſelves; and ſo far as we loſe it, ſo far in effect we ſlay our ſelves, or deprive our ſelves of life; yea by miſpending it we do worſe than ſo; for a dead ſleep, or a ceſſation from being, is not ſo bad as doing ill; all that while we live backward, or decline toward a ſtate much worſe than annihilation it ſelf. Farther Πολυτελέστατον ἀνάλωμα.

5. Conſider, that of all time the preſent is ever the beſt for the purpoſe of amending our life: It is the onely ſure time, that which we have in our hands, and may call our own; whereas the paſt time is irrevocably gone from us; and the future may never come to us: It is abſolutely (reckoning from our becoming ſenſible of things, and accomptable for our actions) the beſt, as to our capacity of improving it;

Omnia quæ ventura ſunt in incerto jacent, protinus vive. Sen. de vit. brev. 9.

Optima quaque dies miſeris mortalibus ævi Prima fugit.

Verg. Georg. 3.

Our beſt days do firſt paſs away, was truly ſaid; the nearer to its ſource our life is, the purer it is from ſtain, the freer from clogs, the more ſuſceptive of good impreſſions, the more vivid and brisk in its activity; the farther we go on, eſpecially in a bad courſe, the nearer we verge to the dregs of our life; the more dry, the more ſtiff, the more ſluggiſh we grow, delay therefore doth ever ſteal away the flower of our age, leaving us the bran and refuſe thereof. Again,

6. If at any time we do reflect upon the time that hath already ſlipped away unprofitably from us, it will ſeem more than enough, and (if we conſider well) it will be grievous to us to loſe more; the morrow will ſeem too late to commence a good life; ἀρκετὸς ὁ παρεληλυθὼς χρόνος, The time paſt of our life (ſaith St. Peter) may ſuffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, or to have continued in ill courſes; more indeed it might than ſuffice; it ſhould be abundantly too much to have imbezilled ſo large a portion of our pretious and irreparable time: After we have ſlept in neglect of our duty, ὥρα ἤδη ἐγερθῆναι, it is (as St. Paul ſaith) now high time to awake, unto a vigilant obſervance thereof: this we ſhall the rather doe, if we conſider, that Sera nimis vita eſt craſtina, vive hodie. Matt. 1. 16.

1 Pet. 4. 3.

Rom. 13. 11.

7. For ill living now we ſhall come hereafter to be ſorry, if not with a wholſome contrition, yet with a painful regret; we ſhall certainly one day repent, if not of our ſin, yet of our ſinning; if not ſo as to correct for the future, yet ſo as to condemn our ſelves for what is paſt: the conſideration of our having ſacrilegiouſly robb'd our Maker of the time due to his ſervice; of our having injuriouſly defrauded our ſouls of the opportunities granted to ſecure their welfare; of our having profuſely caſt away our moſt pretious hours of life upon vanity and folly, will ſometime twitch us ſorely. There is no man who doth not with a ſorrowful eye review an ill-paſt life; who would not gladly recal his miſpent time; O mihi præteritos! O that God would reſtore my paſt years to me, is every ſuch Man's Prayer, although it never was heard, never could be granted unto any. And what is more inconſiſtent with wiſdom, than to engage our ſelves upon making ſuch ineffectual and fruitleſs wiſhes? What is more diſagreeable to reaſon, than to do that, for which we muſt be forced to confeſs and call our ſelves fools? What Man of ſenſe for a flaſh of tranſitory Pleaſure, for a puff of vain repute, for a few ſcraps of dirty Pelf would plunge himſelf into ſuch a gulf of anguiſh?

Ille ſapit quiſquis, Poſthume, vixit heri. Mart. 5. 60.

Ampliat ætatis ſpatium ſibi vir bonus, hoc eſt, Vivere bis, vita poſſe priore frui. Mart. 10. 23.

8. On the contrary, if laying hold on occaſion, we ſet our ſelves to do well, reflexion thereon will yield great ſatisfaction and pleaſure to us; we ſhall be glad that we have done, and that our task is over; we ſhall enjoy our former life; Our time which is ſo paſt will not yet be loſt unto us; but rather it will be moſt ſecurely ours, laid up beyond the reach of danger, in the repoſitory of a good conſcience.

Rom. 2.

Quam magna deliquimus, tam granditer defleamus, &c. Cypr. de Lapſ. Or. 5.

9. Again, all our time of continuance in ſin we do treaſure up wrath, or accumulate guilt; and the larger our guilt is, the ſorer muſt be our repentance; the more bitter the ſorrow, the more low the humbling, the more earneſt the deprecation requiſite to obtain pardon: the broader and deeper the ſtain is, the more waſhing is needful to get it out; if we ſin much and long, we muſt grieve anſwerably, or we ſhall be no fit objects of mercy.

Pœna poteſt demi, culpa perennis erit. Ovid.

Ἡ συγχώρησις ἐῤῥύσατο τῶν ἁμαρτημάτων παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἡ μνήμη τῶν συγκεχωρημένων ἁμαρτημάτων οὐκ ἠφανίζετο παρὰ τοῦ Παύλου. Chryſ. Tom. 8. p. 97.

Rom. 6. 21.

10. And whenever the ſin is pardoned, yet indelible marks and monuments thereof will abide. We ſhall eternally be obliged to cry peccavi; although the puniſhment may be remitted, the deſert of it cannot be removed; a ſcar from it will ſtick in our fleſh; which ever will deform us; a tang of it will ſtay in our memory, which always will be diſguſtful; we ſhall never reflect on our miſcarriages without ſome confuſion and horrour; inceſſantly we ſhall be liable to that queſtion of St. Paul, What fruit had ye of thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? If therefore we could reaſonable preſume, yea if we could certainly foreſee, that we ſhould hereafter in time repent, yet it were unadviſable to perſiſt in ſin, ſeeing it being once committed, can never be reverſed; never expunged from the regiſters of time, never daſhed out from the tables of our mind and memory; but will perpetually reſt as matter of doleful conſideration, and of tragical ſtory to us. Ezek. 16. 61. Then ſhalt thou remember thy ways, and be aſhamed. Ezek. 16. 63. That thou mayſt remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more becauſe of thy ſhame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou haſt done, ſaith the Lord God: Ezek. 36. 31. 20. 43. Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall loath your ſelves in your own ſight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

1 Cor. 15. 41.

Prov. 1. 18.

11. Again, ſo much time as we ſpend in diſobedience, ſo much of reward we do forfeit; for commenſurate to our works ſhall our rewards be; the fewer our good works are in the courſe of our preſent life, the ſmaller ſhall be the meaſures of joy, of glory, of felicity diſpenſed to us hereafter; the later conſequently we repent, the leſs we ſhall be happy: One ſtar (ſaith the Apoſtle) differeth from another in glory; and of all ſtars, thoſe in the celeſtial ſphere will ſhine brighteſt, who did ſoon riſe here, and continued long by the luſtre of their good works to glorify their heavenly Father; for the path of the juſt is as the ſhining light, that ſhineth more and more unto the perfect day. While therefore we let our intereſt lie dead by lingring, or run behind by ſinful practice, we are very bad husbands for our ſoul; our ſpiritual eſtate doth thereby hugely ſuffer; every minute contracteth a damage that runneth through millions of ages, and which therefore will amount to an immenſe ſum: And who for all the pleaſures here would forego one degree of bliſsful joy hereafter; who for all earthly ſplendours would exchange one ſpark of celeſtial glory; who for all the treaſures below would let ſlip one gem out of his heavenly crown?

12. Farther, let us conſider that whatever our age, whatever our condition or caſe be, the advice not to procraſtinate our obedience is very ſuitable and uſeful.

Art thou young? then it is moſt proper to enter upon living well. For when we ſet out, we ſhould be put in a right way; when we begin to be Men, we ſhould begin to uſe our reaſon well; life and vertue ſhould be of the ſame ſtanding; what is more ugly than a Child, that hath learnt little, having learnt to do ill; than naughtineſs ſpringing up in that ſtate of innocence? the foundation of good life is to be laid in that age, upon which the reſt of our life is built; for this is the manner of our proceeding; the preſent dependeth always upon what is paſt; our practice is guided by notions that we had ſucked in, is ſwayed by inclinations that we got before; whence uſually our firſt judgments of things, and our firſt propenſions do ſtretch their influence upon the whole future life. Train up a child in the way he ſhould go, and when he is old he will not depart from it, ſaith the Wiſe-man.

Sub pædagogo cœperis licet, ſerum eſt.
Matt. 8. 44.
Prov. 22. 6.

That age as it is moſt liable to be corrupted by vice, ſo it is moſt capable of being imbued with vertue; then nature is ſoft and pliable, ſo as eaſily to be moulded into any ſhape, ready to admit any ſtamp impreſſed thereon; then the mind is a pure table, in which good principles may be fairly engraven, without raſing out any former ill prejudices; then the heart being a ſoil free of weeds, the ſeeds of goodneſs being caſt therein will undiſturbedly grow and thrive; then the complexion being tender will eaſily be ſet into a right poſture; Our ſoul is then a Veſſel empty and ſweet; good liquor therefore may be inſtilled, which will both fit it, and ſeaſon it with a durable tincture; the extream curioſity and huge credulity of that age, as they greedily will ſwallow any, ſo will they admit good inſtruction. If we do then imbibe falſe conceptions, or have bad impreſſions made on our minds, it will be hard afterwards to expel, or to correct them. Paſſion is then very fluid and moveable, but not being impetuouſly determined any way, may eaſily be derived into the right chanel. Then the quickneſs of our wit, the briskneſs of our fancy, the freſhneſs of our memory, the vigour of our affections, the luſty and active mettle of our ſpirits being applied to vertuous ſtudies and endeavours, will produce moſt noble fruits; the beauty of which will adorn us, the ſweetneſs will pleaſe us, ſo as to leave on our minds a perpetual reliſh and ſatisfaction in goodneſs. Then being leſs encombred with the cares, leſs intangled in the perplexities, leſs expoſed to the temptations of the World and ſecular affairs, we can more eaſily ſet forth, we may proceed more expeditely in good courſes. Then being void of that ſtinging remorſe, which doth adhere to reflexions upon paſt follies, and miſpent time, with more courage and alacrity we may proſecute good undertakings; then beginning ſo ſoon to embrace vertue, we ſhall have advantage with more leiſure, and more eaſe to poliſh and perfect it through our enſuing courſe of life; ſetting out ſo early, in the very morning of our age, without much ſtraining, marching on ſoftly and fairly, we may go through our journey to happineſs.

Natura tenaciſſimi ſumus eorum quæ rudibus annis percipimus, &c. Quint. 1. 1.

Difficulter eraditur quod rudes animi perbiberunt. Hier. ad Lætam.

Ut corpora ad quoſdam membrorum flexus formari niſi tenera non poſſunt, ſic animos ad pleraque duriores robur ipſum facit. Quint. ib.

Quo ſemel eſt imbuta recens ſervabit odorem Teſta diu.
Hor. Ep. 1. 2.

Ἤδει γὰρ ὅτι χαλεπὸν ἡ νεότης, ὅτι δὲ εὔπτωτον, ὅτι δὲ εὐεξαπάτητον, ὅτι δὲ ὀλισθηρὸν, καὶ σφοδροτέρου δεῖ χαλινοῦ. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. α.

Our actions then are the firſt fruits of our life, which therefore are fit and due ſacrifices to our Maker; which if we do withdraw, we ſhall have nothing left ſo worthy or acceptable to preſent unto him; will it be ſeemly to offer him the dregs and refuſe of our age; ſhall we not be aſhamed to bring a crazy temper of body and ſoul, dry bones and decayed ſenſes; a dull fancy, a treacherous memory, a ſluggiſh ſpirit before him? ſhall we then when we are fit for little begin to undertake his ſervice? with our decrepit limbs and waſted ſtrength ſhall we ſet our ſelves to run the ways of his commandments?

As it is uncomfortable to think of being parſimonious, when our ſtock is almoſt gone; ſo it is to become thrifty of our life, when it comes near the bottom. Δεινὴ ἐνὶ πυθμένι φειδώ.

If we keep innocency, ſpend our youth well, it will yeild unexpreſſible comfort to us; it will ſave us much ſorrow, it will prevent many Pſal. 37. 38. inconveniences to us: If we have ſpent it ill, it will yeild us great diſpleaſure, it will coſt us much pains; we ſhall be forced ſadly to bewail our folly and vanity therein; it will be bitter to ſee, that we muſt unlive our former life, and undoe all we have done; that we muſt renounce the Principles we have avowed, we muſt root out the habits we have planted, we muſt forſake the Paths which we have beaten and ſo long trode in, if ever we will be happy; it will be grievous to us, when we come Pſal. 25. 7. with penitential regret to deprecate, Lord remember not the ſins of my youth; Job 20. 11. we ſhall feel ſore pain, when our bones are full of the ſins of our youth, and 13. 26. we come to poſſeſs the iniquities thereof.

Lam. 3. 27. It is therefore good (as the Prophet ſaith) that a man
Fingit equum tenera docilem cervice Magiſter bear the yoke in his youth, when his neck is tender; it is Ire viam, quam monſtrat eques.—Hor. excellent advice which the Preacher giveth, Remember
Ep. 12. 1. thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, and the years draw nigh, when thou ſhalt ſay I have no pleaſure in them.

Eth. 1. 3. Ariſtotle ſaith, that young men are not fit hearers of Τῆς πολιτικῆς οὐκ ἔστιν οἰκεῖος ἀκροατὴς ὁ νέος· ἄπειρος γὰρ τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον πράξεων· ἔτι τοῖς πάθεσιν ἀκολουθητικὸς ὢν ματαίως ἀκούσεται καὶ ἀνωφελῶς. moral doctrine, becauſe (ſaith he) they are unexperienced in affairs of life; and becauſe they are apt to follow their paſſions, which indiſpoſe to hear with fruit or profit; but his concluſion is falſe, and his reaſons may be well turned againſt him; for becauſe young men want experience, therefore is there no bad prejudice, no contrary habit to obſtruct their embracing ſound doctrine; becauſe their paſſions are vehement and ſtrong, therefore being rightly ordered, and ſet upon good objects they with great force will carry them to vertuous practice; that indeed is the beſt time to regulate and tame Paſſions; as Horſes muſt be broken when they are Colts, Dogs muſt be made when they are Whelps, elſe they will never be brought to any thing. The Poet therefore adviſed better than the Philoſopher

Hor. Ep. 1. 2. —nunc adbibe puro
Pectore verba puer, nunc te melioribus offer;

Eph. 6. 4. and St. Paul plainly doth confute him, when he biddeth Parents to educate their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; when he chargeth
Tit. 2. 6. Titus, that he exhort young men to be ſober-minded; when he commendeth
2 Tim. 2. 22.
2 Tim. 3. 15. Timothy, for that he had ἀπὸ βρέφους from his infancy known the Holy Scrip- Pſal. 119. 9. tures; So doth the Pſalmiſt, when he ſaith, Wherewith ſhall a young man cleanſe his way? by taking heed according to thy word. And Solomon, when he de-Prov. 1. 4. clareth that his moral Precepts did ſerve to give ſubtilty to the ſimple, to the Prov. 22. 6, 15. young man knowledge and diſcretion; when he biddeth us to train up a child in the way he ſhould go; St. Peter doth intimate the ſame, when he biddeth
1 Pet. 2. 2. us, as new born babes to deſire the ſincere milk of the word; and our Saviour, when he ſaid, Suffer little children to come unto me, for of ſuch is the kingdom of God; Luk. 18. 16. that is, the more Simplicity and Innocence a Man is endued with, the more apt he is to embrace and comply with the Evangelical Doctrine: Ariſtotle therefore was out, when he would exclude young Men from the Schools of Vertue. It is obſervable that he contradicteth himſelf; for Ὀυ μικρὸν διαφέρει τὸ οὕτως ἢ οὕτως, εὐθὺς ἐκ νέων ἐθίζεσθαι, ἀλλὰ πάμπολυ, μᾶλλον δὲ τὸ πᾶν. Eth. 2. 2. It is (ſaith he) of no ſmall concernment to be from youth accuſtomed thus or thus; yea, 'tis very much, or rather all: And how ſhall a young Man be accuſtomed to do well, if he be not allowed to learn what is to be done?

Again, are we old? it is then high time to begin; we have then leſs time to ſpare from our moſt important Buſineſs; we ſtand then in moſt imminent Danger, upon the Edge of Perdition, and ſhould therefore be nimble to skip out thence; our Forces being diminiſhed, our Quickneſs and Induſtry ſhould be encreaſed; the later we ſet out, the more ſpeed it behoveth us to make. If we ſtay, we ſhall grow continually more indiſpoſed and unfit to amend; it will be too late, when utter Decrepitneſs and Dotage have ſeized upon us; and our Body doth ſurvive our Soul. When ſo much of our Time, of our Parts, of our Strength are fled, we ſhould husband the reſt to beſt advantage, and make the beſt ſatisfaction we can unto God, and unto our Souls with the Remainder.

Quod facere ſolent qui ſerius exeunt—calcar adamus. Sen. Ep. 68. 76. 19.

Apoc. 3. 2. Στήριξον τὰ λοιπὰ, ἃ μέλλει ἀποθανεῖν.

This Age hath ſome peculiar Advantages, which we ſhould embrace; the Froth of Humours is then boiled out, the Fervours of Luſt are ſlacked, Paſſions are allayed, Appetites are flatted; ſo that then Inclinations to ſin are not ſo violent, nor doth the Enjoyment thereof ſo much gratifie.

——non omnia grandior ætas
Quæ fugiamus habet—— Ovid.

Ἡ μὲν γὰρ νεότης πελάγει προσέοικε μαινομένῳ, κυμάτων ἀγρίων, καὶ πνευμάτων γέμοντι πονηρῶν· ἡ δὲ πολιὰ ὥσπερ εἰς λιμένα ἀκύμαντον τὰς τῶν γεγηρακότων ὁρμίζει ψυχὰς, παρέχουσα τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς ἡλικίας ἐντρυφᾶν ἀσφαλεία. Chryſ. Tom 6. Orat. 38.

Long Experience then hath diſcovered the Vanity of all Worldly things, and the Miſchief of ill Courſes; ſo that we can then hardly admire any thing, or be fond of enjoying what we have found unprofitable or hurtful.

Age is excuſed from Compliance with the Faſhions, and thence much exempted from Temptations of the World; ſo that it may be good without Obſtacle or Oppoſition.

It is proper thereto to be grave and ſerious, and conſequently to be vertuous; for Gravity without Vertue and Seriouſneſs about vain things are ridiculous.

Nothing doth ſo adorn this Age as Goodneſs, nothing doth ſo diſgrace it as Wickedneſs; The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteouſneſs; Prov. 16. 31. but it is a Mark of Infamy, if it be obſerved proceeding in a courſe of Iniquity, it ſignifieth that Experience hath not improved it, it argueth incorrigible Folly, or rather incurable Madneſs therein.

There is indeed no Care, no Imployment proper for old Men but to prepare for their Diſſolution; to be bidding adieu to the World with its vain Pomps and miſchievous Pleaſures; to be packing up their Goods, to be caſting their Accompts, to be fitting themſelves to abide in that State into which they are tumbling, to appear at that Bar, before which ſuddenly Nature will ſet them. As a Ship which hath long been toſs'd and Weather-beaten, which is ſhattered in its Timber, and hath loſt much of its Rigging, ſhould do nothing in that caſe but work toward the Port, there to find its Safety and Eaſe; ſo ſhould a Man, who having paſt many Storms and Agitations of the World is grievouſly battered and torn with Age,

In freto viximus, moriamur in portu. Sen. Ep. 19.

Age, ſtrive only to die well, to get ſafe into the Harbour of eternal Reſt.

In fine, Epicurus himſelf ſaid well, that no man is either immature or over-ripe in regard to his ſoul's health; we can never ſet upon it too ſoon, we ſhould never think it too late to begin; to live well is always the beſt thing we can do, and therefore we ſhould at any time endeavour it; there are common Reaſons for all Ages, there are ſpecial Reaſons for each Age, which moſt ſtrongly and moſt clearly do urge it; it is moſt ſeaſonable for young Men, it is moſt neceſſary for old Men, it is moſt adviſable for all Men *.

* Οὔτ' ἄωρος οὐδείς ἐστιν, οὔτε πάρωρος πρὸς τὸ κατὰ ψυχὴν ὑγιαῖνον. Epic. ad Monœc.

* Quare juventus, imo omnis ætas (neque enim rectæ voluntati ſerum eſt tempus ullum) totis mentibus huc tendamus, in hoc elaboremus; forſan & conſummare contingat. Quint. 12. 1.

Again, be our Condition what it will, this Advice is reaſonable: Are we in Health? we owe God Thanks for that excellent Gift, and the beſt Gratitude we can expreſs is the improving it for his Service and to our own Good; we ſhould not loſe the Advantage of a Seaſon ſo fit for our Obedience and Repentance; while the Forces of our Body and Mind are entire, while we are not diſcompoſed by Pain or Faintneſs, we ſhould ſtrive to diſpatch this needful Work, for which Infirmity may diſable us.

Are we ſick? it is then time to conſider our Frailty, and the beſt we can to obviate the worſt Conſequences thereof: It is then very fit, when we do feel the ſad Effects of Sin, to endeavour the Prevention of worſe Miſchiefs that may follow; it is ſeaſonable, when we lie under God's correcting Hand to ſubmit unto him, to deprecate his Wrath, to ſeek Reconciliation with him by all kinds of Obedience ſutable to that State; with ſerious Reſolutions to amend hereafter, if it ſhall pleaſe God to reſtore us; it is moſt adviſeable, when we are in the Borders of Death, to provide for that State which lieth juſt beyond it.

Are we rich and proſperous? 'tis expedient then preſently to amend, leſt our Wealth do ſoon corrupt us with Pride, with Luxury, with Sloth, with Stupidity; leſt our Proſperity becometh an inevitable Snare, an irrecoverable Bane unto us.

Prov. 1. 32.

Are we poor or afflicted? 'tis then alſo needful to repent quickly; that we may have a comfortable Support for our Soul, and a certain Succour in our Diſtreſs; that we may get a Treaſure to ſupply our Want, a joy to drown our Sorrow; a Buoy to keep our Hearts from ſinking into Deſperation and Diſconſolateneſs. This Condition is a Medicine, which God adminiſtreth for our Soul's Health; if it do not work preſently ſo as to do us good, it will prove both grievous and hurtful to us.

13. Laſtly, we may conſider, that abating all the rueful Conſequences of abiding in Sin, abſtracting from the deſperate Hazards it expoſeth us to in regard to the future Life, it is moſt reaſonable to abandon it, betaking our ſelves to a vertuous Courſe of Practice. For Vertue in it ſelf is far more eligible than Vice, to keep God's Commandments hath much greater Convenience than to break them; the Life of a good Man in all conſiderable reſpects is highly to be preferred above the Life of a bad Man: for what is Vertue, but a way of living that advanceth our Nature into a Similitude with God's moſt excellent and happy Nature; that promoteth our true Benefit and Intereſt; that procureth and preſerveth Health, Eaſe, Safety, Liberty, Peace, comfortable Subſiſtence, fair Repute, Tranquillity of Mind, all kinds of Convenience to us? to what Ends did our moſt benign and moſt wiſe Maker ther deſign and ſuit his Law, but to the furthering our good, and ſecuring us from Miſchief, as not only himſelf hath declared, but Reaſon ſheweth, and Experience doth atteſt? What is Vice but a ſort of practice which debaſeth and diſparageth us, which plungeth us into grievous Evils, which bringeth Diſtemper of Body and Soul, Diſtreſs of Fortune, Danger, Trouble, Reproach, Regret, and numberleſs Inconveniencies upon us; which for no other reaſon, than becauſe it ſo hurteth and grieveth us, was by our loving Creator interdicted to us? Vertue is moſt noble and worthy, moſt lovely, moſt profitable, moſt pleaſant, moſt creditable; Vice is moſt ſordid and baſe, ugly, hurtful, bitter, diſgraceful in its ſelf, and in its conſequences. If we compare them together, we ſhall find, that Vertue doth always preſerve our Health, but Vice commonly doth impair it; that Vertue improveth our Eſtate, Vice waſteth it; that Vertue adorneth our Reputation, Vice blemiſheth it; that Vertue ſtrengtheneth our parts, Vice weakeneth them; that Vertue maintaineth our Freedom, Vice enſlaveth us; that Vertue keepeth our Mind in Order and Peace, Vice diſcompoſeth and diſquieteth it; Vertue breedeth Satisfaction and Joy, Vice ſpawneth Diſpleaſure and Anguiſh of Conſcience: To enter therefore into a vertuous courſe of Life, what is it but to embrace Happineſs; to continue in vicious Practice, what is it but to ſtick in Miſery?

Eſt virtus nihil aliud quàm in ſe perfecta, & ad ſummum perducta natura, Cic. de Leg. 1.

Deut. 10. 13.
Mic. 6. 8.
Neh. 9. 13.
Rom. 7. 12.
Pſal. 19. 9.
119. 107.

By entring into good Life, we enter into the Favour and Friendſhip of God, engaging his infinite Power and Wiſdom for our Protection, our Succour, our Direction and Guidance; enjoying the ſweet Effluxes of his Mercy and Bounty; we therewith become Friends to the holy Angels, and bleſſed Saints; to all good Men, being united in a holy and happy Conſortſhip of Judgment, of Charity, of Hope, of Devotion with them; we become Friends to all the World, which we oblige by good Wiſhes, and good Deeds, and by the Influence of good Example: we become Friends to our ſelves, whom we thereby enrich and adorn with the beſt Goods; whom we gratifie and pleaſe with the choiceſt Delights: but perſiſting in Sin, we continue to affront, wrong, and diſpleaſe our Maker, to be diſloyal towards our Sovereign Lord; to be ingrateful towards our chief Benefactour, to diſoblige the beſt Friend we have, to provoke a moſt juſt and ſevere Judge, to cope with Omnipotency, to contradict Infallibility, to enrage the greateſt Patience, to abuſe immenſe Goodneſs: We thereby become Enemies to all the World, to God, whom we injure and diſhonour; to the Friends of God, whom we deſert and oppoſe; to the Creatures, which we abuſe to our Pride, Luſt and Vanity; to our Neighbours, whom we corrupt or ſeduce; to our ſelves, whom we bereave of the beſt Goods, and betray to the worſt Evils.

Beginning to live ſoberly, we begin to live like Men, following the Conduct of Reaſon; beginning to live in Charity, we commence the Life of Angels, enjoying in our ſelves moſt ſweet Content, and procuring great Benefit to others; but going on in ſinful Voluptuouſneſs, we proceed to live like Beaſts, wholly guided by Senſe, and ſwayed by Appetite; being pertinacious in Malice, we continue to be like Fiends, working torment in our ſelves, and Miſchief to our Neighbours.

Embracing Vertue we become wiſe and ſober Men, worthy and honourable, beneficial and uſeful to the World; but continuing in Vice, we continue to be fooliſh and vain, to be vile and deſpicable, to be worthleſs and uſeleſs.

By our Delay to amend, what do we gain? what, but a little flaſhy and tranſient Pleaſure inſtead of a ſolid and durable Peace; but a little counterfeit Profit inſtead of real Wealth; but a little Smoak of deceitful

Opinion inſtead of unqueſtionable ſound Honour; Shadows of imaginary Goods inſtead of thoſe which are moſt ſubſtantial and true, a good Mind, the Love of God, the aſſured Welfare of our Souls. But this Field of Diſcourſe is too ſpacious; I ſhall only therefore for Concluſion ſay, that ſpeedily applying our ſelves to Obedience, and breaking off our Sins by Repentance, is in effect nothing elſe but from a preſent Hell in Trouble, and the Danger of a final Hell in Torment to be tranſlated into a double Heaven; one of joyful Tranquillity here, another of bliſsful Reſt hereafter; unto the which Almighty God in his Mercy bring us all, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; to whom for ever be all Glory and Praiſe. Amen.

1 Theſ. 5. 23. The very God of peace ſanctifie you wholly, and I pray God your whole ſpirit, and ſoul, and body be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Amen.

SERMON XVIII.

Of Induſtry in general.

ECCLES. IX. 10.

Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might.

Rom. 12. 11. IN St. Paul's Epiſtle to the Romans, among divers excellent Rules of Life, preſcribed by that great Maſter, this is one, Τῇ σπουδῇ μὴ ὀκνηροί. Be not ſlothful in buſineſs, or to Buſineſs; And in the 2d Epiſtle to the Corinthians, among other principal Vertues, or worthy Accompliſhments, for abounding wherein the Apoſtle commendeth thoſe Chriſtians, he ranketh all diligence, or induſtry exerciſed in all Affairs and Duties incumbent on them: this is that Vertue, the Practice whereof in this moral Precept or Advice the Royal Preacher doth recommend unto us; being indeed an eminent Vertue, of very general Uſe, and powerful Influence upon the Management of all our Affairs, or in the Conduct of our whole Life. Πᾶσα σπουδή. 2 Cor. 8. 7.

Induſtry, I ſay, in general, touching all Matters incident, which our hand findeth to do, that is, which Diſpenſation of Providence doth offer, or which choice of Reaſon embraceth, for employing our active Powers of Soul and Body, the Wiſe-man doth recommend; and to preſſing the Obſervance of his Advice (waving all curious Remarks either Critical or Logical upon the Words) I ſhall preſently apply my Diſcourſe, propoſing divers Conſiderations apt to excite us thereto; only firſt, let me briefly deſcribe it, for our better Apprehenſion of its true Notion and Nature.

By Induſtry we underſtand a ſerious and ſteady Application of Mind, joined with a vigorous Exerciſe of our active Faculties in proſecution of any reaſonable, honeſt, uſeful Deſign, in order to the Accompliſhment, or Attainment of ſome conſiderable Good; as for inſtance, a Merchant is induſtrious who continueth intent and active in driving on his Trade for acquiring Wealth; a Soldier is induſtrious, who is watchful for occaſion, and earneſt in Action towards obtaining the Victory; and a Scholar is induſtrious, who doth aſſiduouſly bend his Mind to ſtudy for getting Knowledge.

Induſtry doth not conſiſt merely in Action; for that is inceſſant in all Perſons, our Mind being a reſtleſs thing never abiding in a total Ceſſation from Thought or from Deſign (being like a Ship in the Sea, if not ſteered to ſome good purpoſe by reaſon, yet toſſed by the Waves of Fancy, or driven by the Winds of Temptation ſomewhither.) But the direction of our Mind to ſome good End, without roving or flinching, in a ſtreight and ſteady courſe, drawing after it our active Powers in execution thereof, doth conſtitute Induſtry; the which therefore uſually is attended with Labour and Pain; for our Mind (which naturally doth affect Variety and Liberty, being apt to loath familiar Objects, and to be weary of any Conſtraint) is not eaſily kept in a conſtant Attention to the ſame thing; And the Spirits imployed in Thought are prone to flutter and fly away, ſo that it is hard to fix them: And the corporeal Inſtruments of Action being ſtrained to a high pitch, or detained in a Tone will ſoon feel a Laſſitude, ſomewhat offenſive to Nature; whence Labour or Pain is commonly reckoned an Ingredient of Induſtry; and Laboriousneſs is a Name ſignifying it; upon which Account this Vertue (as involving Labour) deſerveth a peculiar Commendation; it being then moſt laudable to follow the Dictates of Reaſon, when ſo doing is attended with Difficulty and Trouble.

Ἡ γὰρ ψυχὴ φύσιν ἔχουσα τοῦ κινεῖσθαι διαπαντὸς, οὐκ ἀνέχεται ἠρεμεῖν, ἔμπρακτον τὸ ζῶον τοῦτο ἐποίησεν ὁ Θεὸς, &c. Chryſ. in Act. Or. 35.

Such in general I conceive to be the nature of Induſtry; to the practice whereof the following Conſiderations may induce.

1. We may conſider that Induſtry doth befit the Conſtitution and Frame of our Nature; all the Faculties of our Soul, and Organs of our Body being adapted in a Congruity and Tendency thereto: Our Hands are ſuited for Work, our Feet for Travel, our Senſes to watch for occaſion of purſuing Good, and eſchewing Evil, our Reaſon to plod and contrive Ways of imploying the other Parts and Powers; all theſe, I ſay, are formed for Action; and that not in a looſe and gadding way; or in a ſlack and remiſs degree, but in regard to determinate Ends, with Vigour requiſite to attain them; and eſpecially our Appetites do prompt to Induſtry, as inclining to things not attainable without it; according to that Aphoriſm of the Wiſeman, Ἐπιθυμίαι ὀκνηρὸν ἀποκτείνουσιν —The Deſire of the ſlothful killeth him, for his hands refuſe to labour; that is, he is apt to deſire things which he cannot attain without Pains; and not enduring them he for want thereof doth feel a deadly Smart and Anguiſh: Wherefore in not being induſtrious we defeat the Intent of our Maker; we pervert his Work and Gifts; we forfeit the Uſe and Benefit of our Faculties; we are bad Husbands of Natures Stock. Prov. 21. 25. 13. 4.

2. In conſequence hereto Induſtry doth preſerve and perfect our Nature; keeping it in good tune and temper; improving and advancing it toward its beſt ſtate. The Labour of our Mind in attentive Meditation and Study doth render it capable and patient of thinking upon any Object or Occaſion; doth poliſh and refine it by uſe, doth enlarge it by Acceſſion of Habits; doth quicken and rowſe our Spirits, dilating and diffuſing them into their proper Chanels: The very Labour of our Body doth keep the Organs of Action ſound and clean, diſcuſſing Fogs and ſuperfluous Humours, opening Paſſages, diſtributing Nouriſhment, exciting vital Heat: Barring the uſe of it, no good Conſtitution of Soul or Body can ſubſiſt; but a foul Ruſt, a dull Numbneſs, a reſty Liſtleſneſs, a heavy Unweildineſs muſt ſeize on us; our Spirits will be ſtifled and choaked, our Hearts will grow faint and languid, our Parts will flag and decay; the Vigour of our Mind, and the Health of our Body will be much impaired.

Πάντα γὰρ ἡ ἀργία βλάπτει, καὶ τὰ μέλη σώματος αὐτὰ, &c. Chryſ. in Act. Orat. 35.

Πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ ποιοῦτο τὸ σῶμα ἔκλυτον, &c. Ibid.

It is with us as with other things in nature, which by Motion are preſerved in their native Purity and Perfection, in their Sweetneſs, in their Luſtre, Reſt corrupting, debaſing and defiling them; If the Water runneth it holdeth clear, ſweet and freſh; but Stagnation turneth it into a noiſome Puddle: If the Air be fanned by Winds, it is pure and wholſome, but from being ſhut up it groweth thick and putrid; If Metals be employed, they abide ſmooth and ſplendid; but lay them up, and they ſoon contract Ruſt; If the Earth be belaboured with Culture, it yieldeth Corn; but lying neglected, it will be overgrown with Brakes and Thiſtles; and the better its Soil is the ranker Weeds it will produce; all nature is upheld in its Being, Order and State by conſtant Agitation; every Creature is inceſſantly employed in Action conformable to its deſigned End and Uſe; In like manner the Preſervation and Improvement of our Faculties depends on their conſtant Exerciſe.

Ποῖος ἵππος χρήσιμος, ὁ τρυφῶν, ἢ ὁ ἐργαζόμενος; ποία ναῦς, ἡ πλέουσα ἢ ἡ ἀργοῦσα; ποῖον ὕδωρ, τὸ τρέχον, ἢ τὸ ἑστὼς; ποῖος σίδηρος, ὁ κείμενος, ἢ ὁ ἐργαζόμενος, &c. Chryſ. ibid.

Neglectis urenda filix innaſcitur agris. Hor. Ser. 1. 3.

Plut. περὶ παιδ. p. 3.

3. As we naturally were compoſed, ſo by Divine Appointment we were originally deſigned for Induſtry; God did not intend that Man ſhould live idly, even in his beſt State; or ſhould enjoy Happineſs without taking pains; but did provide Work enough even in Paradiſe it ſelf; for The Lord God (ſaith the Text) took man, and put him into the Garden of Eden to dreſs it, and to keep it, ſo that had we continu'd happy, we muſt have been ever buſie, by our Induſtry ſuſtaining our Life, and ſecuring our Pleaſure; otherwiſe Weeds might have overgrown Paradiſe, and that of Solomon might have been applicable to Adam, I went by the field of the ſlothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of underſtanding, and loe it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof.

Gen. 2. 15.

Prov. 24. 30, 31.

4. By our Tranſgreſſion and Fall the neceſſity of Induſtry (together with a Difficulty of obtaining Good, and avoiding Evil) was encreaſed to us; being ordained both as a juſt Puniſhment for our Offences, and as an Expedient Remedy of our Needs: For thereupon the Ground was curſed to bring forth thorns and thiſtles to us; and it was our Doom pronounced by God's own Mouth, In the ſweat of thy face ſhalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; ſo that now Labour is fatally natural to us; now Man (as Job ſaith) is born to labour as the ſparks fly upward (or, as the Vultur's chickens ſoar aloft) according to the Greek Interpreters.)

Gen. 3. 17—

Job 5. 7.

Ἀλλ᾽ ἄνθρωπος γεννᾶται κόπῳ· νεοσσοὶ δὲ γυπὸς ὑψηλὰ πέτονται. LXX. Interp. Now great Travel (as the Son of Sirach ſaith) is created for every Man; (ἀσχολία μεγάλη ἔκτισται παντὶ ἀνθρώπῳ, &c. Ecclus 40. 1.) and an heavy Yoke is upon the Sons of Adam, &c.

5. Accordingly our Condition and Circumſtances in the World are ſo ordered, as to require Induſtry; ſo that without it we cannot ſupport our Life in any Comfort or Convenience; whence St. Paul's Charge upon the Theſſalonians, that If any one would not work, neither ſhould he eat, is in a manner a general Law impoſed on Mankind by the Exigency of our State, according to that of Solomon; The idle ſoul ſhall ſuffer hunger, and, The ſluggard who will not plow by reaſon of the cold, ſhall beg in harveſt, and have nothing.

2 Theſ. 3. 10.

Prov. 19. 15.

Prov. 20. 4.

Of all our many Neceſſities, none can be ſupplied without Pains, wherein all Men are obliged to bear a ſhare; Every Man is to work for his Food, for his Apparel, for all his Accommodations, either immediately and directly, ectly, or by Commutation and Equivalence; for the Gentleman himſelf cannot (at leaſt worthily and inculpably) obtain them otherwiſe, than by redeeming them from the Plowman, and the Artificer by Compenſation of other Cares and Pains conducible to publick Good.

The wiſe Poet did obſerve well, when he ſaid,

——Pater ipſe colendi
Haud facilem eſſe viam voluit.

Virg. Geor. 1.

and St. Chryſoſtome doth propoſe the ſame Obſervation, that God to whet our Mind, and keep us from moping, would not that we ſhould eaſily come by the Fruits of the Earth, without employing much Art and many Pains; in order thereto there muſt be Skill uſed in obſerving Seaſons, and preparing the Ground; there muſt be Labour ſpent in manuring, in delving and plowing, in ſowing, in weeding, in fencing it; there muſt be Pains taken in reaping, in gathering, in laying up, in threſhing, and dreſſing the Fruit e'er we can enjoy it: So much Induſtry is needful to get Bread; and if we liſt to fare more daintily, we muſt either hunt for it, uſing Craſt and Toil to catch it out of the Woods, the Water, the Air; or we muſt carefully wait on thoſe Creatures, of which we would ſerve our ſelves, feeding them that they may feed us; ſuch Induſtry is required to preſerve Mankind from ſtarving. And to guard it from other Inconveniences, Miſchiefs and Dangers ſurrounding us, it is no leſs requiſite: for to ſhelter us from Impreſſions of Weather, we muſt ſpin, we muſt weave, we muſt build; and in order thereto we muſt ſcrape into the Bowels of the Earth to find our Tools, we muſt ſweat at the Anvil to forge them for our Uſe; we muſt frame Arms to defend our Safety, and our Store from the Aſſaults of wild Beaſts, or of more dangerous Neighbours, wild Men. To furniſh Accommodations for our Curioſity and Pleaſure, or to provide for the Convenience and Ornament of our Life, ſtill greater meaſures of Induſtry are demanded; to ſatisfie thoſe Intents, a thouſand Contrivances of Art, a thouſand ways of Trade and Buſineſs do ſerve, without which they are not attainable. In whatever Condition any Man is in what State ſoever he be placed, whatſoever Calling or way of Life he doth embrace, ſome peculiar Buſineſs is thence impoſed on him, which he cannot with any Advantage or good Succeſs, with any Grace, with any Comfort to himſelf, or Satisfaction to others, manage without competent Induſtry; nothing will go on of it ſelf without our Care to direct it, and our Pains to hold it, and forward it in the right Courſe: All which things ſhew, that Divine Wiſdom did intend that we ſhould live in the Exerciſe of Induſtry, or not well without it; having ſo many Needs to be ſupplied, ſo many Deſires to be appeaſed thereby; being expoſed to ſo many Troubles and Difficulties, from which we cannot extricate our ſelves without it. But farther yet,

——curis acuens mortalia corda;
Nec torpere gravi paſſus ſua regna veterno.
(Virg. Ibid.

Διὰ τοῦτο εἰς ἀνάγκην κατέστησεν ἐργασίας ὁ Θεὸς, &c. Chryſoſt. in Act. Hom. 35.

6. Let us conſider that Induſtry hath annexed thereto, by Divine Appointment and Promiſe, the faireſt Fruits, and the richeſt Rewards: All good things (being either ſuch in themſelves, or made ſuch by Humane Eſteem) are the Fruits of Induſtry; ordered to ſprout from it, under the Protection and Influence of God's Bleſſing, which commonly doth attend it.

All good things indeed are the Gift of God, and freely diſpenſed by his hand; but he doth not give them abſolutely without Condition, nor miraculouſly without Concurrence of ordinary means: By ſupporting our active Powers, and ſupplying needful Aid to our Endeavours; by directing and upholding us in the courſe of our Action; by preventing or removing Ob-

Pſ. 37. 3. 23.
Prov. 3. 6.

Dii laboribus omnia vendunt. Judg. 6. 36. 7. 7. 2 Kings 5. 2. Joſh. 1. 7, 9.

Obſtacles that might croſs us; by granting that final Succeſs which dependeth on his Pleaſure, he doth confer them on us; Our Hand commonly is God's Hand by which he worketh good, and reacheth out Benefits to us; governing and wielding it as he pleaſeth.

God indeed could not well proceed otherwiſe in diſpenſing his Favours to us; not well, I ſay; that is, not without ſubverting the Method of things which himſelf hath eſtabliſhed; not without ſlighting and voiding his own firſt Bounty, or rendring the common Gifts of Nature (our Reaſon, our Senſes, our active Powers) vain and uſeleſs; not without making us uncapable of any Praiſe, or any Reward, which ſuppoſe Works atchieved by our earneſt Endeavour; not without depriving us of that ſweeteſt Content, which ſpringeth from enjoying the fruit of our Labour.

Καὶ πῶς ἔμελλες λαμβάνειν τὸν μισθὸν, εἰ τὸ πᾶν ἔμελλεν ἔσεσθαι τοῦ Θεοῦ. Chryſ. in Eph. Orat. 2.

Περὶ ἐκεῖνα μᾶλλον ἡ ψυχὴ διάκειται ὑπὲρ ὧν ἔκαμε· διὰ τοῦτο καὶ πόνους ἀνέμιξεν ἀρετῇ οἰκειῶσαι αὐτῇ ταύτην βουλόμενος. Chryſ. in Joh. Or. 36.

Διὰ τοῦτο οὐ τὸ πᾶν ἑαυτοῦ ἐποίησεν, ἀλλ' ἀφῆκέ τι ἐφ' ἡμῖν εἶναι ἵνα εὐπρόσωπον λάβῃ πρόφασιν τοῦ δικαίως ἡμᾶς στεφανοῦν. Chryſ. Tom. Or. 28.

Joſh. 1. 7.

Hence it is, that whatever in holy Scripture is called the Gift of God, is otherwhile affirmed to be the effect of Induſtry; it being the uſeful Condition upon which, and the Inſtrument whereby divine Providence conveyeth good things to us: What God ſaid to Joſhua, doth imply the general Method of his Proceeding, Only, be thou ſtrong and courageous —— that thou mayeſt proſper whitherſoever thou goeſt.

Αὐτός τι νῦν δρῶν εἶτα τοὺς θεοὺς κάλει. Cato apud Sal. in bello Catil.

Hence whatever we are directed to pray for, we are alſo exhorted to work for; declaring thereby, that we are ſerious in our Devotion, and do not mock God, asking that of him, which we deem not worth our Pains to acquire. It was well ſaid of Cato in Saluſt, Vigilando, agendo, conſulendo, proſperè omnia cedunt, ubi ſocordiæ te atque ignaviæ tradideris nequicquam Deos implores, irati infeſtique ſunt. We are bid to pray even for our daily Bread, yet we may ſtarve if we do not work for it; and in St. Paul's Judgment deſerve to do ſo.

Τὰν χεῖρα ποτιφέροντα δεῖ τὰν τύχαν ἐπικαλεῖν. Plut. Apoph. Lac.

Hence we are bound to thank God for all thoſe things, for the want of which we muſt thank our ſelves, and condemn our own Sloth.

Hence, although we ſhould caſt our Care on God, and relie on his Providence, being ſollicitous for nothing; yet we muſt not ſo truſt him, as to tempt him, by neglecting the means which he doth offer, of relieving our ſelves; to be preſumptuouſly ſlothful being no leſs blameable, than to be diſtruſtfully careful.

Hence God in all ſuch Caſes, when we do need any good thing, is ſaid to be our Helper and Succourer to the obtaining it; which doth imply that we muſt co-operate with him; and join our Forces to thoſe, which He doth afford; ſo that as we can do nothing without him, ſo he will do nothing without us; yea, ſo that ſometime we are ſaid alſo to help God; Curſe ye Meroz, curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; becauſe they came not to the help of the Lord; to the help of the Lord againſt the mighty. If ever God doth perform all without Human Labour conſpiring, it is only in behalf of thoſe who are ready to do their beſt, but unable to do any thing, being overpowered by the inſuperable Difficulty of things; But He never doth act Miracles, or controul Nature, he never doth ſtretch forth his Arm, or interpoſe ſpecial Power in favour of wilful and affected Sluggards.

Judg. 5. 13. Pſal. 72. 12. 22. 11. 2 Cor. 12. 10. 2 Chron. 14. 11. 1 Sam. 14. 6.

In fine, it is very plain both in common Experience, declaring the courſe of Providence, and in Holy Scripture, expreſſing God's Intention, that Almighty God doth hold forth all good things as the Prizes and Recompences of our vigilant Care, and painful Endeavour; as by ſurveying Particulars we may clearly diſcern.

Nothing is more grateful to Men, than proſperous Succeſs in their Undertakings, whereby they attain their Ends, ſatisfie their Deſires, ſave their Pains, and come off with Credit; this commonly is the Effect of Induſtry (which commandeth Fortune, to which all things ſubmit and ſerve) and ſcarce ever is found without it; An induſtrious Perſon, who as ſuch is not apt to attempt things impoſſible or unpracticable, can hardly fail of compaſſing his Deſigns, becauſe he will apply all means requiſite, and bend all his Forces thereto; ſtriving to break through all Difficulties, and to ſubdue all Oppoſitions thwarting his Purpoſes: But nothing of worth or Weight, can be atchieved with half a Mind, with a faint Heart, with a lame Endeavour; Any Enterprize undertaken without Reſolution, managed without Care, proſecuted without Vigour, will eaſily be daſhed and prove abortive, ending in Diſappointment, Damage, Diſgrace, and Diſſatisfaction: So the Wiſe-man doth aſſure us: The ſoul (ſaith he) of the ſluggard deſireth and hath nothing, but the ſoul of the diligent ſhall be made fat; the one pineth away with ineffectual and fruitleſs Deſires; the other thriveth upon Satisfaction in proſperous Succeſs.

Τῆς ἐπιμελείας πάντα δοῦλα γίγνεται. Antiph.

Quodcunque imperavit ſibi animus, obtinuit, &c. Sen. de Ir. 2. 12.

Prov. 13. 4. 21. 25.

Plentiful Accommodations for our Suſtenance and Convenience all Men will agree to be very deſirable; and theſe are indeed the Bleſſings of him, who viſiteth the earth and enricheth it; who crowneth the year with his goodneſs, and, whoſe clouds drop fatneſs; but they are ſo diſpenſed by Heaven, that Induſtry muſt concur therewith in deriving them to us, and Sloth will debar us of them; for He (ſaith the Holy Oracle) that tilleth his land, ſhall be ſatisfied with bread; and the thoughts of the diligent alone tend to plenteouſneſs; but The ſluggard ſhall beg in harveſt, and have nothing; and The idle ſoul ſhall ſuffer hunger.

Prov. 15. 30.
Pſ. 65. 9, 11.
Gen. 21. 28.
Prov. 21. 11.
Prov. 21. 5. (deeſt in LXX)
Prov. 20. 4.
Prov. 19. 15.

Wealth is that, which generally Men of all things are wont to affect and covet with moſt ardent Deſire, as the great Store-houſe of their Needs and Conveniences, the ſure Bulwark of their State and Dignity; the univerſal Inſtrument of compaſſing their Deſigns and Pleaſures; And moſt evident it is, that in the natural courſe of things, Induſtry is the way to acquire it, to ſecure it, to improve and enlarge it; the which Courſe purſued innocently and modeſtly, God will be ſo far from obſtructing, that he will further and bleſs it; for that indeed it would be a Flaw in Providence, if honeſt Induſtry, uſing the means it affordeth, ſhould fail of procuring a Competency; which joined with a pious Contentedneſs in St. Paul's Computation, is great wealth. Wherefore although Solomon telleth us, that the bleſſing of the Lord is that which maketh rich; yet doth he not forget or contradict himſelf, when he alſo doth affirm, that The hand of the diligent maketh rich; and that He who gathereth by labour ſhall encreaſe; becauſe God bleſſeth the Induſtrious, and by his own Hand, as the moſt proper Inſtrument, maketh him rich; when the Preacher ſaid, There is a man to whom God hath given riches and wealth, he knew well enough what Man it was, to whom God giveth them; and that Sluggards were not fit Objects of that Liberality: For he had obſerved it to be their Doom to be poor and beggarly, their Nature to waſte and embezil an Eſtate; He could aſſure us, that Drowſineſs ſhall cloath a man with rags; He could propound it as a certain Obſervation, that He who is ſlothful in his work, is brother to a great waſter; or that want of Induſtry in our Buſineſs will no leſs impair our Eſtate, than Prodigality it ſelf; He could more than once warn the Slothful, that if he did ſleep on, or perſiſt in his ſluggiſh way, Indigency would ſurprize and ſeize on him with an inſupportable Violence: So (ſaith he) ſhall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.

1 Tim. 6. 6.
Prov. 15. 16.
Prov. 10. 22. 22. 4.
2 Chron. 29. 12.
Eccleſ. 5. 19.
Prov. 10. 4. 13, 11.
Eccleſ. 6. 1, 2.
S. Paul exhorteth to work with our hands ἵνα μηδενὸς χρείαν ἔχητε. 1 Theſ. 4. 12.
Prov. 23. 21.
Prov. 18. 9.
Prov. 10. 4.
Prov. 6. 11. 24. 32.

Another Darling of Humane Affection (and a Jewel indeed of conſiderable worth and uſe in our Life) is Honour, or Reputation among Men: This alſo plainly, after the common Reaſon and Courſe of things, is purchaſed and preſerved by Induſtry: For he that aſpireth to worthy things, and aſſayeth laudable Deſigns, purſuing them ſteadily with ſerious Application of Heart, and reſolute Activity will rarely fail of good Succeſs, and conſequently will not miſs Honour, which ever doth crown Victory; And if he ſhould hap to fail in his Deſign, yet he will not loſe his Credit; for having meant well, and done his beſt, all will be ready to excuſe, many to commend him: The very Qualities which Induſtry doth exerciſe, and the Effects which it doth produce, to beget Honour; as being ornaments of our Perſon and State. God himſelf (from whom honour cometh, and whoſe ſpecial Prerogative it is to beſtow it, he, as King of the World, being the Fountain of Honour) will be concerned to dignifie an induſtrious Management of his Gifts with that natural and proper Recompence thereof; conducting him who fairly treadeth in the Path of Honour, that he ſhall ſafely arrive unto it. It is therefore a Matter of eaſie Obſervation which the wiſe Prince doth prompt us to mark; Seeſt thou a man diligent in his buſineſs? he ſhall ſtand before kings, he ſhall not ſtand before mean men; that is, Diligence, as it is the faireſt, ſo it is the ſureſt way to the beſt Preferment; as it qualifieth a Man for Employment, and rendereth him uſeful to the World, ſo it will procure worthy Employment for him, and attract the World to him; as the ſame great Author again doth aſſert. The hand, ſaith he, of the diligent ſhall bear rule; Yea, ſo honourable a thing is Induſtry it ſelf; that an Exerciſe thereof in the meaneſt Rank is productive of Eſteem, as the Wiſe-man again doth obſerve and tell us; He that waiteth on his maſter (that is, with Diligence attendeth on the Buſineſs committed to him) ſhall be honoured.

1 Chron. 29. 11.
Dan. 5. 18.
Eccleſ. 5. 19.
Prov. 22. 29.
Prov. 12. 24.
Prov. 27. 18.
Ὃς φυλάσσει τὸν ἑαυτοῦ κύριον, τιμηθήσεται.

No induſtrious Man is contemptible; for he is ever looked upon as being in a way of thriving, of working himſelf out from any ſtraits, of advancing himſelf into a better Condition. But without Induſtry we cannot expect any thing but Diſreſpect, Shame and Reproach, which are the certain Portion of the Slothful; he not having the Heart to enterprize or the Reſolution and Patience to atchieve any thing deſerving Regard, or apt to procure it; he wanting all the Ornaments and good Fruits that grow from Induſtry; he being only fit for a ſordid and ſervile Condition; whence the ſlothful (ſaith Solomon) ſhall be under tribute; and, He that ſleepeth in harveſt, is a ſon that cauſeth ſhame; He cauſeth it to his Relations by his beggarly Accoutrements, he cauſeth it much more to himſelf by his deſpicable Faultineſs, and by the diſgraceful Conſequences of it.

Prov. 12. 24.
Δόλιοι δὲ ἔσονται ἐν προνομῇ.
Prov. 10. 5.

Another yet more precious Good, far ſurpaſſing all external Advantages of our State; the which in the Judgment of him who (together with it having a full poſſeſſion of all ſecular Proſperity, Wealth, Dignity and Power) was beſt able to prize it, is better than rubies, and incomparably doth excel all things that may be deſired, as ennobling, enriching and embelliſhing our better part: Wiſdom, I mean, or a good Comprehenſion, and right Judgment about Matters of higheſt importance to us, is the Prize of Induſtry, and not to be gained without it; Nature conferreth little thereto, Fortune contributeth much leſs; it cannot be bought at any rate; It cannot (ſaith Job) be gotten for gold, neither ſhall ſilver be weighed for the price thereof; it cannot be valued with the Gold of Ophir, with the precious Onyx or the Sapphire; it is the Off-ſpring of watchful Obſervation and Experience, of ſerious Meditation and Study; of careful Reflexion on things, marking, comparing and weighing their Nature, their Worth, their

Prov. 8. 11.
3. 14. 15. 4. 7.
Job 28. 18.
Nec rude quid proſit video ingenium. Hor. de Art.
Job 28. 15.

their Tendencies and Conſequences; theſe are needful to the getting of Wiſdom, becauſe Truth, which it ſeeketh, commonly doth not lie in the Surface, obvious to a ſuperficial Glance, nor only dependeth on a ſimple Conſideration of few things; but is lodged deep in the Bowels of things, and under a knotty Complication of various Matters; ſo that we muſt dig to come at it, and labour in unfolding it: Nor is it an eaſie Task to void the Prejudices ſpringing from Inclination or Temper, from Education or Cuſtom, from Paſſion and Intereſt, which cloud the Mind, and obſtruct the Attainment of Wiſdom.

If we will have it, we muſt get it as Solomon himſelf did, that great Maſter of it. How was that? I gave, ſaith he, my heart to know wiſdom. He who made it his Option and Choice before all things; who ſo earneſtly and ſo happily did pray for it; upon whom it is ſo expreſly ſaid, that God in a ſpecial manner, and plentiful meaſure did beſtow it; who averreth God to be the ſole Donor of it (for, The Lord, ſaith he, giveth wiſdom, out of his mouth cometh knowledge and underſtanding) yet even he, did firſt give his Heart to it, before it was given into his Heart: He did not only gape for it to receive it by mere Infuſion; but he worked and ſtudied hard for it. He was indeed a great Student, an inquiſitive Searcher into Nature, a curious Obſerver of the World, a profound Conſiderer and Comparer of things; and by that induſtrious Courſe, promoted by Divine Bleſſing, he did arrive to that great Stock of ſo renowned a Wiſdom.

Eccleſ. 1. 17.
2. 3.
1 Kings 3. 9.
4. 29.
Sap 8. 21.
9. 17.
Eccleſ. 2. 26.
Jam. 1. 5.
Prov. 2. 6.

And the ſame Method it is which he preſcribeth to us for getting it; exhorting us, that we incline our ear unto wiſdom, and apply our heart to underſtanding; that we cry after knowledge, and lift up our voice for underſtanding; that we ſeek her as ſilver, and ſearch for her, as for hid treaſures; in following which Courſe he doth aſſure us of good Succeſs; for then (ſaith he) ſhalt thou underſtand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God, which is the head or chief part of Wiſdom; And Bleſſed (ſaith he again, in the Perſon and Place of Wiſdom it ſelf) is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the poſts of my doors; for he that findeth me, findeth life, and ſhall obtain favour of the Lord; It is the way, he ſuppoſeth of finding Wiſdom, to watch aſſiduouſly, to wait diligently upon the means of attaining her; and how infallible the Acquiſt of her is thereby, ſhe doth again by his Mouth thus acquaint us; I love them that love me, and thoſe that ſeek me early ſhall find me; and She (ſaith his Imitatour) is eaſily ſeen of them that love her, and found of ſuch as ſeek her; whoſo ſeeketh her early, ſhall have no great travel, for he ſhall find her ſitting at his doors.

Prov. 22. 3,4.
1. 5.
Prov. 2. 5.
Prov. 8. 34.
Prov. 8. 17.
Sap. 6. 12,13, 14.

This indeed is the only way; Idleneſs is not capable of ſo rich and noble a Purchaſe; a ſlothful Perſon may be conceited (yea needs muſt be ſo) but he can never be wiſe; A ſluggard (ſaith Solomon) is wiſer in his own conceit, than ſeven men that can render a reaſon; this Conceit of Wiſdom is a natural Iſſue of his Ignorance; and 'tis indeed no ſmall part of his Folly, that he doth not perceive it; being no leſs ſtupid in reflection on his own mind, than in conſidering other matters; Being always in a ſlumber, he will often fall into ſuch pleaſant Dreams; and no wonder that he ſhould preſume upon abundance of Knowledge who not liſting to take any Pains in the Search or Diſcuſſion of things, doth ſnatch the firſt Appearances, doth embrace every Suggeſtion of his Fancy, every Conceit, gratifying his Humour for Truth.

Prov. 26. 16.

What ſhould I ſpeak of Learning, or the Knowledge of various things, tranſcending vulgar Apprehenſion? who knoweth not that we cannot otherwiſe reach any part of that than by aſſiduous Study and Contemplation?

tion? who doth not find that all the power in the World is not able to command, nor all the Wealth of the Indies to purchaſe one Notion? who can be ignorant, that no Wit alone, or Strength of Parts can ſuffice, without great Induſtry to frame any Science, to learn any one Tongue, to know the Hiſtory of Nature, or of Providence: It is certainly by Horace's Method,

Multa tulit, fecitque puer,——

by much Exerciſe and Endurance of Pains, that any one can arrive to the Mark of being learned or skilful in any ſort of knowledge.

Qui cupit optatam curſu contingere metam, Multa tulit, fecitque puer, ſudavit & alſit. Hor. de Art.

But farther yet, Vertue, the nobleſt Endowment, and richeſt Poſſeſſion whereof Man is capable; the Glory of our Nature, the Beauty of our Soul, the goodlieſt Ornament, and the firmeſt Support of our Life; that alſo is the Fruit and Bleſſing of Induſtry; that of all things moſt indiſpenſibly doth need and require it. It doth not grow in us by Nature, nor befal us by Fortune; for Nature is ſo far from producing it, that it yieldeth mighty Obſtacles and Reſiſtances to its Birth, there being in the beſt Diſpoſitions much Averſeneſs from good, and great Proneneſs to Evil; Fortune doth not further its Acquiſts, but caſteth in Rubs and Hindrances thereto, every Condition preſenting its Allurements, or its Affrightments from it; all things within us, and about us conſpire to render its Production, and its Practice laborious.

Τῇ μὲν κακίᾳ ἡδονῇ, τῇ δὲ ἀρετῇ συγκεκλήρωται πόνος. Chryſ. in Joh. Or. 26.
Κακία μὲν γὰρ αὐτοδίδακτον· ἀρετὴ δὲ σὺν πόνῳ κτᾶται. Syn. de Provid. 2.

It is ('tis true) a Gift of Heaven, and cannot be obtained without a ſpecial Influence of Divine Grace, but it is given as Children are (of whom it is ſaid, Lo children are an heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is his reward) not without ſore Travel and Labour of the Mother, not without grievous Difficulty and Pangs in the Birth: In our Converſion to embrace Vertue God doth guide us; but to what? to ſit ſtill? No, to walk, to run in his Ways: Grace doth move us, but whereto? to do nothing? No, but to ſtir, and act vigorouſly; The holy Spirit doth help our infirmities; but how could it help them, if we did not conjoin our beſt (though weak) Endeavours with its Operations? to what doth it συναντιλαμβάνειν, or co-help us, but to ſtrive againſt ſin, to work righteouſneſs, to perform Duty with earneſt Intention of Mind, and laborious Activity? God (ſaith St. Chryſoſtome) hath parted vertue with us, and neither hath left all to be in us, leſt we ſhould be elated to pride, nor himſelf hath taken all, leſt we ſhould decline to ſloth *.

Pſal. 127. 3.

Rom. 8. 26. συναντιλαμβάνεται. Heb. 12. 4. Rom. 2. 10. Acts 10. 35.

Ἐμερίσατο πρὸς ἡμᾶς τὴν ἀρετὴν ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ οὔτε ἐφ' ἡμῖν ἀφῆκε τὸ πᾶν εἶναι, ἵνα μὴ εἰς ἀπόνοιαν ἐπαιρώμεθα οὔτε αὐτὸς τὸ πᾶν ἔλαβεν, ἵνα μὴ εἰς ῥαθυμίαν ἀποκλινώμεθα ἀλλ' &c. Chryſ. Tom. 5. Or. 28.

* Οὐδὲ γὰρ ἡ περὶ τὰ καλὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐγχείρησις δίχα τῆς ἄνωθεν βοηθείας τελειωθήσεται· οὐδὲ ἡ ἄνωθεν χάρις ἐπὶ τὸν μὴ σπουδάζοντα παραγένοιτ' ἂν, ἀλλ' ἑκάτερα συγκεκρᾶσθαι προσήκει, σπουδήν τε ἀνθρωπίνην, καὶ τὴν διὰ πίστεως ἄνωθεν καθήκουσαν συμμαχίαν εἰς τελείωσιν ἀρετῆς. Bal Conſt. Mon. cap. 15.

Indeed the very Nature and Eſſence of Vertue doth conſiſt in the moſt difficult and painful Efforts of Soul; in the extirpating rooted Prejudices and Notions from our Underſtanding; in bending a ſtiff Will, and rectifying crooked Inclinations; in over-ruling a rebellious Temper; in curbing eager and importunate Appetites; in taming wild Paſſions; in withſtanding violent Temptations; in ſurmounting many Difficulties, and ſuſtaining many Troubles; in ſtrugling with various unruly Luſts within, and encountring many ſtout Enemies abroad, which aſſault our Reaſon, and war againſt our ſoul: In ſuch Exerciſes its very Being lieth; its Birth, its Growth, its Subſiſtence dependeth on them; ſo that from any Diſcontinuance or Remiſſion of them it would ſoon decay, languiſh away, and periſh.

What Attention, what Circumſpection, and Vigilancy of Mind, what Intention of Spirit, what force of Reſolution, what Command and Care over our ſelves doth it require, to keep our Hearts from vain Thoughts, and evil Deſires; to guard our Tongue from wanton, unjuſt, uncharitable Diſcourſe; to order our Steps uprightly and ſteadily in all the Paths of Duty? ϗ τί ἐκ ἐπίπονον τῶν τῆς ἀρετῆς; and what (as St. Chryſoſtome asketh) of all things belonging to vertne is not laborious? It is no ſmall Task to know it, wherein it conſiſteth, and what is demanded of us; it is a far more painful thing to conform our Practice unto its Rules and Dictates.

Chryſ. in Joh. Or. 36.

If travelling in a rough Way; if climbing up a ſteep Hill; if combating ſtern Foes, and fighting ſharp Battles; if croſſing the Grain of our Nature and Deſires; if continually holding a ſtrict Rein over all our Parts and Powers, be things of Labour and Trouble, then greatly ſuch is the Practice of Vertue.

Τῆς ἀρετῆς ἱδρῶτα θεοὶ προπάροιθεν ἔθηκαν Ἀθάνατοι, μακρός τε ϗ ὄρθιος οἶμος ἐπ᾽ αὐτὴν, Καὶ τρηχύς —

Heſ. ἔργ. α.

Indeed each Vertue hath its peculiar Difficulty, needing much Labour to maſter it: Faith is called ἔργον πίστεως; the work of faith, and it is no ſuch eaſie Work, as may be imagined, to bring our Hearts into a thorough Perſwaſion about Truths croſſing our ſenſual Conceits, and controuling our peeviſh Humours; unto a perfect Submiſſion of our Underſtanding, and Reſignation of our Will to whatever God teacheth or preſcribeth; to a firm Reſolution of adhering to that Profeſſion, which exacteth of us ſo much Pains, and expoſeth us to ſo many Troubles.

1 Theſ. 1. 3.
2 Theſ. 1. 11.
John 6. 29.

Charity is alſo a laborious Exerciſe of many good Works, and he that will practiſe it, muſt in divers ways labour hardly; He muſt labour in voiding from his Soul many Diſpoſitions deeply radicated therein by Nature, Opinion and Cuſtom, (Envy, Frowardneſs, Stubbornneſs, perverſe and vain Selfiſhneſs, from whence Wrath, Revenge, Spite and Malice do ſpring forth:) He muſt labour in effectual Performance of all good Offices, and in catching all Occaſions of doing good; He muſt exert that κόπον ἀγάπης, that labour of love, whereof St. Paul doth ſpeak; He muſt (as that holy Apoſtle directeth, not only in Precept, but by his own Practice) work with his own Hands, that he may ſupply the Wants of his Neighbour.

Gal. 6. 10.
1 Theſ. 1. 3.
Heb. 6. 10.
Eph. 4. 28.
Act. 20. 35.

Hope it ſelf (which one would think, when grounded well, ſhould be a no leſs eaſie than pleaſant Duty) doth need much Labour to preſerve it ſafe, ſtreight and ſtable, among the many Waves and Billows of Temptation aſſaying to ſhake and ſubvert it; whence a patience of hope is recommended to us; and we ſo often are exhorted to hold it faſt, to keep it ſure, firm and unſhaken to the end.

Ἀκλινῆ.
Heb. 10. 23.
Heb. 6. 19.
1 Theſ 1. 3.
Heb. 10. 36.

Heb. 6. 11. Ἐνδείκνυσθαι σπουδήν.
Heb. 3. 6, 14. 2 Pet. 1. 10.

Temperance alſo ſurely demandeth no ſmall Pains; it being no ſlight Buſineſs to check our greedy Appetites, to ſhun the Enticements of Pleaſure, to eſcape the Snares of Company and Example, to ſupport the Ill-Will and Reproaches of thoſe Zealots and Bigots for Vice; who cannot tolerate any Non-conformity to their Extravagancies; but (as St. Peter doth expreſs it) think it ſtrange, if others do not run with them to the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking ill of them for it.

Πάντες ἐξ ἑνὸς στόματος ὑμνοῦσιν ὡς καλὸν μὲν ἡ σωφροσύνη τε ϗ δικαιοσύνη, χαλεπὸν μέν τοι ϗ ἐπίπονον. Plat. de Rep. 2.

1 Pet. 4. 4.

What ſhould I ſpeak of Meekneſs, of Patience, of Humility, of Contentedneſs? Is it not manifeſt how laborious thoſe Vertues are, and what Pains are neceſſary in the obtaining, in the Exerciſe of them? what Pains, I ſay, they require in the Voidance of fond Conceits, in the Suppreſſion of froward Humours, in the quelling fierce Paſſions, in the brooking grievous Croſſes and Adverſities, in the bearing heinous Injuries and Affronts?

Thus doth all Vertue require much Induſtry, and it therefore neceſſarily muſt it ſelf be a great Vertue, which is the Mother, the Nurſe, the Guardian of all Vertues; yea, which indeed is an Ingredient and conſtitutive Part of every Vertue; for if Vertue were eaſily obtainable or practicable without a good meaſure of Pains, how could it be Vertue? what Excellency could it have, what Praiſe could it claim, what Reward could it expect? God hath indeed made the beſt things not eaſily obtainable, hath ſet them high out of our Reach, to exerciſe our Induſtry in getting them, that we might raiſe up our ſelves to them, that being obtained, they may the more deſerve our Eſteem, and his Reward.

Laſtly, the Sovereign Good, the laſt Scope of our Actions, the Top and Sum of our Deſires; Happineſs it ſelf, or Eternal Life in perfect Reſt, Joy and Glory; although it be the ſupreme Gift of God, and ſpecial Boon of di-Rom. 6. 23. Eph. 2. 8. vine Grace (τὸ δὲ χάρισμα τȣ̃ Θεȣ̃, But ſaith St. Paul, the gift of God's grace is eternal life) yet it alſo by God himſelf is declared to be the Reſult and Phil. 2. 12. Reward of Induſtry; for we are commanded to work out our ſalvation with 2 Pet. 1. 10. fear and trembling; and to give diligence in making our calling and election
Rom. 2. 6, 7. ſure, by vertuous Practice, and God (ſaith St. Paul) will render to every 10. 6, 22. man according to his works, to them who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek Glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life; and, in the Cloſe of Apoc. 22. God's Book it is proclaimed, as a Truth of greateſt Moment, and ſpecial Point of God's Will, Bleſſed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life. It is plainly Induſtry, which climbeth Heb. 12. 22. the holy Mount; it is Induſtry which taketh the Kingdom of Heaven by
Mat. 11. 12. 1 Cor. 9. 24. force; it is Induſtry, which ſo runneth as to obtain the Prize; which ſo
Jac. 1. 12. fighteth as to receive the Crown; which ſo watcheth as to ſecure our ever-
Mat. 24. 42. 25. 13. laſting Intereſt to us.

Luc. 12. 37. Thus do the choiceſt good Things, of which we are capable, ſpring
Apoc. 3. 3. from Induſtry, or depend upon it; and no conſiderable Good can be attained without it; thus all the Gifts of God are by it conveyed to us, or are rendred in effect beneficial to us; for the Gifts of Nature are but Capacities which it improveth; the Gifts of Fortune or Providence are but Inſtruments, which it imployeth to our Uſe; the Gifts of Grace are the Supports and Succours of it; and the very Gift of Glory is its Fruit and Recompence.

There are farther ſeveral other material Conſiderations, and weighty Motives to the Practice of this Duty; which Meditation hath ſuggeſted to me; but theſe in regard to your Patience, muſt ſuffice at preſent; the other (together with an Application proper to our Condition and Calling) being reſerved to another Occaſion.

SER-

SERMON XIX.

Of Induſtry in general.

ECCLES. IX. 10.

Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might.

INduſtry, which the Divine Preacher in this Text recommendeth to us, is a Vertue of a very diffuſive Nature and Influence; ſtretching it ſelf through all our Affairs, and twiſting it ſelf with every Concern we have; ſo that no Buſineſs can be well managed, no Deſign accompliſhed, no Good obtained without it: It therefore behoveth us to conceive a high Opinion of it, and to inure our Souls to the Practice of it, upon all Occaſions: In furtherance of which Purpoſes I formerly not long ſince, did propound ſeveral Motives and Inducements; and now proceeding on, ſhall repreſent divers other Conſiderations ſerviceable to the ſame End.

1. We may conſider that Induſtry is productive of Eaſe it ſelf, and preventive of Trouble: It was no leſs ſolidly, than acutely and ſmartly adviſed by the Philoſopher Crates: Whether (ſaid he) labour be to be choſen, labour; or whether it be to be eſchewed, labour, that thou mayeſt not labour; for by not labouring, labour is not eſcaped, but is rather purſued; and St. Chryſoſtome doth upon the ſame Conſideration urge Induſtry, becauſe Sloth (ſaith he) is wont to ſpoil us, and to yield us much pain; No Man can cozen Nature, eſcaping the Labour to which he was born; but rather attempting it, will delude himſelf, then finding moſt, when he ſhunneth all Labour.

Εἰθ᾽ αἱρετὸν ὁ πόνος, πόνει· εἴτε φευκτὸν, πόνει, ἵνα μὴ πονῇς· διὰ γὰρ τοῦ μὴ πονεῖν οὐ φεύγεται πόνος, τῷ δὲ ἐναντίῳ καὶ διώκεται, Crates, Ep. 4.

Ἡ ἀργία διαφθείρειν ἡμᾶς εἴωθε, καὶ πολὺν παρέχει τὸν πόνον. Chryſ. in Joh. Orat. 36.

Sloth indeed doth affect Eaſe and Quiet; but by affecting them doth loſe them; It hateth Labour and Trouble, but by hating them, doth incur them; It is a ſelf-deſtroying Vice, not ſuffering thoſe who cheriſh it, to be idle, but creating much Work, and multiplying Pains unto them; engaging them into divers Neceſſities and Streights, which they cannot ſupport with Eaſe, and out of which without extream Trouble they cannot extricate themſelves: Of this the Preacher doth afford us a plain Inſtance; By much ſlothfulneſs (ſaith he) the building decayeth, and through idleneſs of the hands the houſe droppeth through; A little Care taken at firſt about repairing the Houſe, would have ſaved its Decay and Ruin; and conſequently the vaſt Charge and Trouble, becoming needful to re-edifie it: And the like doth happen in moſt other Caſes and Occurrences of Life: Idleneſs commonly doth let ſlip Opportunities and Advantages, which cannot with Eaſe be retrieved; it letteth things fall into a bad Caſe, out of which they can hardly be recovered.

Eccleſ. 19.12.

The certain Conſequences of it (Diſgrace, Penury, want of Experience; diſobliging and loſing Friends, with all the like Miſchiefs) cannot be ſupported without much Diſquiet; and they diſable a Man from redreſſing the Inconveniences into which he is plunged.

But Induſtry by a little voluntary Labour taken in due Place and Seaſon, doth ſave much neceſſary Labour afterward, and by moderate Care doth prevent intolerable Diſtreſs; and the Fruits of it (Wealth, Reputation, Skill and Dexterity in Affairs, Friendſhips, all Advantages of Fortune) do enable a Man to paſs his Life with great Eaſe, Comfort and Delight.

2. Induſtry doth beget Eaſe by procuring good Habits, and Facility of acting things expedient for us to do. By taking Pains to day we ſhall need leſs Pains to Morrow; and by continuing the Exerciſe, within a while we ſhall need no Pains at all, but perform the moſt difficult Tasks of Duty, or of Benefit to us with perfect Eaſe, yea commonly with great Pleaſure. What ſluggiſh People account hard and irkſome (as to riſe early, to hold cloſe to Study, or Buſineſs, to bear ſome Hardſhip) will be natural and ſweet; as proceeding from another Nature, raiſed in us by Uſe.

Induſtry doth breed Aſſurance and Courage, needful for the undertaking and Proſecution of all neceſſary Buſineſs, or for the Performance of all Duties incumbent on us.

No Man can quite decline Buſineſs, or diſengage himſelf from Duty, without infinite Damage and Miſchief accruing to himſelf; but theſe an induſtrious Man (confiding in this efficacious Quality) will ſet upon with Alacrity, and Diſpatch with Facility, his Diligence voiding Obſtacles and ſmoothing the way to him; whenas Idleneſs finding ſome Difficulties, and fanſying more, ſoon diſheartеneth, and cauſeth a Man to deſiſt from Action, rather chuſing to crouch under the Burthen, than by Endeavour to carry it through, to diſcharge himſelf thereof: Whence as to an Induſtrious Man things ſeeming difficult will prove eaſie, ſo to a ſlothful Perſon the eaſieſt things will appear impoſſible; according to Solomon's Obſervation: The way (ſaith he) of * a ſlothful man is an hedge of thorns, but the way of the upright is made plain; whereas a ſlothful Man, being apt to neglect his Obligations, is oppoſed to an upright Man, who hath a conſcionable regard to them, and is willing to take Pains in the Diſcharge of them: So it is declared, that to the one the way is rough and thorny, to the other beaten and expedite.

* עצל. Prov. 15. 19.
* Ὁδοὶ ἀνεργῶν ἐστρωμέναι, αἱ δὲ τῶν ἀνδρείων τετριμμέναι.

And again, The ſlothful man (ſaith he) doth ſay, there is a Lion without, I ſhall be ſlain in the ſtreets; he is very apt to conceit, or to pretend imaginary Difficulties and Hazards, and thence to be deterred from going about his Buſineſs, or doing his Duty. This Conſideration of S. Chryſoſtome doth propoſe, exciting to an earneſt Purſuit of Vertue; becauſe There is (ſaith he) nothing ſo eaſie which our great ſloth doth not repreſent very grievous and burthenſome; nothing ſo painful and difficult, which Diligence and willingneſs do not ſhew to be very eaſie.

Prov. 22. 13. 26. 13.
Προφασίζεται καὶ λέγει ὀκνηρὸς, Λέων ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς, ἐν δὲ ταῖς πλατείαις φονευταί.

Οὐδὲν οὕτως ἐστὶ ῥᾴδιον, ὃ μὴ σφόδρα βαρὺ καὶ ἐπαχθὲς ὁ πολὺς δείκνυσιν ὄκνος ἡμῶν· ὥσπερ ἐπίπονον καὶ ἢ δυσχερὲς ὃ μὴ λίαν εὔκολον ἡ σπουδὴ καὶ ἡ προθυμία. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 15. p. 144.

Τὰ μὲν ῥᾴδια τοὺς ἀμελοῦντας φεύγει, τὰ δὲ χαλεπὰ ἐπιμελείαις ἁλίσκεται. Plut. de Educ.

3. We may conſider that Induſtry will ſweeten all our Enjoyments, and ſeaſon them with a grateful Reliſh; for as no Man can well enjoy himſelf, or find ſound Content in any thing, while Buſineſs or Duty lie unfiniſhed on his Hand; ſo when he hath done his beſt toward the Diſpatch of his Work, he will then comfortably take his Eaſe, and enjoy his Pleaſure; then his Food doth taſt ſavourily, then his Divertiſements and Recreations have a lively Guſtfulneſs, then his Sleep is very ſound and pleaſant, according to that of the Preacher, The ſleep of a labouring man is ſweet.

Eccleſ. 5. 12. Τοῦ δούλου.

4. Eſpecially thoſe Accommodations prove moſt delightful, which our Induſtry hath procured to us; we looking on them with a ſpecial Tenderneſs of Affection, as on the Children of our Endeavour; we being ſenſible at what Coſts of Care and Pain we did purchaſe them. If a Man getteth Wealth by Fraud or Violence, if he riſeth to Preferment by Flattery, Detraction, or any bad Arts, he can never taſte any good Savour, or find ſound Comfort in them; Aud from what cometh merely by chance, as there is no Commendation due, ſo much Satisfaction will not ariſe: 'Tis the Wiſe-man's Obſervation, The ſlothful man roaſteth not that which he took in hunting, and therefore it cannot be very grateful to him; but (addeth he) the ſubſtance of a diligent man is precious; that is, what a Man compaſſeth by honeſt Induſtry, that he is apt highly to prize; he triumpheth in it, and (in St. Paul's Senſe innocently) boaſteth of it; he feeleth a ſolid Pleaſure, and a pure Complacency therein; the manner of getting it doth more pleaſe him than the thing it ſelf; as true Hunters do love the Sport more than the Quarry, and generous Warriours more rejoice in the Victory than in the Spoil; For our ſoul (as St. Chryſoſtome diſcourſeth) is more affected with thoſe things, for which it hath laboured; for which Reaſon (addeth he) God hath mix'd Labours with Vertue it ſelf, that he might endear it to us. Yea, farther, Cui ſit conditio dulcis ſine pulvere palmæ? Hor. Ep. l. 1.

Prov. 12. 27.

1 Cor. 9. 15.

Περὶ ἐκεῖνα μᾶλλον ἡ ψυχὴ διακεῖται, ὑπὲρ ὧν ἔκαμε· διὰ τοῦτο καὶ πόνους ἀνέμιξεν ἀρετῇ οἰκειῶσαι αὐτῇ ταύτην βουλόμενος. Chryſ. in Joh. Orat. 36.

5. The very Exerciſe of Induſtry immediately in it ſelf is delightful, and hath an innate Satisfaction which tempereth all Annoyances, and even ingratiateth the Pains going with it.

The very Settlement of our Mind on fit Objects, or its Acquieſcence in determinate Action, conducing to a good End, whereby we are freed of Doubt, Diſtraction, and faſtidious Liſtleſneſs, doth miniſter Content.

The Reflexion upon our having embraced a wiſe Choice, our Proceeding in a fair Way, our being in chace of a good Purpoſe, doth breed Complacence.

To conſider that we are ſpending our time accomptably, and improving our Talents to good Advantage (to the Service of God, the Benefit of our Neighbour, the bettering of our own State) is very chearing and comfortable.

And whereas In all Labour (as the Wiſe-man telleth us) there is profit, the Foreſight of that Profit affordeth Pleaſure, the foretaſting the good Fruits of our Induſtry is very delicious.

Prov. 14. 23.

Hope indeed doth ever wait on Induſtry: And what is more delightful than Hope? This is the Incentive, the Support, the Condiment of all honeſt Labour; in Virtue whereof the Husbandman toileth, the Merchant trudgeth, the Scholar ploddeth, the Soldier dareth with Alacrity and Courage, not reſenting any Pains, not regarding any Hazards which attend their Undertakings: This the holy Apoſtles tell us did enable them with Joy to ſuſtain all their painful Work, and hazardous Warfare; enjoining us alſo as to work with fear, ſo to rejoice in hope.

1 Cor. 9. 10.
——ipſa operis difficultate lætus ſpem ſegetis de labore metitur, Apud Aug. Ep. 142.
Rom. 12. 12. 5. 2. Heb. 3. 6.
1 Tim. 4. 10. Col. 1. 5.
2 Cor. 3. 12. 1 John 3. 3.
Pet. 1. 3. Tit. 2. 13.

In fine, Induſtry doth free us from great Diſpleaſure, by redeeming us from the Moleſtations of Idleneſs, which is the moſt tedious and irkſome thing in the World, racking our Soul with anxious Suſpence, and perplexing Diſtraction; ſtarving it for want of ſatisfactory Entertainment, or cauſing it to feed on its own Heart by doleful Conſiderations; infeſting it

Otio qui neſcit uti plus habet negotii, &c.—— Otioſo in otio animus neſcit quid quidem velit, &c. Ennius apud Agel. 19. 10.

with

Καὶ τί ἀηδέστερον γένοιτ' ἂν ἀνθρώπου οὐδὲν ἔχοντος ποιεῖν; τί μοχθηρότερον; τί ταλαιπωρότερον; μυρίων οὐ χεῖρον τοῦτο δεσμῶν, χασμᾶσθαι καὶ κεχηνέναι διαπαντὸς ἐπὶ τῆς ἀγορᾶς καθήμενον, ὁρῶντα τοὺς παριόντας, Chryſ. in Act. Or. 35.

Otium eſt vivi hominis ſepultura.

with Crowds of frivolous melancholick, troubleſome ſtinging Thoughts; galling it with a Senſe of our ſquandring away precious time, of our ſlipping fair Opportunities, of our not uſing the Abilities and Advantages granted us, to any Profit or Fruit: Whence St. Chryſoſtome ſaith very truly, that there is nothing more unpleaſant, more painful, more miſerable than a Man that hath nothing to do: Is not this (ſaith he) worſe than ten thouſand Chains, to hang in ſuſpence, and be continually gaping, looking on thoſe who are preſent? Indeed the ſtricteſt Impriſonment is far more tolerable, than being under Reſtraint by a lazy Humour from profitable Employment: This enchaineth a Man, hand and foot, with more than Iron Fetters: This is beyond any Impriſonment; It is the very Entombment of a Man, quite in Effect ſequeſtring him from the World, or debarring him from any valuable Concerns therein. And if Liberty be ἐξουσία αὐτοπραγίας, a power of doing what one liketh beſt; then is he, who by his Sloth is diſabled from doing any thing wherein he can find any reaſonable Satisfaction, the verieſt Slave that can be; from which Slavery Induſtry freeing us, and diſpoſing us to perform chearfully whatever is convenient, thereby doeth us a great Pleaſure. Farther, Diu fuit, non diu vixit.

Matth. 25. 26.

6. Let us conſider, that Induſtry doth afford a laſting Comfort, depoſited in the Memory and Conſcience of him that practiſeth it. It will ever upon his reviewing the Paſſages of his Life, be ſweet to him to behold in them Teſtimonies and Monuments of his Diligence; it will pleaſe him to conſider, that he hath lived to purpoſe, having done ſomewhat conſiderable! that he hath made an advantageous uſe of his time; that he hath well husbanded the Talents committed to him; that he hath accompliſh'd (in ſome meaſure) the Intents of God's Bounty, and made ſome Return for his excellent Gifts. What Comfort indeed can any Man have, yea, how ſore Remorſe muſt he feel in reflecting upon a Life ſpent in unfruitful and unprofitable Idleneſs? How can he otherwiſe than bewail his Folly and Baſeneſs in having lived (or rather having only been) in vain; as the Shadow and Appearance of a Man; in having laviſhed his Days, in having buried his Talents, in having imbezilled his Faculties of Nature, and his Advantages from Providence; in having defeated the good Will of God, and endeavour'd no Requital to the munificent Goodneſs of his Maker, of his Preſerver, his benign Lord and Maſter, his gracious Saviour and Redeemer? how without Confuſion, can he in his Mind revolve, that he hath no-wiſe benefited the World, and profited his Neighbour, or obliged his Friends, or rendred to his Country, (to the Society, or Community of which he is a Member) amends for all the Safety and Quiet, the Support, the Convenience, and the Pleaſure he hath enjoyed under its Protection, and in its Boſom? that he hath not born a competent Share in the common Burthens, or paid a due Contribution of his Care and Labour to the publick Welfare? How can ſuch a Man look inward upon himſelf with a favourable Eye, or pardon himſelf for ſo loathſome Defaults?

7. Let us conſider, that Induſtry doth argue a generous and ingenuous Complection of Soul.

It implieth a Mind not content with mean and vulgar things (ſuch as Nature dealeth to all, or Fortune ſcattereth about) but aſpiring to things of high worth, and purſuing them in a brave Way, with adventurous Courage, by its own Forces, through Difficulties and Obſtacles.

It ſignifieth in a Man a Heart, not enduring to owe the Suſtenance or Convenience of his Life to the Labour or the Liberality of others; to pilfer a Livelihood from the World; to reap the Benefit of other Mens Care and Toil, without rendring a full Compenſation, or out-doing his private Obligations by conſiderable Service and Beneficence to the Publick.

A noble Heart will diſdain to ſubſiſt like a Drone upon the Hony gathered by others Labour; like a Vermin to filch its Food out of the publick Granary; or like a Shark to prey on the leſſer Fry; but will one way or other earn his Subſiſtence: For he that doth not earn, can hardly own his Bread, as St. Paul implieth, when he ſaith, Them that are ſuch we command and exhort by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work, and eat their own bread.

2 Theſſ. 3. 12. Τὸν ἑαυτῶν ἄρτον.

Of this generous Ingenuity we have a notable Inſtance in that great Apoſtle himſelf; which he doth often repreſent as a Pattern to us, profeſſing much Complacence therein; He with all Right and Reaſon might have challenged a comfortable Subſiſtence from his Diſciples, in recompence for the incomparable Benefits he did confer on them, and of the exceſſive Pains he did endure for their Good; this he knew well, but yet did rather chuſe to ſupport himſelf by his own Labour, than any wiſe to ſeem burthenſome or troubleſome to them: Theſe hands (ſaid he) have miniſtred to my neceſſities, and to them that are with me; I have ſhewed you all things, that ſo labouring ye ought to ſupport the weak, and to remember the words of our Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give than to receive. This was the Practice of him, who was in Labours moſt abundant; and ſuch is the Genius of every Man, who upon Principles of Conſcience, Reaſon and Honour, is induſtrious. Of him it may be ſaid, as of Solomon's good Houſewife; She ſeeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands; ſhe is like the merchants ſhip, ſhe bringeth her food from afar; ſhe looketh well to her houſhold, and eateth not the bread of idleneſs.

1 Cor. 9. 15.
2 Theſſ. 3. 9.
1 Cor. 9. 11.
1 Theſſ. 2. 6.
Acts 20. 34, 35. 18 3.
1 Theſſ. 2. 9.
2 Theſſ. 3. 8.
1 Cor 4. 12.
2 Cor. 11. 9.
2 Cor. 11. 23.
Prov. 31. 13, 14, 27.

Sloth is a baſe Quality, the Argument of a Mind wretchedly degenerate and mean; which is content to grovel in a deſpicable State; which aimeth at no worthy thing, nor purſueth any thing in a laudable way; which diſpoſeth a Man to live gratis (precariouſly) and ingratefully on the publick Stock, as an inſignificant Cypher among Men, as a Burthen of the Earth, as a Wen of any Society; ſucking aliment from it, but yielding no Benefit or Ornament thereto.

8. Induſtry is a Fence to Innocence and Vertue; a Bar to all kind of Sin and Vice, guarding the Avenues of our Heart keeping off the Occaſions and Temptations to vicious Practice. When a Man is engaged in honeſt Employment, and ſeriouſly intent thereon, his Mind is prepoſſeſſed and filled, ſo that there is no room or vacancy for ill thoughts, or baſe Deſigns to creep in; his Senſes do not lie open to enſnaring Objects; he wants Leiſure and Opportunity of granting Audience to the Sollicitations of ſinful Pleaſure; and is apt to anſwer them with a non vacat; the Devil can hardly find Advantage of tempting him, at leaſt many Devils cannot get Acceſs to him, according to that Obſervation in Caſſian, A working Monk is aſſaulted by one Devil, but an idle one is ſpoiled by numberleſs bad Spirits. The Caſe of Men ordinarily is like to that of Ægyſthus.

Semper te diabolus inveniat occupatum. Bern. form. hom. v. cap. 7.

Operans monachus uno dæmone pulſatur, otioſus verò innumeris Spiritibus devaſtatur, Caſſ. de Inſtit. 10. 23.

—ne nil ageretur, amavit,

Ovid de Remed.

rather than do nothing, he was ready to do ill; he not having Buſineſs to employ his Thoughts, wanton Deſires did inſinuate themſelves into his Heart, and tranſported him to that diſaſtrous Wickedneſs, which ſupplied Matter to ſo many Tragedies: And the like Inſtance the Sacred Hiſtory ſuggeſted in King David, who walking ('tis ſaid) on the roof of his houſe, his his Mind then roving, and being untacked from honeſt Cares, that Temptation ſeized on him, whereby he was plunged into that woful Miſdemeanour, which did create to him ſo much Sorrow, did make ſuch a ſpot in his Life, and leave ſuch a Blur on his Memory, whence yet we may draw ſome Benefit, taking it as a profitable Document and Warning, how Idleneſs doth expoſe the beſt Men to Danger.

2 Sam. 11. 2.

Idleneſs is indeed the Nurſery of Sins, which as naturally grow up therein as Weeds in a neglected Field, or Inſects in a ſtanding Puddle; Ecclus. 33. 27. Idleneſs teacheth much evil. It is the general Trap, whereby every Tempter aſſayeth to catch our Soul: For the Mind being looſe from Care, Satan is ready to ſtep in with his Suggeſtions, the World preſenteth its Allurements, fleſhly Deſires riſe up; proud, froward, wanton Cogitations ſlip in; ill Company doth entice, ill Example is regarded, every Temptation doth object and impreſs it ſelf with great Advantage and Force; Men in ſuch a caſe being apt to cloſe and comply with Temptations, even to divert their Mind, and entertain themſelves, to cure their Liſtleſneſs, to paſs their time, committing Sin, for want of better Occupation. Hence in Places, where there is leaſt Work, the worſt Sins do moſt prevail; and Idleneſs therefore was by the Prophet reckoned one of the three great Sins of Sodom, Parents of the reſt: Behold (ſaith Ezekiel) this was the iniquity of thy ſiſter Sodom; pride, fulneſs of bread, and abundance of idleneſs was in her: Ezek. 16. 49. Hence it ſeldom doth happen in any way of Life, that a Sluggard and a Rake-hell do not go together, or that he who is idle, is not alſo diſſolute.

——ſi non Intendes animum ſtudiis, & rebus honeſtis, Invidia vel amore vigil torquebere——
Hor. Ep. 1. 2.

9. Particularly Induſtry doth prevent the Sins of vain Curioſity, Pragmaticalneſs, troubleſome Impertinency, and the like Peſts of common Life, into which Perſons not diligently following their own Buſineſs, will aſſuredly fall. We hear (ſaith St. Paul to the Theſſalonians) that there are ſome who walk among you diſorderly, working not at all, but are buſie-bodies; 'tis no wonder, if they did not work at all, that they ſhould walk diſorderly; or that quite neglecting their own Concerns, they ſhould περιεργάζεσθαι, overwork, or be too buſie in matters not belonging to them, intruding themſelves into the Affairs of their Neighbours: For there is a natural Connection between theſe things, ſince every Man muſt be thinking, muſt be doing, muſt be ſaying ſomewhat, to ſpend his Leiſure, to uphold Converſation, to pleaſe himſelf and gratifie others, to appear ſomebody among his Companions: to avoid the Shame of being quite out of Employment: Wherefore not having the Heart to mind his own Affairs, he will take the Boldneſs to meddle with the Concerns of other Men: If he cannot have the Subſtance, he will ſet up an Idol of Buſineſs, and ſeem very active in his Impertinency. In order thereto, being curiouſly inquiſitive, and prying into the Diſcourſe, Actions and Affairs of all Men. This Men are apt to do in their own Defence: and beſides, Idleneſs doth put Men into a looſe, gariſh, wanton Humour, diſpoſing them without Heed or Regard to meddle with any thing, to prattle at any rate. In fine, whoever hath no Work at home, will be gadding to ſeek Entertainment abroad, like thoſe Goſſips of whom St. Paul ſaith, 1 Tim. 5. 3. They learn to be idle, wandring about from houſe to houſe; and not only idle, but tatlers alſo, and buſie bodies, ſpeaking things which they ought not: If indeed we conſider, all the frivolous and petulant Diſcourſe, the impertinent Chattings, the raſh Cenſures, the ſpiteful Detractions which are ſo rife in the World, and ſo much Poiſon all Converſation, we ſhall find the main Root of them to be a want of Induſtry

2 Theſſ. 3. 11.
Μηδὲν ἐργαζομένους, ἀλλὰ περιεργαζομένους, Working nothing, but overworking.

duſtry in Men, or of diligent Attendance on their own Matters; which would ſo much take up their Spirit and time, that they would have little Heart or Leiſure to ſearch into, or comment upon other Mens Actions and Concerns.

10. Let us conſider that Induſtry is needful in every Condition and Station, in every Calling and way of Life, in all relations, for our good Behaviour, and right Diſcharge of our Duty in them. Without it we cannot in any ſtate act decently, or uſefully, either to the Benefit and Satiſfaction of others, or to our own Advantage and Comfort.

Are we rich? then is Induſtry requiſite for keeping and ſecuring our Wealth, for managing it wiſely, for employing it to its proper Uſes, and beſt Advantages; (in the ſervice of God, in Beneficence to our Neighbour, in advancing publick Good) ſo that we may render a good Accompt to him who hath entruſted us with the Stewardſhip thereof: Induſtry is very needful to guard us from the Temptations and Miſchiefs to which Wealth doth expoſe us, that it do not prove a treacherous Snare, an unweildy Burthen, a deſtructive Poiſon and Plague to us, throwing us into Pride and Vanity, into Luxury, into Stupidity, into diſtracting Solicitude, into a baſe worldly and earthly temper of Heart, into a prophane Oblivion of God, and of our own Souls.

Are we in conſpicuous Rank of Dignity, or in Honour and Repute among Men? then is Induſtry requiſite to keep us faſt in that State, to hold us from tumbling from that Pinacle down into extream Diſgrace; for then all Eyes are upon us, ſtrictly obſerving what we do, and ready to paſs Cenſure on our Actions; ſo that great Diligence is neceſſary to approve our ſelves, and ſhun Obloquy. Nothing is more brittle than Honour, every little thing hitting on it, is able to break it, and therefore without exceeding Care we cannot preſerve it; Nothing is more variable or fickle than the Opinions of Men (wherein Honour conſiſteth) it is therefore no eaſie matter to fix or detain them in the ſame Place.

Vitrea fama Hor.
Eccl. 10. 1.

Honour cannot live without Food or Fuel; it muſt be nouriſhed by worthy Actions; without a continual Supply of them, it will decay, languiſh, and pine away: Induſtry therefore is required to keep it; and no leſs is neceſſary to uſe it well, in a due Subordination to God's Honour, and Reference to his Service, that inſtead of an Ornament and Convenience, it do not prove a baneful Miſchief to us; puffing up our Minds with vain Conceits and Complacencies, inclining us to Arrogance and Contempt of others, tempting us by aſſuming to our ſelves to rob God of his due Glory; to decline which Evils great Care is requiſite; we muſt have a ſteady Ballaſt, and we muſt hold the Rudder warily, when we carry ſo great Sail.

On the other hand, are we poor and low in the World; or do we lie under Diſgrace? then do we much need Induſtry to ſhun Extremities of Want and Ignominy; that we be not ſwallow'd up and overwhelm'd by Need or Contempt; to ſupport us under our Preſſures, to keep up our Spirits from Dejection and Diſconſolateneſs; to preſerve us from impious Diſcontentedneſs and Impatience: Induſtry is the only Remedy of that Condition, enabling us to get out of it, retrieving a Competence of Wealth or Credit; or diſpoſing us to bear it handſomely, and with Comfort; ſo as not to become forlorn or abject Wretches.

It is ſo needful to every Condition; and it is ſo for all Vocations; for,

Is a Man a Governour, or a Superiour in any Capacity? Then what is he but a publick Servant doom'd to continual Labour, hired for the Wages of Reſpect and Pomp to wait on his People; in providing for their Needs, protecting their Safety, preſerving their Peace and Welfare; where is he but on a Stage, whereon he cannot well act his part, without vigilant Attendance to his Charge, and conſtant Activity in performing all the Functions thereof ? He is engag'd in great Obligations and Neceſſities of uſing extream Diligence, both in regard to himſelf and others. Homer's Deſcription of a Prince is a good one ; One who hath much People and many Cares committed to him :

Ὦ λαοί τ' ἐπιτετράφαται, ϗ τόσσα μέμηλε.

He muſt watchfully look to his own Steps, who is to guide others by his Authority and his Example. All his Actions require ſpecial Conduct, not only his own Credit and Intereſt, but the common Welfare depending thereon. He muſt heedfully adviſe what to do, he muſt diligently execute what he reſolveth on. He hath the moſt ticklish things that can be (the Rights and Intereſts, the Opinions and Humours of Men) to manage. He hath his own Affections to curb and guide, that they be not perverted by any ſiniſter Reſpects, not ſwayed by any unjuſt Partiality, not corrupted by Flattery or Fear. He will find, that to wield Power innocently, to brandiſh the Sword of Juſtice diſcreetly and worthily, for the Maintenance of Right, and Encouragement of Vertue, for the Suppreſſion of Injury, and Correction of Vice is a matter of no ſmall Skill or ſlight Care.

Induſtry is indeed a Quality moſt proper for Perſons of high Rank and Dignity, or of great Power and Authority ; who have ſpecial Opportunities to employ it in weighty Affairs to great Advantage ; whoſe Undertakings being of vaſt moment do need anſwerable Efforts to move and guide them : The Induſtry of a Mechanick, or a Ruſtick, acting in a low and narrow Sphere can effect no great Matter, and therefore it ſelf need not to be great ; but the Induſtry of a Prince, of a Nobleman, of a Gentleman may have a large and potent Influence, ſo as to render a Nation, a County, a Town, happy, proſperous, glorious, flouriſhing in Peace, in Plenty, in Vertue ; it therefore for atchieving ſuch Purpoſes need be, and ſhould be proportionably great ; a ſmall Power not being able to move a great Weight, nor a weak Cauſe to produce a mighty Effect. Wherefore Cicero recommending Pompey for a publick Charge, doth reckon theſe to be the Imperatoriæ virtutes, Qualities befitting a Prince or General, wherein he did excel, labour in buſineſs, Valour in Dangers, Induſtry in acting, Nimbleneſs in Performance, Counſel in providing.—— And Alexander the Great, reflecting on his Friends degenerating into Sloth and Luxury, told them, that it was a moſt ſlaviſh thing to luxuriate, and a moſt royal thing to labour.

Labor in negotio, fortitudo in periculis, induſtria in agendo, celeritas in conficiendo, conſilium in providendo, &c. Cic. pro lege Manil.

Δουλικώτατόν ἐστι τὸ τρυφᾶν, βασιλικώτατόν δὲ πονεῖν, Plut. in Alex. p. 1262.

And for thoſe who move in a lower Orb of Subjection or Service, I need not ſhew how needful Induſtry is for them : Who knoweth not that to be a good Subject, doth exact a careful Regard to the Commands of Superiours, and a painful Diligence in obſerving them ? that to make a good Servant, Fidelity and Diligence muſt concur ; whereof the firſt doth ſuppoſe the laſt, it being a part of Honeſty in a Servant to be diligent ; whence δοῦλε πονηρὲ ϗ ὀκνηρὲ, O thou wicked and ſlothful Servant, were in the Goſpel well coupled ; and the firſt Epithet was grounded on the ſecond, he being therefore wicked, becauſe he had been ſlothful.

Mat. 25. 26.

Neither can a Man be a true Friend, or a good Neighbour, or any-wiſe a good Relative, without Induſtry diſpoſing him to undergo Pains, in performing good Offices, whenever Need doth require, or Occaſion invite.

In fine, it is palpable, that there is no Calling of any ſort, from the Sceptre to the Spade, the Management whereof with any good Succeſs, any Credit, any Satisfaction doth not demand much Work of the Head, or of the Hand, or of both.

If Wit or Wiſdom be the Head, if Honeſty be the Heart, Induſtry is the Right Hand of every Vocation; without which the ſhrewdeſt Inſight and the beſt Intention can execute nothing.

A Sluggard is qualified for no Office, no Calling, no Station among Men, he is a mere No-body; taking up room, peſtering and clogging the World.

11. It alſo may deſerve our Conſideration, that it is Induſtry, whereto the publick State of the World, and of each Commonweal therein is indebted for its being, in all Conveniencies and Embelliſhments belonging to Life, advanc'd above rude and ſordid Barbariſm; yea whereto Mankind doth owe all that good Learning, that Morality, thoſe Improvements of Soul, which elevate us beyond Brutes.

To induſtrious Study is to be aſcribed the Invention and Perfection of all thoſe Arts whereby Human Life is civilized, and the World cultivated with numberleſs Accommodations, Ornaments and Beauties.

All the comely, the ſtately, the pleaſant, and uſeful Works, which we do view with Delight, or enjoy with Comfort, Induſtry did contrive them, Induſtry did frame them.

Induſtry reared thoſe magnificent Fabricks, and thoſe commodious Houſes; it formed thoſe goodly Pictures and Statues; it raiſed thoſe convenient Cauſeys, thoſe Bridges, thoſe Aqueducts; it planted thoſe fine Gardens with various Flowers and Fruits; it cloathed thoſe pleaſant Fields with Corn and Graſs, it built thoſe Ships, whereby we plough the Seas, reaping the Commodities of foreign Regions. It hath ſubjected all Creatures to our Command and Service, enabling us to ſubdue the fierceſt, to catch the wildeſt, to render the gentler ſort moſt tractable and uſeful to us. It taught us from the Wool of the Sheep, from the Hair of the Goat, from the Labours of the Silk-worm to weave us Cloaths to keep us warm, to make us fine and gay. It helpeth us from the inmoſt Bowels of the Earth to fetch divers needful Tools and Utenſils.

It collected Mankind into Cities, and compacted them into orderly Societies, and deviſed wholſome Laws under ſhelter whereof we enjoy Safety and Peace, Wealth and Plenty, mutual Succour and Defence, ſweet Converſation and beneficial Commerce.

It by Meditation did invent all thoſe Sciences whereby our Minds are enriched and enabled, our Manners are refined and poliſhed, our Curioſity is ſatisfied, our Life is benefited.

Ut varias uſus meditando extunderet artes Paulatim, &c. Virg. Georg. I.

What is there, which we admire, or wherein we delight, that pleaſeth our Mind, or gratifieth our Senſe, for the which we are not beholden to Induſtry?

Doth any Country flouriſh in Wealth, in Grandeur, in Proſperity? it muſt be imputed to Induſtry, to the Induſtry of its Governours ſetling good Order, to the Induſtry of its People following profitable Occupations: So did Cato, in that notable Oration of his in Salluſt, tell the Roman Senate, that it was not by the Force of their Arms, but by the Induſtry of their Anceſtors that Commonwealth did ariſe to ſuch a Pitch of Greatneſs. When Sloth creepeth in, then all things corrupt and decay; then the publick State doth ſink into Diſorder, Penury, and a diſgraceful Condition.

Cato apud Sal. in bello Catil.

12. Induſtry is commended to us by all ſorts of Example, deſerving our Regard and Imitation. All Nature is a Copy thereof, and the whole World a Glaſs, wherein we may behold this Duty repreſented to us.

We may eaſily obſerve every Creature about us inceſſantly working toward the End for which it was deſigned, indefatigably exerciſing the Powers with which it is endued; diligently obſerving the Laws of its Creation. Even Beings void of Reaſon, of Senſe, of Life it ſelf do ſuggeſt unto us Reſemblances of Induſtry; they being ſet in continual Action toward the effecting reaſonable Purpoſes, conducing to the Preſervation of their own Beings, or to the Furtherance of common Good.

The Heavens do rowl about with unwearied Motion, the Sun and Stars do perpetually dart their Influences; the Earth is ever labouring in the Birth and Nouriſhment of Plants; the Plants are drawing Sap, and ſprouting out Fruits and Seeds (to feed us, and propagate themſelves;) the Rivers are running, the Seas are toſſing, the Winds are bluſtering to keep the Elements ſweet, in which we live.

Prov. 6. 6.

Solomon ſendeth us to the Ant, and biddeth us to conſider her ways (which provideth her meat in the ſummer, and gathereth her food in the harveſt) many ſuch Inſtructers we may find in Nature; the like induſtrious Providence we may obſerve in every living Creature; we may ſee this running about, that ſwimming, another flying in Purveyance of its Food and Support.

If we look up higher to rational and intelligent Natures, ſtill more noble and appoſite Patterns do object themſelves to us.

Here below every Field, every Shop, every Street, the Hall, the Exchange, the Court it ſelf (all full of Buſineſs, and Fraught with the Fruits of Induſtry) do mind us how neceſſary Induſtry is to us.

2 Cor. 11.27.

If we conſult Hiſtory, we ſhall there find, that the beſt Men have been moſt induſtrious; that all great Perſons, renowned for heroical Goodneſs (the worthy Patriarchs, the holy Prophets, the bleſſed Apoſtles) were for this moſt commendable, that neglecting their private Eaſe, they did undertake difficult Enterprizes, they did undergo painful Labours for the benefit of Mankind, they did paſs their Days, like St. Paul, ἐν κόποις ϗ μόχθοις: in labours and toilſome pains for thoſe Purpoſes.

Acts 10.

Our great Example, the Life of our bleſſed Lord himſelf, what was it but one continual Exerciſe of Labour? His Mind did ever ſtand bent in careful Attention, ſtudying to do good; his Body was ever moving in weariſome Travel to the ſame Divine intent.

Σῷ ϗ θρόνῳ πυρόεντι παρεςᾶσιν πολύμοχθοι Ἄγγελοι. Orph.
Pſ. 103. 21, 22.
Pſal. 34. 8.
91. 11.
Heb. 1. 14.

If we yet ſoar farther in our Meditation to the ſuperiour Regions we ſhall there find the bleſſed Inhabitants of Heaven, the Courtiers and Miniſters of God, very buſie and active; They do vigilantly wait on God's Throne in readineſs to receive and to diſpatch his Commands; they are ever on the Wing, and fly about like Lightning to do his pleaſure. They are attentive to our Needs, and ever ready to protect, to aſſiſt, to relieve us! Eſpecially, they are diligent Guardians, and Succourers of good Men; officious ſpirits, ſent forth to miniſter for the heirs of ſalvation; ſo even the Seat of perfect Reſt is no Place of Idleneſs.

Gen. 2. 2. John 5. 27.

Pſal. 121. 3. 127. 1. Zech. 4. 10: 2 Chron. 16. 9.

O tu bone omnipotens, qui ſic curas unumquemque noſtrum tanquam ſolum cures, & ſic omnes tanquam ſingulos. Aug. Conf. 4. 11.

Yea, God himſelf, although immoveably and infinitely happy, is yet immenſely careful, and everlaſtingly buſie: He reſted once from that great Work of Creation; but yet my father (ſaith our Lord) worketh ſtill; and he never will reſt from his Works of Providence, and of Grace. His Eyes continue watchful over the World, and his Hands ſtretched out in upholding it. He hath a ſingular Regard to every Creature, ſupplying the Needs of each, and ſatiſfying the deſires of all.

Pſal. 145. 15, 16.
(Prov. 5. 21. 15. 3.
Pſal. 34. 15.
Gen. 31. 49.
Jer. 31. 18.

And ſhall we alone be idle, while all things are ſo buſie? ſhall we keep our Hands in our Boſom, or ſtretch our ſelves on our Beds of Lazineſs, while all the World about us is hard at work, in purſuing the Deſigns of its Creation? Shall we be wanting to our ſelves, while ſo many things la-labour for our Benefit ? Shall not ſuch a Cloud of Examples ſtir us to ſome Induſtry, not to comply with ſo univerſal a Practice, to croſs all the World, to diſagree with every Creature, is it not very monſtrous and extravagant?

I ſhould cloſe all this Diſcourſe with that, at which, in pitching on this Subject I chiefly did aim, an Application exhortatory to our ſelves, urging the Practice of this Vertue by Conſiderations peculiar to us as Scholars, and derived from the Nature of our Calling ; but the doing this, requiring a larger Diſcourſe than the time now will allow. I ſhall reſerve it to another Occaſion ; adding only one Conſideration more.

13. Laſtly, if we conſider, we ſhall find the Root and Source of all the Inconveniences, the Miſchiefs, the Wants, of which we are ſo apt to complain, to be our Sloth ; and that there is hardly any of them, which commonly we might not eaſily prevent or remove by Induſtry : Why is any Man a Beggar, why contemptible, why ignorant, why vicious, why miſerable ? why, but for this one Reaſon, becauſe he is ſlothful ! becauſe he will not labour to rid himſelf of thoſe Evils ? What could we want, if we would but take the Pains to ſeek it, either by our Induſtry, or by our Devotion ? for where the firſt will not do, the ſecond cannot fail, to procure any good thing from him, who giveth to all men liberally, and hath promiſed to ſupply the Defect of our Ability by his free Bounty ; ſo that if we join theſe two Induſtries (induſtrious Action, and induſtrious Prayer) there is nothing in the World ſo good, or ſo great, of which, if we are capable, we may not aſſuredly become Maſters: And even for Induſtry it ſelf, eſpecially in the Performance of all our Duties towards God, let us induſtriouſly pray: Even ſo, The God of peace ſanctifie us wholly ; and make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working in us that which is well pleaſing in his ſight ; through our bleſſed Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to whom for ever be all glory and praiſe. Amen.

Jac. 1. 5.

Δέησις ἐνεργουμένη.
Jam. 5. 16.
Προσκαρτέρησις.
Eph. 6. 18.
Rom. 12. 12.
Col. 4. 2.
1 Theſſ. 5. 23.
Heb. 13. 20.

SERMON XX.

Of Induſtry in our general Calling, as Chriſtians.

ROM. XII. 11.

Not ſlothful in Buſineſs.

INduſtry is a very eminent Vertue, being an Ingredient (or the Parent) of all other Vertues, of conſtant uſe upon all Occaſions, and having Influence upon all our Affairs.

Τῇ σπουδῇ μὴ ὀκνηροί.
Solicitudine non pigri. Vulg.

For it is our Nature framed ; all our Powers of Soul and Body being fitted for it, tending to it, requiring it for their Preſervation and Perfection.

We were deſigned for it in our firſt happy ſtate; and upon our lapſe thence were farther doomed to it, as the ſole Remedy of our Needs and the Inconveniences to which we became expoſed. For,

Without it we cannot well ſuſtain or ſecure our Life in the Enjoyment of any Comfort or Convenience; we muſt work to earn our Food, our Cloathing, our Shelter; and to ſupply every Indigency of Accommodations, which our Nature doth crave.

To it God hath annexed the beſt and moſt deſirable Rewards; Succeſs to our Undertakings, Wealth, Honour, Wiſdom, Vertue, Salvation; all which as they flow from God's Bounty, and depend on his Bleſſing; ſo from them they are uſually convey'd to us through our Induſtry, as the ordinary Chanel and Inſtrument of attaining them.

It is requiſite to us, even for procuring Eaſe, and preventing a Neceſſity of immoderate Labour.

It is in it ſelf ſweet and ſatisfactory; as freeing our Mind from Diſtraction, and wrecking Irreſolution; as feeding us with good Hope, and yielding a Foretaſte of its good Fruits.

It furniſheth us with Courage to attempt, and Reſolution to atchieve things needful, worthy of us, and profitable to us.

It is attended with a good Conſcience, and chearful Reflections of having well ſpent our time, and employed our Talents to good Advantage.

It ſweeteneth our Enjoyments, and ſeaſoneth our Attainments with a delightful Reliſh.

It is the Guard of Innocence, and barreth our Temptations to Vice, to Wantonneſs, to vain Curioſity and Pragmaticalneſs.

It argueth an ingenuous and generous Diſpoſition of Soul; aſpiring to worthy things, and purſuing them in the faireſt Way; diſdaining to enjoy the common Benefits, or the Fruits of other Men's Labour without deſerving them from the World, and requiting it for them.

It is neceſſary for every Condition and Station, for every Calling, for every Relation; no Man without it being able to deport himſelf well in any State, to manage any Buſineſs, to diſcharge any ſort of Duty.

To it the World is indebted for all the Culture, which advanceth it above rude and ſordid Barbariſm; for whatever in common Life is ſtately, or comely, or uſeful, Induſtry hath contrived it, Induſtry hath compoſed and framed it.

It is recommended to us by all ſort of Patterns conſiderable; for all Nature is continually buſie and active in Tendency toward its proper Deſigns; Heaven and Earth do work in unceſſant Motion; Every living Creature is employed in progging for its Suſtenance; The bleſſed Spirits are always on the Wing in diſpatching the Commands of God, and miniſtring Succour to us; God himſelf is ever watchful, and ever buſie in preſerving the World, and providing for the needs of every Creature.

The Lives of our Bleſſed Saviour, of all the Patriarchs, the Prophets, the Apoſtles, the Saints in this reſpect have been more exemplary; no Vertue being more conſpicuous in their Practice than Induſtry in performing the hard Duties, and painful Tasks impoſed on them for the Service of God, and the Benefit of Mankind.

Such is the Vertue upon which I have formerly diſcourſed in general and at large, but ſhall now more ſpecially conſider, according to St. Paul's Preſcription; in reference to its moſt proper Matter, Buſineſs, explaining and preſſing it accordingly.

Be not ſlothful in buſineſs (that is in diſcharge of it) or to buſineſs (that is to undertake it) this is the Rule; the Nature and Needfulneſs whereof we ſhall declare.

By σπουδὴ (Buſineſs) we may underſtand any Object of our Care and Endeavours which doth require them, and may deſerve them; which by reaſon of its Difficulty cannot well be accompliſhed or attained without them; and which is productive of ſome Fruit or Recompence anſwerable to them; the which hath operæ cauſam, a need of Labour, and operæ pretium, ſome Effect worth our Pains; if it be not ſuch it is not a due matter of vertuous and laudable Induſtry.

There are many things, about which Men with great Earneſtneſs employ themſelves, called Buſineſs, but not deſerving that Name: There are divers ſpurious kinds of Induſtry, which may not pretend to Commendation, but rather do merit Blame; according to that of St. Chryſoſtom, Labour which hath no Profit, cannot obtain any Praiſe.

Πόνος οὐδὲν κέρδος ἔχων ἐγκωμίου παντὸς ἀπεστέρηται. Chryſoſt. Tom. 5. Orat. 64.

There is a κενοσπουδία, a vain Induſtry, and a κακοσπουδία, a naughty Induſtry, both agreeing with genuine vertuous Induſtry in the Act, as implying careful and painful Activity, but diſcording from it in Object and Deſign, and conſequently in worth, and moral Eſteem.

Aliud agere, to be impertinently buſie, doing that which conduceth to no good purpoſe, is in ſome reſpect worſe than to do nothing, or to forbear all Action; For 'tis a poſitive Abuſe of our Faculties, and trifling with God's Gifts; 'tis a throwing away Labour and Care, things valuable in themſelves; 'tis often a running out of the way, which is worſe than ſtanding ſtill; 'tis a debaſing our Reaſon, and declining from our Manhood, nothing being more fooliſh or childiſh, than to be ſolicitous and ſerious about Trifles: For who are more buſie and active than Children, who are fuller of Thoughts and Deſigns, or more eager in Proſecution of them than they? But all is about ridiculous Toys, the Shadows of Buſineſs, ſuggeſted to them by Apiſh Curioſity, and Imitation. Of ſuch Induſtry we may underſtand that of the Preacher, The labour of the fooliſh wearieth every one of them; for that a Man ſoon will be weary of that Labour, which yieldeth no Profit, or beneficial Return.

Ἄλλῳ γὰρ οὐδενὶ φιλοπόνου τὴν κενοσπουδίαν ὁρίζομεν ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις ὄντα πολλάκις, ἢ τῷ τὴν αὐτοῖς ἀνωφελῆ πονεῖν καὶ ἀδιαφόρως, ἢ ἕνεκά του τῶν συμφερόντων καὶ λυσιτελῶν, Plut de commun. not. p. 1949.

Σπουδάζειν καὶ πονεῖν παιδιᾶς χάριν ἠλίθιον φαίνεται καὶ λίαν παιδικόν. Ariſt. Eth. 10. 6.

Ἡ ἐπὶ μικροῖς σπουδὴ μέμψιν φέρει. Plut. ibid.

Vid. de glor. Ath. p. 621.

Οἱ σπουδάζοντες ἐν τοῖς γελοίοις, ἐν τοῖς σπουδαίοις ἔσονται καταγέλαστοι. Cat. Maj. apud Plut. in Apoph.

Eccleſ. 10. 15.

But there is another Induſtry worſe than that, when Men are very buſie in deviſing and compaſſing Miſchiefs; an Induſtry whereof the Devil affordeth a great Inſtance; for the curſed Fiend is very diligent, ever watching for Occaſions to ſupplant us, ever plotting Methods and Means to do harm, ever driving on his miſchievous Deſigns with unwearied Activity; going to and fro in the earth; running about as a roaring Lion, looking for Prey, and ſeeking whom he may devour.

Luke 22. 31.
2 Cor. 2. 11.
Job 1. 7.
1 Pet. 5. 8.

And his wicked Brood are commonly like him, being workers of iniquity, οἱ πονηροὶ, painful Men, οἱ πανοῦργοι, Men that will do all things; who will ſpare no Pains, nor leave any Stone unturned, for ſatisfying their Luſts, and accompliſhing their bad Deſigns.

Ἐργάται τῆς ἀδικίας.
Luke 13. 27.
Pſal. 6. 8.

So indeed it is, that as no great Good, ſo neither can any great Miſchief be effected without much Pains: And if we conſider either the Characters or the Practices of thoſe, who have been famous Miſchief-doers, the Peſts of Mankind, and Diſturbers of the World, we ſhall find to have been no Sluggards.

Catiline, Marius, Stilico, Cæſar, &c.

Theſe two ſorts of vain and bad Induſtry the Prophet Iſaiah ſeemeth to Iſa. 59. 5. deſcribe in thoſe Words; They hatch cockatrice eggs, and weave the ſpiders web; of which Expreſſions one may denote miſchievous, the other frivolous Diligence in Contrivance or Execution of naughty or vain Deſigns; and to them both that of the Prophet Hoſea may be referred; They have
Hoſ. 8. 7. ſowed the wind and they ſhall reap the whirlwind; Guilt, Remorſe, and Pu-Eccluſ. 34. 2. niſhment being the Conſequences of both. And of them both common Prov. 22. 8. Hoſ. 10. 13. Experience doth afford very frequent and obvious Inſtances, a great part of Human Life being taken up with them. For,

How aſſiduouſly intent and eager may we obſerve Men to be at Sports? how ſoon will they riſe to go forth to them? with what Conſtancy and Patience will they toil in them all the Day? how indefatigable are they in riding or running about after a Dog or a Hawk, to catch a poor Beaſt or ſilly Bird?

How long will Men ſit poring on their Games, diſpenſing with their Food and Sleep for it?

Συνείρουσι ϗ οἱ φιλόκυβοι νύκτας ἡμέραις ἄσιτοι ϗ ἄποτοι, ϗ ἡδονῆς ἡδονῇ περίεστι. Lib. Orat. 31.

How long and ſerious Attention will Men yield to a wanton Play? how many Hours will they contentedly ſit thereat? what Study will Men employ on Jeſts and impertinent Wit? how earneſt will they be to ſatisfie their vain Curioſity?

τῷ γὰρ ὄντι παίζοντα δεῖ παίζειν. Plut.

How in ſuch Caſes do Men forget what they are doing, that Sport ſhould be Sport, not Work; to divert and relax us, not to employ and buſie us; to take off our Minds a little, not wholly to take them up; not to exhauſt or tire our Spirits, but to refreſh and chear them, that they may become more fit for grave and ſerious Occupations?

How painful will others be in hewing them out ciſterns, broken ciſterns, Jer. 2. 13. that will hold no water; that is, in immoderate Purſuit of worldly Deſigns?
how ſtudiouſly will they plod, how reſtleſly will they trudge, what Carking and Drudgery will they endure in driving on Projects of Ambition and Avarice? What will not they gladly do or ſuffer, to get a little Preferment, or a little Profit? It was a common Practice of old, and ſure the Pſal. 39. 6. World is not greatly mended ſince the Pſalmiſt did thus reflect, Surely every man walketh in a vain ſhew, ſurely they are diſquieted in vain; he heapeth up riches, and cannot tell who ſhall gather them.

How many vigilant, and ſtout Purſuers are there of Senſuality, and riotous Exceſs; ſuch as thoſe of whom the Prophet ſpeaketh, Woe unto Iſa. 5. 11. them that riſe up early in the morning, that they may follow ſtrong drink, that continue until night, till wine inflame them?

How buſie (O Shame, O Miſery; how fiercely buſie) are ſome in accompliſhing Deſigns of Malice and Revenge? how intent are ſome to over-reach, to circumvent, to ſupplant their Neighbour? how ſore Pains will ſome take to ſeduce, corrupt or debauch others? how active will ſome be in ſowing Strifes, in raiſing Factions, in fomenting Diſorders in the World? how many induſtrious Slaves hath the Devil, who will ſpare no pains about any kind of Work, which he putteth them to? how many like Prov. 6. 8. 1. 16. thoſe of whom the Wiſe-man ſaith, Their feet run to evil, and are ſwift in running to miſchief; they ſleep not except they have done miſchief, and their ſleep is taken away, unleſs they cauſe ſome to fall.

Ἐννοήσωμεν πόσα ὁ διάβολος ἐπέταξε, πῶς ἐπίπονα, πῶς ἐμμόχθα, &c. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. 16.

Now with all theſe Labourers we may well expoſtulate in the Words of Iſa. 55. 2. the Prophet; Wherefore do ye ſpend money for that which is not bread, and your labour for that which ſatisfieth not?

Such Labours are unworthy of Men, much leſs do they beſeem Chriſtians. It becometh us not as rational Creatures to employ the excellent Gifts of our Nature, and noble Faculties of our high-born Soul, the Forces of our Mind, the Advantages of our Fortune, our precious time, our very Care and Labour vainly or unprofitably upon any thing baſe or mean; being that our Reaſon is capable of atchieving great and worthy things, we much debaſe it by ſtooping to regard Toys, we do extreamly abuſe it by working Miſchief.

Much more doth it misbecome us as Chriſtians (that is, Perſons devoted to ſo high a Calling, who have ſo worthy Employments aſſigned to us, ſo glorious Hopes, ſo rich Encouragements propoſed to us for our Work) to ſpend our Thoughts and Endeavours on things impertinent to our great Deſign, or mainly thwarting it. Eph. 1. 18.

The proper Matter and Object of our Induſtry (thoſe falſe ones being excluded) is true Buſineſs; or that which is incumbent on a Man to do, either in way of Duty, being required by God, or by Dictate of Reaſon, as conducing to ſome good Purpoſe; ſo that in Effect it will turn to accompt, and finally in Advantageous Return will pay him for his Labour of Mind or Body; that which the Wiſe-man did intend, when he adviſed, Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might; whatever thy Hand findeth, that is, whatever by Divine Appointment (by the Command or Providence of God) or which upon rational Deliberation, doth occur as Matter of our Action; comprizing every good Purpoſe and reaſonable Undertaking incident to us. Eccleſ. 9. 10.

But our Buſineſs, according to the Holy Apoſtle's Intent, may be ſuppoſed eſpecially to be the Work of our Calling; to which each Man hath a peculiar Obligation; and which therefore is moſt properly his Buſineſs, or ἡ σπȣδὴ emphatically, the Buſineſs allotted to him.

Now this Buſineſs, our Calling, is double; our general Calling, which is common to us all as Chriſtians, and our particular Calling, which peculiarly belongeth to us, as placed in a certain Station, either in the Church or State. In both which Vocations that we are much obliged and concerned to be induſtrious, ſhall be now my Buſineſs to declare.

I. As to our general Calling (that ſublime, that heavenly, that holy Vocation) in which by divine Grace, according to the Evangelical Diſpenſation, we are engaged, that neceſſarily requireth, and moſt highly deſerveth from us a great meaſure of Induſtry; the Nature and Deſign of it requireth, the Fruit and Reſult of it deſerveth our utmoſt Diligence; all Sloth is inconſiſtent with diſcharging the Duties, with enjoying the Hopes, with obtaining the Benefits thereof. For,

Ἡ ἄνω κλῆσις. Phil. 3. 14.
Κλῆσις ἐπȣράνιος. Heb. 3. 1.
Ἁγία κλῆσις. 1 Tim. 19.
Eph. 1. 18. 2 Theſſ. 1. 11.

It is a State of continual Work, and is expreſſed in Terms importing abundant, inceſſant, intenſe Care and Pain; for to be indeed Chriſtians, We muſt work out our ſalvation with fear and trembling; We muſt by patient continuance in well-doing ſeek for glory and honour, and Immortality. We muſt walk worthy of the Lord to all well-pleaſing, being fruitful in every good work. We muſt be rich in good works, and filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by Jeſus Chriſt to the praiſe and glory of God: We are God's workmanſhip created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them. Phil. 2. 12. Rom. 2. 7. Col. 1. 10. 1 Tim. 6. 18. Phil. 1. 11. John 15. 5, 8, 16. Jam. 3. 17. Eph. 2. 10.

We have a Soul to ſave, and are appointed εἰς περιποίησιν σωτηρίας, to make an acquiſt of ſalvation. 1 Theſſ. 5. 9.

We have a Mind to improve with Vertue and Wiſdom, qualifying us for Entrance into Heaven, for Enjoyment of God's Favour, for Converſation with Angels.

1 Theſſ. 1. 9. Rom. 7. 6. 6. 22. Eph. 2. 19.

As Chriſtians we are aſſumed to be Servants of God, and re-admitted into his Family, from which for our Diſloyalty we had been diſcarded; ſo that as he was our natural Lord, ſo he is now ſuch alſo by ſpecial Grace; who did make us, who doth maintain us, under whoſe Protection, and at whoſe Diſpoſal we ſubſiſt; whence we are obliged to be faithfully diligent in his Service; we muſt conſtantly wait upon him in devotional Addreſſes; we muſt carefully ſtudy to know his Pleaſure; we muſt endeavour exactly to perform his Will, and obey his Commands; we muſt ſtrive to advance his Glory, to promote his Intereſt, to improve all Talents and Advantages committed to us for thoſe Purpoſes; we muſt (as St. Paul expreſſeth it) always abound in the work of the Lord.

Eph. 5. 10. Rom. 12. 2. Luke 11. 28. Mat. 25. 27. 1 Cor. 15. 58.

Col. 3. 25. Eph. 6. 7. 1 Cor. 7. 23, 6, 20. Tit. 2. 14.

We muſt alſo look upon our ſelves as Servants of Chriſt our Redeemer; who by his Blood hath purchaſed us to himſelf, that we might be zealous of good works; performing a Service to him, which conſiſteth in a faithful Diſcharge of manifold Duties; and in purſuance of all Vertue; with moſt intent Application of Mind, with expedite Promptitude, with accurate Circumſpection; giving all diligence (as St. Peter ſpeaketh) in adding one Vertue to another; being ready (as St. Paul ſaith) to every good work; and ſeeing that we walk circumſpectly, or behave our ſelves exactly according to the Rules of Duty in all our Converſation.

2 Pet. 1. 5. Σπουδὴν πᾶσαν παρεισενέγκαντες.

Tit. 3. 1.

Βλέπετε πῶς ἀκριβῶς—Eph. 5. 15.

Col. 4. 2. Eph. 6. 18. Rom. 12. 12. 1 Theſſ. 5. 17. Luke 18. 1. 1 Theſſ. 5. 18. Eph. 5. 20. Col. 3. 17. Heb. 13. 15.

This Service requireth of us aſſiduous Attendance on Works of Piety and Devotion; that we do inceſſantly watch to Prayers, that we always give thanks, that we continually do offer up the ſacrifice of praiſe to God.

1 Theſſ. 1. 3. Κόπος ἀγάπης. Gal. 5. 13. Δουλεύοντες. Gal. 6. 10. Ἐργαζώμεθα. 1 Theſſ. 5. 15.

It demandeth from us a continual labour of charity; that we ſerve one another in love; that we ſhould as we have opportunity, work good to all men, that we ſhould always purſue good toward one another, and toward all men.

Rom. 12. 18. Εἰ δυνατόν. Heb. 12. 14. 2 Tim. 2:22. Eph. 4. 3.

It obligeth us with all our powers to purſue peace with all men (which conſidering our natural Peeviſhneſs, Pride, and Perverſeneſs is often no eaſie Task) and that we do σπουδάζειν, ſtudiouſly endeavour to keep the unity of the ſpirit in the bond of peace.

Jam. 1. 4.

It chargeth on us contentedly and patiently to undergo whatever God doth impoſe of Burthen or Sufferance, ſo that patience hath its perfect work; and it is a crabbed work to bend our ſtiff Inclinations, to quell our refractory Paſſions, to make our ſturdy Humour buckle thereto.

It doth exact that we ſhould govern and regulate according to very ſtrict and ſevere Laws all the Faculties of our Soul, all the Members of our Body, all internal Motion, and all external Actions proceeding from us; that we ſhould check our Inclinations, curb our Appetites, and compoſe our Paſſions; that we ſhould guard our Hearts from vain Thoughts and bad Deſires; that we ſhould bridle our Tongues from evil and from idle Diſcourſes; that we ſhould order our Steps in the ſtreight way of Righteouſneſs, not deflecting to the Right Hand or to the Left.

In the Diſcharge of this Service how many rough Difficulties are there to be ſurmounted, how many great Obſtacles to be removed, how many ſtout Oppoſitions to be encountered, how many potent Enemies to be vanquiſhed, how many ſore Hardſhips, Croſſes and Tribulations to be endured?

How ſhrewd a Task muſt we find it to circumciſe our Hearts, to mortifie our Earthly Members, to crucifie our Fleſh with its Affections and Luſts, to pull out our right Eyes, and cut off our Right Hands, to renounce our worldly Intereſts, to hate our neareſt Relations, to take up and bear our Croſs whenever Conſcience and duty ſhall call us thereto?

Our Calling therefore doth require great Induſtry; and the Buſineſs of it conſequently is well repreſented by thoſe Performances, which demand the greateſt Intention, and laborious Activity; it is ſtiled Exerciſe (agoniſtick and aſcetick Exerciſe; γύμναζε σεαυτὸν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν, Exerciſe thy ſelf to godlineſs; and ἐν τούτῳ αὐτὸς ἀσκῶ, Herein I exerciſe my ſelf to have always a conſcience void of offence toward God and toward men;) wreſtling (ἡμῶν ἡ πάλη, our wreſtling is not (only) againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt principalities and powers;) running a race (Let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us; So run that ye may obtain: I preſs toward the mark for the prize of the high calling.) A warfare, a combating (War a good warfare, holding faith and a good Conſcience; fight the good fight; thou therefore endure hardſhip as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt: Every man that ſtriveth for the maſtery is temperate in all things;) offering violence; (The Kingdom of Heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force) watching (Let us not ſleep as do others, but let us watch and be ſober: Watch ye, ſtand faſt in the faith, quit you like men, be ſtrong: watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.)

Γύμναζε σεαυτόν. 1 Tim. 4. 7.
Ἐν τούτῳ ἀσκῶ. Acts 24. 16.
Heb. 12. 11.
Eph. 6. 12.
1 Cor. 9. 25.
Heb. 12. 1.
1 Cor. 9. 24.
Phil. 3. 14.
2 Tim. 4. 7.
1 Tim. 1. 18.
6. 12.
2 Tim. 4. 7.
2 Tim. 2. 3.
1 Cor. 9. 25.
Matth. 11. 12.
1 Theſſ. 5. 6. 1 Cor. 16. 13.
Mat. 26. 41. 24. 42. Luke 12. 37.
1 Pet. 5. 8. Apoc. 3. 2. 16. 15.

Hence the Precepts importing the general Tenour of Chriſtian Practice are uſually couched in terms implying great Sedulity and Contention of Soul; Ἀγωνίζεσθε, Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate: Let us labour therefore to enter into that reſt; Labour not for the meat that periſheth, but for that meat which endureth to everlaſting life. Give diligence to make your calling and election ſure; Gird up the loins of your mind, be ſober, and hope to the end: Wherefore, brethren, ſeeing that ye look for ſuch things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without ſpot, and blameleſs.

Luke 12.
Σπουδάζωμεν.
Heb. 4. 11.
Ἐργάζεσθε.
John 6. 27.
Σπουδάσατε.
2 Pet. 1. 10.
1 Pet. 1. 13.
Luke 12. 35.
Eph. 6. 14.
2 Pet. 3. 14.

Such is the Work of our general Calling, and ſo much Induſtry it challengeth from us; with great Reaſon indeed, for that ſuch Work is needful to our Happineſs, and that our Labour will certainly be rewarded therewith.

The Work indeed of it ſelf is moſt worthy to employ us; doth moſt become us, doth much adorn us, doth beſt befit our Divine Extraction and large Capacity; is the nobleſt, the handſomeſt, the ſweeteſt Employment that could take us up; but we have alſo the greateſt Inducements and Encouragements poſſible for our Induſtry therein.

John 4. 36.

There are by the Divine Bounty and Mercy, Wages aſſigned abundantly correſpondent to our Work, yea, infinitely ſurpaſſing it: there is πολὺς μισθὸς a great (or a manifold) hire for our ſlender and ſimple Performances; there are ſeveral noble Prizes highly worth our ſtriving for with our utmoſt Strength and Contention of Soul.

Mat. 5. 12.

In recompence thereof we ſhall aſſuredly gain even here in this tranſitory State the ſpecial Favour and Love of God, with his conſtant Protection and Care for our Good; his faithful Direction, and friendly Aſſiſtance to guide us, and uphold us in all our Ways, to bleſs and proſper our Undertakings, to ſupply us in our Needs, and comfort us in our Diſtreſſes; ſo that we ſhall, lack nothing that is good, that no evil ſhall happen to us, that all things ſhall concur and co-operate for our benefit.

Rom. 14. 18. He that in theſe things ſerveth Chriſt, is acceptable to God, and approved of Men.

Pſ. 34. 9. 84. 11. 33. 19. 37. 3, 19.
Pſal. 91. 10.——Prov. 12. 21.
Rom. 8. 38.

We

Col. 3. 15.
Phil. 4. 7.

We ſhall thereby taſte the Satisfactions of a calm Mind, and a ſound Conſcience, quickned by the Conſolations of the Divine Spirit; the peace of God ruling in our hearts, which paſſeth all underſtanding.

Jam. 1. 12.
1 Pet. 5. 4.
1 Cor. 9. 25.

We ſhall afterward, when this Moment is paſſed over, and our ſhort Days Work diſpatched, received from God's bountiful Hand an unconceivable Affluence of good things, an eternal Permanence of Life; undiſturbed Reſt, indefectible Wealth, ineffable Joy, incorruptible Glory, a Kingdom unſhakable.

John 4. 36.

He (ſaith our Lord) that reapeth, receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life everlaſting.

Ἀποδώσει —
Rom. 2. 6.

To them (ſaith St. Paul) who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality, God in recompence will beſtow eternal life. And,

2 Tim. 4. 8.

I have (ſaith that bleſſed Labourer of himſelf) fought the good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs.

2 Cor. 5. 10.
Col. 3. 24.

What more effectual Spur or Incentive can there be to Induſtry in this Buſineſs, than to conſider that which St. Paul ſo often doth inculcate; Knowing that whatſoever good thing any man doeth, the ſame (a Recompence for the ſame) he ſhall receive of the Lord; and knowing that (in conſideration of our Service done to the Lord) of the Lord we ſhall receive the reward of the inheritance?

1 Cor. 15. 58.

What Exhortation can be more firmly grounded, or ſtrongly backed, than is that of the Apoſtle, Therefore my brethren be ye ſteadfaſt, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; foraſmuch as ye know, that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

Ἀποδώσει ἑκάστῳ.
Mat. 16. 27.
1 Cor. 3. 8. Rev. 22. 12. 2. 23.
Mat. 25. 21. Luke 19. 12.
Μισθὸν πλήρη ἀπολάβητε. 2 Joh. 8.

May it not alſo much encourage us to Induſtry to be aſſured, that not only the kind of our work, but the Degree of our Labour ſhall be conſidered and requited, in juſt Proportion; ſo that the harder we work, the higher we ſhall be rewarded; for, to each one (ſaith our Lord) the ſon of man ſhall render a reward κατὰ τὴν πρᾶξιν αὐτοῦ, according to his performance; Every one (ſaith St. Paul) ſhall receive ἴδιον μισθὸν κατὰ τὸν ἴδιον κόπον, his proper reward according to his proper work; whence we have reaſon to obſerve St. John's Advice, Look to your ſelves, that ye loſe not thoſe things which ye have gained, but that ye receive a full reward.

To be negligent or ſlothful in ſuch a caſe, for want of a little Care and Pains to forfeit ſuch Advantages, what a Pity, what a Folly is it? Were an Opportunity preſented by a little minding our Buſineſs, and beſtirring our ſelves to procure a fair Eſtate, or a good Preferment, would not he be deemed mad or ſottiſh, who would ſit ſtill, and forego that his Advantage? how much more Wildneſs is it to be drowſie and ſluggiſh in this Caſe, thereby loſing eternal Bliſs and Glory? Well therefore might the Apoſtle ſay, How ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation? How ſhall we eſcape not only the Sin, and guilt of baſeſt Ingratitude toward him that graciouſly doth offer it, but the Imputation of moſt wretched Folly, in being ſo much wanting to our own Intereſt and Welfare?

Heb. 2. 3.

Is it not a ſad thing, a woful Shame to obſerve what Pains Men will throw away upon things of ſmall or no Concernment to them? Yea, what Toil and Drudgery will they ſuſtain in the Service of Satan, in purſuit of Sin in the Gratification of their Vanities and Luſts.

What Pains will a covetous Wretch take in ſcraping for Pelf, how will he rack his Mind with carking Sollicitude to get, to keep, to ſpare it? how will he tire his Spirits with reſtleſs Travel? how will he pinch his Carcaſe caſe for want of what Nature craveth? what Infamy and Obloquy will he endure for his niggardly Parſimony and Sordidneſs?

How much Labour will an ambitious Fop undergo for Preferment, or vain Honour? to how many tedious Attendances, to how pitiful Servilities will he ſubmit? what ſore Croſſes and Diſappointments will he ſwallow? what Affronts and Indignities will he patiently digeſt, without deſiſting from his Enterprize?

How will a Man (as St. Paul obſerved) πάντα ἐγκρατεύεσθαι, endure all painful Abſtinence and Continence in order to the obtaining a corruptible 1 Cor. 9. 25. Crown, a fading Garland of Bays, a Puff of vain Applauſe?

What Diligence will Men uſe to compaſs the Enjoyment of forbidden Pleaſures; how watchful in catching Opportunities, how eager in queſt of them will they be? what Difficulties will they undertake, what Hazards will they incur, what Damages and Inconveniences will they ſuſtain, rather than fail of ſatisfying their Deſires?

What Akings of Head and Heart; what Pangs of Mind, and Gripes of Conſcience, what Anxieties of Regret and Fear, will every Worker of Iniquity undergo? So faithful Friends hath this vain and evil World; ſo diligent Servants hath the accurſed Lord thereof; ſo careful and laborious will Men be to deſtroy and damn themſelves: O that we could be willing Chry. ἀνδρ. θ to ſpend as much Care and Pains in the Service of our God: O that we were as true Friends of our ſelves: O that we could be as induſtrious for our Salvation; that is, in the Buſineſs of our General Calling; which having conſidered, let us proceed to the other Buſineſs belonging to us, which is,

II. The Buſineſs of our Particular Calling; that in reference whereto St. Paul doth preſcribe, Every man as the Lord hath called him, ſo let him 1 Cor. 7. 17. walk. Let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called; let him 1 Cor. 7. 20. ſo abide, as faithfully to proſecute the Work, and diſcharge the Duty of it; the doing which otherwhere he termeth πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια, to do our own 1 Theſſ. 4. 11. buſineſs (working with our hands) and enjoineth it in Oppoſition to thoſe Eph. 4. 28. two great Peſts of Life, Sloth and pragmatical Curioſity; or the Neglect of our own, and medling with other Mens Affairs.

This the Apoſtle nameth our calling, becauſe we are called or appointed thereto by divine Providence; for he ſuppoſeth and taketh it for granted, that to each Man in this World God hath aſſigned a certain Station, unto which peculiar Action is ſuted; in which Station he biddeth him quietly to abide, till Providence fairly doth tranſlate him, and during his Abode 1 Cor. 7. 22. therein diligently to execute the Work thereof.

Every Man is a Member of a double Body; of the Civil Commonwealth, and of the Chriſtian Church: In relation to the latter, whereof St. Paul telleth us (and what he ſaith by Parity of Reaſon may be referred likewiſe to the former) that God hath ſet the members every one in the body, 1 Cor. 12. 8. as it pleaſeth him; and as it is in the Natural, ſo it is in every political and Rom. 12: 4. ſpiritual Body, every Member hath its proper Uſe and Function; All members (ſaith St. Paul) have not τὴν αὐτὴν πρᾶξιν the ſame office, or the ſame Work and Operation; yet every one hath ſome Work. There is no Member deſigned to be idle or uſeleſs, conferring no Benefit to the whole; but the whole body (ſaith the Apoſtle) fitly joined together, and compacted by that Eph. 4. 16. which every joint ſupplieth, according to the effectual working in the meaſure of every part maketh increaſe of the body, unto the edifying it ſelf in love; each Member doth conſpire and co-operate to the Strength, Nouriſhment, Thriving and Welfare of the whole.

Ἑκάϛῳ ὡς ἐμέρισεν Θεός. 1 Cor. 7. 17. Every Man (who continueth a Man; in his Senſes, or in any good Degree of natural Integrity) is by God endowed with competent Abilities to diſcharge ſome Function uſeful to common Good; or at leaſt needful to his own Suſtenance; to every one ſome Talent is committed, which in Subordination to God's Service he may improve, to the Benefit of the World, God's temporal, or of the Church, God's ſpiritual Kingdom.

It is plainly neceſſary, that the greateſt Part of Men ſhould have a determinate Work allotted to them, that they may ſupport their Life and get their Food without being injurious, offenſive, or burthenſome to others; for their living they muſt either follow ſome Trade, or they muſt ſhark and filch, or they muſt beg, or they muſt ſtarve.

And the reſt are obliged to do ſomewhat, conducible to publick Good; that they may deſerve to live; for a Drone ſhould not be among the Bees; nor hath Right to devour the Honey: If any Man doth pretend, or preſume that he hath nothing to do but to eat, to ſleep, to play, to laugh; to enjoy his Eaſe, his Pleaſure, his Humour, he thereby doth as it were diſclaim a reaſonable Title of living among Men, and ſharing in the Fruits of their Induſtry; he in St. Paul's Judgment ſhould be debarred of Food, for this (ſaith the Holy Apoſtle) we commanded you, that if any man 2 Theſſ. 3. 10. would not work, neither ſhould he eat.

Such an one in the Body of Men what is he but an unnatural Excreſcence, ſucking Nutriment from it, without yielding Ornament or Uſe? what is he but a Wen deforming and encumbring the Body, or a Canker infeſting and corrupting it.

As no Man (at leaſt with Decency, Convenience and Comfort can live in the World, without being oblig'd to divers other Men for their Help in providing Accommodations for him, ſo Juſtice and Ingenuity (corroborated by divine Sanctions) do require of him, that in Commutation he, one way or other, ſhould undertake ſome Pains redounding to the Benefit of others.

So hath the great Author of Order diſtributed the Ranks and Offices of Men in order to mutual Benefit and Comfort, that one Man ſhould plow, another threſh, another grind, another labour at the Forge, another knit or weave; another ſail, another trade, another ſupraviſe all theſe, labouring to keep them all in Order and Peace; that one ſhould work with his Hands and Feet, another with his Head and Tongue; all conſpiring to one common End, the Welfare of the whole, and the ſupply of what is uſeful to each particular Member; Every Man ſo reciprocally obliging and being obliged; the Prince being oblig'd to the Huſbandman for his Bread, to the Weaver for his Cloaths, to the Maſon for his Palace, to the Smith for his Sword; thoſe being all oblig'd to him for his vigilant Care in protecting them; for their Security in purſuing the Work, and enjoying the Fruit of their Induſtry.

So every Man hath a Calling, and proper Buſineſs; whereto that Induſtry is required, I need not much to prove, the thing it ſelf in Reaſon and Experience being ſo clearly evident; for what Buſineſs can be well diſpatched, what Succeſs can be expected to any Undertaking, in what Calling can any Man thrive without Induſtry? what Buſineſs is there that will go on of it ſelf, or proceed to any good Iſſue if we do not carefully look to it, ſteadily hold it in its Courſe, conſtantly puſh and drive it forward? It is true as in Nature, ſo in all Affairs, Nihil movet, non motum nothing moveth without being moved.

Our own Intereſt ſhould move us to be induſtrious in our Calling, that we may obtain the good Effects of being ſo in a comfortable and creditable Subſiſtence; that we may not ſuffer the Damages and Wants, the Diſappointments and Diſgraces enſuing on Sloth; but the chief Motive ſhould be from Piety and Conſcience; for that it is a Duty which we owe to God. For God having placed us in our Station; he having apportioned to us our Task, we being in Tranſaction of our Buſineſs his Servants, we do owe to him that neceſſary Property of good Servants, without which Fidelity cannot ſubſiſt; for how can he be looked on as a faithful Servant, who doth not effectually perform the Work charged on him? or diligently execute the Orders of his Maſter.

1 Cor. 4. 2.

St. Paul doth enjoin Servants that they ſhould in all things obey their Maſters, with conſcientious Regard to God, as therein performing Service to God, and expecting Recompence from him: And of Princes he ſaith, that they in Diſpenſation of Juſtice, enacting Laws, impoſing Taxes, and all political Adminiſtrations are the miniſters of God, προσκαρτεροῦντες, attending conſtantly upon this very thing: And if theſe Extremes, the higheſt and loweſt of all Vocations, are Services of God; if the higheſt upon that ſcore be tied to ſo much Diligence, then ſurely all middle Places upon the ſame Account of Conſcience toward God do exact no leſs.

Col. 3. 22.
Eph. 6. 5.
1 Cor. 7. 22, 23.
Rom. 13. 6.

If he that hath one Talent, and he that hath ten muſt both improve them for God's Intereſt, then he that hath two, or three, or more, is obliged to the ſame Duty proportionably.

Every one ſhould conſider the World as the Family of that great Paterfamilias (of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named) and himſelf as an Officer or Servant therein, by God's Will and Deſignation conſtituted in that Employment, into which Providence hath caſt him; to confer in his Order and Way, ſomewhat toward a Proviſion for the maintenance of himſelf, and of his Fellow-Servants. Of a ſuperiour Officer our Lord ſaith, Who is that faithful and wiſe ſervant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his houſhold, to give them their meat in due ſeaſon? So the greateſt Men are as Stewards, Treaſurers, Comptrollers, or Purveyors; the reſt are inferiour Servants, in their proper Rank and Capacity.

Eph. 3. 15.
Matth. 24. 45.
Luke 12. 42.

And he that with Diligence performeth his reſpective Duty (be it high and honourable, or mean and contemptible in outward Appearance) will pleaſe God, as keeping good Order, and as being uſeful to his Service; ſo that upon the Reckoning God will ſay to him, Well done good and faithful ſervant, thou haſt been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. But he that doth otherwiſe, (behaving himſelf careleſly or ſluggiſhly in his Buſineſs) will offend God, as committing Diſorder, and as being unprofitable.

1 Cor. 14. 33.
Mat. 25. 21.—

He committeth Diſorder, according to that of St. Paul; We hear there are ſome, which walk among you diſorderly, not working at all. His Sentence and Doom will be, according to our Lord, O thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant—Caſt the unprofitable ſervant into utter darkneſs; which Words are ſpoken in relation to one, who being a Flatterer, or Sluggard in his Calling, did not improve the ſpecial Talent entruſted with him for God's Service.

2 Theſſ. 3. 11
Mat. 25. 26. 30.

In fine, if we are conſcientiouſly induſtrious in our Vocation, we ſhall aſſuredly find the Bleſſing of God thereon; and that he thereby will convey good Succeſs, Comfort, competent Wealth, a fair Reputation, all deſirable Good unto us; for as all theſe things are promiſed to Induſtry, ſo the Promiſe eſpecially doth belong to that Induſtry, which a Man doth exerciſe in an orderly courſe of Action in his own Way; or rather in God's Way, wherein Divine Providence hath ſet him.

An irregular or impertinent Laborioúſneſs, out of a Man's Calling or Sphere; a being diligent in other Mens Affairs, invading their Office (as if I a Prieſt will be trading, a Layman preaching) may not claim the Benefit of thoſe Promiſes, or the Bleſſings of Induſtry; But a Husbandman, who (with conſcientious Regard to God, and Confidence in him) is painful in tilling his Ground, may expect a good Crop, a Merchant who (upon the ſame Principle, with the like Diſpoſition) earneſtly followeth his Trade, may hope for ſafe Voyages and good Markets; A Prince carefully minding his Affairs may look for Peace and Proſperity to his Country; a Scholar ſtudying hard may be well aſſured of getting Knowledge, and finding Truth; all who with honeſt Diligence conſtantly do purſue their Buſineſs, may confidently and chearfully hope to reap the Advantages ſutable to it from the favourable Bleſſing of God. So that we have all Reaſon to obſerve the Apoſtle's Precept, not to be ſlothful in buſineſs.

Prov. 21. 11. Prov. 10. 4. 13. 11.

I ſhould apply this Doctrine to our own Caſe, urging its Practice by Conſiderations peculiar to our Vocation; but having already paſſed the Bounds of time, I reſerve the doing it to another Opportunity.

Now the God of peace ſanctifie you wholly, and make you perfect in every good work to do his will; working in you that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight; through our Bleſſed Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; to whom for ever be all Glory and Praiſe. Amen.

1 Theſſ. 5.23. Heb. 13. 20.

SERMON XXI.

Of Induſtry in our particular Calling, as Gentlemen.

ROM. XII. 11.

Not ſlothful in Buſineſs.

I Have largely treated upon the Duty recommended in this Precept, and urged the Obſervance of it in general, at a Diſtance; I now intend more particularly and cloſely to apply it, in reference to thoſe Perſons, who ſeem more eſpecially obliged to it, and whoſe obſerving it may prove of greateſt Conſequence to publick Good; the which Application may alſo be moſt ſutable and profitable to this Audience; thoſe Perſons are of two ſorts; the one Gentlemen, the other Scholars.

I. The Firſt Place, as Civility demandeth, we aſſign to Gentlemen; or Perſons of eminent Rank in the World, well allied, graced with Honour, and furniſhed with Wealth; the which ſort of Perſons I conceive in a high Degree obliged to exerciſe Induſtry in Buſineſs.

This at firſt hearing may ſeem a little Paradoxical and ſtrange; for who have leſs Buſineſs than Gentlemen, who do need leſs Induſtry, than they? He that hath a fair Eſtate, and can live on his Means, what hath he to do, what Labour or Trouble can be exacted of him, what hath he to think on, or trouble his Head with, but how to invent Recreations and Paſtimes to divert himſelf, and ſpend his waſte Leiſure pleaſantly? Why ſhould not he be allowed to enjoy himſelf, and the Benefits, which Nature or Fortune have freely diſpenſed to him, as he thinketh beſt, without Offence? Why may he not ſay with the rich Man in the Goſpel, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry? Luke 12. 19. Is it not often ſaid by the Wiſe-man, that there is nothing better under the ſun, than that a man ſhould make his ſoul to enjoy good in a chearful and comfortable Fruition of his Eſtate? Eccleſ. 2. 24. 3. 22. 5. 18. 8. 15. According to the paſſable Notion and Definition, What is a Gentleman but his Pleaſure?

If this be true, if a Gentleman be nothing elſe but this; then truly he is a ſad Piece, the moſt inconſiderable, the moſt deſpicable, the moſt pitiful and wretched Creature in the World: If it is his Privilege to do nothing, it is his Privilege to be moſt unhappy; and to be ſo, will be his Fate, if he live according to it; for he that is of no Worth or Uſe, who produceth no beneficial Fruit, who performeth no Service to God, or to the World, what Title can he have to Happineſs? what Capacity thereof? what Reward can he claim? what Comfort can he feel? to what Temptations is he expoſed? what Guilts will he incur?

But in truth it is far otherwiſe; to ſuppoſe that a Gentleman is looſe from Buſineſs, is a great Miſtake; for indeed no Man hath more to do, no Man lieth under greater Engagements to Induſtry than he.

He is deeply obliged to be continually buſie in more Ways than other Men, who have but one ſimple Calling or Occupation allotted to them; and that upon a tripple Account; in reſpect to God, to the World, and to himſelf.

1. He is firſt obliged to continual Employment in reſpect to God.

He out of a grateful regard to Divine Bounty for the Eminency of his Station, adorned with Dignity and Repute, for the plentiful Accommodations and Comforts of his Life, for his Exemption from thoſe pinching Wants, thoſe meaner Cares, thoſe ſordid Entertainments, and thoſe toilſome Drudgeries, to which other Men are ſubject, is bound to be more diligent in God's Service, employing all the Advantages of his State to the Glory of his munificent Benefactour, to whoſe good Providence alone he doth owe them; for who maketh him to differ from another? and what hath he that he did not receive from God's free Bounty? 1 Cor. 4. 7.

In proportion to the Bulk of his Fortune his Heart ſhould be enlarged with a thankful Senſe of God's Goodneſs to him; his Mouth ſhould ever be filled with Acknowledgment and Praiſe, he ſhould always be ready to expreſs his grateful Reſentment of ſo great and peculiar Obligations.

He ſhould dedicate larger Portions of that free Leiſure which God hath granted to him, in waiting upon God, and conſtant Performances of Devotion.

He in frequently reflecting on the particular ample Favours of God, to him ſhould imitate the Holy Pſalmiſt, that illuſtrious Pattern of great and fortunate Men; ſaying after him, with his Spirit and Diſpoſition of Soul; Thou haſt brought me to great honour, and comforted me on every ſide, therefore will I praiſe thee and thy faithfulneſs, O God. Pſal. 71. 21.—

Pſal. 30. 7.— Lord, by thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong: Thou Pſal. 31. 8. haſt ſet my feet in a large room: Thou prepareſt a table before me;
Pſal. 23. 5. —thou
Pſal. 30. 12. anointeſt my head with oil, my cup runneth over; ——to the end that my glory may ſing praiſe unto thee, and not be ſilent: The Lord is the portion of mine Pſal. 16. 5. inheritance, and of my cup; thou maintaineſt my lot; the lines are fallen unto me in pleaſant places, yea, I have a goodly heritage; therefore I will bleſs
the Lord.

In conceiving ſuch Meditations his Head and his Heart ſhould conſtantly be employed; as alſo in contriving ways of declaring and diſchar-Pſal. 116. 12. ging real Gratitude; asking himſelf, What ſhall I render unto the Lord for all his Benefits? What ſhall I render to him, not only as a Man for all the Gifts of Nature, as a Chriſtian for all the Bleſſings of Grace, but as a Gentleman alſo, for the many Advantages of this my Condition, beyond ſo many of my Brethren, by ſpecial Providence indulged to me?

He hath all the common Duties of Piety, of Charity, of Sobriety to diſcharge with Fidelity; for being a Gentleman doth not exempt him from being a Chriſtian, but rather more ſtrictly doth engage him to be ſuch in a higher Degree than others; It is an Obligation peculiarly incumbent on him, in return for God's peculiar Favours, to pay God all due Obedience, and to exerciſe himſelf in all good Works; Diſobedience being a more heinous Crime in him than in others, who have not ſuch Encouragements to ſerve God.

His Obedience may be inculcated by thoſe Arguments which Joſhua and 1 Sam. 12. 24. Samuel did uſe in preſſing it on the Iſraelites; Only (ſaid Samuel) fear the Lord and ſerve him in truth, for conſider how great things God hath done for Joſh. 24. 13. you; and, I have given you (ſaith God by Joſhua) a land for which ye did not labour, and cities which ye built not; and ye dwell in them; Of the vineyards and olive-yards which ye planted not, do ye eat; Now therefore fear the Lord, and ſerve him in ſincerity and in truth.

Nehem. 9. His Diſobedience may be aggravated, as Nehemiah did that of the 25—— Iſraelites, They took ſtrong cities and a fat land, and poſſeſſed houſes full of all
Iſa. 63. 9.
Pſal. 105. 6. goods, wells digged, vineyards, and olive-yards, and fruit-trees in abundance;
Jer. 2. 7. ſo they did eat and were filled, and became fat; and delighted themſelves in thy
Ezek. 16. 7.—
1 Sam. 15. 17. great goodneſs; nevertheleſs they were diſobedient, and rebelled againſt thee, and
2 Sam. 12. 7. caſt thy law behind their backs —— they have not ſerved thee in their kingdom,
1 Kings 16.— and in thy great goodneſs, which thou gaveſt them; neither turned they from 26, 35. their wicked works.

A Gentleman hath more Talents committed to him, and conſequently more Employment required of him; If a ruſtick Labourer, or a Mechanick Artiſan hath one Talent, a Gentleman hath ten; He hath innate Vigour of Spirit, and Height of Courage fortified by Uſe, he hath Accompliſhment and Refinement of Parts by liberal Education, he hath the Succours of Parentage, Alliance and Friendſhip; he hath Wealth, he hath Honour, he hath Power and Authority, he hath Command of time and Leiſure; he hath ſo many precious and uſeful Talents entruſted to him, Luke 19. 20. not to be wrapped up in a napkin, or hidden under-ground; not to be ſquan-
Mat. 25. 25. dred away in private Satisfactions; but for negotiation, to be put out to uſe, Πραγματεύ-σασθε. to be improved in the moſt advantageous way to God's Service: Every Luke 19. 13. Talent doth require a particular Care and Pains to manage it well.
Ἐργάζεσθε.

Mat. 25. 16. He particularly is God's Steward, entruſted with God's Subſtance, fo
Mat. 25. 27. the Suſtenance and Supply of God's Family; to relieve his fellow-Servants
Mat. 25. 14. in their Need, upon ſeaſonable Occaſions by Hoſpitality, Mercy and Παρέδωκε τὰ charitable Beneficence; according to that Intimation of our Lord, Who i ὑπάρχοντα
αὐτοῦ.——
Luke 12. 42. that faithful and wiſe ſteward whom his Lord ſhall make ruler of his houſe- hold

hold to give them their portion and meat in due ſeaſon? And according to thoſe Apoſtolical Precepts, As every one hath received a gift (or ſpecial Favour,) even ſo miniſter the ſame to one another, as good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God; and Charge the rich in this world, —— that they be good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate.

Χάρισμα.
1 Pet. 4. 10.
1 Tim. 6. 17.

And he that is oblig'd to purvey for ſo many, and ſo to abound in good Works, how can he want Buſineſs? how can he pretend to a Writ of eaſe?

Surely that Gentleman is very blind, and very barren of Invention, who is to ſeek for Work fit for him, or cannot eaſily diſcern many Employments belonging to him, of great Concern and Conſequence.

It is eaſie to prompt and ſhew him many Buſineſſes, indiſpenſibly belonging to him, as ſuch.

It is his Buſineſs to miniſter Relief to his poor Neighbours in their Wants and Diſtreſſes by his Wealth. It is his Buſineſs to direct and adviſe the Ignorant, to comfort the Afflicted, to reclaim the Wicked, and encourage the Good by his Wiſdom. It is his Buſineſs to protect the Weak, to reſcue the Oppreſſed, to eaſe thoſe who groan under heavy Burthens, by his power; to be ſuch a Gentleman and ſo employed as Job was; who did not eat his morſel alone, ſo that the fatherleſs did not eat thereof; who did not with-hold the poor from their deſire, or cauſe the eyes of the widow to fail; who did not ſee any periſh for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; who delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him.

Job 31. 17, 16. 19.
Job 29. 12.

It is his Buſineſs to be hoſpitable; kind and helpful to Strangers; following thoſe noble Gentlemen, Abraham and Lot, who were ſo ready to invite and entertain Strangers with bountiful Courteſie.

1 Pet. 4. 9.
Heb. 13. 2.
Rom. 12. 13.
Gen. 18. 1.
19. 1.

It is his Buſineſs to maintain Peace, and appeaſe Diſſentions among his Neighbours, interpoſing his Counſel and Authority in order thereto; whereto he hath that brave Gentleman Moſes recommended for his Pattern.

Exod. 2. 13.
Acts 7. 26.

It is his Buſineſs to promote the Welfare and proſperity of his Countrey with his beſt Endeavours, and by all his Intereſt; in which practice the Sacred Hiſtory doth propound divers gallant Gentlemen (Joſeph, Moſes, Samuel, Nehemiah, Daniel, Mordecai, and all ſuch renowned Patriots) to guide him.

Jud. 5. 9.

It is his Buſineſs to govern his Family well; to educate his Children in Piety and Vertue; to keep his Servants in good order.

Joſh. 24. 15.
Pſal. 101——.

It is his Buſineſs to look to his Eſtate, and to keep it from waſting; that he may ſuſtain the Repute of his Perſon and Quality with Decency; that he may be furniſhed with Ability to do good, may provide well for his Family, may be hoſpitable, may have wherewith to help his Brethren; for if, according to St. Paul's Injunction, a Man ſhould work with his own hands, that he may have ſomewhat to impart to him that needeth; then muſt he that hath an Eſtate, be careful to preſerve it, for the ſame good Purpoſe.

Μεταδιδόναι.
Eph. 4. 28.

It is his Buſineſs to cultivate his Mind with Knowledge, with generous Diſpoſitions, with all worthy Accompliſhments befitting his Condition, and qualifying him for Honourable Action; ſo that he may excel, and rear himſelf above the vulgar Level no leſs in real inward Worth, than exteriour Garb; that he be not a Gentleman merely in Name or Shew.

It

Ardua nam res eſt opibus non tradere mores.

It is Buſineſs (and that no ſlight or eaſie Buſineſs) to eſchew the Vices, to check the Paſſions, to withſtand the Temptations, to which his Condition is liable; taking heed that his Wealth, Honour and Power do not betray him into Pride, Inſolence or Contempt of his poorer Brethren; unto Injuſtice or Oppreſſion; unto Luxury and riotous Exceſs; unto Sloth, Stupidity, Forgetfulneſs of God, and irreligious Prophaneneſs.

It is a Buſineſs eſpecially incumbent on him to be careful of his Ways, that they may have good Influence on others, who are apt to look upon him as their Guide and Pattern.

He ſhould labour and ſtudy to be a Leader unto Vertue, and a Notable Promoter thereof; directing and exciting Men thereto by his exemplary Converſation; encouraging them by his Countenance and Authority; rewarding the Goodneſs of meaner People by his Bounty and Favour: He ſhould be ſuch a Gentleman as Noah, who preached righteouſneſs by his Words and Works before a prophane World.

Such particular Affairs hath every Perſon of Quality, Credit, Wealth and Intereſt, allotted to him by God, and laid on him as Duties; the which to diſcharge faithfully, will enough employ a Man, and doth require Induſtry, much Care, much Pains; excluding Sloth and Negligence: So that it is impoſſible for a Sluggard to be a worthy Gentleman, vertuouſly diſpoſed, a charitable Neighbour, a good Patriot, a good Husband of his Eſtate; any thing of that, to which God, by ſetting him in ſuch a Station, doth call him.

Thus is a Gentleman obliged to Induſtry in reſpect of God, who juſtly doth exact thoſe Labours of Piety, Charity, and all Vertue from him. Farther,

2. He hath alſo Obligations to Mankind, demanding Induſtry from him, upon Accounts of common Humanity, Equity and Ingenuity; For,

How can he fairly ſubſiſt upon the common Induſtry of Mankind without bearing a ſhare thereof? how can he well ſatisfie himſelf to dwell ſtatelily, to feed daintily, to be finely clad, to maintain a pompous Retinue merely upon the Sweat and Toil of others, without himſelf rendring a Compenſation, or making ſome competent Returns of Care and Pain, redounding to the good of his Neighbour?

How can he juſtly claim, or reaſonably expect from the World the Reſpect agreeable to his Rank, if he doth not by worthy Performances conduce to the Benefit of it? Can Men be obliged to regard thoſe, from whom they receive no good?

If no Gentleman be tied to ſerve the Publick, or to yield Help in ſuſtaining the common Burthens, and ſupplying the Needs of Mankind, then is the whole Order merely a Burthen, and an Offence to the World; a Race of Drones, a Pack of Cyphers in the Common-wealth, ſtanding for nothing, deſerving no Conſideration or Regard: And if any are bound, then all are; for why ſhould the whole Burthen lie on ſome, while others are exempted?

It is indeed ſuppoſed, that all are bound thereto, ſeeing that all have Recompences publickly allowed to them upon ſuch Conſiderations; divers Reſpects and Privileges peculiar to the Order, grounded upon this Suppoſition, that they deſerve ſuch Advantages by conferring notable Benefit to the Publick; the which indeed it were an Arrogance to ſeek, and an Iniquity to accept for doing nothing.

It is an unſufferable Pride for any Man to pretend or conceit himſelf to differ ſo much from his Brethren, that he may be allowed to live in eaſe and Sloth, while the reſt of Mankind are ſubject to continual Toil and Trouble. Moreover,

3. A Gentleman is bound to be induſtrious for his own ſake; it is a Duty which he oweth to himſelf, to his Honour, to his Intereſt, to his Welfare. He cannot without Induſtry continue like himſelf, or maintain the Honour and Repute becoming his Quality and State; or ſecure himſelf from Contempt and Diſgrace; for to be honourable and ſlothful are things inconſiſtent; ſeeing Honour doth not grow, nor can ſubſiſt without undertaking worthy Deſigns, conſtantly purſuing them, and happily atchieving them; it is the Fruit and Reward of ſuch Actions, which are not performed with Eaſe.

External Reſpect and a Semblance of Honour, for the ſake of publick Order, may be due to an exteriour Rank or Title; but to pay this, is not to honour the Perſon, but his Title, becauſe it is ſuppoſed, that Men of real worth and uſe do bear it; or, leſt by refuſing it to one, the whole Order may ſeem diſreſpected; but yet true Honour, or mental Eſteem is not due upon ſuch accounts; nor is it poſſible to render it unto any Perſon, who doth not by worthy Qualities and good Deeds appear to merit it.

Nor can a Gentleman without Induſtry uphold his real Intereſts againſt the Attempts of Envy, of Treachery, of Flattery, of Sychophantry, of Avarice, to which his Condition is obnoxious; to preſerve his Wealth and Eſtate, which are the Supports of his Quality, he muſt endure Care and Pains; otherwiſe he will by greedy Harpies, and crafty Lurchers be rifled or cozened of his Subſtance; it will of it ſelf go to wreck, and be imbezill'd by Negligence.

He cannot without Induſtry guard his perſonal Welfare from manifold Inconveniences, Moleſtations and Miſchiefs; Idleneſs it ſelf will be very troubleſome and irkſome to him. His time will lie upon his Hands, as a peſtring Incumbrance. His Mind will be infeſted with various Diſtractions and Diſtempers; vain and ſad Thoughts, foul Luſts, and unquiet Paſſions will ſpring up therein, as Weeds in a neglected Soil. His Body will languiſh and become deſtitute of Health, of Vigour, of Activity, for want of due Exerciſe. All the Miſchiefs which naturally do ſpring from Sloth and Stupidity will ſeize upon him.

4. Thus upon various accounts a Gentleman is engag'd to Buſineſs, and concern'd to exerciſe Induſtry therein; we may add, that indeed the very nature of Gentility, or the true notion of a Gentleman doth imply ſo much.

For what, I pray, is a Gentleman, what Properties hath he, what Qualities are characteriſtical or peculiar to him, whereby he is diſtinguiſhed from others, and raiſed above the Vulgar? Are they not eſpecially two, Courage and Courteſie? which he that wanteth is not otherwiſe than equivocally a Gentleman, as an Image or a Carcaſs is a Man; without which Gentility in a conſpicuous degree is no more than a vain Show, or an empty Name; and theſe plainly do involve Induſtry, do exclude Slothfulneſs; for Courage doth prompt boldly to undertake, and reſolutely to diſpatch great Enterprizes and Imployments of Difficulty; It is not ſeen in a flaunting Garb, or ſtrutting Deportment; not in hectorly, ruffian-like ſwaggering or huffing; not in high Looks or big Words; but in ſtout and gallant Deeds, employing Vigour of Mind and Heart to atchieve them; how can a Man otherwiſe approve himſelf for couragious, than by ſignalizing himſelf in ſuch a way?

And for Courteſie, how otherwiſe can it be well diſplayed, than in ſedulous Activity for the good of Men; It ſurely doth not conſiſt in modiſh Forms of Addreſs, or complemental expreſſions, or hollow Profeſſions, commonly void of meaning, or of ſincerity;) but in real Performances of Beneficence, when Occaſion doth invite, and in waiting for Opportunities to do good; the which Practice is accompanied with ſome Care and Pain, adding a Price to it; for an eaſie Courteſie is therefore ſmall, becauſe eaſie, and may be deemed to proceed rather from ordinary Humanity, than from gentile Diſpoſition; ſo that in fine, he alone doth appear truly a Gentleman, who hath the Heart to undergo hard Tasks for publick Good, and willingly taketh Pains to oblige his Neighbours and Friends.

5. The Work indeed of Gentlemen is not ſo groſs, but it may be as ſmart and painful as any other. For all hard Work is not manual; there are other Inſtruments of Action beſide the Plow, the Spade, the Hammer, the Shuttle; nor doth every Work produce Sweat, and viſible tiring of Body; the Head may work hard in contrivance of good Deſigns, the Tongue may be very active in diſpenſing Advice, Perſwaſion, Comfort, and Edification in Vertue: A Man may beſtir himſelf in going about to do good; theſe are Works imploying the cleanly Induſtry of a Gentleman.

6. In ſuch Works it was, that the trueſt and greateſt Pattern of Gentility that ever was, did employ himſelf: Who was that? Even our Lord himſelf; for he had no particular Trade or Profeſſion: No Man can be more looſe from any Engagement to the World than he was; no Man had leſs need of Buſineſs or Pains-taking than he; for he had a vaſt Eſtate, being heir of all things, all the World being at his Diſpoſal, yea, infinitely more, it being in his power with a Word to create whatever he would to ſerve his need, or ſatisfie his Pleaſure; Omnipotency being his Treaſure and Supply; he had a Retinue of Angels to wait on him, and miniſter to him; whatever Sufficiency any Man can fanſie to himſelf to diſpenſe with his taking pains, that had he in a far higher degree: Yet did he find Work for himſelf, and continually was employed in performing Service to God, and imparting Benefits to Men; nor was ever Induſtry exerciſed upon Earth comparable to his. Iſa. 53. 11.

Gentlemen therefore would do well to make him the Pattern of their Life, to whoſe Induſtry they muſt be beholden for their Salvation: In order whereto we recommend them to his Grace.

SERMON XXII.

Of Induſtry in our particular Calling, as Scholars.

ROM. XII. 11.

Not ſlothful in Buſineſs.

I Proceed to the other ſort of Perſons, whom we did propound, Namely,

II. Scholars, and that on them particularly great Engagements do lie to be induſtrious, is moſt evident from various Conſiderations.

The Nature and Deſign of this Calling doth ſuppoſe Induſtry ; the matter and Extent of it doth require Induſtry ; the Worth of it doth highly deſerve Induſtry. We are in ſpecial Gratitude to God, in Charity to Men, in due regard to our ſelves bound unto it.

1. Firſt, I ſay, the Nature and Deſign of our Calling doth ſuppoſe Induſtry: There is (ſaith the divine Preacher) a man whoſe labour is in wiſdom, in knowledge, and in equity ; Such Men are Scholars ; ſo that we are indeed no Scholars, but abſurd Uſurpers of the Name, if we are not laborious; for what is a Scholar, but one who retireth his Perſon, and avocateth his Mind from other Occupations, and worldly Entertainments, that he may σχολάζειν, vacare ſtudiis, employ his Mind and Leiſure on Study and Learning, in the Search of Truth, the Queſt of Knowledge, the Improvement of his Reaſon. Wherefore an idle Scholar, a lazy Student, a ſluggiſh Man of Learning, is Nonſence.

Eccleſ. 2. 21.

Ἡ σοφία γραμματέως ἐν εὐκαιρίᾳ σχολῆς.
Eccl 38: 24.

What is Learning but a diligent attendance to Inſtruction of Maſters, skilled in any Knowledge, and conveying their Notions to us in Word or Writing ?

What is Study, but an earneſt, ſteady, perſevering Application of Mind to ſome Matter, on which we fix our Thoughts, with intent to ſee through it? What in Solomon's Language are theſe Scholaſtick Occupations, but inclining the ear and applying our heart to underſtanding ; than which commonly there is nothing more laborious, more ſtraining Nature, and more tiring our Spirits ; whence it is well compared to the moſt painful Exerciſes of Body and Soul.

Prov. 2. 2.

The Wiſe-man adviſing Men to ſeek Wiſdom, the which is the proper Deſign of our Calling, doth intimate that Work to be like digging in the Mines for Silver, and like ſearching all about for concealed Treaſure ; than which there can hardly be any more difficult and painful Task, If (ſaith he) thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her as for hid treaſures, then ſhalt thou underſtand.——Otherwhere he compareth the ſame Work to aſſiduous watching and waiting, like that of a Guard or a Client, which are the greateſt Inſtances of Diligence ; Bleſſed (ſaith he ; or Wiſdom by him ſaith bleſſed) is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the poſts of my doors.

Prov. 2. 4.

Prov. 8. 34.

Wherefore if we will approve our ſelves to be what we are called, and what we pretend to be, if we will avoid being Impoſtors, aſſuming a Name not due to us, we muſt not be ſlothful. Farther,

2. The Matter and Extent of our Buſineſs doth require Induſtry from us: The Matter of it, which is Truth and Knowledge ; the Extent which is very large and comprehenſive, taking in all Truth, all Knowledge, worthy our Study, and uſeful for the Deſigns of it.

Our Buſineſs is to find Truth ; the which even in Matters of high Importance) is not eaſily to be diſcovered ; being as a Vein of Silver, encompaſſed with Earth and mixed with Droſs) deeply laid in the Obſcurity of things, wrapt up in falſe Appearances, entangled with Objections, and perplexed with Debates ; being therefore not readily diſcoverable ; eſpecially by Minds clouded with Prejudices, Luſts, Paſſions, partial Affections, Appetites of Honour and Intereſt ; whence to deſcry it requireth the moſt curious Obſervation and ſolicitous Circumſpection that can be ; together with great Pains in the Preparation and Purgation of our Minds toward the Enquiry of it.

Our Buſineſs is to attain Knowledge, not concerning obvious and vulgar Matters, but about ſublime, abſtruſe, intricate and knotty Subjects, remote from common Obſervation and Senſe ; to get ſure and exact Notions about which will try the beſt Forces of our Mind with their utmoſt Endeavours; in firmly ſetling Principles, in ſtrictly deducing Conſequences, in orderly digeſting Concluſions, in faithfully retaining what we learn by our Contemplation and Study.

And if to get a competent Knowledge about a few things, or to be reaſonably ſkilful in any ſort of Learning, be difficult, how much Induſtry doth it require to be well ſeen in many, or to have waded through the vaſt compaſs of Learning, in no part whereof a Scholar may conveniently or handſomely be ignorant; ſeeing there is ſuch a Connexion of things, and Dependance of Notions, that one part of Learning doth confer Light to another, that a Man can hardly well underſtand any thing without knowing divers other things; that he will be a lame Scholar, who hath not an Inſight into many kinds of Knowledge, that he can hardly be a good Scholar who is not a general one.

To underſtand ſo many Languages (which are the Shells of Knowledge) to comprehend ſo many Sciences (full of various Theorems and Problems) to peruſe ſo many Hiſtories (of ancient and modern times;) to know the World, both natural and humane; to be acquainted with the various Inventions, Inquiries, Opinions and Controverſies of learned Men; to skill the Arts of expreſſing our Mind, and imparting our Conceptions with Advantage, ſo as to inſtruct or perſwade others; theſe are Works indeed, which will exerciſe and ſtrain our Faculties (our Reaſon, our Fancy, our Memory) in painful Study.

The Knowledge of ſuch things is not innate to us; it doth not of it ſelf ſpring up in our Minds; it is not any ways incident by chance, or infus'd by Grace (except rarely by Miracle;) common Obſervation doth not produce it; it cannot be purchaſed at any rate, except by that, for which it was Dii laboribus ſaid of old, the gods ſell all things, that is for Pains; without which the beſt
omnia vendunt. Wit and greateſt Capacity may not render a Man learned, as the beſt Soil will not yield good Fruit or Grain, if they be not planted or ſown therein.

Conſider, if you pleaſe, what a Scholar Solomon was; beſide his Skill in Politicks, which was his principal Faculty and Profeſſion, whereby he did with admirable Dexterity and Prudence manage the Affairs of that great 1 Kings 3. 9. Kingdom, judging his people, and diſcerning what was good, and bad; accurately diſpenſing Juſtice; ſetling his Country in a moſt flouriſhing ſtate of Peace, Order, Plenty and Wealth; largely extending his Territory; ſo that
1 Kings 4. 20. his Wiſdom of this kind was famous over the Earth; Beſide, I ſay, this ci-
25. 10. 27. vil Wiſdom, he had an exquiſite Skill in Natural Philoſophy and Medicine;
1 Kings 4. 21.— For He ſpake of Trees (or Plants) from the cedar that is in Lebanon, even un-
1 Kings 10. 6, 24. to the hyſſop that ſpringeth out of the wall: He ſpake alſo of beaſts and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fiſhes.

1 Kings 4. 33. He was well verſed in the Mathematicks; for it is ſaid, Solomon's wiſdom
1 Kings 4. 30. excelled the wiſdom of all the children of the Eaſt-Country, and all the wiſdom of Egypt; the Wiſdom of which Nations did conſiſt in thoſe Sciences. And of his Mechanick Skill, he left for a Monument, the moſt glorious Structure that ever ſtood on Earth.

He was very skilful in Poetry and Muſick; for he did himſelf compoſe a- 1 Kings 4. 32. bove a thouſand ſongs; whereof one yet extant declareth the Loftineſs of his Fancy, the Richneſs of his Vein, and the Elegancy of his Style.

Sap. 7. 15. He had great Ability in Rhetorick; according to that in Wiſdom, God
Eccleſ. 12. 10. granted me to ſpeak as I would; and that in Eccleſiaſtes, The Preacher ſought to 1 Kings 8. find out acceptable words; a great Inſtance of which Faculty, we have in that admirable Prayer of his Compoſure at the Dedication of the Temple.

1 Kings 4. 32. He did wonderfully excel in Ethicks; concerning which he ſpake three thouſand Proverbs or moral Aphoriſms; and Moreover (ſaith Eccleſiaſtes) becauſe the Preacher was wiſe, he ſtill taught the people knowledge; yea he gave good heed, and ſought out, and ſet in order many Proverbs; the which did contain a great Variety of notable Obſervations, and uſeful Directions for common Life, couched in pithy Expreſſions. Ecclef. 12. 9.

As for Theology, as the Study of that was the chief Study to which he exhorteth others (as to the head, or principal part of wiſdom) ſo queſtionleſs he was himſelf moſt converſant therein; for proof whereof he did leave ſo many excellent Theorems and Precepts of Divinity to us. Prov. 2. 5, —

In fine, there is no ſort of Knowledge, to which he did not apply his Study; witneſs himſelf in thoſe Words, I gave my heart to ſeek and ſearch out by wiſdom concerning all things, that are done under heaven. Ecclef. 1. 13.

Such a Scholar was he; and ſuch if we have a noble Ambition to be, we muſt uſe the courſe he did; which was firſt in his Heart to prefer Wiſdom before all worldly things; then to pray to God for it, or for his Bleſſing in our queſt of it; then to uſe the means of attaining it, diligent Searching and hard Study; for that this was his method he telleth us, I (ſaith he) applied my heart to know, and to ſearch, and to ſeek out wiſdom, and the reaſon of things. Ecclef. 7. 25.

Such Conſiderations ſhew the Neceſſity of Induſtry for a Scholar; but,

3. The Worth, and Excellency, and great Utility, together with the Pleaſantneſs of his Vocation, deſerving the higheſt Induſtry, do ſuperadd much Obligation thereto.

We are much bound to be diligent out of Ingenuity, and in Gratitude to God, who by his gracious Providence hath aſſigned to us a Calling ſo worthy, an Employment ſo comfortable, a way of Life no leſs commodious, beneficial and delightful to our ſelves, than ſerviceable to God, and uſeful for the World.

If we had our Option and Choice, what Calling would we deſire before this of any whereto Men are affixed? How could we better imploy our Mind, or place our Labour, or ſpend our time, or paſs our Pilgrimage in this World, than in ſcholaſtical Occupations?

It were hard to reckon up, or to expreſs the numberleſs great Advantages of this Calling, I ſhall therefore only touch ſome, which readily fall under my Thought recommending its Value to us.

It is a Calling, the Deſign whereof conſpireth with the general End of our Being; the Perfection of our Nature in its Endowments, and the Fruition of it in its beſt Operations.

It is a Calling that doth not employ us in bodily Toil, in worldly Care, in purſuit of trivial Affairs, in ſordid Drudgeries; but in thoſe Angelical Operations of Soul, the Contemplation of Truth, and Attainment of VViſdom; which are the worthieſt Exerciſes of our Reaſon, and ſweeteſt Entertainments of our Mind; the moſt precious Wealth, and moſt beautiful Ornaments of our Soul; whereby our Faculties are improved, are poliſhed and refined, are enlarged in their Power and Uſe by habitual Acceſſions: the which are conducible to our own greateſt Profit and Benefit, as ſerving to rectifie our Wills, to compoſe our Affections, to guide our Lives in the ways of Vertue, to bring us unto Felicity. Prov. 2. 4, 10.

It is a Calling, which being duly follow'd, will moſt ſever us from the vulgar ſort of Men, and advance us above the common Pitch; enduing us with Light to ſee farther than other Men, diſpoſing us to affect better things, and to ſlight thoſe meaner Objects of Humane Deſire, on which Men commonly dote; freeing us from the erroneous Conceits, and from the Perverſe Affections of common People. It is ſaid διπλῶν ὁρῶσιν οἱ μαθόντες γράμματα, men of learning are double-ſighted; but it is true, that in many caſes ſes they ſee infinitely farther than a vulgar Sight doth reach; and if a Man by ſerious Study doth acquire a clear and ſolid Judgment of things, ſo as to aſſign to each its due Weight and Price; if he accordingly be inclined in his Heart to affect and purſue them; if from clear and right Notions of things a meek and ingenuous Temper of Mind, a Command and Moderation of Paſſions, a firm Integrity, and a cordial Love of Goodneſs do ſpring, he thereby becometh another kind of thing, much different from thoſe brutiſh Men (Beaſts of the People) who blindly follow the Motions of their ſenſual Appetite, or the Suggeſtions of their Fancy, or their miſtaken Prejudices.

It is a Calling which hath theſe conſiderable Advantages, that by vertue of Improvement therein, we can ſee with our own Eyes, and guide our ſelves by our own Reaſons, not being led blindfold about, or depending precariouſly on the Conduct of others in Matters of higheſt Concern to us. That we are exempted from giddy Credulity, from wavering Levity, from fond Admiration of Perſons and Things, being able to diſtinguiſh of things, and to ſettle our Judgments about them, and to get an intimate Acquaintance with them, aſſuring to us their true Nature and Worth: that we are alſo thereby reſcu'd from admiring our ſelves, and that over-weening Self-conceitedneſs, of which the Wiſe-man ſaith, The ſluggard is wiſer in his Prov. 26. 16. own conceit, than ſeven men that can render a reaſon.

It is a Calling, whereby we are qualified and enabled to do God ſervice; to gratifie his Deſires, to promote his Honour, to advance his Intereſts; to render his Name glorious in the World; by teaching, maintaining and propagating his Truth; by perſwading Men to render their due Love, Reverence, and Obedience to him; than which we can have no more honourable or ſatisfactory Imployment; more like to that of the glorious and bleſſed Spirits.

It is a Calling, the due Proſecution whereof doth ingratiate us with God, and procureth his Favour; rendring us fit Objects of his Love, and entitling us thereto in regard to our Qualities, and Recompence of our Works: For Sap. 7. 28. Pſal. 5. 5. Prov. 3. 4. God loveth none but him that dwelleth with wiſdom; and, ſo ſhalt thou find favour and good underſtanding in the ſight of God and man.

It is a Calling whereby with greateſt Advantage we may benefit Men, and deſerve well of the World; drawing Men to the Knowledge and Service of God, reclaiming them from Errour and Sin, reſcuing them from Miſery, and conducting them to Happineſs; by clear Inſtruction, by faithful Admonition, by powerful Exhortation: And what can be more noble, than to be the Lights of the World, the Guides of Practice to Men, the Authors of ſo much good, ſo egregious Benefactors to Mankind?

It is a Calling moſt exempt from the Cares, the Croſſes, the Turmoils, the factious Jarrs, the anxious Intrigues, the vexatious Moleſtations of the World; its Buſineſs lying out of the road of thoſe Miſchiefs, wholly lying in ſolitary Retirement, or being tranſacted in the moſt innocent and ingenuous Company.

It is a Calling leaſt ſubject to any Danger or Diſappointment; wherein we may well be aſſured not to miſcarry or loſe our Labour; for the Merchant indeed by manifold Accidents may loſe his Voyage, or find a bad Market; the Husbandman may plough and ſow in vain; but the Student hardly can fail of improving his Stock, and reaping a good Crop of Knowledge; eſpecially if he ſtudy with a conſcientious Mind, and pious Reverence to God, imploring his gracious Help and Bleſſing.

It is a Calling, the Induſtry us'd wherein doth abundantly recompence it ſelf, by the Pleaſure and Sweetneſs which it carrieth in it; ſo that the more Pains one taketh, the more Delight he findeth, feeling himſelf proportionably to grow in Knowledge; and that his Work becometh continually more eaſie to him.

It is a Calling, the Buſineſs whereof doth ſo exerciſe as not to weary, ſo entertain as not to cloy us; being not (as other Occupations are) a drawing in a Mill, or a nauſeous (tedious) Repetition of the ſame Work; but a continual Progreſs toward freſh Objects; our Mind not being ſtaked to one or a few poor Matters, but having immenſe Fields of Contemplation, wherein it may everlaſtingly expatiate, with great Proficiency and Pleaſure.

Γηράσκω δ᾽ ἀεὶ πολλὰ διδασκόμενος.

It is a Calling which doth ever afford plentiful Fruit, even in regard to the Conveniences of this preſent and temporal State; the which ſufficiently will requite the Pains expended thereon: For if we be honeſtly induſtrious we ſhall not want Succeſs; and ſucceeding we ſhall not want a Competence of Wealth, of Reputation, of Intereſt in the World: For concerning Wiſdom, which is the reſult of honeſt Study, the Wiſe-man telleth us, Riches and honour are with her, yea, durable riches and righteouſneſs: length of days are in her right-hand, and in her left hand riches and honour: Exalt her, and ſhe ſhall promote thee, ſhe ſhall bring thee to honour, when thou doſt embrace her; ſhe ſhall give to thine head an ornament of grace, a crown of glory ſhall ſhe deliver to thee; In common Experience the Wealth of the Mind doth qualifie for Imployments, which have good Recompences annexed to them; and neither God nor Man will ſuffer him long to want, who is endowed with worthy Accompliſhments of Knowledge: It was a ridiculous Providence in Nero that if he ſhould chance to loſe his Empire, he might live by fidling; yet his Motto was good; and Dionyſius, another Tyrant, found the Benefit of it; τὸ τεχνίον γαῖα τρέφει, he that hath any good Art, hath therein an Eſtate, and Land in every Place; he is ſecured againſt being reduc'd to Extremity of any Misfortune: Wiſdom (ſaith the Wiſeman) is a defence, and money is a defence; but the extellency of knowledge is, that wiſdom giveth life to them that have it: Money is a Defence, of which Fortune may bereave us; but Wiſdom is beyond its Attacks; being a Treaſure ſeated in a Place inacceſſible to external Impreſſions.

Prov. 8. 18. 3. 16. 4. 9, 10.

Eccl. 7. 12.

And as a Learned Man cannot be deſtitute of Subſtance; ſo he cannot want Credit, having ſuch an Ornament, than which none hath a more general Eſtimation; and which can be of low rate only among that ſort of Folk, to whom Solomon ſaith, How long, ye ſimple ones, will ye love ſimplicity? —— and fools hate knowledge? It is that which recommendeth a Man in all Company, and procureth Regard, every one yielding * Attention and Acceptance to inſtructive, neat, appoſite Diſcourſe) that which the Scripture calleth acceptable, pleaſant gracious words) Men think themſelves obliged thereby by receiving Information and Satisfaction from it; and accordingly Every man (ſaith the Wiſe-man) ſhall kiſs his lips, that giveth a right anſwer; and —— for the grace of his lips the King ſhall be his friend; and, the words of a wiſe-man's mouth are gracious. It is that, an Eminency wherein purchaſeth laſting Fame, and a Life after Death, in the good Memory and Opinion of Poſterity; Many ſhall commend his underſtanding, and ſo long as the world endureth, it ſhall not be blotted out, his memorial ſhall not depart away, and his name ſhall live from generation to generation. A fame no leſs great, and far more innocent than Acts of Chivalry and Martial Proweſs; for is not Ariſtotle as renown'd for teaching the World with his Pen, as Alexander for conquering it with his Sword; is not one far oftener mentioned, than the other? do not Men hold themſelves much more oblig'd to the Learning of the Philoſopher, than to the Valour of the Warriour? Indeed the Fame of all others is indebted to the Pains of the Scholar, and could not ſubſiſt, but with and by his Fame, Dignum laude virum, muſa vetat mori; Learning conſecrateth it ſelf and its Subject together, to immortal Remembrance.

Prov. 12. 8. A man ſhall be commended according to his wiſdom.

Prov. 1. 22. 1. 7.

 Prov. 22. 17.

Prov. 24. 26.

Prov. 22. 15, 26.

Eccleſ. 10. 12.

Ecclus. 39. 9.

It is a Calling that fitteth a Man for all Conditions and Fortunes; ſo that he can enjoy Proſperity with Moderation, and ſuſtain Adverſity with Comfort: He that loveth a Book, will never want a faithful Friend, a wholſome Counſellour, a chearful Companion, an effectual Comforter. By Study, by reading, by thinking one may innocently divert, and pleaſantly entertain himſelf, as in all Weathers, ſo in all Fortunes.

In fine, it is a Calling, which Solomon, who had curiouſly obſerved and exactly compared and ſcann'd, by Reaſon and by Experience all other Occupations and ways of Life, did prefer above all others; and we may preſume would ſooner have parted with his royal State, than with his Learning; for Wiſdom (ſaith he) is the principal thing, therefore get wiſdom; and with all thy getting get underſtanding; and Then I ſaw (then, that is, after a ſerious Diſquiſition and Diſcuſſion of things, I ſaw) that wiſdom exceedeth folly (that is, Knowledge excelleth Ignorance) as light excelleth darkneſs.

Prov. 4. 7.
Ecclus. 2. 13.

Theſe things and much more may be ſaid of Learning in general; but if more diſtinctly we ſurvey each Part, and each Object of it, we ſhall find, that each doth yield conſiderable Emoluments, and Delights; Benefit to our Soul, Advantage to our Life, Satisfaction to our Mind.

The Obſervation of things, and Collection of Experiments how doth it enrich the Mind with Ideas, and breed a kind of familiar Acquaintance with all things, ſo that nothing doth ſurprize us, or ſtrike our Mind with Aſtoniſhment and Admiration? and if our eye be not ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor our ear filled with hearing, how much leſs is our Mind ſatiated with the Pleaſures of ſpeculating and obſerving that immenſe Variety of Objects ſubject to its View.

Eccleſ. 1. 8.

The Exerciſe of our Mind in rational Diſcurſiveneſs, about things in queſt of Truth; canvaſing Queſtions, examining Arguments for and againſt; how greatly doth it better us, fortifying our Natural Parts, enabling us to fix our Thoughts on Objects without roving, enuring us to weigh and reſolve, and judge well about Matters propoſed; preſerving us from being eaſily abuſed by captious Fallacies, gull'd by ſpecious Pretences, toſſed about with every Doubt or Objection ſtarted before us?

Invention of any kind (in diſcerning the Cauſes of abſtruſe Effects, in reſolving hard Problems, in demonſtrating Theorems, in framing Compoſures of witty Deſcription, or forcible Perſwaſion) how much doth it exceed the Pleaſure of hunting for any Game, or of combating for any Victory? do any Man's Children ſo much pleaſe him, as theſe Creatures of his Brain?

The reading of Books what is it, but converſing with the wiſeſt Men of all Ages and all Countries, who thereby communicate to us their moſt deliberate Thoughts, choiceſt Notions, and beſt Inventions, couched in good Expreſſion, and digeſted in exact Method.

And as to the particular Matters or Objects of Study, all have their Uſe and Pleaſure. I ſhall only touch them.

The very initial Studies of Tongues and Grammatical Literature are very profitable and neceſſary, as the Inlets to Knowledge, whereby we are enabled to underſtand wiſe Men ſpeaking their Senſe in their own Terms and lively Strain, whereby eſpecially we are aſſiſted to drink ſacred Knowledge out of the Fountains, the Divine Oracles.

Luther would not part with a little Hebrew he had for all the Turkiſh Empire.

Rhetorick, or the part of conveying our Thoughts to others by Speech with Advantages of Clearneſs, Force and Elegancy, ſo as to inſtruct, to perſwade, to delight the Auditors; of how great Benefit is it, if it be well uſed? how much may it conduce to the Service of God, and Edification of Men? What hath been a more effectual Inſtrument of doing good, and working Wonders not only in the World, but in the Church? how many Souls have been converted from Error, Vanity and Vice, to Truth, Soberneſs and Vertue, by an eloquent Apollos, a Baſil, a Chryſoſtom?

Ἀνὴρ λόγιος, ϗ̀ δυνατὸς-- Acts 18. 24.

The Peruſal of Hiſtory, how pleaſant Illumination of Mind, how uſeful Direction of Life? how ſprightly Incentives to Vertue doth it afford? how doth it ſupply the room of Experience, and furniſh us with Prudence at the Expence of others, informing us about the ways of Action, and the Conſequences thereof by Examples, without our own Danger or Trouble? how may it inſtruct and encourage us in Piety, while therein we trace the Paths of God in Men, or obſerve the Methods of Divine Providence, how the Lord and Judge of the World in due ſeaſon protecteth, proſpereth, bleſſeth, rewardeth Innocence and Integrity? how he croſſeth, defeateth, blaſteth, curſeth, puniſheth Iniquity and Outrage; managing things with admirable Temper of Wiſdom to the good of Mankind, and Advancement of his own Glory?

The Mathematical Sciences, how pleaſant is the Speculation of them to the Mind? how uſeful is the Practice to common Life? how do they whet and excite the Mind? how do they inure it to ſtrict Reaſoning, and patient Meditation?

Natural Philoſophy, the Contemplation of this great Theatre, or viſible Syſtem preſented before us; obſerving the various Appearances therein, and inquiring into their Cauſes; reflecting on the Order, Connection and Harmony of things; conſidering their original Source, and their final Deſign: How doth it enlarge our Minds, and advance them above vulgar Amuſements, and the Admiration of thoſe petty things, about which Men cark and bicker? how may it ſerve to work in us pious Affections of Admiration, Reverence and Love toward our great Creator, whoſe eternal divinity is clearly ſeen, whoſe glory is declared, whoſe tranſcendent Perfections and Attributes of immenſe Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs are conſpicuouſly diſplayed, whoſe particular Kindneſs toward us Men doth evidently ſhine in thoſe his Works of Nature?

Rom. 1. 20.
Pſal. 19. 1.
Pſal. 8.

The Study of Moral Philoſophy, how exceedingly beneficial may it be to us, ſuggeſting to us the Dictates of Reaſon concerning the Nature and Faculties of our Soul, the chief Good and End of our Life, the way and means of attaining Happineſs, the beſt Rules and Methods of Practice; the Diſtinctions between Good and Evil, the Nature of each Vertue, and Motives to embrace it; the Rank wherein we ſtand in the World, and the Duties proper to our Relations; by rightly underſtanding and eſtimating which things we may know how to behave our ſelves decently and ſoberly toward our ſelves, juſtly and prudently toward our Neighbours; we may learn to correct our Inclinations, to regulate our Appetites, to moderate our Paſſions, to govern our Actions, to conduct and weild all our Practice well in Proſecution of our End; ſo as to enjoy our Being and Conveniencies of Life in conſtant Quiet and Peace, with Tranquillity and Satisfaction of Mind?

But eſpecially the Study of Theology how numberleſs unexpreſſible Advantages doth it yield? For,

It enlighteneth our Minds with the beſt Knowledge concerning the moſt high and worthy Objects in order to the moſt happy End, with the firmeſt Aſſurance.

It certainly and perfectly doth inform us concerning the Nature and Attributes, the Will and Intentions, the Works and Providence of God.

It fully declareth to us our own Nature, our Original, our deſign'd End, our whole Duty, our certain Way of attaining eternal Life and Felicity.

It exactly teacheth us how we ſhould demean our ſelves in all reſpects, pipiouſly toward God, juſtly and charitably toward our Neighbour, ſoberly toward our ſelves; without Blame in the World, with Satisfaction of our Conſcience, with aſſured Hope of bleſſed Rewards.

It propoſeth thoſe Encouragements, and exhibiteth Aſſurances of thoſe Helps, which ſerve potently to engage us in all good Practice.

It ſetteth before us a moſt compleat and lively Pattern of all Goodneſs; apt moſt clearly to direct, moſt ſtrongly to excite, moſt obligingly to engage us thereto; eſpecially inſtructing and inclining to the Practice of the moſt high and hard Duties, Meekneſs, Humility, Patience, Self-denial, Contempt of all worldly Vanities.

It diſcovereth thoſe ſublime Myſteries and ſtupendious Wonders of Grace, whereby God hath demonſtrated an Incomprehenſible Kindneſs to Mankind, and our Obligation to correſpondent Gratitude. 1 Pet. 1. 12. Tit. 3. 4.

It repreſenteth manifold Arguments and Incentives to love God with moſt intenſe Affection, to confide in him with moſt firm Aſſurance, to delight in him continually with joy unſpeakable; which are the nobleſt, the ſweeteſt, the happieſt Operations of our Soul.

2 Cor. 4. 8. It reareth our Hearts from vain Thoughts, and mean Deſires concerning theſe poor, tranſitory, earthly things, to Contemplations, Affections, and Hopes toward Objects moſt excellent, eternal and celeſtial.

It engageth us to ſtudy the Book of God, the Book of Books, the richeſt Mine of moſt excellent Knowledge, containing infallible Oracles of Truth, and heavenly Rules of Life; which are able to make us wiſe to ſalvation, and perfect to every good work. 2 Tim. 3. 15. Pſal. 19. 10.

And how can we otherwiſe be ſo well employ'd, as in Meditation about ſuch things? What Occupation doth nearer approach to that of the bleſſed Angels? What Heaven is there upon Earth like to that of conſtantly feaſting our Minds and Hearts in the Contemplation of ſuch Objects? Eſpecially conſidering that this Study doth not only yield private Benefit to our ſelves in forwarding our own Salvation, but enableth us by our Guidance and Encouragement to promote the eternal Welfare of others, and by our Endeavours to people Heaven, according to that Exhortation of St. Paul preſſing on Timothy this Study with Diligence; Meditate upon theſe things; give thy ſelf wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all; take heed unto thy ſelf, and unto the doctrine, continue in them; for in doing this thou ſhalt both ſave thy ſelf, and them that hear thee. 1 Tim. 4. 16.

So conſiderable is each part of Learning, ſo extreamly profitable are ſome parts of it; Indeed the Skill of any liberal Art is valuable, as a handſome Ornament, as a harmleſs Divertiſement, as an uſeful Inſtrument upon Occaſions; as preferable to all other Accompliſhments and Advantages of Perſon or Fortune (Beauty, Strength, Wealth, Power or the like;) for who would not purchaſe any kind of ſuch Knowledge at any rate; who would ſell it for any Price; who would not chuſe rather to be deformed or impotent in his Body, than to have a miſ-ſhapen and weak Mind; to have rather a lank Purſe than an empty Brain; to have no Title at all, than no worth to bear it out? if any would, he is not of Solomon's Mind; for of Wiſdom (by which he meaneth a Comprehenſion of all Knowledge, Divine and Humane; into which the Knowledge of Natural things, of Mathematicks, of Poetry, are reckoned Ingredients) he ſaith, The merchandize of it is better than the merchandize of ſilver, and the gain thereof than fine gold; ſhe is more precious than rubies, and all the things thou canſt deſire, are not to be compared unto her: Her fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold; and her revenue than choice ſilver. 1 Kings 4 29. Prov. 2. 14. 8. 11. Prov. 8. 19. 16. 16. 20. 15. 4. 7.

Now then, conſidering all theſe Advantages of our Calling, if we by our Negligence or Sluggiſhneſs therein do loſe them, are we not very ingrategrateful to God, who gave them as with a gracious Intent for our Good, ſo with Expectation that we ſhould improve them to his Service? If God had allotted to us the Calling of Ruſticks, or of Artificers, we had been impious in not diligently following it; but we are abominably ingrateful in neglecting this moſt incomparably excellent Vocation.

Are we not extremely defective to our ſelves, if indulging a wretched Humour of Lazineſs we will not enjoy thoſe ſweet Pleaſures, nor embrace thoſe great Profits to which God in Mercy calleth us?

If Solomon ſaid true, He that getteth wiſdom, loveth his own ſoul, he that keepeth underſtanding ſhall find good; how little Friends are we to our ſelves, how neglectful of our own Welfare, by not uſing the means of getting Wiſdom? Prov. 19. 8.

The heart of him that hath underſtanding ſeeketh knowledge ſaith Solomon; what a Fool then is he that ſhunneth it? who, though it be his way and his ſpecial Duty to ſeek it, yet neglecteth it; chuſing rather to do nothing, or to do worſe. Prov. 15. 14.

And do we not deſerve great Blame, Diſpleaſure and Diſgrace from Mankind, if having ſuch Opportunities of qualifying our ſelves to do good, and ſerve the Publick, we by our Idleneſs render our ſelves worthleſs and uſeleſs?

How, being ſlothful in our Buſineſs, can we anſwer for our violating the Wills, for abuſing the Goodneſs, for perverting the Charity and Bounty of our worthy Founders and Benefactors, who gave us the good things we enjoy, not to maintain us in Idleneſs, but for Supports and Encouragements of our Induſtry? how can we excuſe our ſelves from diſhoneſty and perfidious Dealing, ſeeing that we are admitted to theſe Enjoyments under Condition, and upon Confidence (confirmed by our free Promiſes and moſt ſolemn Engagements) of uſing them according to their pious Intent, that is in a diligent Proſecution of our Studies, in order to the Service of God, and of the Publick?

Let every Scholar, when he miſ-ſpendeth an Hour, or ſluggeth on his Bed, but imagine that he heareth the Voice of thoſe glorious Kings or venerable Prelates, or worthy Gentlemen complaining thus, and rating him; Why, Sluggard, doſt thou againſt my Will poſſeſs my Eſtate? Why doſt thou preſume to occupy the Place due to an induſtrious Perſon? Why doſt thou forget or deſpiſe thy Obligation to my Kindneſs? Thou art an Uſurper, a Robber, or a Purloiner of my Goods, which I never intended for ſuch as thee; I challenge thee of Wrong to my ſelf, and of Sacrilege toward my God, to whoſe Service I devoted thoſe his Gifts to me.

How reproachful will it be to us, if that Expoſtulation may concern us, Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool to get wiſdom, ſeeing he hath no heart to it? Prov. 17. 16.

If to be a Dunce or a Bungler in any Profeſſion be ſhameful, how much more ignominious and infamous to a Scholar to be ſuch? from whom all Men expect, that he ſhould excel in intellectual Abilities; and be able to help others by his Inſtruction and Advice.

Nothing ſurely would more grate on the Heart of one, that hath a Spark of Ingenuity, of Modeſty, of generous good Nature, than to be liable to ſuch an Imputation.

To avoid it therefore (together with all the Guilt, and all the Miſchiefs attending on Sloth) let each of us in God's Name, carefully mind his Buſineſs; And let the Grace and Bleſſing of God proſper you therein. Amen.

SERMON XXIII.

The Unſearchableneſs of God's Judgments.

ROM. XI. 33.

How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out.

THESE Words are the Cloſe of a Diſputation, wherein St. Paul was engaged with the Advocates of Judaiſm, concerning God's Providence toward his ancient People, in rejecting the greateſt Part of them upon their refuſal to embrace the Chriſtian Doctrine; and in admitting the Gentile World to favour, upon its compliance with the Overtures thereof propoſed in the Goſpel. In this Proceeding thoſe Infidels could not diſcern God's Hand, nor would allow ſuch a Diſpenſation worthy of him, advancing ſeveral Exceptions againſt it: God (ſaid they) having eſpouſed and conſecrated us to himſelf; having to our Fathers, in regard to their Piety, made ſo abſolute Promiſes of Benediction on their Poſterity; having conſequently endowed us with ſuch Privileges and choice Pledges of his Favour, having taken ſo much pains with us, and performed ſo great things in our behalf; having ſo long avowed, ſupported, and cheriſhed us; how can it well conſiſt with his Wiſdom, with his Juſtice, with his Fidelity, with his Conſtancy thus inſtantly to abandon and repudiate us? Doth not this Dealing argue his former Affections to have been miſ-placed? doth it not implead his ancient Covenant and Law of Imperfection? doth it not ſupplant his own Deſigns, and unravel all that he for ſo many Ages hath been doing? Upon ſuch Accounts did this Diſpenſation appear very ſtrange and ſcandalous to them: but St. Paul being infallibly aſſured of its Truth, doth undertake to vindicate it from all Miſpriſions, rendring a fair Account of it, and aſſigning for it many ſatisfactory Reaſons, drawn from the general Equity of the Caſe, from the Nature of God, his Attributes, and his Relations to Men; from the Congruity of this Proceeding to the Tenour of God's Providence, to his moſt ancient Purpoſes, to the true Intent of his Promiſes, to his expreſs Declarations and Predictions; to the ſtate of things in the World, and the preſſing Needs of all Mankind: Such Reaſons (I ſay, which I have not time more explicitly to relate) doth the Apoſtle produce in favour of this great Diſpenſation; the which did ſuffice to clear and juſtifie it from all their Objections; yet notwithſtanding after that he had ſteered his Diſcourſe through all theſe Rocks, he thought it ſafe to caſt Anchor; winding up the Conteſt in this modeſt Intimation, that whatever he could ſay, might not perhaps exhauſt the Difficulty, or void all Scruple; that therefore in this and in all ſuch Caſes, for entire Satisfaction, we ſhould have Recourſe to the incomprehenſible Wiſdom of God, who frequently in the courſe of his Providence doth act upon grounds, and ordereth things in Methods tranſcending our Ability to diſcover or trace: To conſider ſome Cauſes and Reaſons of which Incomprehenſibility, and to ground thereon ſome practical Advices will be the Scope of my Diſcourſe: The Reaſons may be theſe.

1. As the Dealings of very wiſe Men ſometimes are founded upon Maxims, and admit Juſtifications not obvious, nor penetrable by vulgar Conceit, ſo may God act according to Rules of Wiſdom and Juſtice; which it may be quite impoſſible by our Faculties to apprehend, or with our Means to deſcry.

As there are natural Modes of Being and Operation (ſuch as God's neceſſary Subſiſtence, his Production of things from nothing, his Eternity without Succeſſion, his Immenſity without Extenſion, his Preſcience without Neceſſitation of Events, his ever acting, but never changing; and the like) ſo there may be prudential and moral Rules of proceeding far above our reach, ſo God himſelf telleth us: As the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. Iſa. 55. 8. Some of them we may be uncapable to know, becauſe of our finite Nature; they being peculiar Objects of Divine Wiſdom, and not to be underſtood by any Creature: For as God cannot impart the Power of doing all things poſſible, ſo may he not communicate the Faculty of knowing all things intelligible; that being indeed to ungod himſelf, or to deprive himſelf of his peerleſs Supremacy in Wiſdom; hence is he ſtiled the only wiſe God; hence is he ſaid to dwell in light inacceſſible; hence he chargeth the Angels with folly; hence the moſt illuminate Seraphims do veil their Faces before him. 1 Tim. 1. 17. Rom. 16. 27. Jude 25. 1 Tim. 6. 16. Job 4. 18. Iſa. 6. 2.

Other ſuch Rules we may not be able to perceive from the Meanneſs of our Nature, or our low Rank among Creatures; for beneath Omniſcience there being innumerable Forms of Intelligence, in the loweſt of theſe we ſit, one Remove from Beaſts; being endowed with Capacities ſuitable to that inferiour Station, and to thoſe meaner Employments, for which we were deſigned and framed; whence our Mind hath a Pitch, beyond which it cannot ſoar; and things clearly intelligible to more noble Creatures, moving in a higher Orb, may be dark and unexplicable to us: as an Angel of God, ſo is my Lord the King, to diſcern good and bad, was an Expreſſion importing this Difference, how thoſe glorious Creatures do overtop us in intellectual Capacities. Pſal. 103. 20. 2 Pet. 2. 11. 2 Sam. 14. 17, 20. 19. 27.

Alſo divers Notions not ſimply paſſing our Capacity to know, we are not yet in condition to ken, by reaſon of our Circumſtances here, in this dark Corner of things, to which we are confined, and wherein we lie under many Diſadvantages of attaining Knowledge: He that is ſhut up in a cloſe Place, and can only peep through Chinks, who ſtandeth in a Valley, and hath his Proſpect intercepted, who is encompaſſed with Foggs, who hath but a dusky Light to view things by, whoſe Eyes are weak or foul, how can he ſee much or far, how can he diſcern things remote, minute or ſubtile, clearly and diſtinctly? Such is our Caſe; our Mind is pent up in the Body, and looketh only through thoſe Clefts by which Objects ſtrike our Senſe; its Intuition is limited within a very ſmall Compaſs; it reſideth in an Atmoſphere of Fancy, ſtuft with Exhalations from Temper, Appetite, Paſſion, Intereſt; its Light is ſcant and faint (for Senſe and Experience do reach only ſome few groſs Matters of Fact, Light infuſed, and Revelation imparted to us, proceed from arbitrary Diſpenſation, in definite Meaſures) our Ratiocination conſequently from ſuch Principles, muſt be very ſhort and defective; nor are our Minds ever thoroughly ſound, or pure and defecate from Prejudices; Hence no Wonder, that now we are wholly ignorant of divers great Truths, or have but a glimmering Notion of them, which we may, and hereafter ſhall come fully and clearly to underſtand: ſo that even the Apoſtles, the Secretaries of Heaven might ſay, We know in part, 1 Cor. 13. 9, 12.

part, and we propheſie in part; We now ſee through a glaſs darkly, but then face to face.

In fine, thoſe Rules of Equity or Experience, which we in our Tranſactions with one another do uſe (being derived from our Original Inclinations to like ſome good things, or from Notions ſtamped on our Soul when God made us according to his Image, from common Experience, from any kind of rational Collection, from the Preſcription of God's Word) if they be applied to the Dealings of God will be found very incongruous, or deficient; the Caſe being vaſtly altered from that infinite Diſtance in Nature and State between God and us; and from the immenſe Differences which his Relations toward us have from our Relations to one another.

Wherefore in divers Enquiries about Providence, to which our Curioſity will ſtretch it ſelf, it is impoſſible for us to be reſolved, and launching into them, we ſhall ſoon get out of our Depth, ſo as to ſwim in Diſſatisfaction, or to ſink into Diſtruſt: Why God made the World at ſuch an Inſtant, no ſooner or later; why he made it thus, not exempt from all Diſorder; why he framed Man (the Prince of viſible Creatures) ſo fallible and frail; ſo prone to Sin, ſo liable to Miſery; why ſo many things happen, offenſive to him, why his Gifts are diſtributed with ſuch Inequality? ſuch Queſtions we are apt to propound and to debate; but the Reſolution of them our Mind perhaps was not made to apprehend, nor in its moſt elevate Condition ſhall attain it; however in this ſtate we by no means can come at it; it at leaſt being kept cloſe from us among thoſe things, of which it is ſaid, The Deut. 29. 30. ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God, in diſtinction from others, about which it is added, But thoſe that are revealed, belong unto us and to our children for ever.

In ſuch Caſes the abſolute Will, the Sovereign Authority, the pure Liberality of God do ſupply the Place of Reaſons, ſufficient, if not to ſatisfie the
Rom. 9. 20. Minds of Men fondly curious, yet to ſtop the Mouths of thoſe, who are
Iſa. 45. 9. boldly peremptory: The which are alledged, not with intent to imply that
Gen. 18. 25. God ever acteth unaccountably, or without higheſt Reaſon, but that ſome-Ezek. 18. 25. times his Methods of acting are not fit Subjects of our Conception or Diſ-Iſa. 5. 3. cuſſion; for otherwhile God appealeth to the Verdict of our Reaſon; when the Caſe is ſuch that we can apprehend it, and the Apprehenſion of it may conduce to good Purpoſes.

2. As the ſtanding Rules of God's acting, ſo the occaſional Grounds thereof are commonly placed beyond the Sphere of our Apprehenſion.

God is obliged to proſecute his own immutable Decrees; working all
Eph. 1. 11. things, as the Apoſtle ſaith, according to the counſel of his own will; which how can we any-wiſe come to diſcover? can we climb up above the Heaven of Heavens, and there unlock his Cloſet, rifle his Cabinet, and peruſe the Rom. 11. 34. Records of everlaſting Deſtiny, by which the World is governed? No, Who Iſa. 40. 13. knoweth his mind, or hath been his counſellour? Who, ſaith the Prophet, hath
Jer. 23. 18. ſtood in the counſel of the Lord; or hath perceived and heard his word?
Sap. 9. 13.

He doth ſearch the hearts, and try the reins of men; he doth * weigh their ſpirits, and their works; he doth know their frame, he doth underſtand their thoughts afar off; he perceiveth their cloſeſt Intentions, their deepeſt Contrivances, their moſt retired Behaviours; he conſequently is acquainted with their true Qualifications, Capacities and Merits; unto which he moſt juſtly and wiſely doth accommodate his Dealings with them; the which therefore muſt often thwart the Opinions and Expectations of us, who are ignorant of thoſe Particulars, and can only view the exterior

* Prov. 16. 2. Iſa. 26. 7.
1 Sam. 2. 3. Pſal. 103. 14. 139. 2. 64. 6.
Job 14. 16.
Ἡμεῖς μὲν γὰρ μόνα ὁρῶμεν τὰ πράγματα· ὁ δὲ τῶν ὅλων Θεὸς, καὶ τῶν ταῦτα δρώντων ἐπίσταται τὸν σκόπον, καὶ τούτῳ μᾶλλον, ἢ τοῖς ἔργοις δικάζων ἐκφέρει τὴν ψῆφον. Theod. Ep. 3.

Face or Semblance of things: For as Samuel, in the caſe of preferring David before his Brethren, did ſay) God ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh at the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart.

1 Sam. 16. 7.

God alſo hath a perfect Foreſight of contingent Events; he ſeeth upon what Pin each Wheel moveth, and with what Weight* every Scale will be turned; he diſcerneth all the Connections, all the Entanglements of things, and what the Reſult will be upon the Combination, or the claſhing of numberleſs Cauſes; in Correſpondence to which Perceptions he doth order things conſiſtently, and conveniently; whereas we being ſtark blind, or very dim-ſighted in ſuch reſpects (ſeeing nothing future, and but few things preſent) cannot apprehend what is fit and feaſible; or why that is done, which appeareth done to us.

Iſa. 45. 11.

God obſerveth in what relations, and what degrees of Compariſon (as to their Natures, their Vertues, their Conſequences) all things do ſtand, each toward others; ſo poiſing them in the Balance of right Judgment, as exactly to diſtinguiſh their juſt Weight and Worth; whereas we cannot tell what things to compare, we know not how to put them into the Scale, we are unapt to make due Allowances, we are unable to diſcern which ſide doth overweigh: In the immenſe Variety of Objects our Knowledge doth extend to few things eligible, nor among them can we pick out the beſt Competitors for our choice: Hence often muſt we be at great Loſſes in ſcanning the Deſigns, or tracing the Footſteps of Providence.

3. We are alſo uncapable thoroughly to diſcern the ways of Providence from our moral Defects, in ſome meaſure common to all Men; from our Stupidity, our Sloth, our Temerity, our Impatience, our Impurity of Heart, our Perverſeneſs of Will and Affections: we have not the Perſpicacity to eſpy the ſubtile Tracts, and ſecret Reſerves of Divine Wiſdom; we have not the Induſtry, with ſteady Application of Mind, to regard and meditate on God's Works; we have not the Temper and Patience to wait upon God, until he diſcover himſelf in the Accompliſhment of his Purpoſes; we have not that bleſſed purity of heart, which is requiſite to the ſeeing God in his ſpecial Diſpenſations, we have not that Rectitude of Will and Government of our Paſſions, as not to be ſcandalized at what God doeth, if it thwarteth our Conceit or Humour; ſuch Defects are obſervable in the beſt Men; who therefore have miſapprehended, have diſreliſhed, have fretted and murmured at the Proceedings of God; we might inſtance in Job, in David, in Elias, in Jonah, in the holy Apoſtles themſelves, by whoſe Speeches and Deportments in ſome caſes it may appear how difficult it is for us, who have eyes of fleſh (as Job ſpeaketh) and Hearts too never quite freed of Carnality, to ſee through, or fully to acquieſce in the Dealings of God.

Matth. 5. 8.

Job 10. 3.

It is indeed a Diſtemper incident to us, which we can hardly ſhun, or cure, that we are apt to meaſure the Equity and Expedience of things according to our Opinions and Paſſions; affecting conſequently to impoſe on God our ſilly Imaginations as Rules of his proceeding, and to conſtitute him the Executioner of our ſorry Paſſions; what we conceit fit to be done, that we take God bound to perform; when we feel our ſelves ſtirred, then we preſume God muſt be alike concerned: to our Apprehenſions every ſlight Inconvenience is a huge Calamity, very Scratch of Fortune is a ghaſtly Wound; God therefore, we think, ſhould have prevented it, or muſt preſently remove it; every pitiful Bauble, every trivial Accommodation is a matter of high Conſequence, which if God with-hold, we are ready to clamour on him; and wail as Children for want of a Trifle. Are we ſoundly angry or enflamed with Zeal? then fire muſt come down from heaven, then Thunder-bolts muſt fly about, then nothing but ſudden Woe and Vengeance are denounced; are we pleaſed? then Showers of Bleſſings muſt deſcend on the Heads; then Floods of Wealth muſt run into the Laps of our Favourites, otherwiſe we are not ſatisfied; and ſcarce can deem God awake, or mindful of his Charge. We do beyond meaſure hate or deſpiſe ſome Perſons, and to thoſe God muſt not afford any Favour, any Mercy, any Forbearance, or time of Repentance; we exceſſively admire or dote on others, and thoſe God muſt not touch or croſs; if he doth not proceed thus, he is in danger to forfeit his Authority: He muſt hardly be allowed to govern the World, in caſe he will not ſquare his Adminiſtrations to our fond Conceit, or froward Humour: Hence no wonder, that Men often are ſtumbled about Providence; For God will not rule according to their Fancy or Pleaſure (it would be a mad World if he ſhould) neither indeed could he do ſo if he would, their Judgments and their Deſires being infinitely various, inconſiſtent and repugnant. Again,

Luke 9. 5

4. The Nature of thoſe Inſtruments which Divine Providence doth uſe in Adminiſtration of Human Affairs, hindereth us from diſcerning it: It is an Obſervation among Philoſophers, that the Footſteps of divine Wiſdom are, to Excluſion of doubt, far more conſpicuous in the Works of Nature, than in the Management of our Affairs; ſo that ſome who by Contemplation of natural Appearances were convinced of God's Exiſtence and his Protection of the World (who thence could not doubt but that an immenſe Wiſdom had erected the beautiful Frame of Heaven and Earth, had ranged the Stars in their Order and Courſes; had formed the Bodies and Souls of Animals, had provided for the Subſiſtence and Propagation of each Species, had ſetled and doth uphold the viſible World in its ſo comely and convenient State, that even ſuch Men) reflecting on the Courſe of Humane Tranſactions, have ſtaggered into Diſtruſt, whether a Divine Wiſdom doth ſit at the Helm of our Affairs; many thence hardly would admit God to be concerned in them, but ſuppoſed him to commit their Conduct to a fatal Swinge, or a caſual Fluctuation of obvious Cauſes: One great Reaſon of this Difference may be, that whereas the Inſtruments of Divine Power in Nature are in themſelves merely paſſive, or act only as they are acted by pure Neceſſity (as a Pen in Writing or a Hammer in ſtriking) being thence determinate, uniform, conſtant and certain in their Operation; whenever there any Footſteps of Counſel, any Tendency to an End, and Deviation from the common Tracks of Motion do appear, ſuch Effects cannot reaſonably be imputed merely to natural Cauſes, but to a ſuperiour Wiſdom, weilding them in ſuch a manner, and ſteering them to ſuch a Mark: but the viſible Engines of Providence in our Affairs are ſelf-moving Agents, working with Knowledge and Choice; the which, as in themſelves they are indeterminate, irregular and uncertain, ſo they are capable to be diverſified in numberleſs unaccountable Ways according to various Repreſentations of Objects, or by Influence of divers Principles inclining to judge and chuſe differently: Temper, Humour, Paſſion, Prejudice, Cuſtom, Example, together with Contingencies of Occaſion (depending on like Principles in adjacent free Cauſes) do move ſingly or combinedly, in Ways ſo implicate, to the various Production of ſo various Events, that nothing hardly can fall out, which may not with ſome plauſible Colour of Reaſon be derived from ſome one of thoſe Sources, or from a Complication of them: Nothing can appear ſo uncouth or extravagant, which may not be fathered on ſome Fetch of Wit, or ſome hit of Fancy, or Capricio of Humour, or ſome Tranſport of Nam cum diſpoſiti quæſiſſem fœdera mundi, Præſcriptoſque mari fines ———

———tunc omnia rebar
Conſilio firmata Dei———
Sed cum res hominum tanta caligine volvi Adſpicerem ———
——— rurſus labefacta cadebat
Religio, &c.

Claud. in Ruff. 1.
Diod. Sic. lib. 15. p. 482.

of Paſſion, or ſome lucky Advantage, or on divers of thoſe conſpiring; whence in accounting for the Reaſon of ſuch Events, Men deem they may leave out Providence as ſuperfluous; eſpecially conſidering, that uſually Diſorders and Defects, only imputable to Man's Will, do accompany and further ſuch Events.

For inſtance, what other Cauſe would many think needful to aſſign for the Conveyance of Joſeph into Egypt, than the Envy of his Brethren; for Shimei's reviling David, than his baſe Malignity; for David's numbering the People, than his wanton Pride; for Jeroboam's Revolt, than his unruly Ambition; for Job's being robb'd, than the theeviſh Diſpoſition of the Arabs; for his being diſeaſed, than a Redundance of bad Humours; for our Lord's Suffering, than the ſpiteful Rage of the Jewiſh Rulers and People; together with the treacherous Avarice of Judas, and the corrupt Eaſineſs of Pilate? Theſe Events all of them are aſcribed to God's Hand, and ſpecial Ordination; but Men could not ſee or avow it in them; what need will Men ever ſay in ſuch caſes to introduce God's Aid, when humane Means ſuffice to atchieve the Feat?

Gen. 45. 5. 50. 20.
Pſal. 105. 17.
2 Sam 16. 10.
2 Sam. 24. 1.
1 Kings 12. 15. 24.
Job 1. 15, &c.
Acts 2. 23. 4. 28.

5. Indeed, as in Nature, the Influences of Heaven, and of inferiour Cauſes ſo commonly in the Production of theſe Events, divine and humane Agency are ſo knit and twiſted one with the other, that it is not eaſie to diſcriminate them, ſo as to ſever the Bounds of common and ſpecial Providence; or to diſcern what God performeth by natural Inſtruments, what by ſuperiour Efficacy; when the Balance turneth from our Inclinations, when it is caſt from a Grain thrown in by divine Interpoſition; the Management of theſe Affairs being a Conſort, wherein God's Wiſdom beareth one part, Man's Free-will playeth another; Fortune and Occaſion alſo do ſtrike in, we not ſeeing the firſt, are prone to aſcribe all the Harmony to the laſt, which are moſt obvious and viſible.

Θεὸς μὲν πάντα, καὶ μετὰ Θεὸν τύχη καὶ καιρὸς τὰ ἀνθρώπινα κυβερνῶσι ξύμπαντα. Max. Tyr. diſſ. 3. è Plat.

6. The more apt we are to do thus, becauſe the manner of Divine Efficacy is ever very ſoft and gentle: God diſpoſeth things fortiter & ſuaviter; ſo as effectually to perform what he deſigneth, but in the moſt ſweet and eaſie way: his Providence doth not hurry along like an impetuous rumbling Torrent, but glideth on as a ſmooth and ſtill Current, with an irreſiſtible, but imperceptible Force carrying things down therewith: without much ado, without any Clatter, by a Nod of his Head, by a Whiſper of his Mouth, by a Turn of his Hand, he doth effect his Purpoſes: winding up a cloſe Spring, he ſetteth the greateſt Wheels in Motion; and thruſting in an inſenſible Spoak, he ſtoppeth the greateſt Wheels in their career; injecting a Thought, exciting an Humour, preſenting an Occaſion, inſinuating a petty Accident, he bringeth about the moſt notable Events. He doth ſo faſhion the hearts of men, ſo manage their hands, ſo guide their ſteps, that even they who are acted by him cannot feel the leaſt Touch upon them. For, The King's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of waters, he turneth it wheresſoever he will; that is, by ſecret Pipes, by obſcure Chanels God conveyeth the Minds and Wills of greateſt Perſons (the chief Engines of his Providence) unto ſuch Points of Reſolution as he pleaſeth, ſo that they ſeem to flow thither of their own accord, without any exteriour Direction or Impulſe: Hence do his moſt effectual Operations ſlip by us without making Impreſſion on our Minds, which are wont to apprehend things, as with a groſs Palpability they do incur the Senſes, ſo that the Preacher, comparing the Methods of Providence with the moſt occult Proceed-

Sap. 8. 1. εὐρώστως καὶ χρηστῶς.

Θεοῦ τινος ἐμβάλλοντος εἰς νοῦν ἀνθρώπῳ. Plut. Timol.

Pſal. 33. 15. Iſaiah 41. 13. 42. 6.
Prov. 16. 9. 20. 24. Jer. 10. 23.
Job 33. 14. 23. 8.

Prov. 21. 1.

Eccl. 11. 5. ceedings in Nature, might well ſay, As thou knoweſt not the way of the ſpirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child, ſo thou knoweſt not the works of God, who maketh all. Again,

7. God in his Progreſs toward the Atchievement of any Deſign, is not wont to go in the moſt direct and compendious ways, but commonly windeth about, and taketh a large compaſs, enfolding ſeveral other co-incident Purpoſes, ſome whereof may be no leſs conſiderable, than is that, which we deem moſt neceſſary, and affect to ſee diſpatched; but this Courſe ſeemeth tedious to us, who have not the Wit to perceive that Complexion of Ends, nor the Temper to wait for the Completion of them. If God, when we ſeem to need, doth not inſtantly appear in our Favour and Succour, if he doth not preſently vindicate Truth and Right; if he doth not nip wicked Deſigns in the Bud, and repreſs the firſt Onſets of outragious Violence; if for a while he ſuffereth the tabernacles of robbers to proſper, and iniquity to lift up its horn; then he is in a Slumber, quite unmindful or inſenſible of us; then he turneth aſide his Face, or doth behold what paſſeth, as an unconcerned Spectator; then he ſtandeth aloof, unready to help us; then doth he hold off his Hand, not medling in our Affairs; in ſuch caſes we are apt to cry out, Eſtis ubi O ſuperi: How long, O Lord, wilt thou forget; how long wilt thou hide thy face? Lord, how long wilt thou look on? Awake, why ſleepeſt thou, O Lord? why ſtandeſt thou afar off? why withdraweſt thou thy hand? pluck it out of thy boſom: Return, O Lord, how long? ſuch are our Prayers, ſuch our Expoſtulations; ſo is our blind Impatience prone to muſe and mutter; not conſidering how many good Deſigns God is carrying on in a calm and ſteady Pace, by well meaſured Steps, all which in due ſeaſon, when they are ripe for Accompliſhment, ſhall undoubtedly be (Jer. 23. 20.) 2 Pet. 3. 9, 10. effected; for, The Lord, as St. Peter ſaith, is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, as ſome men count ſlackneſs, but is long-ſuffering toward all men, that is, he certainly will expreſs his faithful Benignity toward good Men, yet ſo as alſo to extend his merciful Patience toward others; he ſo will tender the Intereſts of ſome, as concurrently to procure the Welfare of all, and accordingly will time his Proceedings, allowing the Leiſure and Opportunities requiſite thereto: He can, although we cannot, wait to be gracious; Iſa. 30. 18. for as in him there are no Paſſions to precipitate Action, ſo to him there are no ſenſible Differences of time, One day being with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day.

Sil. Ital.
Pſal. 13. 1. 89. 46. 90. 13. 74. 10.
44. 24. 55. 1. 94. 3. 35. 17.
Pſal. 35. 17. Pſal. 44. 23. 35. 23. 7. 6.
Pſal. 74. 11. Pſal. 10. 1.
Pſal. 90. 13. 6. 4. 7. 7. 80. 14.
Pſal. 22. 1, 11, 19. 38. 2. 71. 12.
Vid. Hab. 1. 2 ——

8. Again, God (as is the Property of every wiſe Agent) is wont to act variouſly, according to the State and Circumſtances of things, or to the Diſpoſitions and Capacities of Perſons; ſo as to do the ſame thing for different Ends, and different things for the ſame End; to apply one Inſtrument to ſeveral Uſes, and by ſeveral Inſtruments to work out one Purpoſe: ſo he afflicteth good Men out of Love for Trial and Improvement of their Vertues, bad Men in Diſpleaſure to illuſtrate his Power and Juſtice on them; he encourageth and bleſſeth the one, he puniſheth and curſeth the other with Proſperity; he reclaimeth both from Error and Sin by either of thoſe Methods, as their Temper and their Circumſtances do require: Whence it is very difficult for us ever from the kind of Accidents befalling Men to divine how far God is concerned in them, or to what particular Scope they are aimed; ſo that well might the Preacher, upon a careful Obſerva- Eccl. 9. 1, 2. tion of ſuch Occurrences, eſtabliſh this Rule, No man knoweth love, or hatred (that is, the ſpecial Regard of God toward Men) by all that is before them;

them; becauſe, All things come alike to all, there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked. Farther,

9. There are different Ends which Providence in various Order and Meaſure doth purſue, which we, by reaſon of our dim Inſight and ſhort Proſpect cannot deſcry: God, as the univerſal and perpetual Governour of the World, in his diſpenſation of things, reſpecteth not only the Good of this or that Perſon, of one Nation or one Age; but often in ſome degree waving that, or taking care for it in a leſs remarkable way) hath a provident regard to the more extenſive Good of a whole People, of the World, of Poſterity; as he did order his Friend Abraham to wander in a ſtrange Land, for the Benefit of his Seed; Joſeph to be ſold, calumniated, and fettered for the Preſervation of his Family; our Lord to ſuffer thoſe grievous things for the Redemption of Mankind; the Jews to be rejected for the Salvation of the Gentiles: In ſuch caſes pur-blind Men obſerving Events to croſs particular and preſent Ends, but not being aware how conducible they may prove to general, remote, and more important Deſigns, can hardly be ſatisfied how God ſhould be concerned in them; the preſent, or that which lieth adjacent juſt under our Noſe, is all that we can or will conſider; and therefore muſt be ill Judges of what is done by all-provident Wiſdom. Hab. 3. 6.

10. Again, God permitteth things, bad in their own Nature, with regard to their Inſtrumental Uſe and Tendency; for that often the worſt things may be ordinable to the beſt Ends; things very bitter may work pleaſant Effects; upon the wildeſt Stock divine Husbandry can ingraft moſt excellent Fruit; Sin really, and ſuffering reputedly, are the worſt Evils, yet from them much Glory to God, and great Benefit to Men do accrue; even from the moſt wicked Act that ever was committed, from the moſt lamentable Event that ever did happen, Fruits admirably glorious, and immenſely beneficial did ſpring; yet uſually ſo blind are we as to be offended at ſuch things, and from them to raiſe Exceptions againſt Providence.

11. Alſo the Expediency of things to be permitted or croſſed, doth frequently conſiſt, not in themſelves ſingly taken, as particular Acts or Events, but in their Conjunction, or Reference to others, with which they may become ſubſervient toward a common End; ſo that divers things in themſelves extreamly bad, may by Combination or Colliſion engender good Effects; and thence prove fit Weapons or Tools of Providence; as the moſt deadly Poiſons may be ſo mixed, that curbing one another's Force, they may conſtitute a harmleſs Maſs, ſometimes a wholſome Medicine; but we poring on the ſimple Ingredients, and not conſidering how they may be tempered, or how applied by a ſkilful Hand, can hardly deem the Toleration of them congruous to Wiſdom. Farther,

12. That Providence ſometimes is obſcure and intricate, may be attributed to the Will of God, upon divers good Accounts deſigning it to be ſuch: Verily (ſaith the Prophet) thou art a God that hideſt thy ſelf, O God of Iſrael the Saviour. Iſ. 45. 15. Pſal. 89. 46

God commonly doth not intend to exert his Hand notoriouſly; for that whereas every ſpecial Interpoſition of his Hand is in effect a Miracle (ſurmounting the natural Power, or thwarting the ordinary Courſe of inferiour Cauſes) it doth not become him to proſtitute his miraculous Power, or to exert it otherwiſe than upon ſingular Occaſions, and for moſt weighty Cauſes: 'tis not conformable to the Tenour of his Adminiſtrations to convince Men againſt their Will, or by irreſiſtible Evidence to wring Perſwaſion from ſtubborn or ſtupid Minds; but to exerciſe the Wiſdom, and to prove the Ingenuity of well-diſpoſed Perſons, who upon competent Intimations, ſhall be capable to ſpell out, and forward to approve his Proceedings.

Hab. 3. 4. Pſal. 97. 2. 18. 11.

13. He will not glare forth in Diſcoveries ſo bright as to dazle, to confound our weak Sight; therefore he veileth his Face with a Cloud, and wrappeth his Power in ſome Obſcurity; therefore clouds and darkneſs are round about him; he maketh darkneſs his ſecret place; his Pavilion round about him is dark waters and thick clouds of the sky.

14. He meaneth thereby to improve and exalt our Faith, being the leſs ſeen, that he may be the more believed; Faith never riſing higher than when it doth ſoar to Objects beyond our Sight; when we can approve God's Wiſdom and Juſtice in Occurrences ſurmounting our Conceit; when we can rely upon God's Word and Help, although the Stream of his Proceedings ſeemeth to croſs our Hopes.

15. It is fit alſo that God many times deſignedly ſhould act in Ways ſurpaſſing our Apprehenſion, and apt to baffle and puzzle our Reaſon, that he may appear God indeed, infinitely tranſcending us in perfection of Wiſdom and Juſtice; or that we comprehending the Reaſon of his Actings, may not imagine our Wiſdom comparable, our Juſtice commenſurate to his; yea, that we in thoſe reſpects do exceed him; for That (as Tertullian diſcourſeth) which may be ſeen, is leſs than the eyes that ſurvey it; that which may be comprehended, is leſs than the hands that graſp it; that which may be valued, is leſs than the ſenſes which rate it; it is Gods being ineſtimable that makes him worthily eſteemed; his being incomprehenſible rendreth him adorable.

Quod videri communiter, quod comprehendi, quod æſtimari poteſt, minus eſt oculis quibus occupatur, & manibus quibus contaminatur, & ſenſibus quibus invenitur. Tert. Apol. 17.

Hoc eſt quod Deum æſtimari facit, dum æſtimari non capit. Tert. 16.

16. The Obſcurity of Providence doth indeed conciliate an awful Reverence toward it; for Darkneſs naturally raiſeth a Dread of inviſible Powers; we uſe to go on tremblingly, when we cannot ſee far about us; we regard none ſo much as thoſe, whoſe Wiſdom we find to over-reach ours, and whoſe Intentions we cannot ſound; it was Elihu's Obſervation, With God is terrible Majeſty, the Almighty we cannot find him out;—— men do therefore fear him.

Job 37. 22, 23, 24.

17. It is alſo requiſite, that God ſhould diſpoſe many Occurrences, croſs to our vulgar Notions, and offenſive to our carnal Senſe, that we may thence be prompted to think of God, driven to ſeek him, engaged to mark him interpoſing in our Affairs; Men from diſorderly and ſurprizing Accidents prepoſterouſly do conceive Doubts about Providence, as if in managing things, nothing odd, or amiſs, would occur; whereas if no ſuch Events did ſtart up, they might be proner to queſtion it, they would at leaſt come to forget or neglect it; for if humane Tranſactions paſſed on as do the Motions of Nature, in a ſmooth Courſe, without any Rub or Diſturbance, Men commonly would no more think of God than they do, when they behold the Sun riſing, the Rivers running, the Sea flowing; they would not depend on his Protection, or have recourſe to him for Succour; it is Difficulty and Diſtreſs ſeizing on them, which compel Men to implore God for Relief, which diſpoſe them to ſee his Hand reaching it forth unto them; according to that in the Pſalm; When he ſlew them, then they ſought him, they returned and enquired early after God, they remembred that God was their rock, and the moſt high God their redeemer. Again,

Pſal. 78. 34.

18. It is needful that the preſent Courſe of Providence ſhould not be tranſparently clear and ſatisfactory, that we may be well aſſured concerning a future Account, and forced in our Thoughts to recur thither for a Reſolution of all ſuch emergent Doubts and Difficulties; for if all Accompts were apparently ſtated and diſcharged here; if now Right did ever prevail, and Iniquity were ſuppreſſed; if Vertue were duly crowned, and Vice deſervedly ſcourged, who would hope or fear an After-reckoning?

This indeed is the grand Cauſe, why Providence now doth appear ſo cloudy, that Men conſider not how our Affairs have no compleat Determination, or final Iſſue here; things now are doing and not done; in a Progreſs and Tendency toward ſomewhat beyond, not in a State of Conſiſtence and Perfection; this not being the Place of deciding Cauſes, or diſpenſing Rewards; but a State of Probation of Work, of Travel, of Combat, of running for the Prize, of ſowing toward the Harveſt; a State of Liberty to follow our own Choice, and to lay the ground of our Doom; of falling into Sin, and of riſing thence by Repentance; of God's exerciſing Patience and exhibiting Mercy: wherefore as we cannot well judge of an artificial Work by its firſt Draughts, or of a Poem by a few Scenes, but muſt ſtay till all be finiſhed or acted through; ſo we cannot here clearly diſcern the entire Congruity of providential Diſpenſations to the Divine Attributes, the Cataſtrophe or utmoſt Reſolution of things is the general Judgment, wherein the deep Wiſdom, the exact Juſtice, the perfect Goodneſs of God will be diſplayed to the full Satisfaction or Conviction of all Men; when God's Honour will be thoroughly vindicated, his deſpiſed Patience, and his abuſed Grace will be avenged; every Caſe will be rightly tried, every Work will be juſtly recompenced, all Accompts will be ſet ſtreight; in the mean time divers things muſt occur, unaccountable to us, looking upon things as they now ſtand abſolutely before us, without Reference to that Day: Conſidering this may induce us to ſuſpend our Opinion about ſuch Matters, allowing God to go through with his Work before we cenſure it, not being ſo quick and precipitate as to foreſtall his Judgment; and ſurely would we but obſerve that reaſonable Advice of St. Paul, Judge nothing before the time until the Lord come, our chief Doubts would be reſolved, our ſhrewdeſt Exceptions againſt Providence would be voided.

Chryſ. Tom. 7. p. 15.

Rom. 2. 7.

1 Cor. 4. 5.

Theſe are the chief Reaſons of the Point, which Meditation did ſuggeſt; upon it (for it is not a Point merely ſpeculative, but pregnant with uſeful Conſequences) divers practical Applications may be grounded, which the time ſcarcely will allow me to name.

1. It ſhould render us modeſt and ſober in our Judgment about providential Occurrences, not pretending thoroughly to know the Reaſons of God's Proceedings, or to define the Conſequences of them; for it is plainly fond Arrogance or profane Impoſture to aſſume perfect Skill in that which paſſeth our Capacity to learn.

Eccluſ. 3. 20.
Pſal. 131. 1.

2. It ſhould make us ſtaunch and cautious of grounding Judgment or Cenſure upon preſent Events about any Cauſe, or any Perſon; for it is notorious Temerity to paſs Sentence upon grounds uncapable of Evidence.

Luke 13. 1.

3. It ſhould repreſs wanton Curioſity, which may tranſport us beyond our Bounds in Speculation of theſe myſterious Intrigues; ſo that we ſhall loſe our Labour and Time, ſhall diſcompoſe our Minds, ſhall plunge our ſelves into vain Errors or anxious Doubts.

Job 11. 12.
Sap. 9. 13.
Job 42. 3.

4. It ſhould keep us from Conceitedneſs and Confidence in our own Wiſdom; for how can we conceit highly of that, or much confide in it, which we find ſo unable to penetrate the Reaſon of moſt common and obvious Appearances; ſo non-pluſt in its Enquiries, ſo defeated in its Expectations, ſo miſtaken in its Judgments of things.

Job 40. 4.
42. 2.
Pſal. 73. 22.
39. 9.

5. It ſhould preſerve us from Infidelity, and from Deſpair upon account of any croſs Accidents occurring here; for 'tis unreaſonable to disbelieve a Notion, otherwiſe well grounded, becauſe we cannot aſſoil Scruples or Cavils drawn from Matters inſcrutable to us; 'tis fooliſh to deſpair of a good

E-

Event, upon Appearances, whereof we cannot apprehend the full Reaſon, or final Reſult.

2 Kings 20. 9. Mat. 16. 23. 6. It ſhould prevent our taking Offence, or being diſcontented at any Events riſing up before us; for to be diſpleaſed at that, which a ſuperiour Wiſdom, unſearchable to us, doth order, is to be diſpleaſed at we know not what, or why, which is childiſh Weakneſs, to fret and wail at that, which for all we can ſee, proceedeth from good Intention, and tendeth to good Iſſue, is pitiful Frowardneſs.

Eccleſ. 8. 11. 7. It ſhould guard us from Security, or from preſuming upon Impunity for our Miſcarriages: For ſeeing God doth not always clearly and fully diſcover his Mind, it is vain from God's Reſervedneſs to conclude his Unconcernedneſs; or becauſe he is now patient, that he never will be juſt in chaſtizing our Offences.

Iſaiah 26. 11. 5. 12. 8. It ſhould quicken our Induſtry in obſerving and conſidering the Works of Providence; for ſince they are not eaſily diſcernible, and the diſcerning them in ſome meaſure is ſometimes of great uſe, it is needful that we be very diligent in contemplation of them; the fainter our Light is, the more attent we ſhould be in looking; the knottier the Subject, the more earneſt ſhould be our Study on it.

9. It ſhould oblige us to be circumſpect and wary in our Converſation; for the darker the Way is, the more careful ſhould be our Walking therein, leſt we err, leſt we ſtumble, leſt we ſtrike on ſomewhat hurtful to us.

Jer. 10. 23. 10. It ſhould engage us conſtantly to ſeek God, and to depend on him, for the Protection and Conduct of his Grace, which is the only Clew, that can lead us ſafely through this intricate Labyrinth of worldly Contingencies.

Pſal. 36. 6. 92. 5. Apoc. 15. 3. 19. 2. 11. In fine, it ſhould cauſe us humbly to admire and adore that Wiſdom, which governeth the World in ways no leſs great and wonderful than juſt and holy: For Great and marvellous are thy works, O Lord, God Almighty; juſt and true are thy ways, O thou king of Saints.

Now unto the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, the only wiſe God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

SERMON XXIV.

Of Obedience to our Spiritual Guides and Governours.

HEB. XIII. 17.

Obey them that have the rule over you.

Obedience unto Spiritual Guides and Governours is a Duty of great Importance; the which to declare and preſs is very ſeaſonable for theſe times, wherein ſo little regard is had thereto; I have therefore pitched on this Text, being an Apoſtolical Precept, briefly and clearly enjoining that Duty: and in it we ſhall conſider and explain theſe two Particulars: 1. The Perſons to whom Obedience is to be payed. 2. What that Obedience doth import, or wherein it conſiſteth: and together with Explication of the Duty, we ſhall apply it, and urge its Practice.

I. As to the Perſons unto whom Obedience is to be performed, they are, generally ſpeaking, all ſpiritual Guides, or Governours of the Church (thoſe who ſpeak to us the word of God, and who watch for our ſouls, as they Heb. 13. 7, 17. are deſcrib'd in the Context) expreſſed here by a Term very ſignificant and appoſite, as implying fully the Nature of their Charge, the Qualification of their Perſons, their Rank and Privileges in the Church, together conſequently with the grounds of Obligation to the correſpondent Duties toward them. There are in holy Scripture divers Names and Phraſes appropriate to them, each of them denoting ſome eminent part of their Office, or ſome Appurtenance thereto; but this ſeemeth of all moſt comprehenſive; ſo that unto it all the reſt are well reducible: The Term is ἡγούμενοι, that is, Leaders, or Guides, or Captains; which properly may denote the ſubſequent particulars in way of Duty, or Privilege appertaining to them.

1. It may denote Eminence of Dignity, or Superiority to others: that they are (as it is ſaid of Judas and Silas in the Acts) ἄνδρες ἡγούμενοι ἐν ἀδελφοῖς, principal men among the brethren: Acts 15. 22. for to lead, implieth Precedence, which is a Note of Superiority and Preeminence. Hence are they ſtiled προεστῶτες, Preſidents or Prelates; οἱ πρῶτοι, the firſt or prime Men; 1 Tim. 5. 17. Rom. 12. 8. οἱ μείζονες, the greater, Majors or Grandees among us: 1 Theſſ. 5. 12. He (ſaith our Lord) that will be the firſt among you, let him be your ſervant; Mat. 20. 27. and He that is greater among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth ſerve; Luke 22. 26. where ὁ μείζων, and ὁ ἡγούμενος, (the greater and the Leader) are Terms equivalent, or interpretative the one of the other; and our Lord in thoſe Places as he preſcribeth Humility of Mind and Demeanour, ſo he implieth difference of Rank among his Diſciples: Phil. 2. 29. 1 Theſſ. 5. 13. whence to render eſpecial Reſpect and Honour to them, as to our Betters, is a Duty often enjoined. 1 Tim. 5. 17.

2. It doth imply Power and Authority: Their Superiority is not barely grounded on perſonal Worth or Fortune; it ſerveth not merely for Order, and Pomp; but it ſtandeth upon the nature of their Office, and tendeth to Uſe: They are by God's Appointment enabled to exerciſe Acts of Power; to command, to judge, to check, controul, and chaſtiſe in a ſpiritual way; in order to ſpiritual Ends; (the Regulation of God's Worſhip and Service, the Preſervation of Order and Peace, the promoting of Edification in divine Knowledge in Holineſs of Life) ſo are they ἡγούμενοι, as that Word in common Uſe (as the Word ἡγεμὼν of kin to it) doth ſignifie Captains and Princes; importing Authority to command and rule; whence the Hebrew Word נשיא, a Prince, is uſually rendred by it; and ὁ ἡγούμενος, is the Title, Mat. 2. 6. attributed to our Lord, to expreſs his kingly Function, being the ſame Acts 5. 31. with ἀρχηγὸς, the Prince or Captain.) Hence are they otherwiſe ſtiled 1 Cor. 12. 28. κυβερνήσεις, (Governors) ἐπίσκοποι, (Overſeers, or Superintendents) as St. Acts 20. 28. Mat. 2. 6. Jerome rendreth it) Paſtors (a Word often ſignifying Rule, and attributed Pſalm 78. 71. to civil Governours) πρεσβύτεροι, (Elders, or Senators; the Word deno- 1 Pet. 5. 2. 2 Sam. 5. 2. teth not merely Age, but Office and Authority) οἱ ἐπιμελοῦντες, ſuch as take 7. 7. care for, the Curators or Supraviſors of the Church: Hence alſo they are 1 Tim. 3. 5. ſignally and ſpecially in relation unto God ſtiled 2 Tim. 2. 24. Rom. 15. 16. δοῦλοι (the Servants) διάκονοι (the Miniſters) ὑπηρέται 1 Cor. 4. 1, 2, 3. 9. 6. 1. 16. (the Officers) λειτουργοὶ (the publick Agents) οἰκονόμοι 2 Cor. 6. 4. Tit. 1. 2. (the Stewards) συνεργοὶ (the Coadjutors, or Aſſiſt- Gal. 4. 14. Apoc. 1. 29. ants) πρέσβεις (the Legates) ἄγγελοι (the Angels, or Meſſengers) of God; which Titles imply, that God by them, as his Subſtitutes and Inſtruments, doth adminiſter the Affairs of his ſpiritual Kingdom; that as by ſecular Magiſtrates (his Vicegerents and Officers) he manageth his univerſal temporal Kingdom, or governeth all Men in order to their worldly Peace and Proſperity; ſo by theſe ſpiritual Magiſtrates he ruleth his Church, toward its ſpiritual Welfare and Felicity.

Eph. 4. 11. 1 Cor. 12. 28. Rom. 12. 7. 1 Tim. 3. 2. 2 Tim. 2. 28. 2. 2. 1 Tim. 4. 13, 16. 5. 17. 2 Tim. 4. 2. Col. 1. 28.

3. The Word alſo doth imply Direction or Inſtruction; that is, Guidance of People in the way of Truth and Duty, reclaiming them from Errour and Sin; This, as it is a means hugely conducing to the Deſign of their Office, ſo it is a principal Member thereof: whence διδάσκαλοι Doctors, or Maſters in Doctrine, is a common Name of them; and to be διδακτικοί, able and apt to teach (ἱκανοὶ διδάξαι and πρόθυμοι) is a chief Qualification of their Perſons; and to attend on teaching, to be inſtant in preaching, to labour in the word and doctrine are their moſt commendable Performances; Hence alſo they are called Shepherds, becauſe they feed the Souls of God's People with the Food of wholſome Inſtruction; Watchmen, becauſe they obſerve Mens ways, and warn them when they decline from right, or run into Danger; the Meſſengers of God, becauſe they declare God's Mind and Will unto them for the Regulation of their Practice.

1 Pet. 5. 3. 1 Tim. 4. 12. Phil. 3. 17. Tit. 2. 7. 2 Theſſ. 3. 9, 7. Heb. 3. 7. 1 Theſſ. 1. 6. 1 Cor. 11. 1. 4. 16.

4. The Word farther may denote exemplary Practice; for to lead implieth ſo to go before, that he who is conducted may follow; as a Captain marcheth before his Troop; as a Shepherd walketh before his Flock, as a Guide goeth before the Traveller, whom he directeth; hence they are ſaid to be, and enjoined to behave themſelves, as patterns of the flock; and the People are charged to imitate and follow them.

Such in general doth the Word here uſed imply the Perſons to be, unto whom Obedience is preſcribed; but there is farther ſome Diſtinction to be made among them; there are Degrees and Subordinations in theſe Guidances; ſome are in regard to different Perſons both impowered to guide, and obliged to follow or obey.

1 Pet. 5. 4. Heb. 3. 1.

The Church is acies ordinata, a well marſhalled Army, wherein under the Captain-General of our faith and ſalvation (the Head of the Body, the Sovereign Prince and Prieſt, the Arch-Paſtor, the chief Apoſtle of our profeſſion, and Biſhop of our Souls) there are divers Captains ſerving in fit Degrees of Subordination; Biſhops commanding large Regiments, Presbyters ordering leſs numerous Companies; all which by the Bands of common Faith, of mutual Charity, of Holy Communion, and Peace being combined together, do in their reſpective Stations govern and guide, are governed and guided: The Biſhops, each in his Precincts guiding more immediately the Prieſts ſubject to them; the Prieſts, each guiding the People committed to his charge; all Biſhops and Prieſts being guided by Synods eſtabliſhed or congregated upon emergent Occaſion; many of them ordinarily by thoſe principal Biſhops, who are regularly ſettled in a Preſidency over them; according to the Diſtinctions conſtituted by God and his Apoſtles, or introduced by Humane Prudence, as the Preſervation of Order and Peace (in various times and Circumſtances of things) hath ſeemed to require; to which Subordination the two great Apoſtles may ſeem to have regard, when they bid us ὑποτάσσεσθαι ἀλλήλοις, to be ſubject to one another; their Injunction at leaſt may (according to their general Intent, which aimeth at the Preſervation of Order and Peace) be well extended ſo far.

1 Pet. 5. 5: Eph. 5. 21. Phil. 2. 3: Ὑποτασσέσθω ἕκαστος τῷ πλησίον αὐτοῦ καθὼς καὶ ἐτέθη ἐν τῷ χαρίσματι αὐτοῦ. Clem. ad Corinth. p. 49.

Of this diſtinction there was never in ancient times made any queſtion, nor did it ſeem diſputable in the Church, except to one Malecontent (Arius) who did indeed get a name in Story, but never made much noiſe, or obtained any vogue in the World: very few followers he found in his heterodoxy; No great Body even of Hereticks could find cauſe to diſſent from the Church in this point; but all Arians, Macedonians, Novatians, Donatiſts, &c. maintained the diſtinction of Eccleſiaſtical Orders among themſelves, and acknowledged the duty of the inferiour Clergy to their Biſhops: and no wonder, ſeeing it ſtandeth upon ſo very firm and clear grounds; upon the reaſon of the Caſe, upon the teſtimony of Holy Scripture, upon general tradition and unqueſtionable monuments of Antiquity, upon the common judgment and practice of the greateſt Saints, Perſons moſt renowned for Wiſdom and Piety in the Church.

Cyp. Ep. 10. Ep. 12.

Ep. 27. Ep. 65.

Reaſon plainly doth require ſuch Subordinations; for that without them it is ſcarce poſſible to preſerve any durable concord, or Charity in Chriſtian Societies; to eſtabliſh any decent Harmony in the Worſhip and Service of God, to check odious Scandals, to prevent or repreſs baneful Factions, to guard our Religion from being overſpread with pernicious Hereſies, to keep the Church from being ſhattered into numberleſs Sects, and thence from being crumbled into nothing; in fine, for any good time to uphold the profeſſion and practice of Chriſtianity it ſelf: for how if there be not ſetled Corporations of Chriſtian People, having bulk and ſtrength ſufficient by joynt endeavour to maintain the truth, honour, and intereſt of their Religion, if the Church ſhould only conſiſt of independent and incoherent Particles (like Duſt or Sand) eaſily ſcattered by any Wind of oppoſition from without, or by any commotion within; if Chriſtendom ſhould be merely a Babel of confuſed Opinions and Practices, how, I ſay, then could Chriſtianity ſubſiſt? how could the Simple among ſo diſcordant apprehenſions be able to diſcern the truth of it, how would the Wiſe be tempted to diſlike it, being ſo mangled and disfigured? what an object of contempt and ſcorn would it be to the profaner World, in ſuch a Caſe? It needeth therefore conſiderable Societies to uphold it; but no Society (eſpecially of any large extent) can abide in order and peace, under the management of equal and co-ordinate Powers; without a ſingle undivided Authority, enabled to moderate Affairs, and reduce them to a Point, to arbitrate emergent Caſes of difference, to put good Orders in execution, to curb the adverſaries of Order and Peace; theſe things cannot be well performed, where there is a parity of many Concurrents, apt to diſſent, and able to check each other; no Democracy can be ſupported without borrowing ſomewhat from Monarchy; no Body can live without a Head; an Army cannot be without a General, a Senate without a Preſident, a Corporation without a Supreme Magiſtrate: this all experience atteſteth; this even the chief impugners of Epiſcopal preſidency do by their practice confeſs; who for prevention of diſorder have been fain of their own heads to deviſe Eccleſiaſtical Subordinations of Claſſes, Provinces and Nations; and to appoint Moderatours (or temporary Biſhops) in their Aſſemblies; ſo that Reaſon hath forced the Diſſenters from the Church to imitate it.

Eccleſiæ ſalus in ſummi Sacerdotis dignitate conſiſtit, cui non exors quædam, & ab omnibus detur eminens poteſtas tot in Eccleſiâ efficientur ſchiſmata, quod ſacerdotes. Hier. in Lucif.

Nec Presbyterorum cœtus ritè conſtitutus dici poteſt, in quo nullus ſit ἡγούμενος. Bez. de Grad. Min. cap. 22.

Eſſentiale fuit, quod ex Dei Ordinatione perpetua neceſſe fuit, eſt, & erit, ut Preſbyterio quiſpiam & loco & dignitate Primus actioni gubernandæ præſit cum eo, quod ipſi divinitùs attributum eſt jure. Bez. de Min. Evang. Grad. c. 23. p. 153.

If there be not Inſpectors over the Doctrine and Manners of the common Clergy, there will be many who will ſay and do any thing; they will in teaching pleaſe their own Humour, or ſooth the People, or ſerve their own Intereſts; they will indulge themſelves in a licentious manner of Life; they will claſh in their Doctrines, and ſcatter the People, and draw them into Factions.

It is alſo very neceſſary for preſerving the unity and communion of the Parts of the Catholick Church; ſeeing ſingle Perſons are much fitter to maintain correſpondence, than headleſs Bodies.

The very Credit of Religion doth require, that there ſhould be Perſons raiſed above the common Level, and endued with eminent Authority, to whoſe care the promoting it ſhould be committed; for ſuch as the Perſons are who manage any Profeſſion, ſuch will be the reſpect yielded thereto; if the Miniſters of Religion be Men of Honour and Authority, Religion it ſelf will be venerable; if thoſe be mean, that will become contemptible.

Apoc. 2, 3, &c.

Tit. 1. 5.
1 Tim. 5. 1, 17, 19, 20, 22, &c.

The Holy Scripture alſo doth plainly enough countenance this Diſtinction; for therein we have repreſented one Angel preſiding over principal Churches, which contained ſeveral Presbyters; therein we find Epiſcopal Ordination, and Juriſdiction exerciſed; we have one Biſhop conſtituting Presbyters in divers Cities of his Dioceſe; ordering all things therein concerning Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; judging Presbyters, rebuking, μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς, with all authority (or imperiouſneſs, as it were; Tit. 2. 15.) and reconciling Offenders, ſecluding Hereticks, and ſcandalous Perſons.

In the Jewiſh Church there were an High-Prieſt, Chief-Prieſt, a Sanhedrin, or Senate, or Synod.

ראש הקהל

The Government of Congregations among God's ancient People (which it is probable was the Pattern that the Apoſtles, no affecters of needleſs Innovation, did follow in eſtabliſhing Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline among Chriſtians) doth hereto agree; for in their Synagogues, anſwering to our Chriſtian Churches, they had as their Elders and Doctours, ſo over them an ἀρχισυνάγωγος, the Head of the Elderſhip, and Preſident of the Synagogue.

The primitive general uſe of Chriſtians moſt effectually doth back the Scripture, and interpret it in favour of this Diſtinction; ſcarce leſs than demonſtrating it conſtituted by the Apoſtles; for how otherwiſe is it imaginable, that all the Churches founded by the Apoſtles in ſeveral moſt diſtant, and disjoyned places (at Jeruſalem, at Antioch, at Alexandria, at Epheſus, at Corinth, at Rome) ſhould preſently conſpire in acknowledgement and uſe of it? how could it without apparent Confederacy be formed, how could it creep in without notable clatter, how could it be admitted without conſiderable oppoſition, if it were not in the Foundation of thoſe Churches laid by the Apoſtles? How is it likely, that in thoſe Times of grievous Perſecution falling chiefly upon the Biſhops (when to be eminent among Chriſtians yielded ſlender Reward, and expoſed to extreme hazard; when to ſeek Preeminence was in effect to court Danger and Trouble, Torture and Ruine) an ambition of irregularly advancing themſelves above their Brethren ſhould ſo generally prevail among the ableſt and beſt Chriſtians? How could thoſe famous Martyrs for the Chriſtian Truth be ſome of them ſo unconſcionable as to affect, others ſo irreſolute as to yield to ſuch injurious Encroachments? and how could all the Holy Fathers (Perſons of ſo renowned, ſo approved Wiſdom and Integrity) be ſo blind as not to diſcern ſuch a Corruption, or ſo bad as to abett it? how indeed could all God's Church be ſo weak as to conſent in Judgment, ſo baſe as to comply in Practice with it? In fine, how can we conceive, that all the beſt monuments of antiquity down from the beginning (the Acts, the Epiſtles, the Hiſtories, the Commentaries, the Writings of all ſorts coming from the Bleſſed Martyrs, and moſt Holy Confeſſors of our faith) ſhould conſpire to abuſe us; the which do ſpeak nothing but Biſhops; long Catalogues and rows of Biſhops ſucceeding in this and that City; Biſhops conteſting for the faith againſt Pagan Idolaters, and Heretical corrupters of Chriſtian Doctrine; Biſhops here teaching, and planting our religion by their labours, there ſuffering and watering it with their blood.

I could not but touch this point: But I cannot inſiſt thereon; the full diſcuſſion of it, and vindication of the truth from the cavils advanced againſt the truth by modern diſſenters from the Church, having employed voluminous Treatiſes; I ſhall only further add, that if any Man be ſo dully, or ſo affectedly ignorant as not to ſee the reaſon of the caſe, and the dangerous conſequences of rejecting this ancient form of diſcipline; if any be ſo overweeningly preſumptuous, as to queſtion the faith of all Hiſtory, or to diſavow thoſe Monuments and that Tradition, upon the teſtimony whereof even the truth and certainty of our Religion, and all its ſacred Oracles do rely; if any be ſo perverſely contentious, as to oppoſe 1 Cor. 11. 16. the cuſtom, and current practice of the Churches through all Ages down to the laſt Age; ſo ſelf-conceitedly arrogant, as to condemn or ſlight the judgment, and practice of all the Fathers (together alſo with the opinion of the later moſt grave Divines, who have judged Epiſcopal preſidency needful, or expedient, where practicable) ſo peeviſhly refractary as to thwart the ſetled order of that Church, in which he was baptized, together with the Law of the Countrey, in which he was born; upon ſuch a perſon we may look as one utterly invincible, and intractable: So weak a judgment, and ſo ſtrong a will who can hope by reaſon to convert? I ſhall ſay no more to that Point.

The ἡγȣ́μενοι then, (the Guides and Governours) in our Text are primarily the Biſhops, as the ſuperiour and chief Guides, each in his place according to order peaceably eſtabliſhed; then ſecondarily the Preſbyters in their Station as Guides inferiour, together with the Deacons as their aſſiſtants; ſuch the Church always hath had, and ſuch by God's bleſſing, our Church now hath, toward whom the duty of obedience is to be performed.

To the conſideration of that I ſhould now proceed, but firſt it ſeemeth expedient to remove a main obſtruction to that performance; which is this; a miſpriſion, or doubt concerning the perſons of our Guides and Governours; for in vain it would be to teach or perſuade us to obey them, if we do not know who they are, or will not acknowledge them: For as in Religion it is Primus Deorum cultus Deos credere, The firſt worſhip of God Sen. Ep. 95. to believe God (as Seneca ſaith) ſo it is the firſt part of our obedience to our Governours to avow them; it is at leaſt abſolutely prerequiſite thereto. It was of old a precept of St. Paul to the Theſſalonians: 1 Theſſ. 5. 12. We beſeech you Brethren to know thoſe, who labour among you; and preſide over you; and another to the Corinthians; Submit your ſelves (ſaith he) to ſuch, and 1 Cor. 16. 16, 18. to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth--then he ſubjoineth ἐπιγινώσκετε τȣ̀ς τοιȣ́τȣς, acknowledge ſuch; there were, it ſeemeth, thoſe in the Apoſtolical times, who would not know, or acknowledge their guides; there were even thoſe, who would not admit the Apoſtles themſelves, (as Saint 3 John 10. John ſaith of Diotrephes) who reſiſted their words 2 Tim. 4. 15. (as St. Paul ſaith of Alexander) to whom the Apoſtles were not Apoſtles, as St. Paul intimateth concerning ſome in regard to himſelf; there were then Pſeud-apoſtles, who excluded the true Apoſtles, intruding themſelves into that high office:

2 Cor. 9. 2. 2 Cor. 11. 13. Phil. 3. 2. No wonder then it may be, that now in theſe dregs of time, there ſhould be many, who diſavow, and deſert their true Guides, transferring the obſervance due to them upon bold pretenders; who are not indeed Guides, but Seducers; not Governours, but Uſurpers, and ſacrilegious Invaders of this holy Office: The duty we ſpeak of cannot be ſecured without preventing or correcting this grand miſtake; and this we hope to compaſs by repreſenting a double character or deſcription, one of the true Guides, another of the counterfeits, by comparing which we may eaſily diſtinguiſh them, and conſequently be induced dutifully to avow and follow the one ſort, wiſely to diſclaim and decline the other.

Thoſe, I ſay, then, who conſtantly do profeſs, and teach that ſound and wholſome Doctrine, which was delivered by our Lord, and his Apoſtles in word and writing, was received by their Diſciples in the primitive Churches, was tranſmitted and confirmed by general tradition, was ſealed by the bloud of the bleſſed Martyrs, and propagated by the labours of the Holy Fathers; the which alſo manifeſtly recommendeth and promoteth true reverence and piety toward God, juſtice and charity toward Men, order and quiet in humane Societies, purity and ſobriety in each Man's private converſation:

Thoſe who celebrate the true worſhip of God, and adminiſter the Holy Myſteries of our religion in a ſerious, grave, decent manner, purely and without any notorious corruption either by hurtful errour, or ſuperſtitious foppery, or irreverent rudeneſs, to the advancement of God's honour, and edification of the participants in vertue and piety.

Thoſe who derive their authority by a continued ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles; who are called unto, and conſtituted in their office in a regular and peaceable way, agreeable to the inſtitution of God, and the conſtant practice of his Church; according to rules approved in the beſt and pureſt Ages; who are prepared to the exerciſe of their function by the beſt education, that ordinarily can be provided, under ſober diſcipline, in the Schools of the Prophets, who thence by competent endowments of mind, and uſeful furniture of good learning, acquired by painful ſtudy, become qualified to guide and inſtruct the people: Who after previous examination of their abilities, and probable teſtimonies concerning their manners (with regard to the qualifications of incorrupt doctrine, and ſober converſation 1 Tim. 3. 7. 10. preſcribed by the Apoſtles) are adjudged fit for the office; who alſo in a pious, grave, ſolemn manner, with invocation of God's bleſſing, by laying on the hands of the Presbytery are admitted thereunto.

Thoſe whoſe practice in guiding and governing the people of God is not managed by arbitrary, uncertain, fickle, private fancies or humours, but regulated by ſtanding Laws; framed (according to general directions extant in Holy Scripture) by pious and wiſe perſons, with mature advice, in accommodation to the ſeaſons and circumſtances of things for common edification, order and peace.

Thoſe who, by virtue of their good principles, in their diſpoſition and demeanour appear ſober, orderly, peaceable, yielding meek ſubmiſſion to Government, tendring the Churches peace, upholding the communion of the Saints, abſtaining from all ſchiſmatical, turbulent and factious practices.

Thoſe alſo, who are acknowledged by the Laws of our Countrey, an 1 Pet. 2. 13. obligation to obey whom is part of that humane conſtitution, unto which we are in all things (not evidently repugnant to God's Law) indiſpenſibly bound to ſubmit; whom our Sovereign, God's Vicegerent and the nurſing Father of his Church among us (unto whom in all things high reſpect in all lawful things entire obedience is due) doth command and encourage us to obey:

Thoſe, I ſay, to whom this character plainly doth agree, we may reaſonably be aſſured, that they are our true Guides and Governours, whom we are obliged to follow and obey: For what better aſſurance can we in reaſon deſire? what more proper marks can be aſſigned to diſcern them by? what methods of conſtituting ſuch needful officers can be ſetled more anſwerable to their deſign, and uſe? how can it be evil or unſafe to follow guides authorized by ſuch warrants, conformed to ſuch patterns, endowed with ſuch diſpoſitions, acting by ſuch principles and rules? can we miſtake, or miſcarry by complying with the great body of God's Church through all Ages, and particularly with thoſe great Lights of the Primitive Church, who by the excellency of their knowledge, and the integrity of their virtue have ſo illuſtrated our Holy Religion?

There are on the other hand ſufficiently plain characters, by which we may deſcry ſeducers, and falſe pretenders to guide us.

Thoſe who do ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, teach otherwiſe, or diſcourſe from the good ancient wholſome Doctrine, revealed in the Holy Scripture, atteſted by Univerſal Tradition, profeſſed, taught, maintained to death by the Primitive Saints and Martyrs; who affect novelties, uncouth notions, big words, and dark Phraſes, who dote on curious empty ſpeculations, and idle queſtions, which engender ſtrife, and yield no good fruit.

1 Tim. 6.3.
1. 3, 4.
Gal. 1. 9.
1 Tim. 1. 4.
6. 4, 20.
2 Tim. 2. 14, 16, 23.
Tit. 3. 9.
2 Pet. 2. 18.

Thoſe who ground their opinions, and warrant their proceedings not by clear teſtimonies of divine revelation, by the dictates of ſound reaſon, by the current authority of wiſe and good Men, but by the ſuggeſtions of their own fancy, by the impulſes of their paſſion, and zeal, by pretences to ſpecial inſpiration, by imaginary neceſſities, and ſuch like fallacious rules.

Ipſorum ordinationes temerariæ, inconſtantes, leves, Tertull.

Thoſe who by counterfeit ſhews of mighty zeal, and extraordinary affection, by affected forms of ſpeech, by pleaſing notions, by propheſying ſmooth things, daubing and glozing, by various artifices of flattery and fraud attract and abuſe weak and heedleſs people.

Thoſe who without any apparent commiſſion from God, or allowable call from Men, or extraordinary neceſſity of the caſe, in no legal or regular way, according to no cuſtom received in God's Church, do intrude themſelves into the office, or are only aſſumed thereto by ignorant, unſtable, giddy, factious people, ſuch as thoſe of whom St. Paul ſaith, that according to their own Luſts they heap up teachers to themſelves, having itching ears.

Hi ſunt qui ſe ultro apud temerarios convenas ſine divina diſpoſitione præficiunt, qui ſe præpoſitos ſine ulla ordinationis lege conſtituunt, qui nemine Epiſcopatum dante Epiſcopi ſibi nomen aſſumunt. Cypr. de Un. Eccl. p. 256.

2 Tim. 4. 3.

Thoſe who are not in reaſonable ways fitly prepared, not duly approved, not competently authorized, not orderly admitted to the office, according to the preſcriptions of God's Word, and the practice of his Church; not entring into the fold by the door, but breaking through, or clambering over the fences of ſober diſcipline.

Thoſe who in their mind, their principles, their deſigns, and all their practice appear void of that charity, that meekneſs, that calmneſs, that gravity, that ſincerity, that ſtability, which qualifie worthy and true Guides: Who in the diſpoſition of their mind are froward, fierce, and ſtubborn, in their principles looſe and ſlippery, in their deſigns and behaviour turbulent, diſorderly, violent, deceitful: Who regard not order or peace, but wantonly raiſe ſcandals, create diſſentions, abett and foment diſturbances in the Church. Who under religious appearances indulge their paſſions, and ſerve their intereſts, uſing a guiſe of devotion, and talk about holy things as inſtruments to vent wrath, envy and ſpleen; to drive forward deſigns of ambition and avarice; who will not ſubmit to any certain judgment or rule, will like nothing but what their fancy ſuggeſts, will acknowledge no law but their own will; who for no juſt cauſe, and upon any ſlender pretence withdraw themſelves, and ſeduce others from the Church in which they were brought up, deſerting its communion, impugning its laws, defaming its Governours, endeavouring to ſubvert its eſtabliſhment: Who manage their diſcipline (ſuch as it is of their own framing) unadviſedly and unſteadily, in no ſtable method, according to no ſetled rule, but as preſent conceit, or humour, or advantage prompteth; ſo that not being fixed in any certain judgment or practice, they ſoon claſh with themſelves, and divide from one another; inceſſantly roving from one Sect to another; being carried about with divers and Heb. 13. 9. Eph. 4. 14. ſtrange Doctrines; like Children toſſed to and fro with every wind of Doctrine.

Thoſe, the fruits of whoſe doctrine and managery amount at beſt onely to empty form of godlineſs, void of real vertue; while in truth they fill the minds of Men with ill-paſſions, ill-ſurmiſes, ill-will; they produce impious, unjuſt and uncharitable dealing of all kinds, particularly diſcontentful murmurings, diſobedience to Magiſtrates; ſchiſms and factions in the Church; combuſtions and ſeditions in the State.

2 Tim. 3. 13. In fine thoſe, who in their temper and their deportment reſemble thoſe ancient ſeducers, branded in the Scripture, thoſe evil Men, who did ſeduce, and were ſeduced:

Tit. 1. 10. Whoſe diſpoſitions are repreſented in theſe Epithets: They were ἀνυπότακτοι, unruly, or perſons indiſpoſed and unwilling to ſubmit to Government; 2 Pet. 2. 10. τολμηταὶ, αὐθάδεις, preſumptuous and ſelf-willed, or ſelf-pleaſing darers γογγυϛαὶ, μεμψίμοιροι, murmurers, complainers, or conjunctly diſcontented mutiners, Tit. 3. 10, 11. αὐτοκατάκριτοι, ſelf-condemned, namely, by contradictious 2 Tim. 3. 13, 14. ſhuffling and ſhifting, or by excommunicating themſelves from the Church; γόητες, bewitchers, inveagling and deluding credulous people by Matt. 7. 15. diſſimulation, and ſpecious appearances; having a form of godlineſs, but denying Act. 20. 29. the power thereof; being wolves in ſheeps cloathing, grievous wolves not ſparing the flock; deceitful workers, transforming themſelves into the ſervants 2 Cor. 11. 13, 15. of Chriſt, and Miniſters of righteouſneſs; lovers of themſelves, covetous, boa- 1 Tim. 6. 4. ſters, proud, revilers, truce-breakers, falſe-accuſers, traytours, heady, high- 2 Pet. 3. 16. minded, vain talkers, deceivers, ignorant, unlearned, unſtable:

Rom. 16. 17, 18. Whoſe practices were; To cauſe diviſions and offences contrary to received Doctrine: By good words and fair ſpeeches to deceive the hearts of the ſimple; (1 Tim. 1. 6, 7.) ---To ſwerve from charity--having turned aſide to vain jangling, deſiring Eph. 4. 14. to be teachers of the Law, underſtanding neither what they ſay, nor whereof Act. 20. 19. they affirm. To beguile unſtable Souls; To lie in wait to deceive; To ſpeak 2 Tim. 3. 5. perverſe things that they may draw Diſciples after them; 1 Tim. 6. 4. to creep into Houſes captivating ſilly Women; 2 Pet. 2. 18. To doat about queſtions and ſtrifes of words, Jud. 16. whereof cometh envy, ſtrife, railings, evil ſurmiſings, perverſe diſputings; Tit. 1. 11. To ſpeak ſwelling words of vanity; 1 Tim. 4. 2. To admire perſons becauſe of advantage (or Phil. 1. 16, 17. out of private deſign, for ſelf-intereſt;) To ſubvert whole houſes, teaching 2 Pet. 2. 19. things which they ought not for filthy lucres ſake; to ſpeak lies in hypocriſie; 2 Theſſ. 3. 6, 11. To preach Chriſt out of envy and ſtrife, not out of good-will, or pure intenti- 2 Pet. 2. 10. on (οὐχ ἁγνῶς, not purely; To promiſe liberty to their followers; Jude 8. To walk diſorderly (that is, in repugnance to order ſetled in the Church;) 16. To deſpiſe dominion, and without fear to reproach dignities; 9. To ſpeak evil (raſhly) 2 John 9. of thoſe things which they know not (which are beſide their skill and cognizance) To ſeparate themſelves, from the Church.

Such Perſons as theſe, arrogating to themſelves the Office of Guides, and pretending to lead us, we muſt not follow or regard, but are in reaſon and conſcience obliged to reject and ſhun them, as the Miniſters of Satan, the Peſts of Chriſtendom, the Enemies and Murtherers of Souls. Tit. 3. 10. 2 Theſſ. 3. 6. Rom. 16. 16. 1 Tim. 6. 5.

It can indeed no-wiſe be ſafe to follow any ſuch Leaders (whatever Pretences to ſpecial Illumination they hold forth, whatever ſpecious guiſes of Sanctity they bear) who in their Doctrine or Practice deflect from the great beaten Roads of holy Scripture, primitive Tradition, and Catholick Practice, roving in bye-paths ſuggeſted to them by their private Fancies and Humours, their Paſſions and Luſts, their Intereſts and Advantages: there have in all Ages ſuch counterfeit Guides ſtarted up, having debauched ſome few heedleſs Perſons, having erected ſome παρασυναγωγάς, or petty Combinations againſt the regularly ſetled Corporations; but never with any durable ſucceſs or countenance of Divine Providence; but like prodigeous Meteors, having cauſed a little gazing, and ſome Diſturbance, their Sects have ſoon been diſſipated, and have quite vaniſhed away: the Authors and Abettors of them being either buried in oblivion, or recorded with ignominy: like that Theudas in the Speech of Gamaliel; who roſe up boaſting himſelf to be ſomebody; to whom a number of Men about 400 joyned themſelves; who was ſlain, and all as many as obeyed him, were ſcattered, and brought to nought. Jude 13. Acts 5. 36.

But let thus much ſuffice to have been ſpoken concerning the Perſons to whom Obedience muſt be performed.

SERMON XXV.

Of Obedience to our Spiritual Guides and Governours.

HEB. XIII. 17.

Obey them that have the Rule over you.

I Proceed to the Duty it ſelf, the Obedience preſcribed, which may (according to the extent in ſignification of the Word πείθεσθαι) be conceived to relate either to the Government, or to the Doctrine, or to the Converſation of the Perſons ſpecified; implying that we ſhould obey their Laws, that we ſhould embrace their Doctrine, that we ſhould conform to their Practice, according to proper Limitations of ſuch Performance, reſpectively:

We begin with the firſt, as ſeeming chiefly intended by the Words:

Obedience to Eccleſiaſtical Government; what this doth import we may underſtand by conſidering the Terms, whereby it is expreſſed, and thoſe whereby its Correlate (ſpiritual Government) is ſignified; by Examples and Practice relating to it, by the Nature and Reaſon of the Matter it ſelf.

Beſide the Word πείθεσθαι (which is commonly uſed to ſignifie all ſorts of Obedience, chiefly that which is due to Governours) here is added a Word ſerving to explain that, the word ὑπείκειν, which ſignifieth to yield, give way, or comply; relating (as it ſeemeth by its being put indefinitely) to all their proceedings in matters concerning their charge. In other places, parallel to our Text, it is expreſſed by ὑποτάσσεσθαι, the ſame Term, by which conſtantly the Subjection due to ſecular Powers (in all the Precepts enjoyning it) is expreſſed: Ὁμοίως νεώτεροι ὑποτάγητε πρεσβυτέροις, In like manner (or correſpondently ſaith St. Peter) ye younger ſubmit your ſelves to the elder (that is, as the Context ſhews, ye Inferiours in the Church obey your Superiours; ὁ νεώτερος both there and otherwhere doth ſignifie the ſtate of inferiority, as ὁ πρεσβύτερος importeth Dignity and Authority.) And ὑποτάσσεσθε τοῖς τοιούτοις, ſubmit your ſelves unto ſuch, and to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth, ſaith St. Paul; and ἀλλήλοις ὑποτασσόμενοι, Submitting your ſelves to one another in the fear of God, that is, yielding conſcientiouſly that Submiſſion, which eſtabliſhed Order requireth from one to another: whence we may collect, that the Duty conſiſteth in yielding ſubmiſſion and compliance to all Laws, Rules and Orders enacted by Spiritual Governours for the due celebration of God's Worſhip, the promoting Edification, the conſerving Decency, the maintenance of Peace; as alſo to the Judgments and Cenſures in order to the ſame Purpoſes adminiſtred by them.

(Tit. 3. 1.
Rom. 13. 1.
1 Pet. 2. 13.)
1 Pet. 5. 5.
Luke 22. 26.
1 Cor. 16. 16.
Eph. 5. 21.
1 Pet. 5. 5.

This Obedience to be due to them may likewiſe be inferred from the various Names and Titles attributed to them; ſuch as thoſe of Prelates, Superintendents, Paſtours, Supraviſours, Governours and Leaders; which Terms, (more largely touched before) do imply Command and Authority of all ſorts, Legiſlative, Judicial, and Executive.

Such Obedience alſo Primitive Practice doth aſſert to them: for what Authority the holy Apoſtles did aſſume and exerciſe, the ſame we may reaſonably ſuppoſe derived to them; the ſame in Kind, although not in peculiarity of manner (by immediate Commiſſion from Chriſt, with ſupply of extraordinary Gifts and Graces) and in unlimitedneſs of extent: for they do ſucceed to the Apoſtles in charge and care over the Church, each in his Precinct (the Apoſtolical Office being diſtributed among them all.) The ſame Titles which the Apoſtles aſſumed to themſelves, they aſcribe to their Sympresbyters, requiring the ſame Duties from them, and preſcribing Obedience to them in the ſame Terms; They claimed no more Power than was needful to further Edification, and this is requiſite that preſent Governours alſo ſhould have; their Practice in Government may alſo well be preſumed exemplary to all future Governours: As then we ſee them διατάσσειν, to order things, and frame Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, διορθοῦν, to rectifie things, or reform defects, to impoſe Obſervances neceſſary or expedient to the time; to judge Cauſes and Perſons, being ready to avenge or puniſh every diſobedience; to uſe ſeverity upon occaſions; with the ſpiritual Rod to chaſtiſe ſcandalous Offenders, diſorderly walkers, Perſons contumacious and unconformable to their Injunctions; to reject Hereticks, and baniſh notorious Sinners from Communion, warning the Faithful to forbear converſation with them: As they did challenge to themſelves an authority from Chriſt to exerciſe theſe and the like Acts of ſpiritual Dominion and Juriſdiction, exacting punctual Obedience to them; as we alſo ſee the like Acts exerciſed by Biſhops, whom they did conſtitute to feed and rule the Church; ſo we may reaſonably conceive all Governours of Cujus in ſolidum ſinguli participes ſumus. Vid. Cypr. de Unit. Eccl.

2 Cor. 10. 8. 13. 10.
To ordain Elders.
To confirm Proſelytes.
To exerciſe Juriſdiction.

1 Cor. 11. 34.
Tit. 1. 5.
Acts 15. 28.
1 Cor. 5. 12.
2 Cor. 10. 6.
2 Cor. 13. 10.
2 Cor. 4. 21.
12. 21. 13. 2.
2 Theſſ. 3. 6, 14.
Tit. 3. 10.
1 Tim. 6. 5.
Rom. 16. 17.
2 Cor. 10. 8.
13. 10.

Epiſcopi ſucceſſores Apoſtolorum.
Cypr. Ep. 27. & Ep. 69, &c. Ep. 41. & Ep. 75. (Firmil.)

of the Church (the Heirs of their Office) inveſted with like Authority in order to the ſame purpoſes, and that correſpondent Obedience is due to them; ſo that what blame, what puniſhment was due to thoſe, who diſobeyed the Apoſtles, doth in proportion belong to the tranſgreſſors of their Duty toward the preſent Governours of the Church; eſpecially conſidering that our Lord promiſed his perpetual preſence and aſſiſtance to the Apoſtles.

Matt. 28. 20.

We may farther obſerve, that accordingly in continual ſucceſſion from the firſt Ages, the good primitive Biſhops (the great Patrons and Propagatours of our Religion) did generally aſſume ſuch Power, and the People readily did yield Obedience; wherein that one did wrongfully uſurp, the other did weakly comply, were neither probable, nor juſt to ſuppoſe; whence general Tradition doth alſo confirm our obligation to this Duty.

That this kind of obedience is required doth alſo farther appear from conſidering the reaſon of Things, the condition of the Church, the deſign of Chriſtian Religion.

1. Every Chriſtian Church is a Society; no Society can abide in any comely order, any ſteady quiet, any deſirable proſperity without Government; no Government can ſtand without correſpondent obligation to ſubmit thereto.

2. Again, The ſtate of Religion under the Goſpel is the Kingdom of Heaven; Chriſt our Lord is King of the Church; it he viſibly governeth and ordereth by the ſpiritual Governours as his Subſtitutes and Lieutenants (whence they peculiarly are ſtyled his Miniſters, his Officers, his Stewards, his Legates, his Co-workers.) When he aſcending up to Gods Right-hand was inveſted with entire poſſeſſion of that Royal State, he ſetled them to adminiſter Affairs concerning that Government in his Place and Name; Aſcending up on high he gave gifts unto men —— He gave ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Paſtours and Teachers; He gave them, that is, he appointed them in their Office, ſubordinate to himſelf, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Miniſtery, for the edifying of the body of Chriſt; As to him therefore ruling by them, by them enacting Laws, diſpenſing Juſtice, maintaining Order and Peace, Obedience is due.

Eph. 4. 8, 11, 12.

3 Again, For the honour of God, the commendation of Religion, and benefit of the People, it is needful, that in all religious Performances, things ſhould, according to St. Paul's rule, be performed decently, and according to order, without unhandſom Confuſion, and troubleſom Diſtraction; this cannot be accompliſhed without a Determination of Perſons, of Modes, of Circumſtances appertaining to thoſe Performances) for how can any thing be performed decently, if every Perſon hath not his Rank and Station, his Office and Work allotted to him; if to every thing to be done, its time, its place, its manner of performance be not aſſigned, ſo that each one may know what, when, where, and how he muſt do?) ſuch determination muſt be committed to the diſcretion and care of ſome Perſons, impowered to frame ſtanding Laws or Rules concerning it, and to ſee them duly executed (for all Perſons without delay, ſtrife, confuſion, and diſturbance cannot meddle in it) with theſe Perſons all the reſt of the Body muſt be obliged to comply; otherwiſe all ſuch Determinations will be vain and ineffectual. Such Order Reaſon doth recommend in every Proceeding; ſuch Order eſpecially becometh the grandeur and importance of Sacred things; ſuch Order God hath declared himſelf to approve, and love, eſpecially in his own Houſe, among his People, in matters relating to his

(1Cor. 14.23. Tit. 2.10.)

1 Cor. 14. 40.

1 Cor. 14. 33.

Service; for He is not (as St. Paul ſaith, arguing to this purpoſe) the God of confuſion, but of peace, in all Churches of the Saints.

4. Again, It is requiſite that all Chriſtian Brethren ſhould conſpire in ſerving God with mutual Charity, hearty Concord, harmonious Conſent; that (as the Apoſtles ſo often preſcribed) they ſhould endeavour to keep unity of ſpirit in the bond of peace: That they ſhould be like-minded, having the ſame love, being of one accord, of one mind, ſtanding faſt in one ſpirit, with one mind; That they ſhould walk by the ſame rule, and mind the ſame thing; That with one mind, and one mouth they ſhould glorifie God, the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; That they ſhould all ſpeak the ſame thing; and that there be no diviſions among them, but that they be perfectly joyned together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment; (like thoſe in the Acts, of whom it is ſaid, The multitude of believers had one heart, and one ſoul) That there ſhould be no ſchiſms (Diviſions, or Factions) in the body; that all Diſſenſions, all murmurings, all Emulations ſhould be diſcarded from the Church: the which Precepts, ſecluding an obligation to Obedience, would be impoſſible, and vain; for (without continual Miracle, and transforming Humane Nature, things not to be expected from God, who apparently deſigneth to manage Religion by ordinary ways of Humane Prudence, his gracious Aſſiſtance concurring) no durable Concord in any Society can ever effectually be maintained otherwiſe than by one publick Reaſon, Will and Sentence, which may repreſent, connect, and comprize all; in defect of that every one will be of a ſeveral Opinion about what is beſt, each will be earneſt for the prevalence of his Model and Way; there will be ſo many Law-givers as Perſons, ſo many Differences as Matters incident; nothing will paſs ſmoothly and quietly, without bickering and jangling; and conſequently without Animoſities and Feuds; whence no Unanimity, no Concord, ſcarce any Charity or Good-will can ſubſiſt.

Σύμψυχοι.
Phil. 2. 2.
Ὁμόφρονες.
1 Pet. 3. 8.
Eph. 4. 3.
Phil. 2. 2.
1. 27.
Phil. 3. 16.
Rom. 15. 5, 6.
12. 16.
2 Cor. 13. 11.
1 Cor. 1. 10.
Acts 4. 32.
1 Cor. 12. 25.
11. 18. 1. 11.
3. 3.
2 Cor. 12. 20.
Phil. 2. 14.

5. Farther, in conſequence of theſe things common Edification requireth ſuch Obedience: It is the duty of Governours to order all things to this end, that is, to the maintenance, encouragement, and improvement of Piety; for this purpoſe their Authority was given them, (as St. Paul ſaith) and therefore it muſt be deemed thereto conducible; it is indeed very neceſſary to Edification, which without Diſcipline guiding the ſimple and ignorant, reclaiming the erroneous and preſumptuous, cheriſhing the regular, and correcting the refractary, can no-wiſe be promoted.

2 Cor. 13. 10.
10. 8.

Excluding it, there can be no means of checking or redreſſing Scandals, which to the reproach of Religion, to the diſgrace of the Church, to the corrupting the Minds, and infecting the Manners of Men will ſpring up, and ſpread. Neither can there be any way to prevent the riſe and growth of pernicious Errours or Hereſies; the which aſſuredly in a ſtate of unreſtrained Liberty the wanton and wicked Minds of Men will breed, their licentious Practice will foſter, and propagate; to the encreaſe of all impiety; their mouths muſt be ſtopped, otherwiſe they will ſubvert whole houſes, teaching things which they ought not for filthy lucre ſake; the word of naughty Seducers will ſpread like a gangrene, if there be no corroſive or corrective Remedy to ſtay its progreſs.

1 Tim. 1. 19.
6. 5.
2 Tim. 2. 16, 17, 18.
2 Tim. 2. 16.
Tit. 1. 11.
2 Tim. 2. 17.

Where things are not managed in a ſtable, quiet, orderly way, no good Practice can flouriſh or thrive; Diſſention will choak all good Affections, Confuſion will obſtruct all good Proceedings; from Anarchy Emulation and Strife will certainly grow, and from them all ſorts of Wickedneſs; for where (ſaith St. James) there is emulation and ſtrife, there is confuſion, and every evil thing.

Jam. 3. 16.

All thoſe Benefits, which ariſe from holy Communion in Offices of Piety and Charity (from common Prayers and Praiſes to God, from participation in all ſacred Ordinances, from mutual Advice, Admonition, Encouragement, Conſolation, good Example) will together vaniſh with Diſcipline; theſe depend upon the friendly union and correſpondence of the Members; and no ſuch Union can abide without the Ligament of Diſcipline, no ſuch Correſpondence can be upheld without unaninous compliance to publick Order. The Cement of Diſcipline wanting, the Church will not be like a ſpiritual houſe, compacted of lively ſtones into one goodly Pile; but like a company of ſcattered Pebbles, or a heap of Rubbiſh.

1 Pet. 2. 5.

So conſidering the reaſon of things, this Obedience will appear needful; to enforce the practice thereof we may adjoin ſeveral weighty Conſiderations.

Conſider Obedience what it is, whence it ſprings, what it produceth, each of thoſe reſpects will engage us to it.

It is in it ſelf a thing very good and acceptable to God, very juſt and equal, very wiſe, very comely and pleaſant.

It cannot but be grateful unto God, who is the God of love, of order, of peace, and therefore cannot but like the means furthering them; he cannot but be pleaſed to ſee Men do their Duty, eſpecially that which regardeth his own Miniſters; in the reſpect performed to whom he is himſelf indeed avowed, and honoured, and obeyed.

Tempus eſt, —ut de ſubmiſſione provocent in ſe Dei clementiam, & de honore debito in Dei ſacerdotem eliciant in ſe divinam miſericordiam. Cypr. Ep. 30.

It is a juſt and equal thing, that every Member of Society ſhould ſubmit to the Laws and Orders of it; for every Man is ſuppoſed upon thoſe Terms to enter into, and to abide in it; every Man is deemed to owe ſuch Obedience in anſwer to his enjoyment of Privileges, and partaking of Advantages thereby; ſo therefore whoever pretendeth a Title to thoſe excellent Immunities, Benefits and Comforts, which communion with the Church affordeth, it is moſt equal, that he ſhould contribute to its ſupport and welfare, its honour, its peace; that conſequently he ſhould yield Obedience to the Orders appointed for thoſe ends. Peculiarly equal it is in regard to our Spiritual Governours, who are obliged to be very ſolicitous and laborious in furthering our beſt good; who ſtand deeply engaged, and are reſponſible for the welfare of our Souls: they muſt be contented to ſpend, and be ſpent, to undergo any Pains, any Hardſhips, any Dangers and Croſſes occurring in purſuance of thoſe Deſigns: and is it not then plainly equal (is it not indeed more than equal, doth not all Ingenuity and Gratitude require?) that we ſhould encourage, and comfort them in bearing thoſe Burthens, and in diſcharging thoſe Incumbrances by a fair and chearful Compliance? 'tis the Apoſtle's enforcement of the Duty in our Text: Obey them (ſaith he) and ſubmit your ſelves; for they watch for your ſouls, as thoſe, who are to render an accompt, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief (or groaning.)

Is it not indeed extreme iniquity and ingratitude, when they with anxious care, and earneſt toil are endeavouring our Happineſs, that we ſhould vex and trouble them by our perverſe and croſs Behaviour?

Nay, is it not palpable Folly to do thus, ſeeing thereby we do indiſpoſe and hinder them from effectually diſcharging their Duty to our Advantage? ἀλυσιτελὲς γὰρ ὑμῖν τοῦτο, for this (addeth the Apoſtle, farther preſſing the Duty) is unprofitable to you, or it tendeth to your Diſadvantage and Damage; not only as involving guilt, but as inferring loſs; the loſs of all thoſe ſpiritual Benefits, which Miniſters being encouraged, and thence performing their Office with alacrity and ſprightful diligence would procure to you: it is therefore our Wiſdom to be obedient, becauſe Obedience is ſo advantageous and profitable to us.

The ſame is alſo a comely and amiable thing, yielding much Grace, procuring great Honour to the Church, highly adorning and crediting Religion: It is a goodly ſight to behold things proceeding orderly; to ſee every Perſon quietly reſting in his Poſt, or moving evenly in his Rank; to obſerve Superiours calmly leading, Inferiours gladly following, Pſal. 139. 1. and Equals lovingly accompanying each other: this is the Pſalmiſt's Ecce quam bonum! Behold, how (admirably) good, and how pleaſant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! ſuch a ſtate of things argueth the good Temper and Wiſdom of Perſons ſo demeaning themſelves, the excellency of the Principles, which do guide and act them, the goodneſs Tit. 2. 10, 5. of the Conſtitution which they obſerve; ſo it crediteth the Church, and graceth Religion; a thing which (as St. Paul teacheth) in all things we ſhould endeavour.

It is alſo a very pleaſant and comfortable thing to live in Obedience; by it we enjoy tranquility of Mind, and ſatisfaction of Conſcience, we taſte all the ſweets of Amity and Peace, we are freed from the ſtings of inward Remorſe, we eſcape the grievances of Diſcord and Strife.

The Cauſes alſo and Principles, from which Obedience ſpringeth, do much commend it: it ariſeth from the Diſpoſitions of Soul, which are moſt Chriſtian and moſt Humane; from Charity, Humility, Meekneſs, Sobriety of Mind, and calmneſs of Paſſion; the which always diſpoſe Men to ſubmiſs, complaiſant, peaceable Demeanour toward all Men, eſpecially toward thoſe, whoſe Relation to them claimeth ſuch Demeanour; theſe a genuine, free, cordial and conſtant Obedience do ſignifie to live in the Soul; together with a general honeſty of Intention, and exemption from baſe Deſigns.

In fine, innumerable and ineſtimable are the Benefits and good Fruits accruing from this Practice; Beſide the Support it manifeſtly yieldeth to the Church, the gracefulneſs of Order, the conveniences and pleaſures of Peace, it hath alſo a notable influence upon the common Manners of Men, which hardly can ever prove very bad, where the Governours of the Church do retain their due Reſpect and Authority; nothing more powerfully doth inſtigate to Vertue, than the countenance of Authority, nothing more effectually can reſtrain from exorbitancy of Vice, than the Bridle of Diſcipline: this obvious Experience demonſtrateth, and we ſhall plainly ſee, if we reflect upon thoſe times when Piety and Vertue have moſt flouriſhed: whence was it, that in thoſe good old Times Chriſtians did ſo abound in good Works, that they burnt with holy Zeal, that they gladly would do, would ſuffer any thing for their Religion? whence but from a mighty reſpect to their Superiours; from a ſtrict regard to their Direction and Diſcipline? Did the Biſhops then preſcribe long Faſts, or impoſe rigid Penances? willingly did the People undergo them; Did the Paſtour conduct into Danger, did he lead them into the very Jaws of Death, and Martyrdom? the Flock with a reſolute alacrity did follow; did a Prelate interdict any Practice ſcandalous, or prejudicial to the Church; under pain of incurring Cenſure? Every Man trembled at the conſequences of tranſgreſſing: No terrour of worldly Power, no ſeverity of Juſtice, no dread of corporal Puniſhment had ſuch efficacy to deter Men from ill-doing, as the Reproof and Cenſure of a Biſhop; his Frown could avail more than the Menaces of an Emperour, than the Rage of a Per-

Neque hoc ità dixerim, ut negligatur Eccleſiaſtica diſciplina, & permittatur quiſquam facere quod velit ſine ulla correptione. & quadam medicinali vindicta, & terribili lenitate, & charitatis ſeveritate. Aug. adv. Petil. 3. 4.

Perſecutour, than the Rods and Axes of an Executioner: No Rod indeed did ſmart like the ſpiritual Rod, no Sword did cut ſo deep as that of the Spirit; no Loſs was then ſo valuable, as being deprived of ſpiritual Advantages; no Baniſhment was ſo grievous as being ſeparated from Holy Communion; no Sentence of Death was ſo terrible, as that which cut Men off from the Church: No Thunder could aſtoniſh or affright Men like the crack of a ſpiritual Anathema: This was that which kept Vertue in requeſt, and Vice in deteſtation; hence it was that Men were ſo good, that Religion did ſo thrive, that ſo frequent, and ſo illuſtrious Examples of Piety did appear: Hence indeed we may well reckon that Chriſtianity did (under ſo many Diſadvantages and Oppoſitions) ſubſiſt, and grow up; Obedience to Governours was its guard; that kept the Church firmly united in a Body ſufficiently ſtrong to maintain it ſelf againſt all aſſaults of Faction within, of Oppoſition from abroad; that preſerved that Concord, which diſpoſed and enabled Chriſtians to defend their Religion againſt all Fraud and Violence: that cheriſhed the true Vertue, and the beautiful Order, which begot veneration to Religion; to it therefore we owe the life and growth of Chriſtianity, ſo that through many ſharp Perſecutions it hath held up its Head; through ſo many perillous Diſeaſes it hath kept its Life until this Day. There were not then of old any ſuch Cavils and Clamours againſt every thing preſcribed by Governours; there were no ſuch unconſcionable Scruples, no ſuch hard-hearted Pretences to tender Conſcience deviſed to baffle the Authority of Superiours; had there been ſuch, had Men then commonly been ſo froward and factious as now, the Church had been ſoon ſhivered into pieces, our Religion had been ſwallowed up in Confuſion and Licentiouſneſs.

If again we on the other hand fix our Conſideration upon Diſobedience, (the Nature, the Sources, the Conſequences thereof) it will, I ſuppoſe, much conduce to the ſame effect, of perſuading us to the practice of this Duty:

It is in it ſelf a heinous Sin, being the tranſgreſſion of a Command in nature and conſequence very important, upon which God layeth great ſtreſs, which is frequently inculcated in Scripture, which is fenced by divers other Precepts, which is preſſed by ſtrong Arguments, and backed by ſevere threatnings of Puniſhment upon the Tranſgreſſours.

It is in its nature a kind of apoſtaſie from Chriſtianity, and rebellion againſt our Lord; for as he that refuſeth to obey the King's Magiſtrates in adminiſtration of their Office is interpreted to diſclaim his Authority, and to deſign Rebellion againſt him; ſo they who obſtinately diſobey the Miniſters of our Lord's ſpiritual Kingdom, do thereby appear to diſavow him, to ſhake off his Yoke, to impeach his Reign over them; ſo doth he himſelf interpret and take it: He (ſaith our Lord) that heareth you, heareth me, and he that (ὁ ἀθετῶν, that baffleth) deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me; and, If any man neglect to hear the Church (or ſhall diſobey it, ἐὰν παρακούσῃ) let him be to thee as a heathen, and a publican; that is, ſuch a refractary Perſon doth by his Contumacy put himſelf into the ſtate of one removed from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, he forfeiteh the ſpecial protection of God, he becometh as an Alien, or an Outlaw from the Kingdom of our Lord.

Luke 10. 16.
Matt. 10. 40.
12. 17.

Nec putent ſibi vitæ aut ſalutis conſtare rationem, ſi Epiſcopis & Sacerdotibus obtemperare noluerint; cùm in Deutron. Deus dicat, &c. Cypr. Ep. 61.

Under the Moſaical Diſpenſation thoſe who would do preſumptuouſly, and would not hearken unto the Prieſt, that ſtood to miniſter before the Lord, did incur capital Puniſhment; thoſe who factiouſly murmured againſt Aaron, are ſaid to make an Inſurrection againſt God, and anſwerably were puniſhed

Deut. 17. 12.

Num. 16. 11. 30. niſhed in a miraculous way (The Lord made a new thing, the earth opened, and ſwallowed them up; they went down alive into the pit.) It was in the
Hoſ. 4. 4. Prophetical times an expreſſion ſignifying height of impiety; My People is as thoſe who ſtrive with the Prieſt: Seeing then God hath no leſs regard to his peculiar Servants now than he had then; ſeeing they no leſs repreſent him, and act by his Authority now, than any did then; ſeeing their Service is as precious to him, and as much tendeth to his Honour now, as the Levitical Service then did; ſeeing he no leſs loveth Order and Peace in the Church, than he did in the Synagogue; we may well ſuppoſe it a no leſs heinous Sin, and odious to God, to deſpiſe the Miniſters of Chriſt's Goſpel, than it was before to deſpiſe the Miniſters of Moſes his Law.

Quo exemplo oſtenditur, & probatur obnoxios omnes & culpæ & pœnæ futuros, qui ſe ſchiſmaticis contra præpoſitos & ſacerdotes irreligioſâ temeritate miſcuerint. Cypr. Ep. 76.

It is a Sin indeed, pregnant with divers Sins, and involving the breach of many great Commands, which are frequently propoſed and preſſed in 1 Cor. 16. 14. the New Teſtament, with deſign in great part to guard and ſecure it; That Phil. 2. 14. of doing all things in charity, or doing all things without murmurings, and diſ-
Rom. 12. 18. ſentions, of purſuing peace ſo far as lieth in us, of maintaining unity, con-2 Tim. 2. 22. cord, unanimity in Devotion, of avoiding Schiſms, and Diſſentions, and
Heb. 12. 14. Mark 9. 10. the like; which are all notoriouſly violated by this Diſobedience; it includeth the moſt high breach of Charity, the moſt formal infringing Peace, the moſt ſcandalous kind of Diſcord that can be, to croſs our Superiours.

An eſſe ſibi cum Chriſto videtur, qui adverſus ſacerdotes Chriſti facit? &c. Cypr. de Unit. Eccl. p. 258.

It is alſo a practice iſſuing from the worſt Diſpoſitions of ſoul, ſuch as are moſt oppoſite to the Spirit of our Religion, and indeed very repugnant to common Reaſon, and Humanity; from a proud Haughtineſs, or vain wantonneſs of Mind, from the irregularity of unmortified and unbridled Paſſion, from exorbitant Selfiſhneſs (Selfiſhneſs of every bad kind, Self-conceit, Self-will, Self-intereſt) from turbulent Animoſity, froward croſſneſs of Humour, rancorous Spite, perverſe Obſtinacy; from Envy, Ambition, Avarice, and the like ill Sources, the worſt fruits of the Fleſh and corrupt Nature; to ſuch Diſpoſitions the rejecting God's Prophets of old, and the non-compliance with the Apoſtles are aſcribed in Scripture; and from the ſame the like neglect of God's Meſſengers now do proceed; as whoever will obſerve may eaſily diſcern; do but mind the Diſcourſes of factious People, you ſhall perceive them all to breathe generally nothing but Ill-nature.

The Fruits alſo, which it produceth, are extremely bad; manifold great Inconveniencies and Miſchiefs, hugely prejudicing the intereſt of Religion, and the welfare of the Church.

Vide Cypr. Ep. 55 Neque enim aliunde, &c. It is immediately and formally a violation of Order and Peace; whence all the woful Conſequences of Diſorder and Faction do adhere thereto.

It breedeth great Diſgrace to the Church, and Scandal to Religion; for what can appear more ugly than to ſee among the Profeſſors of Religion, Children oppoſing their Fathers, Scholars conteſting with their Maſters, Inferiours ſlighting and croſſing their Superiours? what can more expoſe the Church and Religion to the contempt, to the deriſion of Atheiſts and Infidels, of profane and lewd Perſons, of wild Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, of all Enemies unto Truth and Piety, than ſuch foul irregularity.

Inde Schiſmata, & Hæreſes obortæ ſunt, & oriuntur, dum Epiſcopus, qui unus eſt, & Eccleſiæ præeſt ſuperbâ quorundam præſumptione contemnitur. Cypr. Ep. 69.

Hæc ſunt initia Hæreticornm, & ortus atque conatus Schiſmaticorum malè cogitantium ut ſibi placeant, ut præpoſitum ſuperbo tumore contemnant. Sic de Eccleſia receditur, ſic altare profanum foris collocatur, ſic contra pacem Chriſti, atque unitatem Dei rebellatur. Cypr. Ep. 65.

It corrupteth the Minds and Manners of Men; for when that Diſcipline is relaxed, which was ordained to guard Truth, and promote Holineſs; when Men are grown ſo licentious and ſtubborn, as to contemn their Superiours, to diſregard their wholſom Laws and ſober Advice, there can be no curb to reſtrain them; but down precipitantly they run into all kind of vicious Irregularities and Exceſſes; when thoſe Mounds are taken away, whither will Men ramble; when thoſe Banks are broken down, what can we expect but Deluges of impious Doctrine, and wicked Practice to overflow the ignorant and inconſiderate People?

Eccleſiæ gloria præpoſiti gloria eſt. Cypr. Ep. 7. Ep. 55.

Doth not indeed this Practice evidently tend to the diſſolution of the Church, and deſtruction of Chriſtianity? for when the Shepherds are (as to conduct and efficacy) taken away, will not the ſheep be ſcattered, or wander aſtray, like ſheep without a ſhepherd, being bewildred in various Errors, and expoſed as a Prey to any wild Beaſts; to the grievous wolves, to the ravenous lions, to the wily Foxes? here a fanatical Enthuſiaſt will ſnap them, there a profane Libertine will worry them, there again a deſperate Atheiſt will tear and devour them.

Matt. 26. 31.

Τοῦτο πάντων τῶν κακῶν αἴτιον, ὅτι τὰ τῶν ἀρχόντων ἠφάνισται, οὐδεμία αἰδὼς, οὐδεὶς φόβος, &c. Chryſ. in 2 Tim. Or. 2.

Conſult we but obvious Experience, and we ſhall ſee, what ſpoils and ruines of Faith, of good Conſcience, of common Honeſty and Sobriety this practice hath in a few years cauſed: how have Atheiſm and Infidelity, how have Profaneneſs and Diſſoluteneſs of Manners, how have all kinds of Diſhoneſty and Baſeneſs grown up ſince Men began to diſregard the Authority of their ſpiritual Guides? what diſmal Tragedies have we in our Age beheld acted upon this Stage of our own Country; what bloody Wars and Murthers (Murthers of Princes, of Nobles, of Biſhops and Prieſts) what miſerable Oppreſſions, Extortions and Rapines; what execrable Seditions and Rebellions; what barbarous Animoſities and Feuds; what abominable Treaſons, Sacrileges, Perjuries, Blaſphemies; what horrible violations of all Juſtice and Honeſty? and what I pray was the Source of theſe things? where did they begin? where but at murmuring againſt, at rejecting, at perſecuting the ſpiritual Governours, at caſting down and trampling on their Authority; at ſlighting and ſpurning at their Advice; ſurely would Men have obſerved the Laws, or have hearkned to the Counſels of thoſe grave and ſober Perſons, whom God had appointed to direct them, they never would have run into the commiſſion of ſuch Enormities.

It is not to be omitted, that in the preſent ſtate of things the guilt of Diſobedience to ſpiritual Governours is encreaſed and aggravated by the ſupervenient guilt of another Diſobedience to the Laws of our Prince and Country; Before the ſecular Powers (unto whom God hath committed the diſpenſation of Juſtice, with the maintenance of Peace and Order in reference to worldly Affairs) did ſubmit to our Lord, and became nurſing parents of the Church, the power of managing Eccleſiaſtical matters did wholly reſide in ſpiritual Guides; unto whom Chriſtians, as the peculiar Subjects of God, were obliged willingly to yield Obedience; and refuſing it, were guilty before God of ſpiritual Diſorder, Faction, or Schiſm; but now after that political Authority (out of pious Zeal for God's Service, out of a wiſe care to prevent the influences of Diſorder in ſpiritual Matters upon the temporal Peace, out of grateful return for the Advantages the Commonwealth enjoyeth from Religion, and the Church) hath pleaſed to back and fortifie the Laws of ſpiritual Governours by civil Sanctions, the Knot of our Obligation is tied faſter, its force is redoubled, we by Diſobedience incur a double guilt, and offend God two ways, both as Supreme Governour of the World, and as King of the Church; to our Schiſm againſt the Church we add Rebellion againſt our Prince, and ſo become no leſs bad Citizens than bad Chriſtians; Some may perhaps imagine their Diſobedience hence more excuſable, taking themſelves now only thereby to tranſgreſs a political Sanction; but (beſide that even that were a great Offence, the Command of our temporal Governours being ſufficient, out of conſcience to Gods expreſs Will, to oblige us in all things not evidently repugnant to God's Law) it is a great Miſtake to think the Civil Law doth any-wiſe derogate from the Eccleſiaſtical; that doth not ſwallow this up, but ſuccoureth and corroborateth it; their concurrence yieldeth an acceſſion of weight and ſtrength to each; they do not by conſpiring to preſcribe the ſame thing either of them ceaſe to be Governours as to right; but in efficacy the Authority of both ſhould thence be augmented; ſeeing the obligation to Obedience is multiplied upon their Subjects; and to diſobey them is now two Crimes, which otherwiſe ſhould be but one.

SERMON XXVI.

Of Obedience to our Spiritual Guides and Governours.

HEB. XIII. 17.

Obey them that have the Rule over you.

SUCH is the Nature of this Duty, and ſuch are the Reaſons enforcing the practice thereof; I ſhall only farther remove two Impediments of that practice; and ſo leave this Point.

1. One hindrance of Obedience is this, that ſpiritual Power is not deſpotical, or compulſory, but parental or paſtoral; that it hath no external force to abett it, or to avenge Diſobedience to its Laws; they muſt not κατεξουσιάζειν, or κατακυριεύειν, (be imperious, or domineer) they are not allowed to exerciſe violence, or to inflict bodily correction; but muſt rule in meek and gentle ways, directly influential upon the Mind and Conſcience, (ways of rational perſuaſion, exhortation, admonition, reproof) in meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves;---convincing, rebuking, exhorting with all long-ſuffering, and doctrine: their Word is their only Weapon, their force of argument all the conſtraint they apply; hence Men commonly do not ſtand in awe of them, nor are ſo ſenſible of their obligation to obey them; they cannot underſtand why they ſhould be frighted by Words, or controlled by an unarmed Authority.

Μάλιστα γὰρ ἁπάντων Χριστιανοῖς οὐκ ἐφεῖται πρὸς βίαν ἐπανορθοῦν τὰ τῶν ἁμαρτανόντων πταίσματα, &c. Chryſ. de Sacerd. 2.

Ἐνταῦθα οὐ βιαζόμενον, ἀλλὰ πείθοντα δεῖ ποιεῖν ἀμείνω τὸν τοιοῦτον. Ibid.

Matt. 20. 27. Luke 22. 26.
1 Pet. 5. 3.

2 Tim. 2. 24.
4. 2.
1 Tim. 3. 3.

But this in truth (things being duly conſidered) is ſo far from diminiſhing our Obligation, or arguing the Authority of our Governours to be weak and precarious, that it rendreth our Obligation much greater, and their Authority more dreadful; for the ſweeter and gentler their way of go-governing is, the more diſingenuous and unworthy a thing it is to diſobey it; not to be perſuaded by reaſon, not to be allured by Kindneſs, not to admit friendly Advice, not to comply with the calmeſt Methods of furthering our own Good, is a brutiſh thing; he that only can be ſcared and ſcourged to Duty, ſcarce deſerveth the Name of a Man: it therefore doth the more oblige us, that in this way we are moved to Action by Love rather than fear: Yet if we would fear wiſely and juſtly, (not like Children, being frighted with formidable Shapes, and Appearances, but like Men apprehending the real Conſequences of things) we ſhould the more fear theſe ſpiritual Powers, becauſe they are inſenſible: For that God hath commanded us to obey them, without aſſigning viſible Forces to conſtrain or chaſtiſe, is a manifeſt Argument, that he hath reſerved the Vindication of their Authority to his own Hand, which therefore will be infallibly certain, and terribly ſevere; ſo the nature of the Caſe requireth, and ſo God hath declared it ſhall be; The Sentence that is upon Earth pronounced by his Miniſters upon contumacious Offenders, he hath declared himſelf ready to ratifie in Heaven, and therefore moſt aſſuredly will execute it: As under the old Law God appointed to the Tranſgreſſion of ſome Laws, upon which he laid ſpecial Streſs, the Puniſhment of being cut off from his people; the Execution of which Puniſhment he reſerved to himſelf, to be accompliſhed in his own way, and time; ſo doth he now in like manner take upon him to maintain the Cauſe of his Miniſters; and to execute the Judgments decreed by them; and if ſo, we may conſider that it is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the living God: Eccleſiaſtical Authority therefore is not a Shadow void of Subſtance or Force, but hath the greateſt power in the World to ſupport and aſſert it; it hath Arms to maintain it moſt effectual and forcible (thoſe of which St. Paul ſaith, The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God ——) it inflicteth Chaſtiſements far more dreadful than any ſecular Power can inflict; for theſe only touch the Body, thoſe pierce the Soul; theſe concern only our temporal State, thoſe reach Eternity it ſelf; theſe at moſt yield a tranſitory Smart, or kill the Body, thoſe produce endleſs Torment; and (utterly as to all Comfort in being) deſtroy the Soul.

Mat. 18. 18.

Heb. 10. 31.

2 Cor. 10. 4.

The Puniſhment for extream contumacy is called delivery to Satan; and is not this far worſe than to be put into the Hands of any Gaoler or Hangman? What are any Chords of Hemp, or Fetters of Iron in compariſon to thoſe Bands, of which 'tis ſaid, Whatever ye bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven; which engage the Soul in a Guilt, never to be looſed, except by ſore Contrition, and ſerious Repentance? What are any Scourges to St. Paul's Rod, laſhing the Heart and Conſcience with ſtinging Remorſe; What any Axes or Faulchions to that ſword of the ſpirit; which cutteth off a Member from the Body of Chriſt? What are any Faggots and Torches to that unquenchable fire and brimſtone of the infernal Lake? What, in fine, doth any Condemnation here ſignifie to that horrible Curſe, which devoteth an incorrigible Soul to the bottomleſs Pit?

Spirituali gladio ſuperbi & contumaces necantur, dum de Eccleſia ejiciuntur. Cypr. Ep. 61.

It is therefore indeed a great Advantage to this Power that it is ſpiritual.

2. Another grand Obſtruction to the practice of this Duty is, Pretence to ſcruple about the Lawfulneſs, or Diſſatisfaction in the Expedience of that, which our Governours preſcribe, that we are able to advance Objections againſt their Decrees, that we can eſpy Inconveniences enſuing upon their Orders; that we imagine the Conſtitution may be reformed, ſo as to become more pure, more convenient and comely, more ſerviceable to Edification; that we cannot fanſie that to be beſt, which they enjoy: For removing this Obſtruction let me only propound ſome Queſtions.

Cypr' Ep. 50. & 52. (p. 97)

Φιλοίνοις οἶνος οὐ λείπει, οὐδὲ φιλονείκῳ μάχη. Socr. hiſt. 7. 31.

Were not any Government appointed in vain, if ſuch pretences might exempt or excuſe from Conformity to its Orders? can ſuch ever be wanting? is there any thing deviſable, which may not be impugned by ſome plauſible Reaſon, which may not diſguſt a ſqueamiſh Humour? is there any Matter ſo clearly innocent, the Lawfulneſs whereof a weak Mind will not queſtion, any thing ſo firm and ſolid, in which a ſmall Acuteneſs of Wit cannot pick a Hole, any thing ſo indiſputably certain, that whoever affecteth to cavil may not eaſily deviſe ſome Objections againſt it?

Is there any thing here that hath no Inconveniencies attending it? are not in all humane Things, Conveniencies and Inconveniencies ſo mixt and complicated, that it is impoſſible to diſintangle and ſever them? can there be any Conſtitution under Heaven ſo abſolutely pure and perfect, that no Blemiſh or Defect ſhall appear therein? can any Providence of Man foreſee, any Care prevent, any Induſtry remedy all Inconveniencies poſſible? Is a Reformation ſatisfactory to all Fancies any-wiſe practicable; and are they not fitter to live in a Platonick Idea of a Common-wealth, than in any real Society who preſs for ſuch an one? to be facile and complaiſant in other Caſes, bearing with things which do not pleaſe us, is eſteemed commendable, a courteous and humane Practice, why ſhould it not be much more reaſonable to condeſcend to our Superiours, and comport with their Practice? is it not very diſcourteous to deny them the Reſpect which we allow to others, or to refuſe that Advantage to publick Tranſactions, which we think fit to grant unto private Converſation?

Οὐ γὰρ μόνον τὴν ἀρίστην (πολιτείαν) δεῖ θεωρεῖν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν δυνατήν Ariſt. Pol. 4. 1.

Si ubi jubeantur quærere ſingulis liceat; pereunte obſequio etiam imperium intercidit. Tac. 1. p. 450. Otho.

To what purpoſe did God inſtitute a Government, if the Reſolutions thereof muſt be ſuſpended, till every Man is ſatisfied with them; or if its State muſt be altered ſo often as any Man can pick in it Matter of Offence or Diſlike; or if the Proceedings thereof muſt be ſhaped according to the numberleſs Varieties of different and repugnant Fancies?

Are, I pray, the Objections againſt Obedience ſo clear, and cogent, as are the Commands which enjoin, and the Reaſons which enforce it? are the Inconveniencies adhering to it apparently ſo grievous, as are the Miſchiefs which ſpring from Diſobedience? do they in a juſt Balance counterpoize the Diſparagement of Authority, the Violation of Order, the Diſturbance of Peace, the Obſtruction of Edification, which Diſobedience produceth?

Dixiſti ſanè ſcrupulum tibi eſſe tollendum de animo, in quem incidiſti; Incidiſti ſed tua credulitate irreligioſâ, &c. Cypr. Ep. 69. (ad Florent.) vid. optimè & appoſitè de hâc re differentem.

Do the Scruples (or Reaſons, if we will call them ſo) which we propound, amount to ſuch a Strength and Evidence, as to out-weigh the Judgment of thoſe whom God hath authoriſed by his Commiſſion, whom he doth enable by his Grace to inſtruct and guide us? May not thoſe, whoſe Office it is to judge of ſuch things; whoſe Buſineſs it is to ſtudy for Skill in order to that purpoſe, who have moſt Experience in thoſe Affairs, ſpecially belonging to them, be reaſonably deemed moſt able to judge both for themſelves and us, what is lawful, and what expedient? have they not Eyes to ſee what we do, and Hearts to judge concerning the Force of our Pretences, as well as we?

Qui fidei & veritati præſumus. Cypr. Ep. 72.

Is it not a Deſign of their Office to reſolve our Doubts, and void our Scruples in ſuch Caſes, that we may act ſecurely and quietly, being directed by better Judgments than our own? Are they not ſtrictly obliged in Conſcience, are they not deeply engaged by Intereſt to govern us in the beſt manner? Is it therefore Wiſdom, is it Modeſty, is it Juſtice for us to advance our private Conceits againſt their moſt deliberate publick Reſolutions? May we not in ſo doing miſtake; may we not be blind, or weak (not to ſay fond, or proud, or perverſe) and ſhall thoſe Defects or Defaults of ours evacuate ſo many Commands of God, and render his ſo noble, ſo needful an Ordinance quite inſignificant?

Do we eſpecially ſeem to be in earneſt, or appear otherwiſe than illuſively to palliate our naughty Affections, and ſiniſter Reſpects, when we ground the Juſtification of our Non-conformity upon dark Subtilties, and intricate Quirks; which it is hard to conceive that we underſtand our ſelves, and whereof very perſpicacious Men cannot apprehend the Force? Do we think we ſhall be innocent Men, becauſe we are ſmart Sophiſters; or that God will excuſe us from our Duty, becauſe we can perplex Men with our Diſcourſes? or that we are bound to do nothing, becauſe we are able to ſay ſomewhat againſt all things.

Would we not do well to conſider, what huge Danger they incur, and how maſſy a Load of Guilt they muſt undergo, upon whom ſhall be charged all thoſe ſad Diſorders, and horrid Miſchiefs which are naturally conſequent on Diſobedience; what if Confuſion of things, if Corruption of Manners; if Oppreſſion of Truth, if Diſſolution of the Church do thence enſue, what a Caſe then ſhall we be in, who confer ſo much thereto? Would not ſuch Conſiderations be apt to beget Scruples far more diſquieting an honeſt, and truly conſciencious Mind, than any ſuch either profound Subtilties, or ſuperficial Plauſibilities can do; which Diſſenters are wont to alledge? For needeth he not to have extream Reaſon (Reaſon extreamly ſtrong and evident) who dareth to refuſe that Obedience, which God ſo plainly commandeth, by which his own Authority is maintained, on which the Safety, Proſperity, and Peace of the Church dependeth, in which the Support of Religion, and the Welfare of numberleſs Souls is deeply concerned?

Did, let me farther ask, the Apoſtles, when they ſettled Orders in the Church, when they impoſed what they conceived needful for Edification, and Decency, when they inflicted ſpiritual Chaſtiſements upon diſorderly Walkers, regard ſuch Pretences? or had thoſe ſelf-conceited and ſelf-willed People (who obeyed not their Words, but reſiſted and rejected them) no ſuch Pretences? Had they nothing, think we, to ſay for themſelves? nothing to object againſt the Apoſtolick Orders, and Proceedings? they had ſurely; they failed not to find Faults in the Eſtabliſhment, and to pretend a kind of tender Conſcience for their Diſobedience; yet this hindred not, but that the Apoſtles condemned their Miſ-behaviour and inflicted ſevere Cenſures upon them?

2 Tim. 4. 15.
1 Tim. 1. 20.
2 Theſſ. 3. 14. 6.

Did not alſo the Primitive Biſhops (and all Spiritual Governours down from the Beginning every where almoſt to theſe Days of Contention and Diſorder) proceed in the ſame Courſe, not fearing to enact ſuch Laws concerning indifferent Matters, and Circumſtances of Religion, as ſeemed to them conducible to the good of the Church? Did not all good People readily comply with their Orders, how painful ſoever, or diſagreeable to Fleſh and Blood, without Conteſt or Scruple? yet had not they as much Wit, and no leſs Conſcience than our ſelves? They who had Wiſdom enough to deſcry the Truth of our Religion through all the Clouds of Obloquy and Diſgrace, which it lay under; who had Zeal and Conſtancy to bear the hardeſt Brunts of Perſecution againſt it; were they ſuch Fools as to ſee no Fault; ſo ſtupid as to reſent nothing, or ſo looſe as to comply with any thing? No ſurely; they were in truth ſo wiſe as to know their Duty, and ſo honeſt as to obſerve it.

If theſe Conſiderations will not ſatisfie, I have done; and proceed to the next Point of our Duty, to which the Precept in our Text may extend tend; concerning the Doctrine of our Guides: In which reſpect it may be conceived to imply the following Particulars, to be performed by us, as Inſtances, or Parts, or degrees thereof.

1. We ſhould readily and gladly addreſs our ſelves to hear them; not out of profane and wilful Contempt, or ſlothful Negligence declining to attend upon their Inſtructions: There were of old thoſe, of whom the Prophets complain, who would not ſo much as hearken to the Words of thoſe, whom God ſent unto them; but ſtopped their Ears, withdrew the ſhoulder, and hardened the neck, and would not hear; there were thoſe in the Evangelical times, who did ἀπωθεῖν τὸν λόγον, thruſt away the word of God, judging themſelves unworthy of eternal life; who would not admit, or hear the word of Life, and Overtures of Grace propounded by the Apoſtles; There were Gadarenes, who beſeeched our Lord himſelf to depart from their Coaſts; There have always been deaf Adders, who ſtop their ears to the voice of the Charmer, charm he never ſo wiſely; No wonder then if now there be thoſe, who will not ſo much as allow a Hearing to the Meſſengers of God, and the Guides of their Soul, ſome out of a factious Prejudice againſt their Office or their Perſons, or their Way to ſhun them, giving themſelves over to the Conduct of Seducers; ſome out of a profane Neglect of all Religion, out of being wholly poſſeſſed with worldly Cares, and Deſires, out of Stupidity and Sloth (indiſpoſing them to mind any thing that is ſerious) will not afford them any Regard: All theſe are extreamly blameable, offenſive to God, and injurious to themſelves: It is a heinous Affront to God (implying a hoſtile Diſpoſition toward him, an Unwillingneſs to have any Correſpondence with him) to refuſe ſo much as Audience to his Ambaſſadors; It is an interpretative Repulſing him; ſo of old he expreſſed it; I, ſaith he, ſpake unto you, riſing early, and ſpeaking, but ye heard not; I called you, but ye anſwered not; ſo under the Goſpel, He, ſaith our Lord, that heareth you, heareth me; and he that deſpiſeth (or regardeth not) you, deſpiſeth me; and, We are Ambaſſadors of Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us; we pray you in Chriſt's ſtead, be reconciled to God. It is a ſtarving our Souls, depriving them of that Food, which God hath provided for them; It is keeping our ſelves at diſtance from any Means or Poſſibility of being well informed and quickened to the Practice of our Duty, of being reclaimed from our Errours, and Sins; it is the way to become hardened in Impiety, or ſinking into a reprobate Senſe: This is the firſt Step to Obedience; for how can we believe, except we hear? this is that, which St. James urgeth; Let every man be quick to hear; and, which St. Peter thus enjoineth, Like new-born Babes, deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby; We ſhould eſpecially be quick and ready to hear thoſe, whom God hath authorized and appointed to ſpeak; we ſhould deſire to ſuck the milk of the word from thoſe, who are our ſpiritual Parents and Nurſes.

Neh. 9. 29.
Prov. 1. 24.
Iſa. 65. 12.
66. 4.
Jer. 7. 13.
6. 10.
Acts 13. 46.
Mat. 10. 14.
Luke 8. 37.
Pſal. 58. 4, 5.
Jer. 7. 13.
Luke 10. 16.
2 Cor. 5. 20.
Jam. 1. 19.
1 Pet. 2. 2.

2. We ſhould hear them with ſerious, earneſt Attention, and Conſideration; ſo that we may well underſtand, may be able to weigh, may retain in Memory, and may become duly affected with their Diſcourſes; We muſt not hear them drowſily and ſlightly, as if we were nothing concerned, or were hearing an impertinent Tale; their Word ſhould not paſs through the Ears, and ſlip away without effect; but ſink into the Underſtanding, into the Memory, into the Heart; like the good ſeed falling into a depth of earth, able to afford it Root and Nouriſhment; therefore we muſt attend diligently thereto: περισσοτέρως ἡμᾶς δεῖ προσέχειν, we ſhould therefore give more abundant heed, as the Apoſtle ſaith, to the things we hear, leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip. This Duty the

Mat. 13. 5.
Heb. 2. 1.

Nature and Importance of their Word requireth: It is the word, not of men, but in truth the word of the great God, (his Word as proceeding from him, as declaring his Mind and Will, as tendring his Overtures of Grace and Mercy) which as ſuch challengeth great Regard and Awe; it informeth us of our chief Duties, it furthereth our main Intereſts, it guideth us into, it urgeth us forward in the Way to eternal Happineſs; 'tis the Word that is able to ſave our ſouls; to render us wiſe unto ſalvation; It therefore claimeth and deſerveth from us moſt earneſt Attention; it is a great Indignity and Folly not to yield it. 1 Theſſ. 2.13. Jam. 1. 21.

3. We ſhould to their Inſtructions bring good Diſpoſitions of Mind, ſuch as may render them moſt effectual and fruitful to us: Such as are right Intention, Candour, Docility, Meekneſs.

We ſhould not be induced to hear them out of Curioſity (as having itching ears) being deſirous to hear ſome new things, ſome fine Notions, ſome taking Diſcourſe; ſomewhat to fanſie or talk pleaſantly about; (as the Athenians heard St. Paul, not out of Cenſoriouſneſs, or Inclination to criticize, and find fault (as the Phariſees heard our Saviour, Laying wait for him, and ſeeking to catch ſomething out of his mouth, that they might accuſe him) not out of deſign to gratifie our Paſſions in hearing them, to reprove other Perſons; or for any ſuch corrupt and ſiniſter Intention, but altogether out of pure Deſign that we may be improved in Knowledge, and excited to the practice of our Duty. Acts 17. 21. Luke 11. 54.

We ſhould not come to hear them with Minds imbued with ill Prejudices and partial Affections, which may obſtruct the Virtue and Efficacy of their Diſcourſe; or may hinder us from judging fairly, and truly about what they ſay; but with ſuch Freedom and Ingenuity as may diſpoſe us readily to yield unto, and acquieſce in any profitable Truth declared by them; like the generous Berœans, who received the word μετὰ πάσης προθυμίας, with all Alacrity and readineſs of mind, ſearching the ſcriptures daily whether theſe things were ſo; ὡς ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη, like infants newly born, that come to the Dugg without any other Inclination than to ſuck what is needful for their Suſtenance. Acts 17. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

We ſhould be docile and tractable; willing and apt to learn; ſhaking off all thoſe Indiſpoſitions of Soul (all Dulneſs and Sluggiſhneſs, all Peeviſhneſs and Perverſeneſs, all Pride and Self-conceitedneſs, all corrupt Affection and Indulgence, to our Conceits, our Humours, our Paſſions, our Luſts and inordinate Deſires) which may obſtruct our Underſtanding of the Word, our yielding Aſſent to it, our receiving Impreſſion from it: There were thoſe, concerning whom the Apoſtle ſaid, that he could not proceed in his Diſcourſe, becauſe they were νωθροὶ ταῖς ἀκοαῖς, dull of hearing (or ſluggiſh in hearing) who were indiſpoſed to hear, and uncapable to underſtand, becauſe they would not be at the pains to rouſe up their Fancies, and fix their Minds upon a ſerious Conſideration of things: there were thoſe, who had a ſpirit of ſlumber, eyes not to ſee, and ears not to hear; who did hear with the ear, but not underſtand; ſeeing did ſee, but not perceive; for their heart had waxed groſs, their ears were dull of hearing; and their eyes were cloſed; Such indocile Perſons there always have been, who being ſtupified and perverted by corrupt Affections became uncapable of bettering from good Inſtruction: All ſuch we ſhould ſtrive to free our ſelves from; that we may perform this Duty to our Guides, and In meekneſs receive the ingrafted word. Heb. 5. 11. 1 Cor. 3. 2. Iſa. 29. 10. Rom. 11. 8. Iſa. 6. 9. Acts 28. 26. John 12. 40. Jam. 1. 21.

Theſe Practices of hearing, of attending, of coming well diſpoſed to Inſtruction are at leaſt Steps and Degrees neceſſarily pre-requiſite to the Obedience preſcribed; and farther to preſs them all together upon us, we may conſider that it is ſtrictly incumbent on them (under Danger of heavy

1 Cor. 9. 16. 2 Cor. 5. 14. 1 Pet. 5. 2. Rom. 12. 3. 1 Tim. 5. 17. 1 Tim. 4. 13, 16. 2 Tim. 4. 2. Col. 1. 28. heavy Puniſhment and woe) willingly, earneſtly, with all Diligence and Patience to labour in teaching and admoniſhing us; they muſt give attendance, and take heed unto their doctrine, that it may be ſound and profitable; they muſt preach the word, and be inſtant upon it in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon, (that is, not only taking, but ſeeking and ſnatching all Occaſions to do it) reproving, rebuking, exhorting with all long-ſuffering, and doctrine; they muſt warn every man, and teach every man in all wiſdom, that they may preſent every man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus: as they are obliged in ſuch manner to do theſe things, ſo there muſt be cerreſpondent Duties lying upon us to receive their Doctrine readily, carefully, patiently, ſincerely 1 Cor. 4. 2. and fairly: As they muſt be faithful Diſpenſers of God's heavenly Truth and holy Myſteries, ſo we muſt be obſequious Entertainers of them: impoſing ſuch Commands on them doth imply reciprocal Obligatioos in their Hearers and Scholars; otherwiſe their Office would be vain, and their Endeavours fruitleſs; God no leſs would be fruſtrated in his Deſign than we ſhould be deprived of the Advantages of their Inſtitution.

But farther, it is a more immediate Ingredient of this Duty, that,

4. We ſhould effectually be enlightened by their Doctrine, be convinced by their Arguments perſuading Truth and Duty, be moved by their Admonitions and Exhortations to good Practice: We ſhould open our Eyes to the Light, which they ſhed forth upon us; we ſhould ſurrender our Judgment to the Proofs, which they alledge; we ſhould yield our Hearts and Affections pliable to their mollifying, and warming Diſcourſes: It is their Part to ſubdue our Minds to the obedience of faith, and to ſubject our 2 Cor. 10. 5. Wills to the Obſervance of God's Commandments (Caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt.) It muſt therefore anſwerably be our Duty not to reſiſt, not to hold out, not to perſiſt obſtinate in our Errours, or Prejudices; to ſubmit our Minds to the Power of Truth, being willingly and gladly conquered by it; it muſt be our Duty to ſubjugate our Wills, to bend our Inclinations, to form our Affections to a free Compliance of Heart with the Duties urged upon us; we ſhould not be like thoſe Diſciples, of whom our Lord complaineth thus: Luke 24. 25. O fools, and ſlow of heart, to believe all that the prophets have ſpoken; nor Acts 7. 51. like the Jews, with whom St. Stephen thus expoſtulates: Ye ſtiff-necked and uncircumciſed in heart and ears, ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt. They 1 Cor. 4. 20. 2. 4. ſhould ſpeak with Power and Efficacy; we therefore ſhould not by our Indiſpoſitions (by Obſtinacy of Conceit, or hardneſs of Heart) obſtruct their 2 Cor. 1. 24. Endeavours; they ſhould be co-workers of your joy (that is, working in us 1 Cor. 3. 5. that Faith and thoſe Vertues, which are productive of true Joy and Comfort to us) we therefore ſhould co-work with them toward the ſame End; they ſhould edifie us in Knowledge, and Holineſs; we ſhould therefore yield our ſelves to be faſhioned and poliſhed by them.

5. We ſhould, in fine, obey their Doctrine by conforming our Practice thereto; this our Lord preſcribed in regard even to the Jewiſh Guides Mat. 23. 3. and Doctors; The Scribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes his ſeat; all therefore whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do; the ſame we may well conceive that he requireth in reſpect to his own Miniſters, the Teachers of a better Law, authorized to direct us by his own Commiſſion, and thereto more ſpecially qualified by his Grace: This is indeed the Crown and Completion of all; to hear ſignifieth nothing; to be convinced in our Mind, and to be affected in our Heart will but aggravate our Guilt, if we neglect Practice: Every Sermon we hear, that ſheweth us our Duty will in effect be an Indictment upon us, will ground a ſentence

tence of Condemnation, if we tranſgreſs it: For, as The Earth which drinketh in the Rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dreſſed, receiveth bleſſing from God, ſo that which beareth thorns and briars, is rejected, and is nigh unto curſing, and its end is to be burned: and, not the hearers of the law are juſt with God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified. And it is a good Advice, that of St. James; Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own ſelves; 'tis he intimateth, a Fallacy ſome are apt to put upon themſelves to conceit they have done ſufficiently when they have lent an Ear to the Word; this is the leaſt part to be done in regard to it, Practice is all in all; what is it to be ſhewed the Way, and to know it exactly, if we do not walk in it, if we do not by it arrive to our Journey's End, the Salvation of our Souls? To have waited upon our Lord himſelf, and hung upon his Diſcourſe, was not available; for when in the Day of Accompt, ſome ſhall begin to alledge, We have eaten, and drank before thee, and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets; Our Lord will ſay, I know ye not, whence ye are, depart from me all ye workers of iniquity. And, it is our Lord's Declaration in the Caſe, Whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings of mine and doth them, I will liken him unto a wiſe man, which built his houſe upon a rock; but every one that heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them not, ſhall be likned unto a fooliſh man, that built his houſe upon the ſand.

Heb. 6. 7, 8. 10. 26.
Rom. 2. 13.
Jam. 1. 22.
Luke 13. 26, 27.
Mat. 7. 21.
(Joh. 14. 21.)

Many are very earneſt to hear, they hear gladly, as Herod did Saint John Baptiſt's Homilies; they receive the word with joy, as the temporary believers in the Parable did: They do as thoſe Men did in the Prophet, delight to know God's ways, do ask of God the ordinances of juſtice, do take delight in approaching God; Or as thoſe in another Prophet; Who ſpeak one to another, every one to his brother, ſaying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord; And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they ſit before thee as my people; and they hear thy words, but will not do them; for with their mouth they ſhew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetouſneſs: And lo, thou art to them as a very lovely ſong of one that hath a pleaſant voice, and can play well on an inſtrument; for they hear thy words, but they do them not: They for a time rejoice in the light of God's meſſengers, as thoſe Jews did in the Light of that burning and ſhining lamp, St. John the Baptiſt; but all comes to nothing; but they are backward and careleſs to perform, at leaſt, more than they pleaſe themſelves, or what ſuteth to their Fancy, their Humour, their Appetite, their Intereſt: Many Hearers will believe only what they like, or what ſuteth to their Prejudices and Paſſions; many of what they believe will practiſe that only which ſorteth with their Temper, or will ſerve their Deſigns, they cannot conform to unpleaſant and unprofitable Doctrines: Sometimes Care choaketh the Word, ſometimes Temptation of Pleaſure, of Profit, of Honour allureth, ſometimes Difficulties, Hazards, Perſecutions, diſcourage from Obedience to it:

Mark 6. 20.
Mat. 13. 20.
Iſa. 58. 2.
Ezek. 33. 31, 32.
John 5. 35.

Theſe Particulars are obvious, and by moſt will be conſented to; there is one Point which perhaps will more hardly be admitted, which therefore I ſhall more largely inſiſt upon: 'Tis this:

6. That as in all caſes it is our Duty to defer much Regard to the Opinion of our Guides, ſo in ſome caſes it behoveth us to rely barely upon their Judgment and Advice; thoſe eſpecially among them who excel in Dignity and Worth; who are approved for Wiſdom and Integrity; their Definitions, or the Declarations of their Opinion (eſpecially ſuch as are exhibited upon mature Deliberation and Debate, in a ſolemn manner) are ever very probable Arguments of Truth and Expediency; they are commonly the beſt Arguments which can be had in ſome Matters, eſpecially to the meaner and ſimpler ſort of People. This upon many Accompts will appear reaſonable.

Rom. 14. 1. 15. 1. &c. Rom. 16. 18. 2 Cor. 14. 16. 3.2 8. 10.

It is evident to Experience, that every Man is not capable to judge, or able to guide himſelf in Matters of this Nature (concerning divine Truth and Conſcience.) There are Children in underſtanding, there are Men weak in faith (or Knowledge concerning the Faith) there are Idiots, ἄκακοι (Men not bad, but ſimple) Perſons occupying the room of the unlearned, unſkilful in the word of righteouſneſs, who (as the Apoſtle ſaith) need that one ſhould teach them which be the firſt principles of the oracles of God.

Vulgo non judicium, non veritas. Tac.

Ἄκριτον ὁ δῆμος, M. Ant.

Eph. 4. 14.

The Vulgar ſort of Men are as undiſcerning and injudicious in all things, ſo peculiarly in Matters of this nature, ſo much abſtracted from common Senſe and Experience; whence we ſee them eaſily ſeduced into the fondeſt Conceits and wildeſt Courſes by any ſlender Artifice or fair Pretence; like children toſſed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the ſlight of Men, and cunning craftineſs, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.

Ἀλλ' εἰδότες ἑτέροις βέλτιον εἶναι τὰς ἑαυτῶν ἡνίας ἐνδιδόναι τεχνικωτέροις, ἢ ἄλλων ἡνιόχους εἶναι ἀνεπιστήμονας, καὶ ἀκοὴν ὑποτιθέναι μᾶλλον εὐγνώμονα, ἢ γλῶσσαν κινεῖν ἀπαίδευτον. Naz. Or. 1.
——fide calidus, & virtute robuſtus, &c. Cypr. Ep. 23. de Luciano:

There are alſo ſome particular Caſes, a competent Information and skill in which muſt depend upon Improvements of Mind acquired by more than ordinary Study and Experience: So that in them moſt People do want ſufficient means of attaining Knowledge requiſite to guide their Judgment, or their Practice: And for ſuch Perſons in ſuch Caſes it is plainly the beſt, the wiſeſt, and the ſafeſt way to rely upon the Direction of their Guides, aſſenting to what they declare, acting what they preſcribe, going whither they conduct.

The very Notion of Guides, and the Deſign of their Office doth import a difference of Knowledge, and a need of reliance upon them in ſuch caſes; it ſignifieth that we are in ſome meaſure ignorant of the way, and that they better know it, and if ſo, plain Reaſon dictateth it fit that we ſhould follow them; and indeed what need were there of Guides, to what purpoſe ſhould we have them if we can ſufficiently ken the way, and judge what we ſhould do without them?

Regi debet, dum incipit ſe poſſe regere. Sen. Ep. 94.

In the ſtate of Learning (in which the aſſigning us Teachers ſuppoſeth us placed) whatever our Capacity may be, yet our Judgment at leaſt (for want of a full Comprehenſion of things, which muſt be diſcovered in order, and by degrees) is imperfect; in that State therefore it becometh us not to pretend Exerciſe of Judgment, but rather eaſily to yield aſſent to what our Teachers, who ſee farther into the thing, do aſſert; The Learner (as Seneca ſaith) is bound to be ruled, while he beginneth to be able to rule himſelf.

Δεῖ μανθάνοντα πιστεύειν, A Learner ſhould in ſome meaſure be credulous; Otherwiſe as he will often fail in his Judgment, ſo he will make little Progreſs in Learning; for if he will admit nothing on his Maſter's Word, if he will queſtion all things, if he will continually be doubting and diſputing, or contradicting and oppoſing his Teacher, how can Inſtruction proceed? He that preſently will be his own Maſter, is a bad Scholar, and will be a worſe Maſter. He that will fly before he is fledged, no wonder if he tumble down.

There are divers obvious, and very conſiderable Caſes, in which Perſons moſt contemptuous of Authority, and refractary toward their Guides, are conſtrained to rely upon the Judgment of others, and are contented to do it, their Conſcience ſhewing them unable to judge for themſelves;

In admitting the litteral Senſe of Scripture according to Tranſlations; in the Interpretation of difficult Places, depending upon the Skill of Languages, Grammar, and Criticiſm, upon the Knowledge of Humane Arts and Sciences, upon Hiſtories and ancient Cuſtoms; in ſuch caſes all illiterate Perſons (however otherwiſe diffident, and diſregardful of Authority) are forced to ſee with the Eyes of other Men, to ſubmit their Judgment to the Skill and Fidelity of their learned Guides, taking the very Principles and Foundations of their Religion upon Truſt; And why then conſonantly may they not do it in other Caſes; eſpecially in the Reſolution of difficult, ſublime, obſcure and ſubtil Points, the Comprehenſion whereof tranſcendeth their Capacity?

SERMON XXVII.

Of Obedience to our Spiritual Guides and Governours.

HEB. XIII. 17.

Obey them that have the Rule over you.

BUT farther,

The more to engage and incline us to the performing this part of our Duty (the regarding, prizing, confiding in the Judgment of our Guides) we may conſider the great Advantages, both natural and ſupernatural, which they have to qualifie them in order to ſuch purpoſes.

1. They may reaſonably be preſumed more intelligent and skilful in Divine Matters than others; for as they have the ſame natural Capacities and Endowments with others (or rather commonly ſomewhat better than others, as being deſigned and ſelected to this ſort of Employment) ſo their natural Abilities are by all poſſible means improved: It is their Trade and Faculty, unto which their Education is directed: in acquiring Ability toward which they ſpend their time, their Care, their Pains; in which they are continually verſed and exerciſed (having, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, by reaſon of uſe their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil) for which alſo they imploy their Supplications and Devotions to God. Heb. 5. 14.

Many ſpecial Advantages they hence procure, needful or very conducible to a more perfect Knowledge of ſuch Matters, and to Security from Errors; ſuch as are converſing with Studies, which enlarge a Man's Mind, and improve his Judgment; a Skill of Diſquiſition about things of ſifting and canvaſing Points coming under Debate; of weighing the Force of Arguments, and diſtinguiſhing the Colours of things; the Knowledge of Languages, in which the Divine Oracles are expreſſed, of Sciences, of Hiſtories, of Practices ſerving to the Diſcovery and Illuſtration of the Truth, exerciſe in Meditation, Reading, Writing, Speaking, Diſputing and Conference, whereby the Mind is greatly enlightened, and the Reaſon ſtrengthened, Acquaintance with Variety of Learned Authors, who with great Diligence have expounded the Holy Scriptures, and with moſt Accuracy diſcuſſed Points of Doctrine, eſpecially with Ancient Writers, who living near the Apoſtolical times, and being immediately, (or within few Degrees mediately) their Diſciples may juſtly be ſuppoſed moſt helpful toward informing us what was their genuine Doctrine, what the true ſenſe of their Writings: By ſuch means as in other Faculties, ſo in this of Theology, a competent Skill may be obtained; there is no other ordinary, or probable Way; and no extraordinary Way can be truſted, now that Men appear not to grow learned or wiſe by ſpecial Inſpiration or Miracle; after that all Pretences to ſuch By-ways have been detected of Impoſture, and do ſmell too rank of Hypocriſie.

Since then our Guides are ſo advantageouſly qualified to direct us; it is in Matters difficult and doubtful (the which require good Meaſure of Skill and Judgment to determine about them) moſt reaſonable that we ſhould rely upon their Authority, preferring it in ſuch Caſes to our private Diſcretion; taking it for more probable, that they ſhould comprehend the Truth, than we (unaſſiſted by them, and judging merely by our own glimmering Light) can do; deeming it good odds on the ſide of their Doctrine againſt our Opinion or Conjecture.

They have alſo another peculiar Advantage toward judging ſincerely of things, by their greater Retirement from the World and Diſengagement from ſecular Intereſts; the which ordinarily do deprave the Underſtandings, and pervert the Judgments of Men; diſpoſing them to accommodate their Conceits to the Maxims of worldly Policy, or to the vulgar Apprehenſions of Men: many of which are falſe and baſe; by ſuch Abſtraction of Mind from worldly Affairs, together with faſtning their Meditation on the beſt things, which their Calling neceſſarily doth put them upon) more than is uſual to other Men, they commonly get Principles and Habits of Simplicity and Integrity, which qualifie Men both to diſcern Truth better, and more faithfully to declare it. 2 Tim. 2. 4.

Seeing then in every Faculty the Advice of the Skilful is to be regarded, and is uſually relied upon; and in other Affairs of greateſt Importance, we ſcruple not to proceed ſo; ſeeing we commit our Life and Health (which are moſt precious to us) to the Phyſician, obſerving his Preſcriptions commonly without any Reaſon, ſometimes againſt our own Senſe; we entruſt our Eſtate, which is ſo dear, with the Lawyer, not conteſting his Advice; we put our Goods and Safety into the Hands of a Pilot, ſleeping ſecurely whilſt he ſteereth us, as he thinketh fit; ſeeing in many ſuch Occaſions of common Life we adviſedly do renounce, or wave our own Opinions, abſolutely yielding to the Direction of others; taking their Authority for a better Argument or ground of Action, than any which our Conceit or a bare Conſideration of the Matter can ſuggeſt to us; admitting this Maxim for good, that it is a more adviſeable and ſafe Courſe in Matters of Conſequence to follow the Judgment of wiſer Men than to adhere to our own Apprehenſions: Seeing it is not Wiſdom (as every Man thinks) in a doubtful Caſe to act upon Diſadvantage, or to venture upon odds againſt himſelf, and it is plainly doing thus to Act upon our own Opi-

Ὃν ἂν ἡγήσωνται περὶ τὰ συμφέροντα ἑαυτοῖς φρονιμώτερον ἑαυτῶν εἶναι, τούτῳ ἄνθρωποι ὑπερηδέως πείθονται. Xen. Pæd. I.

Ἐν μὲν τῷ πλεῖν πείθεσθαι δεῖ τῷ κυβερνήτῃ, ἐν δὲ τῷ ζῆν τῷ λογίζεσθαι δυναμένῳ βέλτιον. Ariſtonymus apud Stob. Tom. 2. Tit. 3.

Opinion, againſt the judgment of thoſe who are more improved in the way, or better ſtudied in the Point than our ſelves; ſeeing in other caſes theſe are the common and approved Apprehenſions and Practices; and ſeeing in this Caſe there is plainly the ſame reaſon, for that there are Difficulties and Intricacies in this no leſs than in other Faculties, which need good Skill to reſolve them; for that in theſe Matters we may eaſily ſlip, and by Error may incur huge Danger and Damage; why then ſhould we not here take the ſame courſe, following (when no other clearer Light, or prevalent Reaſon occurreth) the conduct and advice of our more skilful Guides? eſpecially conſidering, that beſide ordinary, natural and acquired Advantages, they have other ſupernatural, both Obligations to the well diſcharging this Duty, and aſſiſtances toward it: For,

2. We may conſider, that they are by God appointed, and impowered to inſtruct and guide us: It is their ſpecial Office, not aſſumed by themſelves, or conſtituted by human Prudence, but ordained and ſettled by divine Wiſdom for our edification in Knowledge, and direction in Practice: They are God's Meſſengers purpoſely ſent by him, ſelected and ſeparated, by his Inſtinct, for this work; they are by him given for the perfecting of the Saints, and edifying the body of Chriſt: It is by God's warrant, and in his Name that they ſpeak, which giveth eſpecial weight to their Words, and no mean ground of aſſurance to us in relying upon them: for who is more likely to know God's Mind and Will, who may be preſumed more faithful in declaring them, than God's own Officers, and Agents? thoſe whoſe great Duty, whoſe main concernment it is to ſpeak not their own ſenſe, but the Word of God? They are God's Mouth, by whom alone, ordinarily, he expreſſeth his Mind and Pleaſure; by whom he entreateth us to be reconciled in Heart and Practice to him; what they ſay therefore is to be received as God's Word, except plain Reaſon, upon due examination, do forbid.

Jer. 3. 15. I will give you Paſtors according to mine Heart, which ſhall feed you with Knowledge and Underſtanding.
Cypr. Ep. 55.
Rom. 10. 15.
Acts 13. 2.
Eph. 4. 11, 12.
1 Cor. 12. 28.
1 Tim. 1. 11,
12. 2. 7.
Tit. 1. 3.
1 Theſſ. 2. 4.
2 Cor. 5. 20.

If they by Office are Teachers, or Maſters in Doctrine, then we anſwerably muſt in obligation be Diſciples, which implies admitting their Doctrine, and proficiency in knowledge thereby; If they are appointed Shepherds, then muſt we be their Sheep, to be led and fed by them; if they are God's Meſſengers, we muſt yield ſome Credence, and embrace the Meſſage uttered by them; ſo the Prophet telleth us: The Prieſt's Lips ſhould keep Knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the Law at his Mouth, for he is the Meſſenger of the Lord of Hoſts; ſo the Law of old enjoined;----According to the ſentence of the Law, which they ſhall teach thee, and according to the Judgment, which they ſhall tell thee, thou ſhalt do; thou ſhalt not decline from the ſentence which they ſhall ſhew thee to the right hand, nor to the left; ſo our Lord alſo in regard to the Scribes and Phariſees ſaith, The Scribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes his Chair, all therefore whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do; upon account of their Office, whatever they direct to (not repugnant to the divine Law) was to be obſerved by the People; and ſurely in doubtful Caſes, when upon competent inquiry no clear light offereth it ſelf, it cannot be very dangerous to follow their guidance, whom God hath appointed and authorized to lead us; if we err doing ſo, we err wiſely in the way of our Duty, and ſo no great blame will attend our Error.

Mal. 2. 7.
Deut. 17. 11.
Matt. 23. 3
(Eze. 34. 16.)

3. We may conſider that our Guides, as ſuch, have ſpecial aſſiſtance from God; to every vocation God's aid is congruouſly afforded; but to this (the principal of all others, the moſt important, moſt nearly related to God, and moſt peculiarly tending to his Service) it is in a ſpecial manner moſt aſſuredly and plentifully imparted.

1 Pet. 4. 10. They are ſtewards of God's various grace; and they who diſpence Grace
1 Cor. 3. 9. to others cannot want it themſelves; they are co-operatours with God, and God conſequently doth co-operate with them; it is God who doth ἱκανοῦν
2 Cor. 3. 5. render them ſufficient to be miniſters of the New Teſtament; and they mini-
Phil. 2. 13. ſter of the ability which God ſupplieth; Every ſpiritual Labourer is obliged 1 Pet. 4. 11. to ſay with St. Paul; By the grace of God I am what I am —— I have laboured,
1 Cor. 15. 10. yet not I, but the grace of God, which was with me.

God's having given them (as St. Paul ſaith) to the Church, doth imply Eph. 4. 11, 12. 1 Cor. 12. 28. that God hath endowed them with ſpecial Ability, and furthereth them (in their conſcionable Diſcharge of their Miniſtry) with aid requiſite to the Deſigns of perfecting the Saints and edifying the Body in Knowledge in Vertue, in Piety.

As the Holy Ghoſt doth conſtitute them in their Charge (according to Acts 20. 28. that of St. Paul in the Acts; Take heed unto your ſelves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers) ſo queſtionleſs he doth 1 Tim. 4. 14. enable and aſſiſt them in adminiſtring their Function. There is a gift (of 2 Tim. 1. 6. ſpiritual Ability, and divine Succour) imparted by their Conſecration to this Office, with the laying on the hands of the presbytery, joined with humble Supplications for them, and ſolemn Benedictions in God's Name upon them. The divine Spirit, which diſtributeth, as he ſeeth good, unto every member of the church needful Supplies of Grace doth beſtow on them in 1 Cor. 12. 7. &c. competent meaſure the word of wiſdom, and the word of knowledge requiſite for their Employment.

Eph. 4. 16. Rom. 12. 5, 6. God of old did in extraordinary ways viſibly communicate his Spirit unto his Prophets and Agents; the ſame he did liberally pour out upon the Apoſtles and firſt Planters of the Goſpel; the ſame queſtionleſs he hath not withdrawn from thoſe, who under the Evangelical Diſpenſation which 2 Cor. 3. 8. is peculiarly the miniſtration of the Spirit, (unto which the Aid of God's Spirit is moſt proper and moſt needful) do ſtill by a ſetled Miniſtry ſupply the room of thoſe extraordinary Miniſters; but imparteth it to them, in a way although more ordinary and occult, yet no leſs real and effectual, according to Proportions anſwerable to the Exigencies of Need and Occaſion; And by the Influence hereof upon the Paſtours of his Mat. 28. 20. Church it is, that our Lord accompliſheth his Promiſe to be with it until the end of the world.

Luke 7. 52. Clavis ſcientiæ, the key of knowledge ſpiritual, is one of thoſe Keys which he hath given to them, whereby they are enabled to open the Kingdom of Heaven.

Great Reaſon therefore we have to place an eſpecial Confidence in their Direction; for whom can we more ſafely follow, than thoſe, whom (upon ſuch grounds of divine Declarations and Promiſes) we may hope that God doth guide; ſo that conſequently in following them we do in effect follow God himſelf? He that heareth you, heareth me, might be ſaid not only becauſe of their relation unto Chriſt; but becauſe their Word proceedeth from his Inſpiration, being no other than his Mind conveyed through their Mouth.

4. We may alſo for our Encouragement to confide in our Guides conſider, that they are themſelves deeply concerned in our being rightly guided; their preſent Comfort, their Salvation hereafter depending upon the faithful, and careful Diſcharge of their Duty herein: they muſt render an Accompt for it; ſo that if by their wilful, or negligent Miſcarriage we do fall into dangerous Errour or Sin, they do thence not only forfeit rich and glorious Rewards (aſſigned to thoſe, who turn many unto righteouſneſs) but incur woful Puniſhment; this doth aſſure their Integrity, and render our confidence in them very reaſonable; for as we may ſafely truſt a Pilot, who hath no leſs intereſt than our ſelves in the ſafe conveyance of the Veſſel to Port; ſo may we reaſonably confide in their Advice, whoſe Salvation is adventured with ours in the ſame bottom, or rather is wrapped up, and carried in ours: It is not probable they will (at leaſt deſignedly) miſguide us to their own extreme damage, to their utter ruine: If they do not warn the wicked from his wicked way to ſave his Life, God hath ſaid that he will require his Blood at their hands; and is it likely they ſhould wittingly run ſuch a hazard, that they ſhould purpoſely caſt away the Souls, for which they are ſo certainly accomptable? It is our Apoſtle's enforcement of the Precept in our Text, Obey them that guide you; for they watch for your Souls, as they that muſt give an accompt; which Argumentation is not only grounded upon the obligations of Ingenuity and Gratitude, but alſo upon conſiderations of Diſcretion and Intereſts; we ſhould obey our Guides in Equity and Honeſty; we may do it adviſedly, becauſe they in regard to their own Accompts at the final Judgment are obliged to be careful for the good of our Souls.

Ezek. 3. 18.
33. 2, 8.

Upon theſe Conſiderations it is plainly reaſonable to follow our Guides in all Matters, wherein we have no other very clear and certain light of Reaſon or Revelation to conduct us: The doing ſo is indeed (which is farther obſervable) not only wiſe in it ſelf, but ſafe in way of Prevention, that we be not ſeduced by other treacherous Guides; it will not only ſecure us from our own weak Judgments, but from the Frauds of thoſe who lie in wait to deceive. The ſimpler ſort of Men will in effect be always led not by their own Judgment, but by the Authority of others; and if they be not fairly guided by thoſe whom God hath conſtituted and aſſigned to that end, they will be led by the Noſe by thoſe who are concerned to ſeduce them: So reaſon dictateth that it muſt be, ſo Experience ſheweth it ever to have been; that the People, whenever they have deſerted their true Guides, have ſoon been hurried by Impoſtors into moſt dangerous Errors, and extravagant Follies; being carried about with divers and ſtrange Doctrines; being like Children toſſed to and fro with every wind of Doctrine.

Eph. 4. 14.
Heb. 13. 9.
Eph. 4. 14.

It is therefore a great Advantage to us, and a great Mercy of God, that there are (by God's Care) provided for us ſuch Helps, upon which we may commonly for our guidance in the way to Happineſs more ſafely rely, than upon our own Judgments, liable to Miſtake, and than upon the Counſel of others, who may be intereſted to abuſe us; very fooliſh and very ungrateful we are, if we do not highly prize, if we do not willingly embrace this Advantage.

I farther add, that as Wiſdom may induce, ſo Modeſty and Humility ſhould diſpoſe us to follow the direction of our Guides: Ye younger (ſaith St. Peter) ſubmit your ſelves unto the Elder (that is, ye Inferiors to your Superiors, ye that are the Flock to your Paſtors) and (ſubjoineth he immediately) be cloathed with Humility; ſignifying, that it is a point of Humility to yield that Submiſſion: Every modeſt and humble Perſon is apt to diſtruſt his own, and to ſubmit to better Judgments: And, Not to lean to our Underſtanding, not to be wiſe in our own Eyes; not to ſeem to know any thing, not to ſeem any body to ones ſelf, in humility to prefer others before our ſelves, are divine Injunctions, chiefly applicable to this Caſe, in reference to our ſpiritual Guides; for if it be Pride or culpable Immodeſty to preſume our ſelves wiſer than any Man, what is it then to prefer our ſelves in that reſpect before our Teachers; as indeed we do, when without evident reaſon we diſregard, or diſſent from their Opinion?

1 Pet. 5. 5.
Prov. 3. 5, 7.
Rom. 12. 6, 10.
Gal. 6. 3.
Phil. 2. 3.
1 Cor. 8. 2.
1 Tim. 6. 6.

It is then a Duty very reaſonable, and a very commendable Practice to rely upon the guidance of our Paſtors in ſuch Caſes, wherein ſurer direction faileth, and we cannot otherwiſe fully ſatisfie our ſelves.

Neither in doing ſo (againſt ſome appearances of Reaſon, or with ſome violence to our private Conceits) do we act againſt our Conſcience, but rather truly according to it; for Conſcience (as the word in this Caſe is uſed) is nothing elſe but an Opinion in practical Matters, grounded upon the beſt Reaſon we can diſcern; if therefore, in any caſe, the authority of our Guides be a reaſon outweighing all other reaſons apparent, he that in ſuch a caſe, notwithſtanding other Arguments leſs forcible, doth conform his Judgment and Practice thereto, therein exactly followeth Conſcience; yea, in doing otherwiſe, he would thwart and violence his own Conſcience, and be ſelf-condemned, adhering to a leſs probable Reaſon in oppoſition to one more probable.

I do not hereby mean to aſſert, that we are obliged indifferently (with an implicit Faith or blind Obedience) to believe all that our Teachers ſay, or to practiſe all they bid us: For they are Men, and therefore ſubject to Error and Sin; they may neglect or abuſe the advantages they have of knowing better than others; they may ſometimes by Infirmity, by Negligence, by pravity fail in performing faithfully their Duty towards us: they may be ſwayed by Temper, be led by Paſſion, be corrupted by Ambition or Avarice, ſo as thence to embrace and vent bad Doctrines: We do ſee our Paſtors often diſſenting and claſhing among themſelves, ſometimes with themſelves, ſo as to change and retract their own Opinions.

Iſa. 3. 12. O my People, they which lead thee, cauſe thee to err, and deſtroy the way of thy paths.

(Jer. 2. 8.) Iſa. 28. 7. Jer. 10. 21. 12. 10.
Jer. 23. 11. (Jer. 18. 18. 5. 31. 6. 13.)
Zeph. 3. 4.

We find the Prophets of old complaining of Prieſts, of Paſtors, of Elders, and Prophets, who handled the Law, yet were ignorant of God; who erred in Viſion, and ſtumbled in Judgment; who were profane, brutiſh, light, and treacherous Perſons; who polluted the Sanctuary, and did violence to the Law, and profaned holy Things; who handled the Law, yet knew not God; from whom the Law and Counſel did periſh; who taught for Hire, and divined for Money; who themſelves departed out of the way, and cauſed many to ſtumble, and corrupted the Covenant of Levi; who deſtroyed and ſcattered the Sheep of God's Paſture.

Ezek. 22. 26.
Mal. 1. 6.
Ezek. 7. 26.
Mic. 3. 11.
Mal. 2. 8, 9.
Jer. 23. 11. 12. 10.

Matt. 16. 6, 12.
Luke 12. 1.
Matt. 15. 2, 6.
Luke 11. 52.
Matt. 15. 14.
Matt. 15. 9.

There were in our Saviour's Time Guides, of the ferment of whoſe Doctrine good People were bid to beware; who tranſgreſſed and defeated the Commandment of God by their Traditions; who did take away the key of Knowledge, ſo that they would not enter themſelves into the Kingdom of Heaven, nor would ſuffer others to enter; blind Guides, who both themſelves did fall, and drew others into the ditch of noxious Error, and wicked Practice: The followers of which Guides did in vain worſhip God, obſerving for Doctrine the Precepts of Men.

There have not, ſince the primitive Times of the Goſpel, wanted thoſe who (indulging to Ambition, Avarice, Curioſity, Faction, and other bad Affections) have depraved and debaſed Religion with noxious Errors, and idle Superſtitions; ſuch as St. Bernard deſcribeth, &c.

Vid. Apol. Eccl. Ang.

We are, in matters of ſuch infinite concernment to our eternal welfare, in Wiſdom and Duty obliged, not only without farther heed or care, to truſt the Diligence and Integrity of others, but to conſider and look about us, uſing our own Reaſon, Judgment, and Diſcretion, ſo far as we are capable; we cannot in ſuch a caſe be blamed for too much Circumſpection and Caution.

We are not wholly blind, not void of Reaſon, not deſtitute of fit Helps; in many Caſes we have competent Ability to judge, and Means ſufficient to attain Knowledge; we are therefore concerned to uſe our eyes, to employ our reaſon, to embrace and improve the advantages vouchſafed us.

We are accomptable perſonally for all our actions as agreeable or croſs to reaſon; if we are miſtaken by our own default, or miſled by the ill guidance of others, we ſhall however deeply ſuffer for it, and die in our iniquity; the Ignorance, or errour of our Guides will not wholly excuſe us from guilt, or exempt us from puniſhment; it is fit therefore that we ſhould be allowed, as to the ſum of the matter, to judge and chuſe for our ſelves: for if our ſalvation were wholly placed in the hands of others, ſo that we could not but in caſe of their Errour or Default miſcarry: our Ruin would be inevitable, and conſequently not juſt; we ſhould periſh without blame, if we were bound as a blind and brutiſh Herd, to follow others.

Ezek. 3. 18.

We, in order to our Practice (which muſt be regulated by Faith and Knowledge) and toward preparing our ſelves for our grand Accompt, are obliged to get a Knowledge and Perſwaſion concerning our Duty; to prove (or ſearch and examine) what is that good and acceptable, and perfect will of God; for Ignorance (if any wiſe by our Endeavour vincible) will not ſecure us: He that (ſaith our Lord and Judge) knew not, and did commit things worthy of ſtripes, ſhall be beaten with few ſtripes (few; not in themſelves, but comparatively to thoſe, which ſhall be inflicted on them, who tranſgreſs againſt Knowledge and Conſcience.)

Rom. 12. 2.
Eph. 5. 10.
Luke 12. 48.

We are bound to ſtudy Truth, to improve our Minds in the Knowledge and Love of it, to be firmly perſwaded of it in a rational Way; ſo that we be not eaſily ſhaken or ſeduced from it.

The Apoſtles do charge it upon us, as our Duty and Concernment; that we abound in faith and knowledge; that we be rooted and built up in Chriſt, and ſtabliſhed in the faith, ſo as to be ſteadfaſt and unmovable, not to be ſoon ſhaken in mind or troubled; to grow up and increaſe in all divine knowledge; that the word of God ſhould dwell richly in us in all wiſdom; that we ſhould be filled with all knowledge, ſo as to be able to teach, and admoniſh one another; that our love ſhould abound more and more in knowledge and all judgment, that we may approve things excellemt (or ſcan things different) that we be enriched in all the word (that is, in all the Doctrine of the Goſpel) and in all knowledge; that we be filled in the knowledge of God's will in all wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding; that we ſhould not be unwiſe, but underſtanding what the will of the Lord is; That we ſhould be perfect and compleat in all the will of God (that is, firſt, in the Knowledge of it; then in compliance with it) that in underſtanding we ſhould not be children, but perfect men.

2 Cor. 8. 7.
Col. 2. 7.
1 Cor. 15. 58.
2 Theſſ. 2. 2.
Col. 1. 10.
2 Pet. 3. 18.
2. 2.
Eph. 4. 15.
Col. 1. 16.
Rom. 5. 14.
Heb. 5. 12.
Phil. 1. 9, 10.
2 Cor. 1. 5.
Col. 1. 9.
Eph. 5. 17.
Col. 4. 12.
1 Cor. 14. 20.
Heb. 9. 12.

We are likewiſe by them commanded to take heed of falſe Prophets, to try the ſpirits, whether they are of God, to ſee that no man deceive us; to look that no man ſpoil us by vain deceit, to try all thidgs, and hold faſt that which is good; which Precepts imply that we ſhould be furniſhed with a good Faculty of Judgment and competent Knowledge in the principal matters of Chriſtian Doctrine, concerning both the Myſteries of Faith, and Rules of Practice. Our Lord himſelf and his Apoſtles did not upon other Terms than of rational Conſideration and Diſcuſſion exact Credit and Obedience to their Words, they did not inſiſt barely upon their own Authority, but exhorted their Diſciples to examine ſtrictly, and judge faithfully concerning the Truth and Reaſonableneſs of their Doctrine: Search the Scriptures, for they teſtifie of me: If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not; but if I do, though ye believe me not, believe the works: ſo our Lord

Mat. 7. 15.
1 John 4. 1.
Mat. 24. 4.
Eph. 5. 6.
Col. 2. 8, 18.
1 Theſſ. 5 21.
John 5. 39.
John 10. 37, 38. 15. 22, 24. 12. 48.

Lord appealed to their reaſon, proceeding upon grounds of Scripture, and 1 Cor. 10. 15. common Senſe: and, I ſpeak to wiſe men, judge ye what I ſay; ſo Saint Paul addreſſed his Diſcourſe to his Diſciples; otherwiſe we ſhould be uncapable to obſerve them.

We are alſo bound to defer the principal Regard to God's Wiſdom and Will, ſo as without Reſervation or Exception, to embrace whatever he doth ſay, to obey what he poſitively doth command: whatever Authority doth contradict his Word, or croſs his Command, in ſuch Caſes we may Acts 4. 19. remonſtrate with the Apoſtles, If it be juſt before God to hearken unto you ra- Acts 5. 29. ther than unto God, judge ye: and we ought to obey God rather than men; we Gal. 1. 8. may denounce with St. Paul, If an angel from heaven preach any other Goſpel, let him be accurſed.

Rom. 14. 23. We are obliged always to act with faith (that is, with a Perſwaſion concerning the Lawfulneſs of what we do) for Whatever is not of faith, is
Rom. 14. 22 ſin: We ſhould never condemn our ſelves in what we try or embrace.

Theſe things conſidered, we may, and it much behoveth us, reſerving due reſpect to our Guides, with Humility and Modeſty to weigh and ſcan their Dictates and their Orders; leſt by them unawares we be drawn into Acts 17. 11. Errour or Sin; like the ingenuous Beræans, who did ἀνακρίνειν τὰς γραφὰς, ſearch and examine the ſcriptures if thoſe things were ſo. Our Guides are 2 Cor. 1. 24. but the helpers, they are not Lords of our Faith; the Apoſtles themſelves were not.

We may, and are bound, if they tell us things evidently repugnant to God's Word, or to ſound Reaſon and common Senſe, to diſſent from them; if they impoſe on us things evidently contrary to God's Law, to forbear
Iſa. 8. 20. Compliance with them; we may in ſuch Caſes appeal ad legem & teſtimonium; we muſt not admit a non obſtante to God's Law.

Plebs timens Dominum ſeparare ſe debet à peccatore præpoſito. Cypr.

If other Arguments (weighed in the Balance of honeſt and impartial Reaſon, with cautious and induſtrious Conſideartion) do overpoize the Authority of our Guides; let us in God's Name adhere to them; and follow our own Judgments; it would be a Violation of our Conſcience, a Prevarication toward our own Souls, and a Rebellion againſt God to do otherwiſe; when againſt our own Mind, ſo carefully informed, we follow the Dictates of others, we like Fools raſhly adventure and proſtitute our Souls.

This Proceeding is no wiſe inconſiſtent with what we delivered before; for this due Warineſs in examining, this Reſervation in aſſenting, this Exception in Practice, in ſome caſes, wherein the Matter hath Evidence, and we a Faculty to judge, doth no-wiſe hinder, but that we ſhould defer much Regard to the Judgment of our Guides; that we ſhould in thoſe caſes, wherein no Light diſcovereth it ſelf out-ſhining their Authority, rely upon it; that where our Eyes will not ſerve clearly to direct us, we ſhould uſe theirs; where our Reaſon faileth to ſatisfie us, we ſhould acquieſce in theirs; that we ſhould regard their Judgments ſo far, that no petty Scruple emerging, no faint Semblance of Reaſon ſhould prevail upon us to diſſent from their Doctrine, to reject their Advice, to diſobey their Injunctions.

In fine, let us remember, that the Mouth of Truth which bid us to beware of the bad doctrine of thoſe who ſate in Moſes's Chair, did alſo charge
Mat. 15. 14. us to obſerve all they taught and enjoined; that is, all not certainly repug-
33. 8. nant to the Divine Law. In effect, if we diſcoſt from the Advices of our ſober Teachers, appointed for us by God; we ſhall in the end have Occaſion to bewail with him in the Proverbs, How have I hated inſtruction, and
Pro. 5. 12, 13. my heart deſpiſed reproof? And have not obeyed the voice of my Teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that inſtructed me?

To theſe things I ſhall only add one Rule, which we may well ſuppoſe comprifed in the Precept we treat upon; which is, that at leaſt we forbear openly to diſſent from our Guides, or to contradict their Doctrine; except only, if it be not ſo falſe (which never, or rarely can happen among us) as to ſubvert the Foundations of Faith, or Practice of Holineſs. If we cannot be internally convinced by their Diſcourſes, if their Authority cannot ſway with us againſt the prevalence of other Reaſons, yet may we ſpare outwardly to oppoſe them, or to ſlight their Judgment; for doing thus doth tend as to the diſgrace of their Perſons, ſo to the Diſparagement of their Office, to an obſtructing the efficacy of their Miniſtry, to the infringement of Order and Peace in the Church: for when the inconſiderate People ſhall ſee their Teachers diſtruſted and diſreſpected; when they perceive their Doctrine may be challenged, and oppoſed by plauſible Diſcourſes; then will they hardly truſt them, or comply with them in Matters moſt certain and neceſſary; than which Diſpoſition in the People there cannot happen any thing more prejudicial or baneful to the Church.

But let thus much ſerve for the Obedience due to the Doctrine of our Guides: let us conſider that which we owe to them in reference to their Converſation and Practice.

The following their Practice may well be referr'd to this Precept; for that their Practice is a kind of living Doctrine, a viſible Law or Rule of Action; and becauſe indeed the Notion of a Guide primarily doth imply Example; that he which is guided ſhould reſpect the Guide as a Precedent, being concerned to walk after his Footſteps.

Moſt of the Reaſons which urge Deference to their Judgment in teaching, do in proportion infer Obligation to follow their Example, (which indeed is the moſt eaſie and clear way of inſtruction to vulgar Capacity; carrying with it alſo moſt efficacious Encouragement and Excitement to Practice:) they are obliged, and it is expected from them to live with eſpecial Regularity, Circumſpection, and Strictneſs of Converſation; they are by God's Grace eſpecially diſpoſed and enabled to do ſo; and many common Advantages they have of doing ſo; (a more perfect Knowledge of things, Firmneſs of Principles, and Clearneſs of Notions; a deeper Tincture, and more ſavoury Reliſh of Truth, attained by continual Meditation thereon; conſequently a Purity of Mind and Affection, a Retirement from the World and its Temptation, Freedom from Diſtraction of worldly Care, and the Incumbrances of Buſineſs, with the like.)

They are often charged to be exemplary in Converſation (as we before ſhewed) and that involveth a correſpondent Obligation to follow them.
They muſt (like St. John Baptiſt) be burning and ſhining lights; ſtars in Joh. 5. 35.
God's right hand; lights of the world; whoſe light ſhould ſhine before men, Apoc. 16.20. Mat. 5.14,16.
that men may ſee their good works; and by their Light direct their Steps.

They are propoſed as Copies, which ſignifies that we muſt in our Practice tranſcribe them.

We are often directly commanded to imitate them; ὧν μιμεῖσθε τ̃ πίστιν, whoſe faith imitate ye (that is, their faithful Perſeverance in the Doctrine and Practice of Chriſtianity) ſaith the Apoſtle in this Chapter.

Their Converſation is ſafely imitable in all Caſes, wherein no better Rule appeareth, and when it doth not appear diſcordant from God's Law, and the Dictates of ſound Reaſon; for ſuppoſing that Diſcordance, we ceaſe to be obliged to follow them; as when our Lord preſcribeth in reſpect to the Phariſees; Whatever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do; but do not Mat. 23. 3.
after their works; for they ſay and do not.

It is indeed eaſier for them to ſpeak well than to do well; their Doctrine therefore is more commonly a ſure Guide than their Practice; yet when there wanteth a clearer guidance of Doctrine, their Practice may paſs for inſtructive; and a probable Argument or Warrant of Action.

SERMON XXVIII.

Of Self-love in general.

2 TIM. III. 1.

For men ſhall be lovers of themſelves.

Καιροὶ χαλεποὶ ἐνϛήσονται.

SAINT Paul in this place out of a prophetical Spirit inſtructing or warning his Diſciple Timothy, concerning difficult times, or the calamitous ſtate of things, which ſhould enſue; induced upon the World, as it uſeth to happen, by a general prevalency of vicious Diſpoſitions and Practices among Men, doth thence take occaſion by a ſpecification of their Vices to characterize the Perſons, who ſhould concur to produce that hard State.

Hæc omnia mala ab eo velut fonte manantia, quod primum poſuit, ſeipſos amantes. Auguſt. in Joh. Tract. 123.

Among thoſe Vices he placeth Self-love in the Van, as the capital and leading Vice; intimating thereby, that it is of all in its nature moſt heinous, or in its influence moſt noxious.

This indeed is of all Vices the moſt common, ſo deeply radicated in our Nature, and ſo generally over-ſpreading the World, that no Man thoroughly is exempted from it, moſt Men are greatly tainted with it, ſome are wholly poſſeſſed and acted by it; this is the Root, from which all other Vices do grow, and without which hardly any Sin could ſubſiſt; the chief Vices eſpecially have an obvious and evident dependence thereon.

All impiety doth involve a loving our ſelves in undue manner and meaſure; ſo that we ſet our ſelves in our eſteem and affection before God; we prefer our own Conceits to his Judgment and Advice; we raiſe our Pleaſure above his Will and Authority; we bandy Forces with him, and are like the prophane Belſhazzar, of whom it is ſaid, Thou haſt lifted up thy ſelf againſt (or above) the Lord of Heaven.

From hence particularly by a manifeſt extraction are derived thoſe chief and common Vices, Pride, Ambition, Envy, Avarice, Intemperance, Injuſtice, Uncharitableneſs, Peeviſhneſs, Stubbornneſs, Diſcontent and Impatience. For,

We over-value our ſelves, our Qualities and Endowments, our Powers and Abilities, our Fortunes and external Advantages; hence are we ſo proud, that is, ſo lofty in our Conceits, and faſtuous in our Demeanour.

We would be the only Men or moſt conſiderable in the World; hence are we ambitious, hence continually with unſatiable greedineſs we do affect and ſtrive to procure encreaſe of Reputation, of Power, of Dignity.

We would engroſs to our ſelves all ſorts of good things in higheſt degree; hence enviouſly we become jealous of the Worth and Vertue, we grudge and repine at the Proſperity of others; as if they defalked ſomewhat from our Excellency, or did eclipſe the brightneſs of our Fortune.

We deſire to be not only full in our Enjoyment, but free and abſolute in our Dominion of things; not only ſecure from needing the Succour of other Men, but independant in regard to God's Providence; hence are we ſo covetous of Wealth, hence we ſo eagerly ſcrape it, and ſo carefully hoard it up.

We can refuſe our dear ſelves no Satisfaction, although unreaſonable or hurtful; therefore we ſo readily gratifie ſenſual Appetites in unlawful or exceſſive enjoyments of Pleaſure.

Being blinded or tranſported with fond dotage on our ſelves, we cannot diſcern, or will not regard what is due to others; hence are we apt upon occaſion to do them wrong.

Love to our ſelves doth in ſuch manner ſuck in and ſwallow our Spirits, doth ſo pinch in and contract our Hearts, doth according to its computation ſo confine and abridge our Intereſts, that we cannot in our Affection, or in real expreſſion of Kindneſs tend outwards; that we can afford little Good-will, or impart little Good to others.

Deeming our ſelves extremely wiſe and worthy of regard, we cannot endure to be contradicted in our Opinion, or croſſed in our Humour; upon any ſuch occaſion our Choler riſeth, and eaſily we break forth into violent Heats of Paſſion.

From the like Cauſes it is, that we cannot willingly ſtoop to due obeiſance of our Superiours, in reverence to their Perſons, and obſervance of their Laws; that we cannot contentedly acquieſce in the ſtation or portion aſſigned us by Providence; that we cannot patiently ſupport our Condition, or accept the Events befalling us.

In fine, if ſurveying all the ſeveral kinds of naughty Diſpoſitions in our Souls, and of Miſcarriages in our Lives, we do ſcan their particular Nature, and ſearch into their original Cauſes; we ſhall find inordinate Self-love to be a main Ingredient, and a common Source of them all: ſo that a Divine of great Name had ſome reaſon to affirm, that Original Sin (or that innate Diſtemper from which Men generally become ſo very prone to Evil, and averſe to Good) doth conſiſt in Self-love, diſpoſing us to all kinds of irregularity and exceſs: St. Paul therefore might well ſet this in the Front of all thoſe Sins, which depraved the Age he ſpake of; they having all ſuch a dependence on it.

Eſt ergò iſta ad peccandum amore ſui propenſio, peccatum originale, &c. Zuingl. apud Bell. de Amiſſ grat. 4. 2.

It is therefore very requiſite that we ſhould well underſtand this Fault, that we may be the better able to curb and correct it; to which purpoſe I ſhall endeavour, by God's help, ſomewhat to declare its Nature.

The Word Self-love is ambiguous; for all Self-love is not culpable; there is a neceſſary and unavoidable, there is an innocent and allowable, there is a worthy and commendable Self-love.

There is a Self-love, originally implanted by God himſelf in our Nature, in order to the preſervation and enjoyment of our Being; the which is common to us with all Creatures, and cannot any-wiſe be extirpated; for No man (as St. Paul ſaith) ever yet hated his own Fleſh, but nouriſheth, and cheriſheth it: Every Man living, by a natural and

Eph. 5. 29.

Panis ematur, olus, vini ſextarius; adde Queis humana ſibi doleat natura negatis. Hor. Serm. I. 1.

neceſſary inſtinct, is prompted to guard his Life, ſhunning all Dangers threatning its deſtruction; to pourvey for the ſupport and convenience of it; to ſatisfie thoſe natural Appetites, which importunately crave Relief, and without intolerable pain cannot be denied it; to repel or decline whatever is very grievous and offenſive to Nature; the Self-love that urgeth us to do theſe things, is no more to be blamed than it can be ſhunned.

Τὸν μὲν ἀγαθὸν δεῖ φίλαυτον εἶναι· καὶ γὰρ αὐτὸς ὀνήσεται τὰ καλὰ πράττων, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ὠφελήσει. τὸν δὲ μοχθηρὸν οὐ δεῖ· βλάψει γὰρ καὶ ἑαυτὸν καὶ τοὺς πέλας, φαύλοις πάθεσιν ἑπόμενος. Ariſt. Eth. 9. 8.

Reaſon farther alloweth ſuch a Self-love, which moveth us to the purſuance of any thing apparently good, pleaſant, or uſeful to us, the which doth not contain in it any eſſential turpitude or iniquity; doth not obſtruct the attainment of ſome true or greater Good; doth not produce ſome over-balancing Miſchief; doth not infer harm to the World, or wrong to other Men.

Πᾶς γὰρ νοῦς αἱρεῖται τὸ βέλτιστον ἑαυτῷ, ὁ δὲ ἐπιεικὴς πειθαρχεῖ τῷ νῷ. Ariſt. Eth. 9. 8.

Reaſon dictateth and preſcribeth to us, that we ſhould have a ſober regard to our true Good and Welfare; to our beſt Intereſt, and ſolid Content; to that, which (all things being rightly ſtated, conſidered and computed) will in the final event prove moſt beneficial, and ſatisfactory to us: a Self-love working in proſecution of ſuch things common Senſe cannot but allow and approve.

Quia tutela certiſſima ex proximo eſt, ſibi quiſque commiſſus eſt. Sen. Ep. 121.

God himſelf hath to theſe ſuggeſtions of Nature and dictates of Reaſon, adjoyned his own ſuffrage, having in various ways declared it to be his Will and Pleaſure, that we ſhould tender our real and final Good. He, as the Author of Nature, and Fountain of Reaſon, may be ſuppoſed to ordain that, unto which Nature doth ſo potently incline, and which Reaſon ſo clearly preſcribeth. He plainly hath to every Man committed himſelf in charge, ſo as to preſerve his Being from ruine, and to enjoy it with comfort. He by making ſo rich a proviſion for the ſuſtenance of our Lives, and ſatisfaction of our Appetites, by framing our Bodies to reliſh Delight, and ſuiting ſo many accommodations in wondrous correſpondence to our Senſes, hath ſufficiently intimated it to be his pleaſure, that we ſhould in reaſonable meaſure ſeek them and enjoy them; otherwiſe his Care would have been vain, and his Work uſeleſs; yea, he might ſeem to have laid an ill Deſign to tempt and enſnare us: he certainly had no ſuch intent, but as he made us out of Goodneſs, as he made us capable of taſting Comfort, as he hath furniſhed us with means of attaining it, ſo he meaneth that we ſhould partake thereof.

He alſo expreſly hath commanded us to love all Men, not excluding our ſelves from the number; to love our Neighbour, and therefore our ſelves; who of all are neareſt to our ſelves; who occur as the firſt Objects of Humanity and Charity; whoſe Needs we moſt ſenſibly feel; whoſe Good is in it ſelf no leſs conſiderable, than the ſingle Good of any other Perſon; who muſt firſt look to our own Good before we can be capable to love others, or do any good to our Neighbour.

He therefore hath made the love of our ſelves to be the Rule and Standard, the Pattern, the Argument of our Love to others; impoſing on us thoſe great Commands of loving our neighbours as our ſelves, and doing as we would be done unto; which imply not only a Neceſſity, but an Obligation of loving our ſelves.

Matt. 16. 26.

He doth enforce Obedience to all his Commands, by promiſing Rewards, yielding immenſe Profit and tranſcendant Pleaſure to us; and by threatning Puniſhments grievous to our Senſe; which Proceeding is grounded upon a ſuppoſition that we do and ought greatly to love our ſelves, or to regard our own Intereſt and Pleaſure.

He doth recommend Wiſdom or Vertue to us, as moſt agreeable to Self-love; moſt eligible, becauſe it yieldeth great benefit to our ſelves; becauſe (as the Wiſe-man ſaith) he that getteth it, doth love his own ſoul; he that keepeth it, ſhall find good. Prov. 15. 8. 16. 11. 17.

Ariſtotle ſaith of a vertuous Man, that he is the greateſt ſelf-lover; Δόξεις δ' ἂν ὁ τοιοῦτος εἶναι μᾶλλον φίλαυτος· ἀπονέμει γὰρ ἑαυτῷ τὰ κάλλιστα, καὶ μάλιστα ἀγαθὰ, καὶ χαρίζεται ἑαυτοῦ τῷ κυριωτάτῳ. Ethic. 9. 8.

He diſſuadeth from Vice, as therefore deteſtable, becauſe the embracing it doth imply hatred of our ſelves, bringing miſchief and damage to us; becauſe (as the Wiſe-man doth expreſs it) he that ſinneth, wrongeth his own ſoul; he that deſpiſeth inſtruction, deſpiſeth his own ſoul; he that committeth injury, hateth his own ſoul. Prov. 8. 36. 15. 36. 29. 24.

He commendeth his Laws to our obſervance, by declaring them in their deſign and tendency chiefly to regard our good and advantage; made apt to preſerve the ſafety and quiet, to promote the wealth and proſperity of our lives; to bring eaſe and comfort to our Minds, grace and ornament to our Names, ſalvation and happineſs to our Souls. Deut. 10. 12. Mic. 6. 8. Neh. 9. 13. Prov. 3. & 4, &c.

In fine, God chargeth and encourageth us to affect and purſue the higheſt Goods whereof we are capable; moſt ample Riches, moſt ſublime Honours, moſt ſweet Pleaſures, moſt complete Felicity; He (ſaith St. Paul) will render to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life; to ſeek ſuch things is the higheſt inſtance, is the ſureſt argument of Self-love, that can be; he therefore, who obligeth, who encourageth us thereto, doth plainly ſhew his approbation of a Self-love. Rom. 2. 7.

So it appeareth, that all Self-love is not culpable, but that ſome kind thereof is very commendable; how then ſhall we diſtinguiſh; how ſhall we ſever (to uſe the Prophet's Language) the precious from the vile? Jer. 15. 19.

To this we may anſwer in general, that all Love of our ſelves, which is unreaſonably grounded, or which is exceſſive in its degrees and limits; or which venteth it ſelf in wrong inſtances; or which driveth our Mind, Will and Affections toward bad Objects; or which produceth effects noxious to our ſelves or others; is culpable. If we eſteem our ſelves for things not true, or really for things indifferent or mean, for things nowiſe excellent or valuable; if we affect our ſelves beyond compaſs, ſo as to poſtpone the Love of God, or exclude the Love of our Neighbour; if out of regard to our ſelves we do things baſe, or miſchievous; if thence we dote upon vain Profits, embrace foul Pleaſures, incur ſinful Guilt, expoſe our ſelves to grievous Danger, Trouble, Remorſe and Puniſhment; if thereby we are engaged to forſake our true Intereſt, and forfeit our final Happineſs; then aſſuredly it is a fooliſh and vicious Self-love; it is indeed not a proper, but a falſe and equivocal Love, uſurping that goodly Name; it is a real Hatred, or Enmity diſguiſed under the ſemblance of Friendſhip; it more properly may be called Cruelty, Treachery, Flattery, Mockery, Deluſion, and Abuſe of our ſelves.

But for a more diſtinct and clear reſolution of the Caſe, we may do well to conſider the proper Acts of Love, which do conſtitute it, or inſeparably do adhere thereto; ſuch as theſe, a good eſteem of the Perſon, which is the Object of our Love; an earneſt Good-will toward him, or deſire of his Good; a complaiſance in Good, and diſſatisfaction in Evil arriving to him; a readineſs to yield, or procure Good to him; a deſire of Union and Enjoyment, that is, of intimate converſation and entercourſe with him, a deference of regard to him, a complyance with his Deſires, and care to pleaſe him. Now if theſe Acts toward our ſelves are in their kind, in their grounds, in their meaſures conformable to Reaſon, Piety and Juſtice, then is our Self-love innocent or worthy: if they are not ſo, it is criminal and vicious.

If we do rightly eſteem our ſelves (both abſolutely, and in compariſon to others;) if we deſire to our ſelves what is fit and juſt; if we are pleaſed with true Goods, and diſpleaſed at real Evils incident to us; if we do in lawful ways endeavour to procure things truly convenient, and beneficial to us; if we maintain a faithful and chearful Correſpondence with our ſelves; if we have a ſober regard to our ſelves agreeable to our Nature and State; if we comply with the Dictates of our Reaſon, and ſatisfie our Deſires conforming thereto; then do we love our ſelves innocently, then are we true Friends to our ſelves.

But if we over-value our ſelves; if we do wiſh to our ſelves things incommodious or hurtful, if we are delighted or diſſatisfied in falſe Shows of Good or Evil befalling us; if we ſtrive to acquire for our ſelves things bad or miſchievous; if our converſe with our ſelves is naughty or vain; if we make indecent Applications to our ſelves; if we ſtoop to our fond Humours, or ſooth our unreaſonable deſires; then is our Self-love ſpurious; then are we indeed Enemies to our ſelves.

Farther, toward an exact diſcuſſion and trial of this caſe, we ſhould do well, deveſting our ſelves of Selfiſhneſs, to conſider our ſelves, as other Perſons, or abſtractedly as mere Objects of thoſe Acts which Love doth imply; for what rectitude, or what obliquity there would be in them in regard to any Object, the ſame would be in reference to our ſelves. For inſtance,

If we ſhould value any Perſon juſtly according to his real Worth, allowing a juſt rate to his Vertue, to his Parts, to his Endowments, to his Advantages of Nature or Fortune; not aſcribing to him things which belong not to him, nor over-prizing thoſe he hath, nor preferring him in any reſpect before thoſe which are his Superiours or Equals therein; we ſhall herein do wiſely and juſtly; but if (having our Judgment any-wiſe perverted) we do admire a Perſon beyond his worth, and advance him above his Rank; if we overlook his apparent Defects and Blemiſhes, or take them for Excellencies, and yield them applauſe; what is this but folly and dotage, tempered with iniquity? and if it be ſuch in regard to another, it is no leſs ſuch in reſpect to our ſelves,

If to any Perſon we ſhould wiſh things ſuitable, commodious, and advantageous, by obtaining which, he, without any wrong or prejudice to others, might be conſiderably benefitted, we ſhall herein act humanely, and like good Friends; but if we deſire things to him, which do not become or befit him; which will do him miſchief, or which he cannot have without injury and damage to others, are we not herein notoriouſly unkind or unjuſt? the Caſe is the ſame transferred to our ſelves.

If we ſhould obſerve any Man by Occurrences happening to him well improved in his condition, thriving in an honeſt way, proſperous in good Undertakings, growing in worthy accompliſhments of Soul, to find ſatisfaction therein would be greatly laudable; and ſo it would be to condole, if we ſhould ſee any Man to fall into any grievous Diſaſter or Calamity; but ſhould we behold a Man (although in falſe appearance bettered, yet really) prejudiced and endamaged (as when one is enriched by cozenage or rapine, is advanced by flattery or ſycophantry, is famed for baſe or vain Exploits, is immerſed into Care and Trouble, is expoſed to Danger and Temptation, is fallen into the Enchantments of Pleaſure) are we not, if we take pleaſure therein, very ſilly, or very cruel? and if we ſhould obſerve good Phyſick adminiſtred to a ſick Neighbour, or that he is engaged in painful Exerciſe for his Health, ſhould it not be abſurd for us to be ſorry thereat? for the ſame Reaſons we are blameable, if we do rejoyce when that we proſper in bad Courſes, or enjoy ſinful Pleaſures, or fall into dangerous Temptations; if we diſtaſte the wholſom Phyſick of Adverſity diſpenſed by Providence, or diſlike the needful Exerciſes of Duty by God preſcribed to us.

If we do yield our Advice and Aid to our Neighbour, in furtherance of any Deſign, which is honeſt and beneficial to him, we then unqueſtionably do well; but if we do abet or encourage him in unjuſt or miſchievous Enterprizes; if we render our ſelves Pandars to his unlawful Deſires, Factours for his unjuſt Profits, Complices of his wicked Practices, Advocates of his Sins, is this true Love, is this faithful Friendſhip? no ſurely; nor is it ſuch toward our ſelves, when we employ our Faculties in contrivance or atchievement of any unlawful Deſigns, however ſatisfactory to our Deſires.

If we ſhould indifferently (without regard to the Laws of Piety, Juſtice, Humanity, or Decency) eſpouſe the Intereſts of any Perſon, ſo that for the promoting his Deſigns, advancing his Profit, gratifying his Humour or Pleaſure, we ſhould violate the Commands of God, we ſhould neglect the publick Good, we ſhould work injury or miſchief to our Neighbour, would this Dealing be allowable; neither would it be ſo, if for our own ſake, in regard to our private Intereſt we ſhould thus behave our ſelves.

2. If we do affect to hold free, ſincere, chearful, kind Converſation with any Perſon for mutual inſtruction and comfort, this is ſociable and friendly; but if we maintain frothy, foul, malicious, any-wiſe peſtilent Diſcourſe, apt to corrupt, or to annoy him, this is loathſom; and ſo it is, if we keep ſuch entercourſe with our ſelves, harbouring vain, impure, unjuſt, uncharitable Thoughts in our Minds.

If we ſhould defer regard to any Man, anſwerable to his worth, we ſhould thereby practiſe according to the good Rules of Humanity; but ſhould we ſo affect or fanſie any Man that we ſhould care for no Man elſe, ſhould pay no due Reſpect, or perform any Office of Kindneſs otherwhere; ſhould take no Man's Word, or mind any Man's Opinion beſide, nor care to converſe with any other; would this be Love? would it not be ridiculous Fondneſs? it is no leſs, if in regard to our ſelves, we are ſo moroſe, ſurly, or neglectful.

If we ſhould comply with any Man's reaſonable Deſire, this were fair and courteous; if we ſhould confide in the probable aſſiſtance of any Perſon, this were modeſt Prudence; but if we ſhould entirely conform our Practice to the Will or Humour of another, againſt the dictates of our own Reaſon, and to the harm of our ſelves or others; would this be Love, would it not rather be vile and pitiful ſlavery? If we ſhould without any ground, yea againſt plain Reaſon relie upon the help or direction of another, would this be Love, would it not rather be wild Preſumption? the ſame therefore it muſt be in us, if we in like manner are devoted to our own Will, or confident in our own Ability.

If we ſhould commend any Man for good Qualities or good Deeds, this is honeſt; if we ſhould encourage him in good Undertakings, this is charitable; but to applaud his Defects, to bolſter him in ill Practice, this is Flattery and Treachery; and in ſo doing towards others, we are not Friends to our ſelves, but Traitours and Paraſites.

By ſuch Reflexions and Compariſons we may, I think, competently underſtand the Nature of that Baſtard-ſelf-love, which is ſo vicious in it ſelf, and productive of ſo many Vices: But more fully to diſplay, and withal to diſſuade us from this Vice, I ſhall particularly inſiſt upon the common ſorts thereof, ſhewing the peculiar Unreaſonableneſs of each, and the Miſchiefs conſequent from it: they are indeed uſually combined and complicated in Practice; and have much Affinity both in their Nature and Fruit; but I ſhall as well as I can abſtract them one from the other, and ſo treat on them diſtinctly; they are theſe, Self-conceit, Self-confidence, Self-complacence, Self-will, Self-intereſt. Theſe I ſhall handle in the following Diſcourſes.

SERMON XXVIX.

Of Self-Conceit.

2 TIM. III. 2.

For Men ſhull be lovers of themſelves, &c.

1. THE firſt and moſt radical kind of vicious Self-Love is Self-conceitedneſs; that which St. Paul calleth τὸ ὑπερφρονεῖν, to overween, or to think highly of ones ſelf beyond what he ought to think. This doth conſiſt in ſeveral Acts or Inſtances.

Sometimes we in our Imagination aſſume to our ſelves Perfections not belonging to us in kind or in degree; we take our ſelves to be other Men than we are; to be wiſe, to be good, to be happy when we are not ſo, at leaſt, to be far wiſer, better and happier than we are. The Pleaſure naturally ſpringing from a good Opinion of our ſelves doth often ſo blind our Eyes, and pervert our Judgment that we ſee in us what is not there, or ſee it magnified or transformed into another Shape than its own; any Appearance doth ſuffice to produce ſuch Miſtakes, and having once entertained them, we are unwilling to depoſe them; we cannot endure by ſevere Reflexion on our ſelves to correct ſuch pleaſant Errours; hence commonly we preſume our ſelves to be very conſiderable, very excellent, very extraordinary Perſons, when in truth we are very mean and worthleſs; ſo did St. Paul ſuppoſe when he ſaid, If a man think himſelf to be ſomething when he is nothing, he deceiveth himſelf; Gal. 6. 3. ſuch was the Caſe of that Church in the Apocalypſe; Thou ſayeſt I am rich and encreaſed in goods, and have need of nothing; and knoweſt not that thou art wretched and miſerable; Apoc. 3. 17. they were like Men in a Dream, or in a Frenzy, who take themſelves for great and wealthy Perſons, when indeed they are in a ſorry and beggarly Condition; into the like extravagancies of Miſtake we are all likely to fall, if we do not very carefully and impartially examine and ſtudy our ſelves.

Again, ſometimes we make vain judgments upon the things we do poſſeſs, prizing them much beyond their true Worth and Merit; conſequently overvaluing our ſelves for them; the moſt trivial and pitiful things (things which in themſelves have no worth, but are meer Tools, and commonly ſerve bad Purpoſes; things which do not render our Souls any-wiſe better, which do not breed any real Content, which do not conduce to our Welfare and Happineſs) we value at a monſtrous rate, as if they were the moſt excellent and admirable things in the World: Have we Wit? how witleſs are we in prizing it, or our ſelves for it; although we employ it to no good end, not ſerving God, not benefiting Men, not furthering our own Good, or any-wiſe bettering our Condition with it; although we no otherwiſe uſe it, than vainly to pleaſe our ſelves or others, that is, to act the part of Fools or Buffoons. Have we Learning or Knowledge? then are we rare Perſons; not conſidering that many a bad, many a wretched Perſon hath had much more than we, who hath uſed it to the abuſe of others, to the torment of himſelf; that Hell may be full of learned Scribes, and ſubtile Diſputers, of eloquent Orators and profound Philoſophers; who when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their Imaginations, and their fooliſh Heart was darkned, not conſidering alſo how very defective our Knowledge is, how mixt with Error and Darkneſs; how uſeleſs and vain, yea how pernicious it is, if not ſanctified by God's Grace, and managed to his Service. Have we Riches? then are we brave Men, as fine and glorious in our Conceit as in our outward attire; although the vereſt Fools, the baſeſt and moſt miſerable of Men, that go on the Ground, do exceed us therein; although (as Ariſtotle ſaith) Moſt either not uſe it, or abuſe it. Although our Wealth affordeth us no real Benefit or Comfort, but expoſeth us to numberleſs Snares, Temptations, and Miſchiefs; although it hath no ſtability, but eaſily may be taken from us. Have we Reputation? how doth that make us highly to repute our ſelves in a ſlaviſh imitation of others? yet nothing is leſs ſubſtantial, nothing is leſs felt, nothing is ſo eaſily loſt, nothing is more brittle and ſlippery than it; a Bubble is not ſooner broken, or a Wave ſunk, than is the Opinion of Men altered concerning us. Have we Power? what doth more raiſe our Minds? yet what is that commonly but a dangerous Inſtrument of Miſchief to others, and of Ruine to our ſelves; at leaſt an engagement to Care and Trouble? What but that did render Caligula, Nero, and Domitian ſo hurtful to others, ſo unhappy themſelves? what but that hath filled the World with Diſaſters, and turned all Hiſtory into Tragedy? Have we proſperous Succeſs in our Affairs? then we boaſt and triumph in our Hearts; not remembring what the Wiſe-man ſaith, The proſperity of Fools deſtroyeth them; and that Experience ſheweth, Proſperity doth either uſually find or make us Fools; that the wiſeſt Men (as Solomon) the beſt Men (as Hezekiah) have been befooled by it: Thus are we apt to overvalue our things, and our ſelves for them.

Rom. 1. 21.

Ardua res hæc eſt, opibus non tradere mores.

Mat. 11. 6.

Τῶν πολλῶν οἱ μὲν οὐ χρῶνται τῷ πλούτῳ διὰ μικρολογίαν, οἱ δὲ παραχρῶνται δι' ἀσωτίαν. Ariſt. apud Plut. in Pelop.

Prov. 1. 32.

Rarus enim fermè ſenſus communis in illa Fortuna——

Juv. Sat. 8.

2 Chron. 32. 25.

There is no way indeed, wherein we do not thus impoſe upon our ſelves, either aſſuming falſe, or miſrating true Advantages; the general ill conſequences of which Miſdemeanor are, that our Minds are ſtuft with Dreams and phantaſtick Imaginations, inſtead of wiſe and ſober Thoughts; that we miſbehave our ſelves toward our ſelves treating our ſelves, like other Men than we are, with unſeemly regard; that we expect other Men ſhould have like Opinions, and yield anſwerable deferences to us; and are, if we find it otherwiſe, grievouſly offended; that we are apt to deſpiſe or diſregard others, demeaning our ſelves inſolently and faſtuouſly toward them; that we are apt to ſeek and undertake things, which we cannot attain or atchieve; that we neglect the Succours needful to help, or comfort us, and the like; which will appear more plainly, by conſidering the ſeveral Objects or Matters, in which ſelf-conceit is exerciſed: they are eſpecially three; Intellectual Endowments; moral Qualities; advantages of body, fortune and outward State.

1. We are apt to conceit highly of our ſelves, upon preſumption of our intellectual Endowments or Capacities, whether natural, (as Wit, Fancy, Memory, Judgment) or acquired (as Learning, Skill, Experience) eſpecially of that which is called Wiſdom, which in a manner comprehendeth the reſt, and manageth them; whereby we rightly diſcern what is true, and what is fit to be done in any caſe propoſed: This we are prone in great meaſure to arrogate, and much to pride our ſelves therein: The World is full as it can hold of Wiſe-men, or of thoſe who take themſelves to be ſuch; not only abſolutely, but comparatively, in derogation and preference to all others: May it not be ſaid to us, as Job did to his Friends, No doubt but ye are the People, and Wiſdom ſhall die with you; do we not fancy our ſelves incomparably wiſe, ſo that all our Imaginations are deep and ſubtile, all our Reſolutions ſound and ſafe, all our Opinions irrefragably certain; all our Sayings like ſo many Oracles, or indubitable Maxims? Do we not expect that every Man's Judgment ſhould ſtoop to ours? Do we not wonder that any Man ſhould preſume to diſſent from us? Muſt any Man's Voice be heard, when we ſpeak? Do we not ſuppoſe that our Authority doth add huge weight to our words, that 'tis unqueſtionably true becauſe we ſay it; that it is preſumption, 'tis temerity, 'tis rudeneſs hardly pardonable to conteſt our Dictates? this is a common practice, and that which is often prohibited and blamed in Scripture; Be not wiſe in thine own Eyes, ſaith the Wiſeman; And, Be not wiſe in your own Conceits, ſaith the Apoſtle: And, I ſay, through the Grace given unto me, to every Man that is among you, not to think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think, but to think ſoberly, according as God hath dealt to every Man the meaſure of Faith.

1 Cor. 3. 18. Μωρὸς γενέσθω, ἵνα γένηται σοφός. Vid. Chryſ. in Phil. Or. 7.

Job 12. 2.

Οἶος πέπνυται· τοὶ δὲ σκιαὶ ἀΐσσουσι.

Prov. 3. 7.

Rom. 12. 16.

12. 3.

The great reaſonableneſs of which Precepts will appear, by conſidering both the abſurdity and the inconveniences of the Practice which they forbid.

If we do reflect either upon the common nature of Men, or upon our own Conſtitution, we cannot but find our conceits of our Wiſdom very abſurd: For how can we take our ſelves for wiſe, if we obſerve the great blindneſs of our Mind, and feebleneſs of humane Reaſon, by many palpable Arguments diſcovering it ſelf? If we mark how painful the ſearch, and how difficult the comprehenſion is of any truth; how hardly the moſt ſagacious can deſcry any thing, how eaſily the moſt judicious Miſtake; how the moſt learned everlaſtingly Diſpute, and the wiſeſt irreconcilably Claſh about Matters ſeeming moſt familiar and facile; how often the moſt wary and ſteady do ſhift their Opinions; how the wiſer a Man is, and the more Experience he gaineth, the leſs confident he is in his own Judgment, and the more ſenſible he groweth of his Weakneſs; how dim the Sight is of the moſt perſpicacious, and how ſhallow the Conceptions of the moſt profound; how narrow is the Horizon of our Knowledge, and how immenſely the region of our Ignorance is diſtended; how imperfectly and uncertainly we know thoſe few things, to which our Knowledge reacheth; how anſwerably to ſuch Experience we are told in ſacred Writ, that Every Man is brutiſh in his Knowledge; that the Lord knoweth the Thoughts of Man, that they are Vanity; that Vain Man would be wiſe, though he be born like an Aſſes Colt (that is, he is naturally wild and ſtupid) that Wiſdom is hid from the Eyes of all Men, and is not found in the Land of the Living; that The Thoughts of mortal men are miſerable, and our Devices uncertain; if we, I ſay, do conſider ſuch things, how can we but find it ſtrange, that any Man ſhould admire his own Wiſdom, ſeeing that he thereby doth exempt himſelf from the common adjunct of his Nature, and forgetteth himſelf to be a Man.

Quamcunque partem rerum humanarum divinarumque comprehenderis, ingenti copiâ quærendarum ac diſcendarum fatigaberis. Sen. Ep. 88.

Jer. 10. 14.
Pſal. 94. 11.
1 Cor. 3. 20.
Job 11. 12.
Job 28. 21, 22.
Sap. 9. 14.

If alſo a Man particularly reflecteth on himſelf, the ſame practice muſt needs appear very fooliſh; for that every Man thence may diſcover in himſelf peculiar impediments of Wiſdom; every Man in his complexion and in his condition, may find things apt to pervert his Judgment, and obſtruct his acquiſition of true Knowledge: Is his Temper ſanguine? thence becometh he quick, raſh, credulous, confident, and peremptory, ſlippery and fickle: Is it phlegmatick? thence is he ſlow and heavy, diffident, pertinacious, and ſtiff in his Conceits: His Mind is either ſoft and limber, ſo as eaſily to receive the impreſſions of Falſhood ſpeciouſly repreſented; or hard and tough, ſo that he cannot readily admit inſtruction in Truth, or correction of Error. His Wealth diſtracteth, or his Poverty diſturbeth his Thoughts; Proſperity ſwelleth his Mind up into vain Preſumptions and Satiſfactions; or Adverſity ſinketh it down into unreaſonable deſpondencies and diſlikes of things; Plenty breedeth Sloth, Want createth Trouble, indiſpoſing him to think well; Eaſe doth ruſt his Parts, and Buſineſs weareth them out; Inclination, Intereſt, Company, Prejudice do forcibly ſway his Apprehenſions; ſo that no Man can get himſelf into, or keep himſelf ſteady in a perfect Balance, requiſite for exact Judgment of things; no Man therefore can obtain a degree of Wiſdom, whereof he may with any reaſon be conceited; the wiſeſt Men ſurely upon ſuch Experience have been little ſatisfied with their ſhare; Surely (ſaith one) I am more brutiſh than any man, and I have not the underſtanding of a man: and, So fooliſh (ſaid another) was I and ignorant, I was as a beaſt before thee: This Conceitedneſs therefore is very abſurd, and an argument of notable Ignorance and Folly; neither is there perhaps any more plain inſtance or demonſtration of general Folly reigning among Men, than this, that commonly we are ſo blind and ſtupid as not to diſcern and reſent our own Folly; If any man (ſaith St. Paul) thinketh that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth not any thing yet as he ought to know: that is, If any Man conceiteth himſelf to be conſiderably wiſe or intelligent, 'tis a plain ſign, that he is very ignorant, and underſtandeth little to any purpoſe.

Prov. 3. 2.
Pſal. 73. 22.
1 Cor. 8. 2.

So it is if we conſider our ſelves ſingly; and it is more ſo, in compariſon to others; for what ground can a Man have of arrogating to himſelf a peculiarity of Wiſdom or Judgment? to deem himſelf extraordinary in that, to which there are no other than ordinary means of arriving? to fancy himſelf wiſer than any other, when as (ſecluding accidental Differences, that cannot be accompted for) all Men have the ſame Parts and Faculties of Soul, the ſame means and opportunities of improvement; the

Zech. 12. 1.
Ἐν βροτοῖς. LXX.
Job 32. 8.
Jam. 1. 5.
Job 15. 8.

ſame right and liberty of judging about things? did not he, who formeth the ſpirit of man within him, put into every Man that heavenly mark, whereby we diſcern and judge of things? Is not every Man concerned in that ſaying of Elihu; there is a Spirit in men, and the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding? Do not the fountains of knowledge (natural Delight, divine Revelation, humane Inſtruction, continual Experience) ſtand open to all; and are no leſs common to Men, than is the Air they breathe, and the Sun, which equally ſhineth on them all? is God, the donor of Wiſdom, partial in the diſtribution of it; doth not that Overture reach indifferently to all, If any man lack Wiſdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally,——and it ſhall be given him? may not others be as Inquiſitive, as Induſtrious, as Sincere as we in the ſearch of Truth, why not then as ſucceſsful in finding it? Is there any private Chink, through which Light ſhineth only upon us, or Truth may be eſpied? Is there any cunning by-path, in which we alone, with more expedition and ſecurity than others, in the common Roads, can travel on toward Knowledge? What Patents have we to ſhew for monopoly of Reaſon? What right have we to engroſs any Knowledge? Who hath granted us a privilege of ſure Judgment, or an exemption from Error? How can we in trial of Things claim more than a ſingle Vote? or, Why ſhould our word, have more weight than any other? May not any Man, with as much reaſon, prefer his Judgment before ours, as we before his; and if we blame him for it, do we not thereby condemn our ſelves for doing the like? If we do know but the ſame Things, or frame the ſame Judgments with others, how can we be conceited of that which is promiſcuous; if we pretend to abſtruſe Notions, or hold forth Paradoxes, how can that be ground of boaſting, ſeeing the Cauſe ſtandeth conteſted by Authority, no leſs than our own, and that it is vain to triumph over the Opinions of others before we have conquered them? why in ſuch caſes is it not reaſonable to preſume that among the many Diſſenters from us, there are ſome who have as much ſenſe as we, and who have weighed the Matter with no leſs Care, no leſs Indifferency? In fine, may not any Man with good cauſe, propound to us that expoſtulation in Job: Haſt thou heard the ſecret of God, and doſt thou reſtrain Wiſdom to thy ſelf? what knoweſt thou that we know not? what underſtandeſt thou which is not in us?

Iſa. 5. 21.
Iſa. 47. 10.

Such conceitedneſs therefore is very abſurd; and it is no leſs hurtful; for many great Inconveniences, many ſad Miſchiefs ſpring from it, ſuch as gave the Prophet cauſe to denounce, Wo unto them that are wiſe in their own Eyes, and prudent in their own conceit: It hath many ways bad influence on our Souls, and on our Lives; it is often our caſe, which was the caſe of Babylon, when the Prophet ſaid of it, Thy Wiſdom and thy Knowledge hath perverted thee; for thou haſt ſaid in thy Heart, I am, and none elſe beſide me.

Hæc eſt hominis vera ſapientia imperfectum eſſe ſe noſſe. Hier. contra Pelag. 1. 5.
Prov. 20. 12.

It is a great bar to the getting Wiſdom, to the receiving inſtruction and right information about things; for he that taketh himſelf to be abundantly Knowing, or incomparably Wiſe, will not care to learn, will ſcorn to be taught; he thence becometh more incapable of Wiſdom, than a meer Idiot; ſo did Solomon obſerve, Seeſt thou, ſaid he, a man wiſe in his own conceit? there is more hope of a Fool than of him; of a Fool that is ſenſible of his own Ignorance, there may be hope, that he may by Inſtruction become Wiſe; but he that taketh himſelf to want no Inſtruction, or to be above Learning, is in a deſperate condition.

Puto multos potuiſſe ad ſapientiam pervenire, niſi putaſſent ſe perveniſſe. Sen. de tranq. an. 1.

It rendreth Men in doubtful or difficult Caſes, unwilling to ſeek, and unapt to take Advice; he will not care for, or admit any Counſellor but himſelf; hence he undertaketh and eaſily is deceived, and incurreth diſappointment, damage, diſaſters in his Affairs. As it is moſt incident to weak, inconſiderate, lazy Perſons, who have not a Capacity, will not yield attention, or take pains to get right notions of Things, ſo it doth ſmother all Induſtry, Conſideration, and Circumſpection; for ſuch Perſons think they need no labour in ſearching Truth, no care in weighing Arguments, no diligence in obſerving Things; they can eaſily, at firſt ſight, deſcry all, and penetrate to the bottom of Things; they have at eaſie rates the pleaſure of fancying themſelves wiſe; why ſhould they ſpend farther pains to diſpoſſeſs themſelves of that pleaſure, or to introduce another leſs ſatiſfactory? thus is the Sluggard (as Solomon ſaith) wiſer in his own conceit, Prov. 26. 16. than ſeven men that can render a reaſon.

It rendreth us very raſh and precipitant in judging; for the firſt ſhews of Things, or the moſt ſlender Arguments, which offer themſelves, being magnified, and aggravated from Opinion concerning our ſelves, do ſway our Judgment, and draw forth a ſudden reſolution from us; it muſt, we preſently ſuppoſe, be very reaſonable, becauſe it ſeemeth reaſonable to us.

Hence alſo we perſiſt, obſtinate and incorrigible in Error; for what Reaſon can be efficacious to reclaim him, whoſe Opinion is the greater Reaſon? What Argument can be ponderous enough to outweigh his Authority? How can he (the Man of Wiſdom, the perſpicacious and profound Perſon) yield that he hath erred? How can he part with the ſatiſfaction of being always in the right, or endure the affront of being any time baffled?

It rendreth Men peeviſh and moroſe, ſo as to bear no body that diſſenteth from them, nor to like any thing which doth not hit their Fancy; to croſs their Opinion and Humour, is to derogate from their Wiſdom; and being in their apprehenſion ſo injured, they find cauſe to be angry.

It rendreth them inſolent and imperious in Converſation, ſo as to dictate, and impoſe their Conceits upon others. He that is conceited of his own Wiſdom, will imagine, that upon that advantage he hath a right to preſcribe, others an Obligation to ſubmit; eo ipſo he becometh a common Maſter and Judge; and they are culpable, who will not yield him a credulous Ear, who will not ſtand to his deciſion.

Hence alſo do Men become ſo carping and cenſorious; for if any Man's Words do not jump with their Notions, if any Man's Actions be not conformable to their Rules, they ſtraightway riſe up to condemn them of Folly, of Faultineſs.

Yea, hence Men become intolerably pragmatical; for they conceit themſelves better to know another's Concernment than he himſelf doth, and ſo will intrude his Advice, will be angry if his Advice be not followed.

To ſuch Inconveniences and Iniquities this ill-diſpoſition expoſeth us, and to many others; for it is indeed that in effect, which the Holy Scripture repreſenteth as the ſource of all impious and wicked Courſes; to which Men betray themſelves, while taking themſelves to be wiſe, they do ſtifly adhere to their own Imaginations and Devices, although contrary to the preſcriptions of divine Wiſdom, to the dictates of common Reaſon, to the admonitions of ſober and good Men: We will (ſay they in the Prophet) Jer. 13. 10. 6. 19. walk after our own Devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his Iſ. 65. 2. 53. 5. evil Heart; and, I have ſpread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious People? Which walketh in a way that is not good, after their own Thoughts.

And,

Deut. 28. 18. Pſal. 81. 12. Prov. 1. 30, 31. Iſa. 66. 4. And, If he bleſſeth himſelf, ſaying, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of my Heart: and. So I gave them unto their own Hearts Luſts, and they walked in their own Counſels: Theſe are deſcriptions of bad Men, implying Self-conceit to be the root of their Impiety.

2. Again, we are apt to conceit highly and vainly of our moral Qualities and Performances; taking our ſelves for Perſons rarely good, perfect and blameleſs; apprehending no defects in our Souls, or miſcarriages in our Lives, although indeed we are as full of blemiſhes, we are as guilty of Prov. 30. 12. Faults as others; There is (ſaith the Wiſeman) a Generation that are pure in their own Eyes, and yet is not waſhed from their filthineſs; to this Generation we belong if we admire our Vertues, if we juſtifie our Lives, if (as it is Luke 18. 9. 16. 15. 10. 29. ſaid of the Phariſee) we truſt in our ſelves, that we are Righteous.

This practice doth include great Folly, and it produceth great Miſchiefs.

'Tis very fooliſh; and argueth the greateſt Ignorance that can be; for ſuch is the Imperfection, the Impotency, the Impurity of all Men, even of the wiſeſt and beſt Men (diſcernable to them who ſearch their Hearts, and try their ways, ſtrictly comparing them to the rules of Duty, God's Laws, and the dictates of Reaſon) that no Man can have reaſon to be ſatiſfied in himſelf, or in his Doings: Every Man looking into himſelf, ſhall find his Mind ſo peſtered with vain and filthy Thoughts; his Will ſo perverſe, ſo froward, ſo weak, ſo unſteady; his Deſires ſo fond and unwarrantable; his Paſſions ſo diſorderly and ungovernable; his Affections ſo miſplaced, or at leaſt ſo cold, and dull in regard to their right Objects; his Reſolutions toward Good ſo weak and ſlack; his Intentions ſo corrupt, or mixt with oblique regards; he that obſerveth his Actions, ſhall in the beſt of them (as to the Principles whence they riſe, as to the ends they drive at, as to the manner of their performance) find ſo many great defailances, that he will ſee cauſe rather to abhor than admire himſelf.

Hier. in Lucif. cap. 6. Who, let me ask, doth love God with all his Soul, ſo as to place in him his total Content and Delight, ſo as to do all things out of love to him, with a regard to his Honour and Service? ſo as to be willing and glad to part with all things for his ſake? Who hath that conſtant and lively ſenſe of God's Benefits and Mercies that he ſhould have? Who hath a perfect reſignation of Will to his Pleaſure, ſo as to be diſpleaſed with no event diſpenſed by his Hand? Who hath ſuch a vigour of Faith and Confidence in him, as will ſupport him in all Wants, in all Diſtreſſes, in all Temptations, ſo as never to be diſquieted, or diſcouraged by them, ſo as to caſt on God (as he is commanded) all the cares of his Soul, and burthens of his Life? who conſtantly maintaineth a fervour of Spirit, a ſteadineſs of Reſolution, a clear and calm frame of Soul, an abſtractedneſs of Mind from worldly Deſires and Delights? Who continually is fervent and undiſtracted in his Devotion? Who with an unwearied and inceſſant diligence doth watch over his Thoughts? Who doth entirely command his Paſſions, and bridle his Appetites? Who doth exactly govern his Tongue? Who is perpetually circumſpect over his Actions? Who loveth his Neighbour as himſelf, ſeeking his good, and delighting therein as in his own; being ſorry for his Adverſities, as if they had befallen himſelf? Who feeleth that contrition of Spirit, that Shame, that remorſe for his Sins, or that deteſtation of them, which they deſerve? Who is duly ſenſible of his own unworthineſs? very few of us ſurely, if we examine our Conſciences, can anſwer, that we are they who perform theſe Duties; and if not, where is any ground of ſelf-conceit? how much cauſe rather is there of dejection, of diſpleaſure, of deſpiſing and deteſting our ſelves?

There have indeed been Sects of Men (ſuch as the Novatians, and the Pelagians) who have pretended to Perfection and Purity; but theſe Men one would think did never read the Scripture, did never conſult Experience, did never reflect on their Minds, did never compare their Practice with their Duty; had no Conſcience at all, or a very blind and ſtupid one. Who can ſay, I have made my Heart clean, I am pure from my ſin? was a Queſtion of Solomon, to which he thought no Man could anſwer affirmatively of himſelf: If I juſtifie my ſelf, my own Mouth ſhall condemn me; if I ſay I am perfect, it ſhall prove me perverſe; was the aſſeveration of that Perſon, whoſe Vertue had undergone the ſevereſt Trials; In many things we offend all; was the confeſſion of an Apoſtle in the name of the wiſeſt and beſt Men.

The Donatiſts —— remiſſionem peccatorum ſic datis, quaſi nullum habeatis ipſi peccatum, &c. Opt. lib. 2.
Prov. 20. 9.
Eccl. 7. 20.
Job 9. 20.
15. 15. 25. 4. 4. 18. 9. 2.
(Pſal. 143. 2.)
Jam. 3. 2.

Such Men indeed (in contemplation of themſelves, and of their doings) have ever been ready to think meanly of themſelves, to acknowledge and bewail their unworthineſs, to diſclaim all Confidence in themſelves, to avow their hope wholly to be repoſed in the Grace and Mercy of God; (in his Grace for ability to perform ſomewhat of their Duty, in his Mercy for Pardon of their Offences;) to confeſs themſelves (with Jacob) Leſs than the leaſt of God's Mercies; with David, that they are Worms, and no Men; with Job, that they are vile, and unable to anſwer God, calling them to accompt, in one caſe of a thouſand; that they abhor themſelves, and repent in Duſt and Aſhes; that after they have done all, they are unprofitable Servants: And is he not very blind, who doth ſee in himſelf thoſe Perfections, which the greateſt Saints could not deſcry in themſelves? Is he not infinitely vain, that fanſieth himſelf more worthy, than they did take themſelves to be?

Job 40. 4.
42. 6. 9. 2.
Luke 17. 10.

In fine, Every Man is in ſome kind and degree bad, ſinful, vile; it is as natural for us to be ſo, as to be frail, to be ſickly, to be mortal: There are ſome bad Diſpoſitions common to all, and which no Man can put off without his Fleſh; there are ſome, to which every Man (from his temper, inclination and conſtitution of Body or Soul) is peculiarly ſubject; the which by no care and pain can be quite extirpated; but will afford, during Life, perpetual matter of conflict and exerciſe to curb them; conceit therefore of our Vertue is very fooliſh.

And it breedeth many great Miſchiefs.

Hence doth ſpring a great ſecurity, and careleſneſs of correcting our Faults; for taking our ſelves to be well, we ſee not any need of Cure, thence ſeek none, nor admit any.

Matt. 9. 12.
John 9. 41.

Yea, hence riſeth a contempt of any means conducible to our amendment, ſuch as good Advice, and wholſome Reproof; to adviſe ſuch an one is to accuſe him wrongfully, to reprove him is to commit an outrage upon his preſumed integrity of Vertue. Hence alſo proceedeth a neglect of imploring the Grace and Mercy of God; for why ſhould Perſons of ſo great ſtrength crave ſuccour; how ſhould they beg pardon, who have ſo little ſenſe of Guilt? It is for a weak Perſon to cry, Lord help me; it is for a Publican to pray, God be merciful unto me a Sinner.

Luke 18. 13.

It breedeth arrogance and preſumption even in Devotions, or addreſſes to God, inducing ſuch Perſons in unſeemly manner to juſtifie themſelves before God, to claim ſingular Intereſt in him, to mind him, and as it were to upbraid him with their worthy Deeds, to thank him for their imaginary Excellencies; like the conceited Phariſee; God, I thank thee, that I am not as other Men, Extortioners, Unjuſt, Adulterers —— I faſt twice a Week, I give tythes of all that I poſſeſs. They cannot demean themſelves toward God as miſerable Sinners, who fanſie themſelves as admirable Worthies and Gallants in Vertue.

Luke 18. 11.

Alſo, a natural reſult thereof is a haughty contempt of others, venting it ſelf in a ſupercilious and faſtuous demeanour: So it was in the Phariſees, who (ſaith St. Luke) truſted in themſelves, that they were righteous, Luke 18. 9. and deſpiſed others. Such Perſons obſerving, or ſuſpecting Defects and Misbehaviours in others, but diſcerning none in themſelves, do in their Opinion advance themſelves above their Brethren, and accordingly are prone to behave themſelves toward them: Such Men as they are the eſpecially good Men, the Godly, the Saints, the Flower of Mankind, the Choice ones, the Darlings of God, the Favourites of Heaven; the ſpecial Objects of divine Love and Care: Others are impure and profane, rejectaneous and reprobate People, to whom God beareth no good-will or regard; hence proceedeth a contemptuous diſregard or eſtrangedneſs toward other Men; like that of thoſe Separatiſts in the Prophet, who notwithſtanding they were a People provoking God to anger continually to his face, Iſa. 65. 5. were yet in conceit of their own ſpecial purity ready to ſay, Stand by thy ſelf, come not near to me, for I am holier than thou: Whereas thoſe who ſoberly reflecting on their Nature, their Hearts, their Ways, do frame a right Judgment of themſelves, can hardly eſteem any Man worſe than themſelves; they perceive themſelves ſo frail, ſo defectuous, ſo culpable, as to find great reaſon for their compliance with thoſe Apoſtolical Precepts; In lowlineſs of Mind, let each Man eſteem others better than himſelf; Phil. 2. 3. In honour prefer one another. Rom. 12. 10.

This likewiſe diſpoſeth Men to expect more than ordinary regard from others; and they are much diſpleaſed, if they find it not in degree anſwerable to their conceit of themſelves; taking them for ſilly, envious, or injurious Perſons, who forbear to yield it: Such excellent Perſons muſt in all things be humoured, and cockered, otherwiſe you greatly wrong them.

Hence alſo ſuch Men eaſily become diſcontented and impatient; for if they be croſſed in any thing, if any misfortune toucheth them, they take it very ill; ſuppoſing they deſerve it not, but are worthy of better Uſage and Fortune.

In fine, as this cauſeth a Man to behave himſelf untowardly in reſpect to all others (toward God, and toward his Neighbour (ſo thence he moſt unbeſeemingly carrieth himſelf toward himſelf, he is no faithful Friend, no good Companion to himſelf, but a fond Mignon, a vile Flatterer, or a profane Idolater of himſelf: for (like Narciſſus) being tranſported with conceit of his own incomparable Beauty or Excellency, he maketh love to, and courteth himſelf; finding delight in ſuch Conceit, he by all means cheriſheth it, glozing and flattering himſelf (as the Pſalm hath it) Pſal. 36. 2. in his own Eyes; repreſenting his Qualities to his Imagination in falſe ſhapes, he devoutly adoreth thoſe Idols of his Brain. Farther,

3. Self-conceit is alſo frequently grounded upon other inferior Advantages; upon gifts of Nature (as Strength, Activity, Beauty) upon gifts of Fortune (ſo called) as Birth, Wealth, Dignity, Power, Fame, Succeſs; upon theſe things Men ordinarily much value themſelves, and are ſtrangely pufft up with vain Opinion; taking themſelves from them to be great and happy Perſons; but ſeeing (as we touched before) theſe things are in themſelves little valuable (as ſerving no great Purpoſe, nor furthering our true happineſs) ſeeing they are not commendable (as not depending on our free Choice, but proceeding from Nature or Chance) ſeeing they are not durable or certain, but eaſily may be ſevered from us; the vanity of Self-conceit founded on them is very notorious, and I ſhall not inſiſt more to declare it; I ſhall only recommend the Prophet's Advice concerning ſuch things; Let not the wiſe Man glory in his Wiſdom; neither let the mighty Man glory in his Might; let not the rich Man glory in his Riches; but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he underſtandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord, which exerciſe loving-kindneſs, judgment and righteouſneſs in the Earth: that is, Nothing within us, or about us, ſhould elevate our Minds, excepting the aſſurance, that God doth govern the World, being ready to protect and ſuccour us; to diſpenſe Mercy and Juſtice to us; ſo that how weak and helpleſs ſoever in our ſelves, yet confiding in him, we ſhall never be overwhelmed by any Wrong or Miſfortune. Jer. 9. 23, 24.

So much concerning Self-Conceit, the other Parts of vitious Self-Love may be reſerved to another Occaſion.

SERMON XXX.

Of Self-Confidence, Self-Complacence, Self-Will, and Self-Intereſt.

2 TIM. III. 2.

For Men ſhall be lovers of themſelves, &c.

Of Self-Confidence.

II. ANother like culpable kind of Self-Love, is that of Self-Confidence; when Men beyond Reaſon, and without regard unto God's Providence, do rely upon themſelves, and their own Abilities, imagining that, without God's direction and help, by the contrivances of their own Wit and Diſcretion, by the prevalency of their own Strength and Courage, by their induſtrious Care, Reſolution and Activity they can compaſs any deſign, they can attain any good, they can arrive to the utmoſt of their deſires, and become ſufficiently happy, not conſidering that of God (in whoſe hand our Breath is, and whoſe are all our ways; in whoſe hand is the Soul of every living thing, and the Breath of all Mankind) all our Being, and all our Ability do abſolutely depend; that he manageth and turneth all things, diſpenſing Succeſs according to his pleaſure; that no good thing can be performed without the ſupply and ſuccour of his Grace, nothing can be atchieved without the concurrence of his Providence; that, The way of Man is not in himſelf, it is not in Man that walketh to direct his Steps; that, The preparations of the Heart in Man, and the anſwer of the Tongue is from the Lord; that, although, A Man's Heart deviſeth his way, yet the Lord directeth his Steps; that, No King is ſaved by the multitude of an Hoſt, a mighty Man is not delivered by much ſtrength; a Horſe is a vain thing for ſafety; The Race is not to the ſwift, nor the Battel

Ὅστις γὰρ αὐτὸς ἢ φρονεῖν μόνος δοκεῖ,
Ἢ γλῶσσαν ἣν οὐκ ἄλλος ἢ ψυχὴν ἔχειν.
Οὗτοι διαπτυχθέντες ὤφθησαν κενοί.
Soph. Antig.

Dan. 5. 23.
Job 12. 10.
Jer. 10. 23.
Prov. 16. 1.
Prov. 16. 9.
19. 21. 20. 24.
Pſal. 33. 16, 17.
Eccleſ. 9. 11.

tel to the ſtrong: that (as St. Paul, one abundantly furniſhed with Abili-2 Cor. 3. 5. ties ſuting his Deſigns as any Man can be, doth acknowledge) we
2. 16. are not ſufficient of our ſelves to think any thing, but our ſufficiency is of God: theſe oracles of Truth, and even dictates of Reaſon, no leſs than Principles of Religion they conſider not, who confide in their own Abilities, with which Nature or Fortune do ſeem to have furniſhed them.

This is that inſtance of Self-Love, which the Wiſe-man biddeth us to be-Prov. 3. 5, 6. ware of: Truſt (ſaith he) in the Lord with all thine Heart, and lean not to thine own Underſtanding; In all thy Ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy Paths. This is that which he condemneth as fooliſh, and oppoſite Prov. 28. 26. to wiſe proceeding; He that truſteth in his own Heart, is a Fool; but whoſo walketh wiſely, ſhall be delivered.

This is that which ſmothereth Devotion, and keepeth Men from having
---æquum mi animum ipſe parabo. recourſe to God; while they think it needleſs to ask for that, which they have in their Power, or have means of obtaining; this conſequently depriveth them of Divine Aid, which is afforded only to thoſe who ſeek it, and confide therein.

This often engageth Men to attempt things raſhly, and cauſeth them to come off unhappily; God interpoſing to croſs them, with purpoſe to cure their Error, to confound their Preſumption.

From hence, if God ever ſuffereth their Attempt to proſper, they ſacri-Iſa. 10. 13. legiouſly and profanely arrogate to themſelves the Succeſs, ſacrificing to their own Net, and ſaying with him in the Prophet, By the ſtrength of my Hand have I done it, and by my Wiſdom, for I am prudent.

This cauſeth moſt Men to fail of true Content here, and of Happineſs finally; while taking them to be, where they are not, at home, within their own hand, or reach, they neglect to ſearch after them abroad, there where they only do lie, in the hand and diſpoſal of God.

Of Self-Complacence.

III. A like act of blameable Self-Love, is Self-Complacence, that is, greatly delighting in ones ſelf, or in the Goods, which he fanſieth himſelf to enjoy, or in the Works which he performeth: When Men in contemplation of their Works and Atchievements go ſtrutting about, and ſaying,
Dan. 4. 30. with that vain Prince, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built? when reflecting on their Poſſeſſions they applaud and bleſs themſelves, like the Luke 12. 19. Rich Man in the Goſpel, Soul (ſaith he, looking upon his accumulated ſtore) thou haſt much Goods laid up for many Years: Such vain Soliloquies do Men ordinarily make: Thou haſt (ſaith a Man to himſelf) rare endowments of Soul; a wonderful Skill and Ability in this and that Matter; thou art Maſter of excellent things; thou haſt managed very important Buſineſs, haſt accompliſhed hard Deſigns, haſt atchieved brave Feats, with great dexterity and admirable ſucceſs, by thy Wit and Induſtry; thou haſt framed and vented very curious Orations, very facetious Speeches, very nervous and pithy Diſcourſes; thou haſt put Obligations upon this Man, and that; thou haſt got much Credit and Intereſt amongſt Men; the World much looketh on thee, loveth and prizeth thee hugely, reſoundeth with thy Fame and Praiſe; ſurely thy Worth is notable, thy Deſerts are egregious; how happy art thou in being ſuch a Perſon, in performing ſuch Things, in enjoying ſuch Advantages? Thus, with a ſpurious and filthy Pleaſure do Men reflect upon and revolve in their Minds the Goods they deem themſelves to poſſeſs, and the favourable Occurrences that ſeem to befall them; being fond of their own Qualities and Deeds as of their Children, which however they are in themſelves, do always appear handſome and towardly unto them; any little thing is great and eminent, any ordinary thing is rare, any indifferent thing is excellent to them, becauſe it is theirs; out of any thing, how dry and inſipid ſoever it is in it ſelf, they ſuck a vain and fooliſh pleaſure.

Hence is that honeſt and pure delight, which they ſhould taſte in faith and love toward God, in the hope of future celeſtial things, in the enjoyment of ſpiritual Bleſſings, in the conſcience of vertuous practice, quite choaked or greatly damped.

Hence alſo that hearty contrition, and ſober ſadneſs, which by reflexion upon their great Defects, and frequent Miſcarriages they ſhould continually maintain in their Souls, is utterly ſtifled.

Hence alſo that charitable complacency in the welfare, and condolency with the adverſities of their Brethren is ſuppreſſed; Hence cannot they be ſatisfied with any thing done by others, they cannot apprehend the worthy Deſerts, they cannot render due commendation to the good Deeds of their Neighbour; for while Men are ſo pleaſed with their own imaginary Felicities, they cannot well diſcern, they will not be duly affected with the real Advantages, or Diſaſters of themſelves, or of others.

Of Self-Will.

IV. Another culpable kind of Self-Love is Self-Will; (αὐθάδεια, pleaſing ones ſelf in his Choice, and proceeding without, or againſt Reaſon) when a Man unaccountably or unreaſonably, with obſtinate Reſolution, purſueth any courſe offenſive to others, or prejudicial to himſelf, ſo that he will not hearken to any Advice, nor yield to any Conſideration diverting him from his Purpoſe, but putteth off all, with a ----Stat pro ratione voluntas: Say what you can, let what will come on it, I will do as I pleaſe, I will proceed in my own way; ſo I am reſolved, ſo it ſhall be.

Περὶ ὧν ἂν ἅπαξ τι εἴπω, μηκέτι με αὖθις πύθῃ. Nero apud Dion. Caſſ.

Οἱ ἀμαθεῖς ἰσχυρογνώμονες. Syneſ. Calv.

Vid. Sen. Ep. 23. de Ben. 438. Arr. 2. 15.

This is that generally which produceth in Men the wilful commiſſion of ſin; although apparently contrary to their own Intereſt and Welfare, depriving them of the beſt Goods, bringing on them moſt heavy Miſchiefs; this cauſeth them irreclaimably to perſiſt in Impenitence. Hence do they ſtop their Ears againſt wholſome Counſel, they harden their Hearts againſt moſt pathetical, and ſoftning Diſcourſes, they withdraw their Shoulder, they ſtiffen their Neck againſt all ſober Precepts, Admonitions, and Reproofs; they defeat all means and methods of Correction; they will not hear God Commanding, Entreating, Promiſing, Threatning, Encouraging, Chaſtiſing; they will not regard the advices and reprehenſions of Friends; the moſt apparent conſequences of Damage, Diſgrace, Pain, Perdition upon their ill Courſes will not ſtir them; their Will is impregnable againſt the moſt powerful attempts to win and better them: Let all the Wiſdom in the World ſollicit them, with a Turn at my Reproof, it ſhall have occaſion to complain; They would none of my Counſel, they deſpiſed all my Reproof.

Neh. 9. 28. Jer. 7. 26. 5. 3. Deut. 31. 27. Prov. 1. 25.

Prov. 1. 23, 25, 29.

This is that alſo more particularly, which breedeth ſo much Miſchief to the Publick, which peſtereth and diſturbeth private Converſation: This maketh Converſation harſh, and Friendſhip intolerable.

——τούτῳ δ' ἀνδρὶ μήτ' εἴην φίλος,
Μήτε ξυνείην, ὅστις αὐτάρκη φρονεῖν
Πέποιθε, δούλους τοὺς φίλους ἡγούμενος.
Eurip.

Hence are Men in their demeanour ſo peeviſh and froward, ſo perverſe and croſgrain'd, ſo ſtiff and ſtubborn; with much inconvenience to others, and commonly with more to themſelves.

Αὐθάδεια ἐρημίᾳ ξύνοικος. Plat. ad Dionem. Ep 4.

Hence will they not ſubmit to the Commands of their Superiors; they will not comply with the Cuſtoms of their Country, they will not be complaiſant in Converſation; but every where raiſe factious Oppoſitions, kindle fierce Contentions, maintain diſorderly Singularities: they care not how, for enjoying their Humour, they break the peace of the World, they diſturb the order of things, they create tumults and troubles in any Society; they bring Vexations and Miſchiefs on others, on themſelves. They do not conſider, or value the great harm they bring upon the Publick, nor how much themſelves do ſuffer by it; ſo they have their Will, what if the State be plunged into confuſion and trouble; what if their Neighbours be ſorely incommoded; what if themſelves loſe their Eaſe and Pleaſure?

It muſt be juſt as they will have it; what if ten to one think otherwiſe; what if generally the wiſeſt Men are agreed to the contrary, what if the moſt preſſing neceſſity of Affairs do not admit it; what if publick Authority (thoſe whom all equity doth conſtitute Judges, and to whom God himſelf hath committed the arbitration thereof) do not allow it; yet ſo it muſt be, becauſe they fancy it, otherwiſe they will not be quiet; ſo do they ſacrifice the greateſt benefits of Society (publick Order and Peace, mutual Love and Friendſhip, common Safety and Proſperity) to their private Will and Humour.

This is that, which St. Paul ſo often did forbid in Word, and diſcountenanced in Practice: For the edification of others, to procure advantage to his Endeavours, to ſhun Offence, to preſerve Concord and Amity, he waved pleaſing his own Deſire and Fancy, he complied with the Conceits and Humours even of thoſe, who were moſt Ignorant and weak in Judgment; he even ſubjected and enſlaved himſelf to the pleaſure of others,
Rom. 15. 1, 2, 3. directing us to do the like: We then (ſaith he) that are ſtrong, ought to bear the Infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe our ſelves: Let every one of us pleaſe his Neighbour for his good to Edification: For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf (he adjoineth the great Example of our Lord to en-
1 Cor. 10. 33. 11. 1. force his own.) Again; Give none Offence, ſaith he, Even as I pleaſe all Men in all things, not ſeeking mine own Profit, but the Profit of the many, that they may be ſaved: Be ye (herein) followers of me, as I am of Chriſt;
1 Cor. 9. 22, 19. and again, To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all Men, that I might by all means ſave ſome: Though I be free from all Men (that is, although I have no Superiour, that can Command me, or oblige me in theſe Matters) yet have I made my ſelf Servant to all, that I might gain the more. What this excellent Perſon was in this Inſtance of managing Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and promoting the Goſpel, that both in the ſame Caſes, and in the proſecution of all other Deſigns, in all our Converſation and Practices ſhould we likewiſe be.

We ſhould in no caſe indulge our own Humour or Fancy, but ever look to the reaſon of the thing, and act accordingly, whatever it requireth.

We ſhould never act, without ſtriving with competent application of Mind to diſcern clearly ſome reaſon why we act; and from obſerving the dictates of that Reaſon no unaccountable Cauſe ſhould pervert us: Blind Will, head-ſtrong Inclination, impetuous Paſſion ſhould never guide, or draw, or drive us to any thing; for this is not to act like a Man, but as a Beaſt, or rather worſe than a Beaſt; for Beaſts operate by a blind inſtinct indeed, but ſuch as is planted in them by a ſuperiour Wiſdom, unerringly directing them to a purſuit of their true Good; but Man is left
Sap. 1. 12. Deut. 30. 19. in manu conſilii ſui, is obliged (under ſore Penalties) not to follow blind

Inclinations or Inſtinct; but to act with ſerious Deliberation and Choice, to obſerve explicite rules and reſolutions of Reaſon.

Of Self-Intereſt.

1 Cor. 10.24.

Vid. Chryſ. in 1 Cor. Or. 25.

V. Another culpable ſort of Self-Love is that of Self-Intereſt; when Men inordinately or immoderately do covet and ſtrive to procure for themſelves theſe worldly Goods, meerly becauſe profitable or pleaſant to themſelves, not conſidering or regarding the good of others, according to the rules of Juſtice, of Humanity, of Chriſtian Charity; when their Affections, their Cares, their Endeavours do mainly tend to the advancement, advantage, or delight of themſelves; they little caring what cometh on it, who loſeth, who ſuffereth thereby.

They look upon themſelves as if they were all the World, and no Man beſide concerned therein, or conſiderable to them; that the good ſtate of things is to be meaſured by their Condition; that all is well, if they do Proſper and Thrive; all is ill, if they are diſappointed in their Deſires and Projects.

The good of no Man, not of their Brethren, not of their Friends, not of their Country doth come with them under conſideration; what Scandals do ariſe, what Diſorders are committed, what Miſchiefs are cauſed they matter not, if they get ſomewhat thereby: What if the Church, or State be reproached, what it the Neighbourhood be offended, or diſturbed, what if the World cry out and complain, if they become richer by it, or have their Paſſion gratified, or find ſome pleaſure in it?

This is the chief ſpring of Injuſtice: For from hence it is, that oftentimes Men regard not what Courſes they take, what means they uſe, (how unjuſt, how baſe ſoever they be) toward the compaſſing their Deſigns: Hence they trample upon Right, they violate all Laws and Rules of Conſcience, they falſify their Truſts, they betray their Friends, they ſupplant their Neighbour; they flatter and collogue, they wind about and ſhuffle any way, they detract from the worth and vertue of any Man, they forge and vent odious Slanders, they commit any ſort of Wrong and Outrage, they (without regard or remorſe) do any thing which ſeemeth to further their Deſign.

This is the great ſource of Uncharitableneſs, for from hence Men affect no Man otherwiſe, than he ſeemeth able to ſerve their turn; the Poor therefore is ever ſlighted and neglected by them as unſerviceable, the Rich only is minded and reſpected as capable to promote their Ends, they become hard-hearted toward others; not conſidering or commiſerating their Caſe; they will part with nothing from themſelves to thoſe who need their Relief; they delight in nothing which doth not make for their advantage: All their ſhews of Friendſhip and Reſpect are mercenary, and meer Trade; they do nothing gratis, or for Love.

This is the great Root of all the Diſorders and Miſchiefs in the World; this Self-love prompteth Men to thoſe turbulent ſcramblings and ſcufflings, whereby good Order is confounded; this engageth them to deſert their Stations, to tranſgreſs their Bounds; to invade and encroach upon others with Fraud and Violence: Did Men with any conſcionable moderation mind and purſue their own private Intereſt, all thoſe fierce Animoſities, thoſe fiery Contentions, thoſe bitter Emulations, thoſe rancorous Grudges, thoſe calumnious Supplantings, thoſe perfidious Cozenages, thoſe outrageous Violences, thoſe factious Confederacies, thoſe ſeditious Murmurings and tumultuous Clamours would vaniſh and ceaſe; Self-Intereſt it is that gives gives life and nouriſhment to all ſuch Practices, the which embroil the World in diſcord and diſorder. It is not out of pure Madneſs or wanton Humour that commonly Men engage themſelves and others in thoſe baſe and troubleſome Courſes, but out of deſign to get by it; hope of Gain to be raked out of publick Ruines and Diſorders, is the Principle that moveth them, the Reward they propound to themſelves for their pains in medling, toward the promoting them; like thoſe who ſet fire on the Town, that they may get opportunity to rifle and pillage.

----nullum furor egit in arma. Bella petunt magnâ victi mercede.----

Ut quiſque maximè ad ſuum commodum refert quæcunque agit, itd minimè eſt vir bonus; ut qui virtutem præmio metiantur, nullam virtutem niſi malitiam putant, &c. Cic. de Leg. 1.

He that taketh himſelf to be as but one Man (naturally like and equal to others) conceiving that he ought to conſider the intereſt and right of other Men in the ſame rank with his own, that he in reaſon ſhould be contented with that ſhare, which ariſeth to him by fair means; who thence reſolveth to be ſatisfied with his own Lot, to abide quiet in his Station, to yield the ſame deference and compliance to others which he can preſume, or pretend to receive from them; who deſires only to enjoy the gifts of Providence, and the fruits of his Induſtry, in a due ſubordination to the publick Peace and Welfare; he will not eaſily ſtrive or ſtruggle for Preferments, he will not foment Emulations or Factions for his advantage, he will never deſign to cozen or ſupplant, to detract or calumniate for advancement of his Ends; he thence will not contribute to the Miſchiefs and Troubles in the World.

Self-Intereſt therefore is the great enemy to the Common-weal; that which perverteth all Right, which confoundeth all Order, which ſpoileth all the convenience and comfort of Society.

It is a practice indeed (this practice of purſuing Self-Intereſt ſo vehemently, ſo eſpecially above all things) which is looked upon and cried up as a clear and certain point of Wiſdom; the only ſolid Wiſdom, in compariſon whereto thoſe Precepts, which preſcribe the practice of ſtrict Juſtice, ingenuous Humanity, free Charity, are but pedantical Titles, or Notions merely chimerical; So the World now, more than ever, ſeemeth to judge; and accordingly to act; and thence is the ſtate of things viſibly ſo bad, and calamitous; thence ſo little honeſty in Dealings, thence ſo little ſettlement in Affairs are diſcernible. But how falſe that Judgment is, will appear, if the Caſe be weighed in the balance of pure Reaſon; and moſt fooliſh it will appear, being ſcanned according to the Principles of Religion.

In Reaſon, is it not very abſurd, that any Man ſhould look upon himſelf as more than a ſingle Perſon; that he ſhould prefer himſelf before another, to whom he is not in any reſpect ſuperiour; that he ſhould advance his own Concernment above the publick Benefit, which comprehendeth his Good, and without which his Good cannot ſubſiſt? Can any Man rationally conceive, that he can firmly Thrive, or perſiſt in a quiet and ſweet condition, when he graſpeth to himſelf more than is due or fitting, when he provoketh againſt himſelf the emulation, the competition, the oppoſition, the hatred and obloquy of all, or of many other Perſons?

May not any Man reaſonably have the ſame Apprehenſions and Inclinations, as we may have? may not any Man juſtly proceed in the ſame manner as we may do? Will they not, ſeeing us mainly to affect our private Intereſt, be induced, and in a manner forced to do the like? thence what end can there be of proging, and ſcrambling for things? and in the confuſion thence ariſing, what quiet, what content can we enjoy?

Again; Doth not Nature, by implanting in our Conſtitution, a love of Society, and averſation from Solitude, inclinations to Pity and Humanity, pleaſant complacencies in obliging and doing Courteſies to others, appetites of Honour and good Eſteem from others, aptneſs to approve and like the practices of Juſtice, of Fidelity, of Courteſie, of Beneficence, Capacities to yield ſuccour and benefit to our Brethren dictate unto us, that our Good is inſeparably connected and complicated with the Good of others, ſo that it cannot, without its own impairing, ſubſiſt alone, or be ſevered from the Good of others; no more than a Limb can, without ſuffering and deſtruction, be torn from the whole?

Is there not to all Men in ſome meaſure, to ſome Men in a higher degree, a Generoſity innate, moſt lovely and laudable to all; which diſpoſeth Men, with their own pain, hazard, and detriment, to ſuccour and relieve others in Diſtreſs, to ſerve the Publick, and promote the benefit of Society; ſo that inordinately to regard private Intereſt, doth thwart the reaſon and wiſdom of Nature?

The frame of our Nature indeed ſpeaketh, that we are not born for our ſelves; We ſhall find Man, if we contemplate him, to be a nobler thing, than to have been deſign'd to ſerve himſelf, or to ſatisfy his ſingle pleaſure; his Endowments are too excellent, his Capacities too large for ſo mean and narrow Purpoſes. How pitiful a Creature were Man, if this were all he was made for; how ſorry a faculty were Reaſon, if it ſerved not to better Uſes? he debaſeth himſelf, he diſgraceth his Nature, who hath ſo low Conceits, and purſueth ſo petty Deſigns.

Nec ſibi, ſed toti natum ſe credere mundo.
——nullóſque Catonis in actus
Subrepſit, partémque tulit ſibi nata voluptas.

St. Paul, Rom. 9.

Nay, even a true regard to our own private Good, will engage us not inordinately to purſue Self-Intereſt; it being much hugged, will be ſmothered and deſtroyed.

As we are all born Members of the World, as we are compacted into the Common-wealth, as we are incorporated into any Society, as we partake in any Converſation or Company, ſo by mutual ſupport, aid, defence, comfort, not only the common welfare firſt, but our particular benefit conſequently doth ſubſiſt; by hindring or prejudicing them, the publick firſt, in conſequence our particular doth ſuffer: Our thriving by the common prejudice, will in the end turn to our own loſs. As if one Member ſucketh too much Nouriſhment to it ſelf, and thence ſwelleth into an exorbitant bulk, the whole thence incurreth Diſeaſe, ſo coming to periſh, or languiſh; whence conſequently that irregular Member will fall into a participation of ruine or decay; ſo it is in the ſtate of humane Corporations, he that in ways unnatural, or unjuſt (for Juſtice is that in humane Societies, which Nature is in the reſt of things) draweth unto himſelf the Juice of Profit or Pleaſure, ſo as thence to grow beyond his due ſize, doth thereby not only create Diſtempers in the publick Body, but worketh Miſchief and Pain to himſelf; he muſt not imagine to eſcape feeling ſomewhat of the inconvenience and miſery which ariſeth from publick Convulſions and Diſorders.

So doth Reaſon plainly enough dictate; and Religion with clearer evidence, and greater advantage diſcovereth the ſame.

Its expreſs Precepts are; that we ſhould aim to love our Neighbour as our ſelves, and therefore ſhould tender his Intereſts as our own; that we ſhould not in competition with the greater Good of our Neighbour, regard our own leſſer Good; that we ſhould not ſeek our own things, but concern our ſelves in the good of others; that we ſhould not conſult our own

Eaſe and Pleaſure, but ſhould contentedly bear the burthens of our Brethren:
Phil. 2. 4. Look not every Man to his own things, but every Man alſo to the things
1 Cor. 10. 24. of others; Let no Man ſeek his own, but every Man another's Wealth; Bear
Gal. 2. 6. one anothers Burthens, and ſo fulfil the Law of Chriſt: Charity ſeeketh not its 1 Cor. 13. 5. own; theſe are Apoſtolical Precepts and Aphoriſms; theſe are fundamental Rules and Maxims of our Holy Religion.

It chargeth us induſtriouſly to employ our Pains, liberally to expend our Goods, yea (in ſome Caſes) willingly to expoſe and devote our Lives for the benefit of our Brethren.

It recommendeth to us the Examples of thoſe who have underwent unſpeakable Pains, Loſſes, Diſgraces, Troubles, and Inconveniences of all kinds for the furthering the good of others; the Examples of our Lord, and of his Apoſtles, who never in any caſe regarded their own Intereſts, but ſpent and ſacrificed themſelves to the publick welfare of Mankind.

It repreſenteth us not only as Brethren of one Family, who ſhould
Rom. 12. 5. therefore kindly favour, aſſiſt, and grace one another, but as Members of 1 Cor. 12. 25. one ſpiritual Body (Members one of another) compacted by the cloſeſt Bands of common Alliance, Affection, and Intereſt, whoſe Good much Rom. 12. 15. conſiſteth in the Good of each other, who ſhould together rejoice, and condole with one another; who ſhould care for one anothers Good as for our own; looking upon our ſelves to gain by the Advantage, to thrive in the Proſperity, to be refreſhed with the Joy, to be graced with the Honour, to be endamaged by the Loſſes, to be afflicted with the 1 Cor. 12. 26. Croſſes of our Brethren; ſo that If (as St. Paul ſaith) one Member ſuffer, all the Members ſuffer with it; if one Member be honoured, all the Members rejoice with it.

Theſe which I have already handled are the principal kinds of vitious Self-Love; there are farther ſome ſpecial acts of kin to them, ſprouting from the ſame Stock; which I ſhall touch: Such as Vain-glory, Arrogance, Talking of ones ſelf, Thinking about ones ſelf. Of theſe I ſhall treat more briefly.

SERMON XXXI.

Of Vain-glory, Arrogance, Talking and Thinking of ones Self.

2 TIM. III. 2.

For Men ſhall be lovers of themſelves, &c.

Of Vain-glory.

WHEN a regard to the Opinion, or the deſire of the Eſteem of Men is the main Principle from which their Actions do proceed, or the chief end, which they propound to themſelves: Inſtead of conſcience of Duty, love and reverence of God, hope of the Rewards promiſed, a ſober regard to their true Good, this is Vain-glory. Such was the vain-glory of the Phariſees, who Faſted, who Prayed, who gave Alms, who did all their works that they might be ſeen of Men, and from them obtain the reward of Eſtimation and Applauſe: This is that which St. Paul forbiddeth; Let nothing be done out of ſtrife, or vain-glory.

Mat. 6, &c.
Matt. 23. 5.
Phil. 2. 3.

When Men affect and delight in Praiſe, from mean or indifferent things; as from ſecular Dignity, Power, Wealth, Strength, Beauty, Wit, Learning, Eloquence, Wiſdom or Craft: as, There are many (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) that boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their Riches. Nebuchadnezzar was raiſed with the conceit of having built a Palace for the glory of His Majeſty. Herod was puff'd with Applauſe for his Oration, the Philoſophers were vain in the eſteem procured by their pretence to Wiſdom, the Phariſees were elevated with the Praiſe accruing from external acts of Piety (Faſting twice a Week, making long Prayers, tithing Mint and Cumin;) all which things being in themſelves of little worth, the affecting of Praiſe from them is manifeſtly frivolous and vain. Honour ſhould be affected only from true Vertue, and really good Works.

Pſal. 49. 6.
Φάσκοντες εἶναι σοφοί. Rom. 1. 22.
Rom. 2. 7.

Thoſe who ſeek Glory from evil things (who glory in their ſhame) from preſumptuous tranſgreſſion of God's Law (Hectorly Profaneneſs and Debauchery) from outrageous Violence, from over-reaching Craft, or from any bad Quality, are not only Vain-glorious, but Impudent.

When Men affect Praiſe immoderately, not being content with that meaſure of good Reputation, which naturally doth ariſe from a vertuous and blameleſs Life.

As all other Goods, ſo this ſhould be affected moderately.

It is not worth Induſtry, or a direct Aim.

When they are unwilling to part with the eſteem of Men, upon any accompt, but rather will deſert their Duty, than endure Diſgrace; prizing the Opinion of Men before the Favour and Approbation of God: As it is ſaid of thoſe Rulers, who believed in our Lord, but becauſe of the Pha-

Joh. 12. 43.

Phariſees did not confeſs him, that they might not be put out of the Synagogue, for they loved the glory of Men, rather than the glory that is of God. And thoſe to whom our Saviour ſaid; How can ye believe, who receive glory from one another, but do not ſeek the glory that is of God?

John 5. 44.

When they purſue it irregularly, are cunning and politick to procure it; hunt for it in oblique ways, lay Gins, Traps, and Baits for it; ſuch are Oſtentation of things commendable, fair Speeches, kind Looks and Geſtures, devoid of Sincerity, &c. ſuch ways ambitious and popular Men do uſe.

Τὸ εὐτελὲς τȣ̃το δοξάειον ϗ ἀπόπτυςον. Naz. Ep. 63.

This Practice is upon many accompts vain and culpable, and it produceth great Inconvenience.

1. It is vain, becauſe unprofitable. Is it not a fooliſh thing for a Man to affect that which little concerneth him to have, which having he is not conſiderably benefited? Such manifeſtly is the good opinion of Men; how doth that reach us; do we feel the commotions of their Fancy; doth their Breath blow us any good?

Qui dedit hoc hodie, cras auferat idem.

2. It is vain, becauſe uncertain. How eaſily are the Judgments of Men alter'd? how fickle are their Conceits? the Wind of Heaven is not more fleeting and variable than the wind of popular Air. In a trice the caſe is turned with them; they admire and ſcorn, they approve and condemn, they applaud and reproach, they court and perſecute the ſame Perſon, as their fancy is caſually moved, or as fortune doth favour a Perſon. Hiſtories are full of inſtances of Perſons, who have been now the favourites of the People, preſently the objects of their hatred and obloquy.

—Stultus honores Sæpe dat indignis.

3. It is vain, becauſe unſatisfactory. How can a Man be ſatisfied with the Opinion of bad Judges; who eſteem a Man without good grounds, commonly for things not deſerving regard; who cannot diſcern thoſe things which really deſerve eſteem, good Principles, and honeſt Intention? theſe only God can know, theſe only wiſe and good Men can well gueſs at; it is therefore vain much to prize any Judgment but that of God, and of wiſe Men, which are but few. Praiſe becometh not the Mouth of a Fool.

Falſus honor juvat, &c. Quem niſi mendoſum?

How alſo can a Man rationally be pleaſed with the commendation of others, who is ſenſible of his ſo great Defects, and conſcious to himſelf of ſo many Miſcarriages? which conſidering he ſhould be aſhamed to receive, he ſhould in himſelf bluſh to own any praiſe.

4. It is vain, becauſe fond. It is ugly and unſeemly to Men; they deſpiſe nothing more than acting out of this Principle. It misbecometh a Man to perform things for ſo pitiful a Reward, or to look upon it as a valuable recompence for his Performances; there being conſiderations ſo vaſtly greater to induce and encourage him; the ſatisfaction of Conſcience, the pleaſing God, and procuring his Favour; the obtaining eternal Happineſs.

5. It is vain, becauſe unjuſt. If we ſeek glory to our ſelves, we wrong God thereby, to whom the glory thereof is due. If there be in us any natural endowment conſiderable (Strength, Beauty, Wit,) it is from God, the author of our Being and Life? Is there any ſupervenient or acquiſite perfection (as Skill, Knowledge, Wiſdom) it is from God, who gave us the means and opportunities of getting it, who guided our proceeding and bleſſed our induſtry: Is there any advantage of Fortune belonging to us (as Dignity, Power, Wealth,) it is the gift of God, who diſpenceth theſe things, who diſpoſeth all things by his Providence: Is there any vertuous diſpoſition in us, or any good work performed by us; it is the production of God, who worketh in us to will, and to do according to his good pleaſure: Have we any good that we can call our own; that we have inde-independently and abſolutely made, or purchaſed to our ſelves; if not any, why do we aſſume to our ſelves the glory of it, as if we were its Makers or Authors? 'tis St. Paul's expoſtulation; who made thee to differ? What haſt thou, which thou didſt not receive? And if thou didſt receive it, why doſt thou glory, as if thou hadſt not received it? 1 Cor. 4. 7. John 3. 27.

Phil. 2. 13.

This is that which maketh this Vice ſo odious to God, who is ſenſible of the Injury done him, in robbing him of his due Honour: how ſenſible he is he ſhewed in that great Inſtance of ſmiting Herod with a miraculous Vengeance; becauſe he did not give the glory to God, but arrogated glory to himſelf, receiving with complacence, the profane Flatteries of the People. He hath ſaid, I will not give my Glory to another. Acts 12. 23.

6. It is vain, becauſe miſchievous. It corrupteth our Mind with a lewd Pleaſure, which choaketh the purer Pleaſures of a good Conſcience, ſpiritual Joy and Peace.

It incenſeth God's diſpleaſure, who cannot endure to ſee us act out of ſo mean and baſe a Principle.

It depriveth us of the Reward due to good Works, performed out of pure Conſcience, and other genuine Principles of Piety. Ἀπέχουσι τὸν μισθὸν· They have their Reward. Matt. 6. 1.

7. It is vain, becauſe unbeſeeming us.

It is obſervable, that the Word יהלל ſignifieth to Praiſe or Applaud, and alſo to infatuate or make mad.

Glory doth ſit unhandſomely upon us, who are ſo weak and frail, who are ſo impure and ſinful, who are ſo liable to reproach and blame: 'tis like Purple on a Beggar——a Panegyrick upon a Fly. When all is ſaid that can be well of us, we are ridiculous, becauſe a thouſand times more might be ſaid to our diſparagement and diſgrace. For one good Quality, we have many bad; for one good Deed, we have done numberleſs Evil. The beſt things we have or do, yield greater matter of diſpraiſe than commendation, being full of imperfection and blemiſh. Job 12. 17. Iſa. 44. 25. Eccleſ. 7. 8. 2. 2.

Abſolutely ſo; comparatively much more; what are we in compariſon to God; whoſe excellency if we conſider, and our diſtance from his Perfections, how can we admit Commendation? how can we take any ſhare of that which is wholly his due?

If we conſider even the bleſſed Angels and Saints, and how far ſhort we come of them; what can we ſay, but praiſe them who are ſo worthy, and abhor our ſelves who are ſo vile?

Seeing there are ſuch objects of Praiſe, how can it be conferred on a mortal, vile, wretched Creature?

Of Arrogance.

When a Man (puffed up with conceit of his own Abilities, or unmeaſurably affecting himſelf) doth aſſume to himſelf, that which doth not belong to him; more than in reaſon and juſtice is his due, in any kind, more Honour, more Power, more Wiſdom, &c.)

When he encroacheth on the Rights, invadeth the Liberties, intrudeth into the Offices, intermedleth with the buſineſſes, impoſeth on the Judgments of others. When he will be adviſing, teaching, guiding, checking, controlling others without their leave or liking.

When he will unduly be exerciſing Judgment and Cenſure upon the Perſons, Qualities, and Actions of his Neighbour.

Theſe are Inſtances and Arguments of vitious Self-Love. He that doth rightly underſtand, and duly affect himſelf, will contain himſelf within his own bounds, will mind his own Affairs, will ſuffer every Man undiſturbedly to uſe his own right and liberty in judging and acting.

The effects of this practice are; diſſentions, diſſatisfactions, grudges, &c. for Men cannot endure ſuch fond and unjuſt uſurpations upon their Rights, their Liberties, their Reputations.

Of Talking of ones ſelf.

Περιαυτολογία, Talking about ones ſelf, is an effect and manifeſt ſign of immoderate Self-Love.

It may ſeem a very ſlender and particular Matter, but is of great uſe to be conſidered and corrected.

To talk much of ones ſelf; of his own Qualities, of his Concernments, of his Actions; ſo as either down-rightly to commend ones ſelf, or obliquely to inſinuate grounds of commendation; to catch at praiſe; or however to drive on our own Deſigns and Intereſts thereby.

'Tis an argument of Self-Love; proceeding from a fulneſs of thought concerning ones ſelf; and a fond affection to ones own things, Out of the abundance of the Heart the Mouth ſpeaketh; aſſuredly we think much of that, and we like it greatly, concerning which we are prompt to diſcourſe: the Imaginations and Affections diſcharge themſelves at the Mouth.)

This is a fooliſh and hurtful practice. For,

1. It is vain, and hath no effect. We thereby ſeek to recommend our ſelves to the Opinion of Men; but we fail therein; for our words gain no belief. For no Man is looked upon as a good Judge, or a faithful Witneſs in his own Caſe; A good Judge, and a faithful Witneſs muſt be indifferent, and diſintereſted; but every Man is eſteemed to be favourable, to be partial in his Opinion concerning himſelf; to be apt to ſtrain a point of Truth and Right in paſſing teſtimony or ſentence upon himſelf: He therefore that ſpeaketh of himſelf is not believed, his Words have no good effect on the Hearers: Prov. 20. 6. It is true what the Wiſeman obſerveth: Moſt Men will proclaim every one his own Goodneſs, but a faithful Man who can find? (but it is hard to find one, who in making report, or paſſing judgment concerning himſelf will be faithful and juſt.) 2 Cor. 12. 1. Καυχᾶσθαι οὐ συμφέρει μοι.

2. Yea it uſually hath a contrary effect, and deſtroyeth that which it aimeth at. Self-commendation is ſo far from procuring a good Opinion, that it breedeth an evil one.

Men have a prejudice againſt what is ſaid, as proceeding from a ſuſpected witneſs; one who is biaſſed by Self-Love, and bribed by Self-Intereſt to impoſe upon them. 2 Cor. 10. 18. Not he that commendeth himſelf is approved.

2 Cor. 10. 13. οὐχὶ τὰ ἄμετρα καυχησόμεθα. It is faſtidious, as impertinent, inſignificant, and inſipid; ſpending time, and beating their Ears to no purpoſe; they take it for an Injury to ſuppoſe them ſo weak as to be moved by ſuch words, or forced into a good conceit.

It is odious and invidious: for all Men do love themſelves, no leſs than we our ſelves: and cannot endure to ſee thoſe who affect to advance themſelves, and reign in our Opinion.

It prompteth them to ſpeak evil of us; to ſearch for Faults to cool and check us.

It is therefore a prepoſterous and vain way to think of gaining credit and love: Men thereby infallibly loſe or depreſs themſelves.

Of all words, thoſe which expreſs our ſelves, and our things; I, and mine, &c. are the leaſt pleaſing to Mens Ears.

It ſpoileth Converſation: For he that loveth to ſpeak of himſelf, doth leaſt love to hear others ſpeak of themſelves; and ſo is not attentive.

If a Man have worthy Qualities, and do good Deeds; let them ſpeak for him; they will of themſelves extort commendation; his ſilence about them, his ſeeming to neglect them will enhance their worth in the opinion of Men. Prating about them, obtruding them upon Men will mar their Credit; inducing Men to think them done not out of love to vertue, but for a vain-glorious deſign. Thus did Cicero, thus have many others Γέγονα ἄφρων καυχώμενος. 2 Cor. 12 11.
blaſted the glory of their vertuous Deeds.

3. Suppoſing you get the belief, and the praiſe you aim at, to have 2 Cor. 11. 17.
complacence therein is bad, or dangerous; 'tis a fond ſatisfaction, 'tis a vitious pleaſure; it puffeth up, it befooleth.

4. It is againſt Modeſty. It argueth the Man hath a high Opinion of himſelf; If he believe himſelf what he ſaith, he hath ſo; if not, why would he perſuade others to have it?

Modeſty cannot without Pain hear others ſpeak of him; nor can with any grace receive Commendations; it is therefore great impudence to ſpeak of himſelf, and to ſeek Praiſe.

5. We may obſerve it to be a great temptation to ſpeak falſely. Men when they affect Commendation, will gladly have it to the utmoſt; are loth to wrong themſelves, or to loſe any thing; they will therefore at leaſt ſpeak to the extreme bounds of what may be ſaid in their own behalf; and while they run upon the extreme borders of Truth, it is hard to ſtop their Carriere, ſo as not to launch forth into Falſhood: 'Tis hard to ſtand upon the brink, without falling into the Ditch.

It is therefore adviſeable in our Diſcourſe to leave our ſelves out as much as may be; never, if we can help it, to ſay, I, mine, &c. never ſeeking, commonly ſhunning, and declining occaſion to ſpeak of our ſelves: It will bring much convenience and benefit to us.

Our Diſcourſe will not be offenſive; we ſhall decline Envy, and Obloquy; we ſhall avoid being talked of; we ſhall eſcape temptations of Vanity; we ſhall better attend to what others ſay, &c.

If we will be ſpeaking of our ſelves, it is allowable to ſpeak ſincerely and unaffectedly concerning our Infirmities and Faults; as St. Paul does of 2 Cor. 12. 5.
himſelf. 11. 30.

There are ſome Caſes wherein a Man may commend himſelf; as in Plut. πῶς τις ἑαυτὸν ἐπαινέσειε.
his own defence; to maintain his Authority; to urge his Example, &c. ſo doth St. Paul often. He calleth it folly to Boaſt (becauſe generally ſuch it is) yet he doth it for thoſe Ends.

Let another praiſe thee, and not thine own Mouth, a Stranger, and not thine own Lips. Prov. 27. 6.

Thinking of our ſelves.

Thinking of our ſelves, with glee and pleaſure; this is a great nouriſher of immoderate Self-Love, for the more they indulge to a gazing upon themſelves with delight, the more they grow in love, the more paſſionately they come to dote on themſelves.

It is good to reflect inward, and to view our Souls; but we ſhould do it ſo, as to find a wholſome diſpleaſure and regret in beholding our ſelves ſo foul and impure, ſo weak and defectuous, ſo ugly and deformed; if we do thus, we ſhall not over-love our ſelves.

Some general Remedies of Self-Love.

1. To reflect upon our ſelves ſeriouſly and impartially, conſidering our natural Nothingneſs, Meanneſs, Baſeneſs, Imperfection, Infirmity, Unworthineſs: the meanneſs and imperfection of our Nature, the defects and deformities of our Souls, the failings and miſdemeanors of our Lives. He that doth this cannot ſurely find himſelf lovely; and muſt therefore take it for very abſurd to dote on himſelf. He will rather be induced to diſlike, deſpiſe, abhor and loath himſelf.

2. To conſider the lovelineſs of other Beings ſuperiour to us; comparing them with our ſelves, and obſerving how very far in Excellency, Worth, and Beauty they tranſcend us; which if we do, we muſt appear no fit objects of Love, we muſt be checked in our dotage, and diverted from this fond affection to our ſelves. It cannot but dazle our Eyes, and dull our Affections to our ſelves.

If we view the Qualities and Examples of other Men, who in Worth, in Wiſdom, in Vertue, and Piety do far excell us; their noble Endowments, their heroical Atchievements; what they have done and ſuffered in obedience to God (their ſtrict Temperance and Auſterity, their laborious Induſtry, their Self-denial, their Patience, &c.) how can we but in compariſon deſpiſe and loath our ſelves?

If we conſider the bleſſed Angels and Saints, in Glory and Bliſs; their Purity, their Humility, their Obedience, how can we think of our ſelves without Contempt and Abhorrence?

Eſpecially if we contemplate the Perfection, the Purity, the Majeſty of God, how muſt this infinitely debaſe us in our Opinion concerning our ſelves, and conſequently diminiſh our fond Affection toward things ſo vile and unworthy?

3. To ſtudy the acquiſition and improvement of Charity toward God and our Neighbour. This will employ and transfer our Affections; theſe drawing our Souls outward, and ſettling them upon other Objects will aboliſh or abate the perverſe love toward our ſelves.

4. To conſider, that we do owe all we are and have to the free Bounty and Grace of God; hence we ſhall ſee that nothing of Eſteem or Affection is due to our ſelves; but all to him, who is the Fountain and Author of all our Good.

5. To direct our Minds wholly toward thoſe things which rational Self-Love requireth us to regard and ſeek: To concern our ſelves in getting Vertue, in performing our Duty, in promoting our Salvation, and arriving to Happineſs: This will divert us from Vanity: A ſober Self-Love will ſtifle the other fond Self-Love.

SERMON XXXII.

Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all Men.

ROM. XII. 17.

Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all Men.

THE World apparently is come to that paſs, that Men commonly are afraid or aſham'd of Religious Practice, hardly daring to own their Maker, by a conſcientious obſervance of his Laws. While Profaneneſs and Wickedneſs are grown outrageouſly bold, ſo that many declare their ſin as Sodom; Piety and Vertue are become pitifully baſhful; Iſa. 3. 9. ſo that how few have the Heart and the Face openly to maintain a due regard to them; Men in nothing appear ſo reſerved and ſhy, as in avowing their Conſcience, in diſcovering a ſenſe of their Duty, in expreſſing any fear of God, any love of Goodneſs, any concern for their own Soul. 'Tis Wiſdom, as they conceive, to compound with God, and to collude with the World; reſerving for God ſome place in their Heart, or yielding unto him ſome private acknowledgement; while in their publick demeanor they conform to the World, in commiſſion of Sin, or neglect of their Duty; ſuppoſing, that God may be ſatisfied with the inviſible part of his Service, while Men are gratified by viſible compliance with their ungracious Humors.

Such proceeding is built on divers very fallacious, abſurd, and inconſiſtent grounds or pretences; whereby Men egregiouſly do abuſe themſelves, and would impoſe on others; namely, theſe, and the like:

They would not by a fair ſhew and ſemblance of Piety give cauſe to be taken for Hypocrites; whereas by diſſembling their Conſcience, and ſeeming to have no fear of God before their Eyes, they incur an Hypocriſie, no leſs criminal in Nature, but far more dangerous in conſequence, than is that which they pretend to decline.

They would not be apprehended Vain-glorious for affecting to ſerve God in the view of Men; whereas often at the bottom of their demeanor a moſt wretched and worſe than Phariſaical Vain-glory doth lie; They forbearing the performance of their Duty merely to ſhun the cenſure, or to gain the reſpect of the vileſt and vaineſt Perſons.

They would be deemed exceedingly honeſt and ſincere, becauſe forſooth all their Piety is cordial, pure, and void of ſiniſter regards to popular Eſteem; whereas partial Integrity is groſs Nonſenſe; whereas no pretence can be more vain, than that we hold a faithful Friendſhip, or hearty reſpect for God, whom we openly diſclaim, or diſregard; whereas alſo it is eaſily diſcernible, that although their Piety is not, yet their Impiety is popular, and affected to ingratiate with Men.

They would be taken for Men of brave, courageous, and maſculine Spirits, exalted above the weakneſſes of Superſtition and Scrupuloſity; whereas indeed out of the baſeſt Cowardiſe, and a dread to offend ſorry People, they have not a Heart to act according to their Duty, their Judgment, their beſt Intereſt.

They would ſeem very modeſt in concealing their Vertue; while yet they are moſt impudent in diſcloſing their want of Conſcience; while they are ſo preſumptuous toward God, as to provoke him to his face by their diſobedience; while they are not aſhamed to wrong and ſcandalize their Brethren by their ill behaviour.

Iſa. 65. 3.
Jer. 6. 17.
8. 12.

They would not be uncivil or diſcourteous in thwarting the Mind and pleaſure of their Company; as if in the mean time they might be moſt rude toward God in affronting his Will and Authority; as if any rule of Civility could oblige a Man to forfeit his Salvation; as if it were not rather moſt cruel Diſcourteſie, and barbarous Inhumanity to countenance or encourage any Man in Courſes tending to his Ruine.

They would not be ſingular and uncouth in diſcoſting from the common road, or faſhion of Men; As if it were better to leave the common Duty, than the common Faults of Men; as if Wiſdom and Vertue were ever the moſt vulgar things; as if the way to Heaven were the broadeſt and the moſt beaten way; as if Rarity ſhould abate the price of good things; as if Conſpiracy in Rebellion againſt God might juſtifie or excuſe the Fact; as if it were adviſeable to march to Hell in a troop, or comfortable to lie there for ever among the damned Crew of aſſociates in Wickedneſs.

They cannot endure to be accounted Zealots or Bigots in Religion; As if a Man could love or fear God too much; or be over-faithful and careful in ſerving him; As if to be moſt earneſt and ſolicitous (not in promoting our own Fancies, but) in diſcharging our plain Duties could be juſtly reproachable; or were not indeed highly commendable.

Theſe things I may hereafter fully declare; in the mean time it is manifeſt that ſuch a practice is extreamly prejudicial to Religion and Goodneſs; ſo that it may be very uſeful to employ our Meditations upon this Text of the Apoſtle, which directly doth oppoſe and prohibit it.

The ſame Text he otherwhere (in his Second Epiſtle to the Corinthians) doth repeat, in the ſame terms (only inſerting a Clauſe more fully explaining his ſenſe) backing his Precept with his own Example; for, We (ſaith he there) did ſo manage the buſineſs of collecting and diſpenſing Alms, as to avoid that any Man ſhould blame us in this abundance, which is adminiſtred by us; providing for honeſt things, not only in the ſight of the Lord, but in the ſight of Men.

2 Cor. 8. 21.

The words do imply a Precept of very large extent, and touching a great part of our Duty; even all thereof which is publick and viſible; for which we are accomptable to the World, whereof Man can take any cogniſance; which concerneth all our Speech and Converſation, all our Dealing and Commerce, all our deportment relating to humane Society, civil or ſpiritual.

I ſhall firſt a little conſider its meaning and deſign; then I ſhall propoſe Reaſons and Inducements to its obſervance; then I ſhall declare the Folly of thoſe Principles and Pretences which obſtruct that obſervance.

I. The meaning of it is, that we ſhould have a ſpecial care of our external Demeanor and Converſation, which cometh under the view and obſervation of Men; that it be exempted from any Offence or Blame, yea, that it be comely and commendable.

Ἄμεμπτοι.
Phil. 2. 15.
Ἀνέγκλητοι.
Col. 1. 22.

The Terms, in which it is expreſſed, are notably emphatical: We are directed προνοεῖν, to provide, to uſe a Providence and Forecaſt in the Caſe: E'er we undertake any Deſign, we ſhould deliberate with our ſelves, and conſider on what Theatre we ſhall act, what Perſons will be Spectators, what Conceits our Practice may raiſe in them, and what Influence probably it will have on them. We ſhould not ruſh on into the publick view, with a precipitant Raſhneſs, or blind Negligence, or contemptuous Diſregard, not caring who ſtandeth in our way, who marketh what we do, what Conſequence our Proceeding may have on the ſcore of its being publick and viſible: We ſhould adviſe before-hand, lay our Buſineſs, and on ſet Purpoſe order our Behaviour with a regard to thoſe, to whoſe Sight and Notice we expoſe it; foreſeeing how our Actions may affect or incline them. So we muſt provide; what Things? καλὰ, Things fair and handſome; Things not only good, innocent, and inoffenſive to the ſight of Men; but goodly, pleaſant, and acceptable to well-diſpoſed Beholders; ſuch as our Apoſtle doth otherwhere recommend, when he chargeth us to regard, ὅσα σεμνὰ, whatever things are venerable, ὅσα προσφιλῆ, what- Phil. 4. 8. ever things are lovely, ὅσα εὔφημα, whatever things are of good report, εἴ τις ἔπαινος —— whatever things are laudable? and when he doth exhort us to walk εὐσχημόνως, handſomly and decently, in a comely Garb and Faſhion Rom. 13. 13. of Life: This may add an Obligation to ſome things not directly preſcri- 1 Theſſ. 4.12. bed by God, which yet may ſerve to adorn Religion; but it cannot detract any thing from what God hath commanded: It doth comprehend all Inſtances of Piety and Vertue, practicable before Men; it certainly doth exclude all commiſſion of Sin, and omiſſion of Duty; for that nothing can be fair or handſome, which is ugly in God's ſight, which doth not ſuit to his Holy Will.

Such things we muſt provide, ἐνώπιον πάντων ἀνθρώπων, before all Men; not only before ſome Men; to whom we bear a particular reſpect, of whom we ſtand in awe, upon whom we have a deſign; but univerſally before all Men; as having a due conſideration of all thoſe, upon whom our Deportment may have influence; not deſpiſing or diſregarding the obſervation of the meaneſt or moſt inconſiderable Perſon whatever.

But in this Practice, to avoid Miſapprehenſions, we muſt diſtinguiſh; for it is not required, that we ſhould do all things openly, nor intended that we ſhould do any thing vainly; but that we ſhould act conſtantly according to the Nature and Reaſon of things, with upright and pure Intention: The Apoſtle doth not mean, that in our Practice we ſhould reſemble the Phariſees, whom our Lord reproveth for doing their Alms be- Matt. 6. 1, 5. fore Men, for loving to pray ſtanding in the Synagogues, for doing all their Matt. 23. 5. Works to be ſeen of Men; performing thoſe Acts of Piety openly in the Corners of the Street, which ſhould have been done ſecretly in the Cloſet; and ſo doing them out of Vanity, and ambitious Deſign, to procure the good Opinion and Praiſe of Men: He doth not intend, that we ſhould aſſume a formal Garb of ſingular Vertue; that we ſhould aim to ſeem better than we are, counterfeiting any point of Religion, or Vertue; that we ſhould affect to appear even as good as we are, expoſing all our Piety to common view: That we ſhould ſound a Trumpet before us, making an Matt. 6. 2. Oſtentation of any good Deeds, catching at Reputation, or Applauſe for them; that we ſhould do any commendable thing chiefly to obtain the good Opinion of the World, or to eſcape its Cenſure; infinitely far it was from the Apoſtle's Intention, that we ſhould be like thoſe whited Sepulchers, which Matt. 23. 27. appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead mens Bones and all Uncleanneſs: that is, like thoſe Phariſees, who did outwardly appear Righteous, 28. but within were full of Hypocriſie and Iniquity: No;

In ſome Caſes we muſt be reſerved, and keep our Vertue cloſe to our ſelves; and ever under a fair Shew there muſt be a real Subſtance of Good, Τὸ σεμνὸν ἀπλάστως— Τὸ ἔυφημον ἀψοφητί. Ant. 1. §. 9. 2. §. 5. together with an honeſt Intention of Heart; a good Conſcience muſt always lie at the bottom of a good Converſation; the outſide muſt be good, but the beſt ſide muſt be inward; we muſt endeavour to ſanctifie our Life and Converſation, but we muſt eſpecially labour to purifie our Hearts and Affections.

Join the Precept with others duly limiting it, and it doth import, that with pure Sincerity, and unaffected Simplicity (void of any ſiniſter, or ſordid Deſign) we ſhould in all Places, upon all Occaſions, in all Matters carefully diſcharge that part of our Duty which is publick, according to its Nature, Seaſon, and Exigency, that is publickly; not abſtaining from the practice of thoſe good Deeds, which cannot otherwiſe than openly be well performed; or the conſpicuous performance whereof is abſolutely needful in regard to God's Law and the ſatisfaction of our Conſcience, is plainly ſerviceable to the Glory of God, is very conducible to the Edification of our Neighbour, or which may be uſeful to good Purpoſes concurrent with thoſe principal Ends: Matt. 7. 17. Luke 6. 44. Pſal. 1. 3. We ſhould, as good Trees, from a deep root of true Piety, in due ſeaſon naturally, as it were ſhoot forth good Fruits, not only pleaſant to the ſight, but ſavoury to the taſte, and wholſome for uſe; 2 Cor. 8. 21. as St. Paul, who, as he ſaith of himſelf, that he did provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men, ſo he alſo doth affirm, 2 Cor. 1. 12. that his Rejoicing was this, the Teſtimony of his Conſcience, that in Simplicity and godly Sincerity--- he had his Converſation in the World.

There are indeed ſome Duties, or Works of Piety and Vertue, the Nature whereof directeth, that in the practice of them we ſhould be reſerved; ſuch as thoſe wherein the World is not immediately concerned, and which may with beſt advantage be tranſacted between God and our own Souls; as private Devotion, meditation on God's Word and Will, the diſcuſſion of our Conſciences, voluntary Exerciſes of Penitence, and the like; ſuch alſo be thoſe, wherein the intervention or notice of few Perſons is required; as Deeds of particular Charity in diſpenſing Alms, good Advice, friendly Reproof; the which ſort of Duties our Lord hath taught us to perform in ſecret, Ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ. Matt. 6. 4, 6. or as cloſely as we may; ſtudiouſly keeping our Obſervance of them from the Eyes of Men; thereby aſſuring our Sincerity to our ſelves, and guarding our Practice from any Taint of Vanity, or Suſpicion of Hypocriſie; as alſo in ſome Caſes avoiding to cauſe Prejudice or Offence to our Neighbours: Mat. 6. 1. Take heed (ſaith our Lord) that ye do not your Alms before Men; Matt. 6. 6. and Thou when thou prayeſt, enter into thy Cloſet; Matt. 6. 17. and Thou when thou faſteſt, anoint thine Head, and waſh thy Face, that thou appear not unto Men to faſt; Matt. 18. 15. and, If thy Brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee, go and tell him his Fault between thee and him alone.

But there are divers other Duties, the diſcharge whereof neceſſarily is notorious and viſible; the Publick being the Stage on which they are to be acted; the tranſaction of them demanding the entercourſe of many Perſons, who are the Objects or Inſtruments of them, or are ſomewiſe concerned in them: Such is that negative Duty, of a general Nature, and vaſt Comprehenſion, which we may call Innocence: Pſal. 34. 14. that is a total abſtinence from Sin, or forbearance to tranſgreſs any divine Command; Job 1. 1, 2, 3. which is a part of Job's Character, That Man was perfect and upright, one that feared God, and eſchewed Evil; the which Duty bieng to be practiſed at all times in every place, cannot avoid being obſervable.

Such are alſo divers poſitive Duties; for ſuch is the Profeſſion of our Faith in God, and acknowledgment of his heavenly Truth, revealed in the Goſpel of our bleſſed Saviour; which is ſtiled confeſſing our Lord before Men, Rom. 10. 10. and is (as St. Paul telleth us) indiſpenſably requiſite to Salvation.

Such is joining in that publick Adoration, whereby the Honour and Authority of God are upheld in the World, with ſeemly Expreſſions of Reverence; Pſa. 99. 5. 132. 7. the which is to be performed ſolemnly, and (as the Holy Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh) in the midſt of the Congregation. Pſal. 22. 22.

Such is Zeal in vindication of God's Honour, when occaſion requireth, from blaſphemous Aſperſion, or from ſcandalous Offences againſt it.

Such are Juſtice, Equity, Fidelity, and Ingenuity in our Dealings; Meekneſs, Gentleneſs, Patience, Kindneſs, and Courteſie in our Converſe; Peaceableneſs in our Carriage, and charitable Beneficence; the Objects whereof are moſt general, according to thoſe Apoſtolical Precepts, That our Moderation (or Phil. 4. 5. our Equity and Ingenuity) be known unto all Men; that we ſhew all Meek- Tit. 3. 2. neſs to all Men; 2 Tim. 2. 24. that we muſt not ſtrive; but be gentle unto all Men; that we 1 Theſſ. 5. 14. be patient toward all Men; that we purſue Peace with all Men; Heb. 12. 14. that As we Rom. 12. 18. have opportunity we ſhould do good unto all Men; ſhould abound in Love one to- Gal. 6. 10. wards another, and towards all Men; ſhould ever follow that which is good both 1 Theſſ. 3. 12. among our ſelves, and to all Men; ſhould liberally diſtribute to the Saints, 1 Theſſ. 5. 15. and to all Men; 2 Cor. 9. 13. in performing which ſo general Duties, how can a Man paſs incognito, how can he ſo deal with all Men indiſcernibly?

Such are likewiſe Gravity and Modeſty in our Behaviour; Sweetneſs, Soberneſs, Aptneſs to profit and edifie the Hearers in our Diſcourſe; Moderation and Temperance in our corporeal Enjoyments: Induſtry in our Buſineſs and the Works of our Calling, integrity in the Management of any Office or Truſt committed to us; a conſtant Practice of which Vertues is 2 Tim. 4. 12. not only injoined to us as our particular Duty, but for publick Example. Tit. 2. 4, 7.

Such are ſeaſonable defence of the Truth, and oppoſing of Error; the commendation of Vertue, and reprehenſion of notorious Sin, with the like.

Such things muſt be practiſed, becauſe indiſpenſable Duties; but they cannot be done out of ſight, or barring the obſervation of Men; they do involve Publickneſs; they carry a Light and Luſtre with them, attracting all Eyes to regard them; it is as impoſſible to conceal them as to hide the Sun from all the World; or to conceal a City that is ſet upon a Hill; Matt. 5. 14. for nothing (as St. Chryſoſtom ſaith) doth render a Man ſo illuſtrious, although he ten thouſand times would be hid, as an open practice of Vertue.

Οὐδὲν γὰρ οὕτως ἐπίσημον ἄνδρα ποιεῖ, κἂν μυριάκις λανθάνειν βούληται, ὡς ἀρετῆς ἐπίδειξις. Chryſ. in Matt. 5: 16.

Wherefore the Works of Mercy (ſaith St. Auſtin) the Affection of Charity, the Sanctity of Godlineſs, the Incorruptneſs of Chaſtity, the Moderation of Sobriety, theſe are perpetually to be held, whether we are in the publick, or at home; whether before Men, or in the Cloſet, whether we ſpeak, or keep ſilence.

Opera miſericordiæ, affectus charitatis, ſanctitas pietatis, incorruptio caſtitatis, modeſtia ſobrietatis, ſemper hæc tenenda ſunt; ſive cùm in publico ſumus, ſive cùm in domo; ſive ante homines, ſive in cubiculo; ſive loquentes, ſive tacentes, Aug. in Ep. 1. Joh. Tract. 8.

In the practice of them, 'tis true, we mainly ſhould reſpect the approving our Conſcience to God, with expectation of our Recompence from him: not being much concerned in the Judgment or Pleaſure of Men; purely conſidered in 1 Cor. 4. 3. themſelves; not aiming at any Intereſt of Credit or Profit from them, as a 1 Theſſ. 2. 4, 5. Gal. 1. 10. Reward of our Work; We ought (as St. Auſtin ſaith) while we do good, to be ſeen, but we ought not to do it, that we may be ſeen; the end of our Joy, the bound of our Comfort ſhould not be there; ſo that we ſhould think our —— non cum fama ſed cùm rerum natura deliberandum eſt. Sen. Ep. 81.

Si times ſpectatores non habebis imitatores; debes ergò videri, ſed non ad hoc debes facere, ut videaris, non ibi debet eſſe finis gaudii tui, non ibi terminus lætitiæ tuæ, ut putes te totum fructum conſecutum eſſe boni operis, cùm viſus fueris atque laudatus. Ibid.

ſelves to have obtained the whole fruit of a good work, when we have been ſeen and commended : No, whatever we do, we ſhould (as the Apoſtle directeth) do it, as the Servants of Chriſt, doing the Will of God from the Heart ; doing it heartily as to the Lord, and not unto Men ; knowing that of the Lord we ſhall receive the reward of the Inheritance.

Eph. 6. 6.
Col. 3. 23, 24.

Yet nothing in the mean time ſhould hinder us from performing ſuch neceſſary Duties ; ſtrictly and exactly, with our moſt diligent Care and Endeavour, even in that Light, which their Nature doth carry in it.

How much ſoever of our Vertue or Piety out of Humility, or Modeſty we may conceal ; yet we muſt be careful of diſcovering any Vice or Irreligion ; either by notoriouſly committing any thing forbidden by God, or omitting any thing commanded by him.

This we ſhould not do upon any Terms, upon any Pretence whatever ; No wicked Faſhion ſhould engage us, no bad Example ſhould inveagle us, no Favour of Men ſhould allure us, no Terror ſhould ſcare us thereto ; we ſhould not out of Fear, out of Shame, out of Complaiſance, out of affected Prudence, or politick Deſign ; out of deference to the Quality, Dignity, or Authority of any Perſon ; out of regard to any Man's Deſire, or Pleaſure ; We ſhould not to decline Offence, Envy, Blame, Reproach, Ill-treatment, or upon any ſuch Accompt, comply in any ſinful Practice, wave any Duty, neglect any Seaſon of performing a good Deed, whereby we may glorifie God, or edifie our Neighbour, or promote the welfare of our own Soul.

To ſuch a Practice, according to the intent of St. Paul's Injunction, we are obliged ; and thereto we may be induced by divers Conſiderations ; particularly by thoſe which we ſhall now propoſe.

Bona conſcientia prodire vult & conſpici, ipſas nequitiæ tenebras timet. Sen. Ep. 27.

1. We may conſider, that the Publick is the proper, natural, and due Place of Goodneſs : It ſhould dwell in the Light, it ſhould walk freely and boldly every-where, it ſhould expoſe it ſelf to open view, that it may receive from rational Creatures its due Approbation, Reſpect and Praiſe ; it by publickneſs is advanced, and the more it doth appear, the more beautiful, the more pleaſant, the more uſeful it is ; yielding the fairer Luſtre, the greater Influence, the better Effects ; thereby diffuſing and propagating it ſelf, becoming exemplary, inſtructive and admonitive ; drawing Lovers and Admirers to it ; exciting and encouraging Men to embrace it ; wherefore it is very abſurd that it ſhould ſculk or ſneak ; it is a great damage to the Publick, that it ſhould retire from common notice.

Omne malum aut timore aut pudore natura perfudit. Tert. Apol. cap. 1.
Job 24. 13—17.

On the other hand, it is proper for Wickedneſs never to appear, or to ſhew its Head in view ; it ſhould be confined to Darkneſs and Solitude, under guard of its natural Keepers, Shame and Fear ; it ſhould be exterminated from all Converſation among rational Creatures, and baniſhed to the infernal Shades : Publickneſs doth augment and aggravate it ; the more it is ſeen, the more ugly, the more loathſome, the more noxious it is ; its odious Shape being diſcloſed, its noiſome Steams being diſperſed, its peſtilent Effects being conveyed thereby.

Rom. 13. 12.
Eph. 5. 11.
John 3. 21.
Eph. 5. 13.

Wherefore to ſmother Vertue (that fair Child of Light) in privacy, and to vent Sin (the works of darkneſs) openly, is quite to tranſplace things out of their natural Situation and Order ; according to which we are taught by our Lord, that He that doth truth cometh to the Light, that his Deeds may be manifeſt ; and by St. Paul, that Every one, who doth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh he to the light, leſt his Deeds ſhould be reproved ; So indeed it is, and will be, where Conſcience retaineth its due Sway and Force ; were a due Reſpect and Reverence are preſerved for Goodneſs.

As that any Good cometh from detection of Sin, is an accidental Advantage; ſo that any Miſchief doth ever follow the Manifeſtation of Vertue, is an unnatural Abuſe, the which may well be prevented: There can be no Danger of acting any good moſt evidently, if we do withal act ſincerely, having purified our Hearts from diſhoneſt Intention, and from ambitious Vanity; the fear of which ſhould not wholly drive Vertue under the Hatches, and bring Vice upon the Stage. But,

2. We ſhould conſider, that we cannot really, in any competent or tolerable meaſure be good Men, without approving our ſelves ſuch in our Converſation before Men.

Whatever may be pretended, it commonly doth happen, and it ever is to be ſuſpected that the inviſible Piety, which is not accompanied with viſible Conſcientiouſneſs, is falſe, or is no Piety at all; or that they who have little Care and Conſcience to ſerve God publickly, have much leſs to ſerve him privately; or that ſuch as betray a ſcandalous Negligence of their Ways, will hardly maintain a careful Watch over their Hearts; for the ſame Cauſes (be it profane Infidelity, or looſeneſs of Principles, or ſupine Incogitancy, or Sloth, or Stupidity) which diſpoſe them to diſregard God and his Laws before the World, more effectually will incline them to neglect God, and forget their Duty by themſelves, where beſide their own Conſcience, there is no Witneſs, no Judge, no Cenſor to encourage, or reproach them: But admit it poſſible, and put caſe, that ſometimes the Heart and Converſation may not run parallel; that a Man may better govern his interiour Thoughts and Affections, than he doth manage his exteriour Behaviour and Actions, that a Man ſecretly may cleave to God, although he ſeemeth openly to deſert him; yet this will not ſuffice to conſtitute, or denominate a good Man; becauſe much of Goodneſs, as we have ſhewed, even the nobler half thereof (that part whereby God is moſt glorified, and whereby the World is moſt benefitted) doth lie in open and viſible Practice; that Vertue therefore muſt be very imperfect, that Obedience muſt be very lame, which is deficient in ſo great a part.

Jam. 2. 10.

As there can be no fair pretence to Goodneſs, where ſo little thereof is conſpicuous; ſo there can be no real Integrity thereof, where ſo much of Duty is wanting.

Our Lord hath taught us, that Every Tree is known by its Fruit; and, St. James ſaith, that Faith is ſhewed by Works; and ſo it is, that a Man can hardly be good in any reaſonable degree without appearing ſuch; Impiety may, but Piety cannot be quite concealed: As Gold may be counterfeited for all is not Gold that gliſtereth) yet true Gold always doth look like Gold; ſo although bad Men ſometimes may ſeem good, yet good Men alſo muſt ſeem ſuch, appearing in their own native Temper and Luſtre.

Luke 6. 44.
Jam. 2. 18.

Goodneſs cannot be diſguiſed in the ſhape of Evil, becauſe Simplicity and Innocence are eſſential Ingredients of it; any mixture of notorious Sin, any viſible neglect of Duty aſſuring (yea formerly making) a want of it, or a real Defect therein: It may be daubed with falſe Aſperſions, it may be dimmed by the Breath of unjuſt, and uncharitable Cenſures; but wiping them off, its natural Hue certainly will appear.

Wherefore if we would ſatisfie our ſelves in our own Conſciences, or juſtifie our ſelves to others, that we are truly good, we muſt (without Partiality, or diſtinguiſhing between publick and private) like the Holy Pſalmiſt, have reſpect unto all God's Commandments; we, like Zachary and Elizabeth, muſt walk in all the Commandments and Ordinances of the Lord, blameleſs; we muſt, like David, accompliſh God's Will; we muſt obſerve St. Paul's Rule, to abſtain, ἀπὸ παντὸς εἴδους πονηροῦ, from both every kind of evil, and every bad appearance. But farther, (Numb. 15. 39, 40.

Pſal. 119. 6.
Luke 1. 6.
Ποιῶν πάντα τὰ θελήματα μου.
Acts 13. 22.
1 Theſſ. 5. 23.

3. A great care of our good Behaviour before Men is neceſſary in regard to Almighty God; whoſe juſt Intereſt is preſerved, whoſe due Homage is payed, whoſe Honour is promoted thereby; the ſame being greatly prejudiced and impaired by the contrary defailance.

It is a clear point of Juſtice towards God, as to render all Obedience to him, ſo particularly that which conſiſteth in an open Acknowledgment and Service of him; for as he made and doth preſerve not only the Heart, but the Tongue, the Members, the whole Man, ſo all muſt concur in rendring their Tribute of Reverence and Service to him. Rom. 12. 1.

1 Cor. 10.31. The Apoſtle doth preſcribe, that whatever we do, we ſhould do all to the Glory of God; and well he might, ſeeing that to glorifie God is indeed to execute the main deſign of our Creation, to apply our Faculties to their beſt uſe, to atchieve the moſt proper and moſt excellent Work, whereof we are capable; to do that, which is the worthieſt and happieſt Employment of Angels, which all the Company of Heaven with moſt ardent Deſire, with moſt zealous Ambition, with reſtleſs endeavour doth purſue: And this we cannot better, we cannot otherwiſe do, than by an apparent good Converſation. For,

He that apparently in all his Actions maketh conſcience of obeying God's Laws, thereby doth evidence his firm Perſuaſion concerning the Exiſtence and Providence of God, doth adhere to him againſt all Adverſaries of Piety, and all Temptations to Rebellion; doth avow his Sovereign Majeſty and Authority; doth yield him due Veneration and Obedience; doth ſhew right Apprehenſions of him, and juſt Affections towards him; implying that he doth moſt highly eſteem him, doth moſt heartily love him, doth chiefly dread him, doth repoſe his Truſt and Hope in him for all his Happineſs; hath a great opinion of his Wiſdom, a great awe of his Power, a great ſenſe of his Goodneſs; the which Practice is in it ſelf a direct and formal Glorification of God, in his own Perſon.

He alſo thereby doth farther promote the Glory of God, inſtructing, exciting, and encouraging others to the like practice of deferring Reſpect and Service to God; for naturally Men have ſuch a Capacity, ſuch Aptitude, ſuch Proclivity to Religion (or to the Acknowledgment and Worſhip of their Maker) that when they behold others ſeriouſly and earneſtly purſuing it, they are eaſily drawn to conſpire therein; eſpecially thoſe who are not utterly perverted and corrupted by ill Cuſtom.

Ἀρετῆς ἄσκησις τίμιον μὲν κτῆμα τῷ ἔχοντι, ἥδιστον δὲ θέαμα τοῖς ἐπιτυγχάνουσι. Baſ. Ep. 42.

Ὅταν γὰρ ἄπιστος, &c. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. θ. (p. 524.)

And whereas good Converſation hath a native Beauty affecting Beholders with Delight, whereas the Fruits of Vertue have a pleaſing Sweetneſs, grateful to all who taſte them; Men from that Sight and that Senſe, will preſently be moved to commend the Wiſdom, and to bleſs the Goodneſs of him, who was pleaſed to inſtitute ſo excellent a Religion, to enact ſo beneficial Laws, to preſcribe ſo wholſome Duties to us: For, when (ſaith the moſt divine Father) an Infidel ſhall ſee thee a Believer to be κατεσταλμένον——ſtaunch, ſober, orderly, he will be aſtoni'd, and will ſay, in truth great is the God of Chriſtians! What Men hath he made? What Perſons, out of what Perſons hath he made them? how from Men hath he made them Angels? If one abuſe them they do not rail; if one ſmite them, they do not reſent; if one injure them, they pray for him that doth the Offence; they know not to remember ill Turns, they skill not to be vain, they have not learnt to lie, they cannot abide to forſwear, or rather to ſwear at all, but ſooner would chuſe to have their Tongue cut out, than to let an Oath ſlip out of their Mouth.

So may we really glorifie God; and otherwiſe than by open Practice we cannot do it; for Glory doth require a publick Stage; it implying (as Seneca ſaith) the conſent of many worthy Perſons declaring their Eſteem; it being, as Cicero defineth it, the agreeing Praiſe of good Men, with an incorrupted Vote, judging well of an excellent Vertue.

Gloria conſenſum, multorum exigit—Conſentire in hoc plures inſignes & præſtantes viri debent, ut claritas ſit. Sen. Ep. 102.

Gloria eſt conſentiens laus bonorum in corrupta voce benè judicantium de excellente virtute. Cic. 3. Tuſc init.

Gloria eſt frequens de aliqua fama cum laude. Cic. de Inv. 2. 39.

Wherefore toward our being enabled to glorifie God, two things muſt concur; that we be good Men, and that we be openly ſuch.

That we be good Men, becauſe otherwiſe our Commendation will have no worth, or weight; for Praiſe is not comely in the mouth of Sinners: It is no Ornament to be commended by ill Men, to whoſe Words little regard is due, little truſt can be given.

Non eſt ſpecioſa laus in ore peccatoris. Ecclus. 15. 9.

That we be good openly, avowing God in Practice conducing to his Honour: otherwiſe no Glory can accrue to him from our Goodneſs: We may ſerve God, and pleaſe him in private; but we cannot by that Service glorifie him; at leaſt at preſent and here in this World: It is true the cloſeſt Piety will yield Glory to God at the laſt, when our Lord ſhall come to be glorified in his Saints, and admired in them that believe; but to deſign ſuch a future Glorification of God is not enough; it is our Duty to glorifie God now, that we may be rewarded for it, and that he may requite us with Glory hereafter.

2 Theſſ. 1. 10.

God himſelf telleth us in the Pſalm, Whoſo offereth Praiſe, he glorifieth me. And how can Praiſe be offered, or to what purpoſe will it be offered otherwiſe than apparently, either in Word or Deed, by oral or by real Expreſſion, to the Ears, or to the Eyes of Men, ſo as to occaſion in them the Production of worthy Conceptions and due Affections towards God? In ſuch a manner the holy Man did offer it, who ſaid, I will declare thy Name unto my Brethren, in the midſt of the Congregation I will praiſe thee; I will praiſe the Lord with my whole Heart, in the Aſſembly of the Upright, and in the Congregation; He did it ſometimes with his Mouth, which is a notable part of our Converſation; but we may do it continually by our Life; for, He (ſaith St. Auſtin) who praiſeth God with his Tongue, cannot do that always; but he that praiſeth God by his Manners can always do it.

Pſal. 50. 23.
Pſal. 22. 22.
Pſal. 111. 1.
107. 32.
109. 30.

Qui Deum laudat lingua, non ſemper poteſt; qui moribus Deum laudat, ſemper poteſt. Aug. in 1 Ep. Joh. Tr. 8.

This Motive is by the great Maſters of our Chriſtian Practice frequently urged; for Saint Paul wiſheth the Philippians to be filled with the fruits of Righteouſneſs, which are by Jeſus Chriſt, unto the praiſe and glory of God; He prayeth for the Theſſalonians, that God would fulfil all the good pleaſure of his goodneſs, and the work of faith with power, that the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt might be glorified in them: He particularly doth incite the Corinthians to Works of Charity, that by that miniſtration Men might be induced to glorifie God, rendring him thankful Praiſe for their beneficial Obedience.

Phil. 1. 11.
2 Theſſ. 1. 11,—
2 Cor. 9. 11,—13.

St. Peter likewiſe doth exhort all Chriſtians to have their Converſation honeſt among the Gentiles, that they might by their good Works, which they ſhould behold, glorifie God in the day of viſitation, (that is perhaps, when they carefully do view, and reflect on them.)

1 Pet. 2. 12.
Ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς.

Our Lord himſelf thus chargeth his Diſciples, Let your Light ſo ſhine before Men, that they may ſee your good Works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven; they did obſerve his Command, and the Effect did follow, many being converted to God no leſs by the radiant Integrity of their Life, than by the perſuaſive Efficacy of their Doctrine: and, In this (ſaith our Lord again) is my Father glorified, if ye bear much Fruit? what Fruit was

Matt. 5. 16.
Chryſ.
John 15. 8.

that? what but of good Works viſible to the Eye, and perceptible to the taſte; otherwiſe how could Men thence find Cauſe to glorifie God?

In fine, this is declared to be the peculiar Deſign of our Religion, or of 1 Pet. 2. 9. the whole Chriſtian Inſtitution; to this end we are made a choſen Generation, a royal Prieſthood, a holy Nation, a peculiar People, that we ſhould ſhew forth the Praiſes (or Vertues) of him, who hath called us out of Darkneſs to his marvellous Light; not only by our Profeſſion, but in our Practice, declaring his Goodneſs.

On the other hand, by ſtifling our Vertue and Conſcience, in an open compliance with Sin, or neglect of our Duty, we greatly ſhall diſhonour Tit. 1. 16. God; for thereby in effect we deny him, and deſert him; we injure his Majeſty, and diſclaim our Allegiance to him; we intimate our mean Opinion of him, and ſmall Affection to him; we betray our want of Reverence to his Excellency, of Dread to his Greatneſs, of Love to his Goodneſs; of Hope in his Promiſes, and gracious Overtures of Mercy; of Fear in regard to his ſevere Juſtice and fierce Menaces: ſo immediately we diſhonour him, and we thereby alſo do countenance Diſreſpect and Diſobedience to him: And our Behaviour tendeth to produce, or to confirm the like irreligious Diſpoſitions of Mind, and impious Practices in others; ſo that with horrible Diſengenuity we croſs the Deſign of our Creation, and violate our greateſt Obligations toward our Maker.

Indeed what greater Affront, or more heinous Indignity can we offer to Tit. 1. 16. God, than openly before the World, by the moſt real Expreſſions of our Works, to deny and diſown him; than to be notoriouſly aſhamed, or afraid to avow him for our Lord and Maſter; than to expreſs no Senſe of our Duty to him, no Reverence of his Authority, no Gratitude for his Benefits to us; than viſibly to prefer any other Conſideration or worldly Advantage before a Regard to his Will and Pleaſure?

In this open Sin doth outgo private Wickedneſs, and putteth down even the worſt Hypocriſie (beſide its own) that it not only offendeth God, but ſorely woundeth his Honour, and expoſeth his glorious Name to Contempt; by which Conſideration ſuch Miſcarriages are frequently aggravated in Holy Scripture: So in the Prophets God complaineth of his People, for having by their ſcandalous Crimes profaned his holy Name among the Heathen: Ezek. 36. 21— Iſa. 52. 2. So St. Paul expoſtulateth with the Jew, Thou that boaſteſt of the Law, through breaking the Law diſhonoureſt thou God? ſo Nathan told David, that Rom. 2. 23.- God would puniſh him, becauſe by his bad Deed he had given great occaſion 2 Sam. 12. 14. to the Enemies of the Lord to blaſpheme. But.

4. We ſhould be careful of our good Behaviour in the ſight of Men, that we may thereby maintain the Dignity and Repute of our Chriſtian Profeſſion, which by our naughty or negligent Demeanour will be much diſparaged and diſgraced.

Moſt evident it is to Reaſon, that a viſible Practice, conformable to the Rules of our Religion, cannot otherwiſe than exceedingly commend and grace it; for how can the goodneſs of a Rule more ſurely obtain its due Commendation, than from its being applied to obſervable Practice and Experience.

Aſſuredly Charity, Meekneſs, Humility, Patience, Sobriety, Diſcretion, and all Chriſtian Vertues, as in themſeves they are very amiable and venerable to all Men, as they yield great Benefit and much Pleaſure to thoſe whom their Conſequences do touch; ſo they do ingratiate the Law which preſcribeth them, they bring Eſteem to the Principles, whence they are derived; Rom. 14. 18. He (as the Apoſtle ſaith) that in theſe things ſerveth Chriſt, is both acceptable to God, and approved of Men, as the Follower of a moſt excellent Rule.

We may alſo conſider, that a conſpicuous Practice, according to our Religion, is a demonſtrative Proof, that we do ſeriouſly and firmly embrace it, or that we are heartily and ſteadily perſuaded of its Truth; which is no ſmall credit to any Profeſſion, arguing that it hath a good foundation in Reaſon, apt to bottom and ſuſtain a ſolid Faith.

And as thereby we pregnantly do evidence, that we our ſelves do highly value the noble Privileges, the excellent Promiſes, the precious Rewards exhibited in the Goſpel; ſo we thereby do breed a like eſteem in others; upon whom the authority of Men apparently Vertuous and Conſcientious infallibly will have a forcible influence.

Such a Practice will have a great ſtroke toward evincing the truth and reality, the perfect excellency, the notable ſtrength and efficacy of our Religion; plainly ſhewing, that it is not a meer Name, an idle Pretence, a weak Fancy, a dry Speculation, a chimærical Dream; but a vigorous and maſculine Principle, able to produce moſt worthy Fruits of ſubſtantial Goodneſs, profitable to Men; conducible to our own welfare, and to the benefit of others.

As gallant Actions, becoming a noble Rank, elevated above the vulgar level, do illuſtrate and dignify Nobility it ſelf; ſo doth a worthy Converſation, beſeeming our high Station in the heavenly Kingdom, our near Alliances to God, thoſe ſplendid Titles and glorious Privileges aſſigned to every faithful Chriſtian in the Evangelical Charter, render our State admirable, and make it ſeem an excellent advantage to be a Chriſtian.

Hence in the Apoſtolical Writings an obſervance of the Evangelical Laws is ſo much and often enforced by this Conſideration; for upon this account we are exhorted to a careful diſcharge of our Duty, that we may Tit. 2. 10.
adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things; We are urged to have our Phil. 1. 27.
Converſation worthy of the Goſpel; to walk worthy of the Vocation, wherewith Eph. 4. 1.
we are called, to behave our ſelves as worthily becometh Saints (that is, Eph. 5. 3.
Perſons inſtituted in ſo Holy a Religion, and deſigned to ſo peculiar excel- Rom. 16. 2.
lency in Vertue) to walk as Children of the Light, that is, of Truth and Eph. 5. 8.
Knowledge revealed from Heaven) to walk worthy of God, who hath called 1 Theſſ. 2. 12.
us unto his Kingdom and Glory; worthy of the Lord, unto all well-pleaſing, be- Col. 1. 10.
ing fruitful in every good work; the which enforcements of Duty do imply a viſible Practice, producing the viſible effects of Ornament and Credit to our Religion, recommending it to the Minds and Conſciences of Men.

Contrariwiſe, the defect of good Converſation before Men in Chriſtians, is upon divers accounts diſgraceful to our Religion. For,

It tempteth Men to judge, that we our ſelves do not heartily believe its Truth, or value its Worth; That we do not approve its Doctrine for reaſonable, or take its advantages for conſiderable; or deem the name and ſtate of a Chriſtian to be honourable; ſeeing we are not concerned to own them, or do not care to engage our reputation in avowing and abetting them in that way, which doth beſt ſignifie our Mind and Meaning: For Men certainly will judge of our ſenſe, not ſo much by what we ſay, as from what we do; not by our verbal Profeſſion or Pretence, but from our Practice, as the ſureſt indication of our Heart.

Wherefore when they hear us to confeſs our Faith, and ſee us act like Infidels, they will be forced to eſteem us either for ſubdolous Hypocrites, or for inconſiſtent Fools; who aſſume the name of Chriſtians, and pretend to great advantages thence, yet in effect do not mind, or regard them; highly commending the Rules of our Religion, but not at all obſerving them; greatly admiring the Example of our Saviour, but not caring to imitate it; deſcribing Heaven for a moſt happy place, but not ſtriving to get thither, in the ſole way, which our Lord preſcribeth, of faithful and diligent obedience to his Precepts.

° Εἰ δέ τις ἐλεγχθῇ πράξας τι ἄνομον, ὁ τοιοῦτος οὐ μόνον ἑαυτὸν ἔβλαψεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ βλασφημίαν προσέτριψε τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. Conſt. Ap. 2. 8.

Seeing, I ſay, this repugnance between our Profeſſion and our Practice, will induce Men to charge us with Hypocriſie and Folly; and if the Profeſſors be taken for Counterfeits or Fools, the profeſſion it ſelf will hardly 'ſcape from being held Impoſture, or Folly.

Our Religion at leaſt will thence be expoſed to the Cenſures of being no better than a fond Device, and a barren Notion, unpracticable, ineffectual, and inſignificant to any good purpoſe.

The viſible misbehaviour, I ſay, of Chriſtians will aſſuredly derive obloquy and reproach on Chriſtianity, if not as bad, yet as vain, impotent, impertinent, and uſeleſs; eſpecially thoſe who are diſaffected to it, will hence take advantage to inſult upon it with contemptuous Scorn; to what, will they ſay, do your fine Rules ſerve? What effects do your glorious hopes produce? where are the fruits of that holy Faith, and heavenly Doctrine, which you ſo extol and magnifie?

Whereas alſo bad Converſation commonly doth not only deprive Men of the Benefits which our Religion promiſeth, but doth carry with it hurtful fruits; Men that ſee or feel them will be apt to impute them to Religion:

If a Chriſtian be unjuſt, cenſorious, factious, any-wiſe offenſive or troubleſome, although Irreligion be the cauſe of ſuch things, yet Religion muſt bear the blame, and they preſently exclaim, Quantum religio potuit ſuadere malorum.

Whence St. Paul (who was a powerful Inſtructor doth impreſs Matters of Duty by the moſt proper Motives) doth often, and upon all oc-2 Cor. 6. 3. Ἵνα μὴ μωμηθῇ. caſions urge this Conſideration; He chargeth us to give no offence in any thing, that the Miniſtery (or Evangelical diſpenſation) be not blamed, or expoſed to the cenſure of any captious Momus; He biddeth us to forbear Rom. 14. 16. harſh Judgment, and all uncharitable Dealing, that our good be not evil ſpoken of? He preſſeth the diſcharge of our Duty in each Calling and Rela-1 Tim. 6. 1. tion, that by neglect thereof the Goſpel be not defamed; Let (ſaith he) as many Servants as are under the Yoke, count their own Maſters worthy of Tit. 2. 5. all Honour, that the Name of God, and his Doctrine be not blaſphemed; and,
1 Tim. 5. 14. Let Women be diſcreet, chaſte, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own Huſ- bands, that the word of God be not blaſphemed; and, I will that younger Women marry, bear Children, guide the Houſe (ſo as) to give no occaſion to the Adverſary (that is, to Perſons diſaffected to Chriſtianity) to ſpeak reproachfully (of it:) which Diſcourſe, by clear parity of Reaſon, may be applied to any other State, or Relation.

Now ſeriouſly what greater Miſchief can we do, what heavier Guilt may we contract, than by working diſhonour to God's adorable Name, than by caſting reproach on God's heavenly Truth, than by drawing a ſcandal on that holy Religion, which the Son of God came down from Heaven to eſtabliſh, for the glory of God, and ſalvation of Mankind? Surely next after directly blaſpheming God, and defying Religion with Rom 2. 24. δι' ὑμᾶς. our own Mouths, the next Crime is to make others to do ſo, or in effect to do it by their profane Tongues.

There remain divers Arguments of very great Moment, which the time will not ſuffer me to urge; and therefore I muſt reſerve them to another occaſion.

SER-

SERMON XXXIII.

Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all Men.

ROM. XII. 17.

Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all Men.

I Have formerly diſcourſed upon this Apoſtolical Precept; and having declared the meaning of it (briefly importing, that we ſhould have a ſpecial care of our external Behaviour, coming under the view and obſervation of Men, that it be perfectly innocent and inculpable,) I did propoſe divers Motives inducing to the obſervance of it; but divers others of great importance the time would not allow me to urge; I ſhall therefore now proceed to offer them to your Conſideration.

I did then ſhew that a regard to the reaſon and nature of things, to the ſatisfaction of our Conſcience, to the honour of God, and to the credit of our Religion, did require from us a good Converſation before Men: I now farther add, that,

I. The real intereſt of Piety and Vertue do exact ſuch a Converſation as the moſt effectual way of upholding, advancing, and propagating them among Men.

Example is a very powerful thing either way; both for attraction to Good, and ſeduction to Evil; ſuch is the nature of Men, that they are more apt to be guided by the practice of others, than by their own Reaſon, and more eaſily can write after a Copy, than by a Rule; that they are prone to imitate whatever they ſee done, be it good or bad, convenient or inconvenient, profitable or hurtful, emulating the one, and aping the other; that they love to be in the faſhion, and will go any whither in Company, preſuming of ſupport, defence and comfort therein; that they will ſatisfie their Minds, and juſtifie their doings by any authority, deeming that laudable or allowable, or at leaſt tolerable and excuſable, for which they can alledge Precedents; judging that if they are not ſingular, they are innocent, or however not very culpable; that hardly they will undertake any thing without Countenance, whereby their Modeſty is in ſome meaſure ſecured, and Partners engaged to bear a ſhare with them in the Cenſure, to which their deportment is liable. Hence a viſible good Converſation will have a great efficacy toward the promotion and propagation of goodneſs; the authority of that being adjoined to the native worth and beauty, to the rational plauſibility, to the ſenſible benefit of Vertue, will cogently draw Men to it; it will be a clear Pattern, whereby they ſhall be informed what they are obliged, and what they are able to perform; it will be a notable Spur ſmartly exciting them to mind and purſue their Duty; it will be a vigorous Incentive, inflaming their Courage, and provoking an emulation to do well.

The

The viſible ſuccour and countenance of many, eſpouſing the Cauſe of Goodneſs by their Practice, will aſſuredly bring it into requeſt and vogue, and thence into current uſe and faſhion; ſo juſt a Cauſe cannot fail to proſper, having any reaſonable Forces to maintain it; it will have great ſtrength, great boldneſs and aſſurance, when a conſiderable Party doth appear engaged on its ſide.

Yea ſometimes even the Example of a few will do it great ſervice; the rarity giving a ſpecial luſtre to their Vertue, and rendring it more notable; according to that intimation of the Apoſtle; when he thus doth exhort Phil. 2. 14, 15. the Philippians to a chearful and forward practice of Goodneſs; Do all things (ſaith he) without Murmurings and Diſputings; that ye may be blameleſs and harmleſs, the Sons of God, without rebuke in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe Generation, among whom ye ſhine as Lights in the World.

A good Converſation doth notifie good Men to one another, and draweth them together, and combineth them in a Party, for the protection of Goodneſs, heartning and aiding one another therein.

Such Advantages Goodneſs doth always need; for it ever hath in the World many Adverſaries, ſtriving by violent force to beat it down, or by treacherous Fraud to ſupplant it; who uſe their authority and intereſt to ſuppreſs it; who by their evil Example do ſeduce from it; who labour by detraction to blaſt it, by ſcorn and reproach to diſcourage it, by divers temptations and baits to entice from it; who combining their Forces with the wicked Spirits, and with the corrupt Inclinations of Men, do raiſe a mighty Party for Wickedneſs.

Wherefore to balance ſuch Oppoſitions, Goodneſs doth need Friends to maintain it; not only Friends in Heart, or ſecret Well-wiſhers; but open Friends, who frankly will avow it, and both in Word and Deed will ſtoutly abet it.

A demure, baſhful, timorous Friendſhip will rather prejudice, than help it; for nothing will more animate its Foes to aſſail and perſecute it, than obſerving its Friends to ſlink and ſneak; When good Men hide their Faces, as if they were aſham'd of their Goodneſs, then bad Men will grow more impudent, and inſolent in their outrages againſt it.

Wherefore, if we would have Goodneſs hold up its head, we muſt openly take its part; if we would not be guilty of its ruine, we muſt ſtand up to uphold it; for whoever openly complieth with Sin, or neglecteth his Duty, may well be charged with its ruine; ſince if thou ſo deſerteſt Goodneſs, another after thy Pattern may do the like, and a third may follow him; ſo the neglect of it may ſoon be propagated, until at length it may be quite abandoned, and left deſtitute of ſupport: If it doth not thus happen, it will as to thee be accidental, and no thanks to thee for its better Fortune.

The declenſion of Piety is not perhaps more to be aſcribed to any other Cauſe, than to this, than that Men who approve Goodneſs in their Hearts, are ſo backward to ſhew it in their Practice; that good Men do ſo affect Retirement, and wrapping up their Vertue in Obſcurity; that moſt Men think it enough if in the cauſe of Religion againſt Profaneneſs and Diſſoluteneſs they appear Neuters, and do not impugn it: For if in a time of Infection all ſound Men do ſhut up themſelves, and all ſick Men walk abroad, how neceſſarily muſt the Plague reign in the place?

II. Charity toward our Neighbour demandeth from us a great care of our Converſation before Men.

The law of Charity, which is the great law of Chriſtianity, doth oblige us earneſtly to further our Neighbour's Good of all kinds, eſpecially that, which is incomparably his beſt Good, the welfare of his Soul; which how can we better do, than by attracting him to the performance of his Duty to God, and by withdrawing him from the commiſſion of ſin? And how can we do that without an apparently good Converſation, or without plainly declaring, as occaſion ſheweth, for Vertue, both in Word and Deed? how can a ſhy reſervedneſs conduce to that end? What will inviſible Thoughts or Affections of Heart confer thereto?

'Tis a precept of Charity, that we ſhould purſue things, wherewith one may edifie another; and how can we perform that Duty, without imparting our Mind, and as it were transfuſing it into others; ſo as by converting them from Error and Sin, by inſtilling good Principles, by exciting good Reſolutions, to lay in them a foundation of Goodneſs, or by cheriſhing and improving the ſame to rear a ſtructure of Vertue in them? How can we mutually edifie, without mutually adviſing Vertue, exhorting to it, recommending and impreſſing it by our exemplary Behaviour?

Rom. 14. 19.
1 Cor. 14. 26.

The Apoſtles do injoin, that we ſhould exhort one another, and edifie one another; that we ſhould conſider one another, to provoke (or to whet and inſtigate one another) to love, and to good works; the which can no wiſe be performed, without expreſly declaring for Goodneſs and remarkable acting in its behalf; To commend and preſs it by Word is a part of our Duty, but not all of it, nor ſufficient to this purpoſe; eſpecially ſeeing we cannot urge that with good confidence, nor ſhall be held ſerious in pleading for it, which we do not our ſelves embrace in practice; For how can we expect, that our Reaſon ſhould convince others, when it doth not appear really to have perſuaded our ſelves; when our doings evidently do argue the weakneſs of our Diſcourſe?

Παρακαλεῖτε ἀλλήλους.
1 Theſſ. 5. 11.
Heb. 10. 24.
Εἰς παροξυσμόν.

Words hardly will ever move without Practice, although Practice ſometimes will perſuade without Words; according to that of St. Peter; Ye Wives be in ſubjection to your own Husbands, that if any obey not the Word, they may without the Word be won by the Converſation of the Wives, while they behold your chaſt Converſation coupled with fear (or due reverence to them.)

1 Pet. 3. 1.

Again, We are frequently commanded to ſhun the giving any Offence; or the putting a ſtumbling-block, or an occaſion to fall in the way of our Brother; that is, to do any thing which any-wiſe may confer to his incurring any Sin; the which Precepts are violated not only by poſitive and active influence, by propoſing erroneous Doctrine, evil Advice, fraudulent enticements to Sin, or diſcouragements from Duty; but alſo by with-holding the Means, ſerving to prevent his Tranſgreſſion; ſuch as a tacit indulgence, or connivance, when good admonition may reclaim him; the omiſſion of good Example, when it is ſeaſonable, and probably may prove efficacious; for theſe Neglects have a moral cauſality, inducing or encouraging the commiſſion of Sin; our Silence, our forbearing to Act, our declining fair opportunities to guide him into the right way will be taken for ſigns of Approbation and Conſent; and conſequently as Arguments to juſtifie or excuſe bad Practice, in proportion to the Authority and Eſteem we have; which ever will be ſome in this caſe, when they favour the Infirmity of Men.

1 Cor. 10. 32.
8. 9.
2 Cor. 6. 3.
Rom. 14. 13.

Charity doth farther oblige us, upon juſt Cauſe, and in due Seaſon, to check and reprove our Neighbour miſdemeaning himſelf; for, Warn the diſorderly, ſaith the Apoſtle; and, Have no fellowſhip (ſaith he) with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them; and, Thou ſhalt not

1 Theſſ. 5. 14.
Eph. 5. 11.
Levit 19. 17.

(ſaith the Law) hate thy Brother in thy Heart, thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy Neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him; where forbearance of Reproof is implied, to ſhew not only a defect of Charity, but hatred of our Brother; and a good reaſon is intimated for it, becauſe in ſo doing, we ſuffer Sin to lie upon him; not hindring his progreſs in it, not endeavouring his converſion from it; but Reproof is an overt Act, involving ſomewhat of openneſs and plain freedom, ſuch as the Wiſeman doth prefer before cloſe good-will; for, Open rebuke (ſaith he) is better than ſecret love. Prov. 22. 5.

We are all thus far the keepers of our Brethren, and it is a charge incumbent on us, by all good means to preſerve them from the worſt of Miſchiefs.

In fine, there is plainly nothing more inconſiſtent with true Charity, than ſuch a compliance with Sin, or neglect of Duty in the ſight of our Neighbour, which is ſcandalous, or may prove contagious to him; for how can we love him, whoſe chief good, whoſe eternal welfare we do not tender? whom we do not fear to ſeduce into the way of extream Miſery, or do not at leaſt care to lead into the way of Happineſs; whom without any check we can ſuffer to forfeit the beſt Goods, and to incur the ſaddeſt Calamities?

Wherefore if the love of our ſelves, and a ſober regard to our own welfare be not ſufficient to induce us, yet a charitable diſpoſition, and a concernedneſs for our Neighbour (for our Brethren, our Relations, our Friends) ſhould move us to a good, innocent, vertuous, fruitful and exemplary Converſation; If we do not care to ſave our ſelves, yet let it pity us to damn and deſtroy others by our negligence. Rom. 14. 15.

III. But if Charity will not move us, yet Juſtice, exacting from us a care of our good Converſation before Men, ſhould conſtrain us thereto.

Exemplary and edifying Converſation is a debt which we owe to the World; a good office impoſed on us by the Laws of common Humanity.

When without our own hurt or inconvenience we can do conſiderable good to our Neighbour, he hath a title thereto (granted by the common Author of our Nature, the abſolute Lord of all we are or have) and he may juſtly demand it from us; as we in like caſe might claim it from him, and certainly would in Matters agreeable to our Humour expect it; Wherefore ſeeing good Converſation not only doth not harm or incommode us, but is moſt beneficial to our ſelves, and it exceedingly may benefit our Neighbour, it is moſt juſt that we ſhould afford it to him; it is no more than fair dealing to do it, to neglect it is a real Injury to him.

To ſet ill example before our Neighbour, or (which is in part, and in effect the ſame) to with-hold good Example from him (for not to give a good Example is a bad thing, and ſo a bad Example; this) I ſay is plainly a great Iniquity, and a wrong to him. For,

Is it not an Injury to offer a Cup of Poyſon to any Man, to invite him to drink it, to be his taſter of it, ſo drawing him to take it off without ſuſpicion, or fear of deadly Miſchief? Is it not an Injury to forbear warning him thereof, or not to deter him from it, when it ſtandeth before him, and he is ready to put it to his Mouth? Would not ſuch a Man in all conſcionable eſteem paſs for a murtherer of his Neighbour?

Is it not a great Wrong to carry any Man out of his way (out of a right, eaſie, fair, and ſafe Road) into Mazes, Thickets, and Sloughs, or into intricate, foul, dangerous bye-ways? Is it not wrongful, when he doth wander or err, not to reduce him thence, not to ſet him in the right way?

Is it not very foul dealing to bring a Man to a ſteep Precipice, and thence to leap down before him? Is it not ſo, not to ſtop him, when he is on the brink, and blindly moving forward to caſt himſelf down head-long?

If theſe be injurious dealings, then palpably it is far more ſuch to yield any Inticements or Encouragements, yea not to put Obſtructions, if we are able, to our Neighbour's incurring Sin, which to his Soul is all thoſe things; the moſt baneful Venom, the moſt woful Exorbitancy, the moſt pernicious Gulf that can be.

We by ſinning do not only (as the Wiſeman ſaith) wrong our own Souls, but we do alſo wrong the Souls of others; drawing them, or driving them by the efficacious impulſe of our Example into Miſchief and Miſery; for When (ſaith St. Paul) ye ſin ſo againſt the Brethren, and wound their weak Conſcience, ye ſin againſt Chriſt; he there ſpeaketh of bad Example; the which he not only affirmeth to be ſinful in regard of Chriſt, but calleth it ſinning againſt our Brethren; and ſuppoſeth that we thereby do wound, or ſmite their Conſcience; which to do is ſurely no leſs wrong to them, than if we ſhould aſſault, beat, and wound their Bodies; the wounds of Conſcience being of all moſt grievous, and producing moſt inſupportable Affliction; according to that of the Wiſeman, The ſpirit of a Man will bear his Infirmities, but a wounded ſpirit who can bear?

Prov. 8. 36.

1 Cor. 8. 12.

Ὁ γὰρ ἁμαρτάνων ἐπὰν ἴδῃ τινα ὅμοια αὐτῷ δρῶντα οἰκοδομηθήσεται εἰς τὸ τὰ αὐτὰ ποιεῖν. Conſt. Ap. 2. 17.

Τύπτοντες αὐτῶν τὴν συνείδησιν ἀσθενοῦσαν ——

Prov. 18. 14.

Indeed by thus hurting our Neighbour, we do him a wrong, not only very great in it ſelf, but ſuch as may probably be irreparable, for which hardly we can ever be able to make him any reſtitution or compenſation; for a better Example ſcarce will reach all, whom a bad Example hath touched; the beſt Example hardly will avail to undo that, which a bad Example hath done; If thereby we have engaged our Neighbour in Sin, we by no means can reſtore his loſt Innocence; or prevent his ſaying, Wo be to me, for I have ſinned; It will be very difficult to recover him into that ſtate (that ſound condition of Soul) from which we did move him; it will however coſt him, if not a final ruine, yet a ſore Repentance; the pangs whereof no compenſation, which we can yield, will requite: The Wounds which we thereby do inflict may rankle, and prove incurable; they aſſuredly will find no eaſie Cure; they muſt however either in conſequence, or in the correction be very painful; and they will leave an ugly Scar behind them.

Lam 5. 16.

1 Cor. 8. 11.

The injuſtice of this Practice may alſo farther appear, upon divers ſpecial Accounts.

All Men eſteem Pity a Debt, which one Man oweth to another, as liable to Grief and Miſery; (the obligation whereto is written in the Bowels of each Man) which Pity will incline to ſuccour the Object of it in danger or diſtreſs; wherefore every Man by the natural Law is bound to endeavour the prevention or the reſcue of another falling into Miſchief; according to that of St. Jude, Of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference, and others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire; whence to draw Men into Sin by ill Practice, or not to reſtrain them from it by good, is unjuſt, as a pitileſs hard-hearted, cruel thing.

Jude 22, 23.

1 Sam. 3. 13. (His Sons made themſelves vile, and reſtrained them not.)

Again, All Men hold Flattery to be a practice very abuſive, or more than ſimply wrongful: as with Injury joining Contempt and Cozenage: taking advantage of a Man's Infirmity to work Prejudice to him; it is indeed a miſchievous, a pernicious, and withal a perfidious, an inſidious, an enſnaring Practice; for, A flattering Mouth (ſaith the Wiſe-man) worketh

Prov. 31. 30. Favour is deceitful.

Prov. 26. 28. 29. 5. worketh ruine, and A Man that flattereth his Neighbour, ſpreadeth a Net for his feet? But Flattery is not only verbal; the worſt Flattery is not that whereby Men ſooth and gloze with their Lips, encouraging others by fictitious Commendations to perſiſt in bad Courſes; there is a tacit Flattery, when by our connivance at Sin we ſeem to approve it; there is a real Flattery when by our compliance with Sin, we recommend it to our Comrades; Theſe do not look ſo groſly, yet do inſinuate our Mind, and commonly do inveagle to Sin more effectually; Men being more apt to truſt our Deeds than our Words, being more pleaſed in our vouching their Actions by a participation in them, and running a common hazard with them, than in our ſtraining to commend, or to excuſe them: whence it is, that groſs Flattery hath its effect chiefly upon ſimpler Folks, but this ſubtile Flattery doth often gull and abuſe Perſons of greateſt Capacity.

Again, A good Converſation before Men is a part of that due reſpect, which we owe to them; There is a regard, and a kind of reverence to be had toward every Man; which ſhould engage us to behave our ſelves decently in his Preſence, ſignifying a Conſideration and eſteem of his Perſon, of his Opinion, of his Reſentment, of his Affection toward us: To do any foul or unhandſome thing is a contempt of him, a rudeneſs toward him, an affront put on him; whereby in effect we do ſlight, diſparage, and reproach him; implying, that we do little value his Judgment, that we care not for his Good-will; that we preſume he hath not the ſenſe to diſcern, or hath not the Spirit to diſlike, or muſt have the Patience to comport with our unſeemly and unſavoury Carriage; And if to do other unhandſome things before Men is ſuch an Indignity offered to them, then it is eſpecially ſuch to commit Sin before them, which is the moſt ugly, the moſt ſordid, the moſt loathſome behaviour that can be; there is no deformity, no turpitude in Nature comparable to Sin; nothing ſo offenſive, ſo diſtaſtful, ſo abominable to a rational ſenſe; ſo that the Prov. 14. 21. 11. 12. Wiſe-man's Saying is very true, taken any-way, He that deſpiſeth his Neighbour, ſinneth; 'tis both a Sin to contemn him; and ſinning is an argument of contempt toward him; Nor can we better obſerve St. Peter's Injunction, 1 Pet. 2. 17. that we Honour all Men, than by forbearing to ſin in their Preſence, out of reſpect to them. But farther, IV. Let us conſider, that a good Converſation before Men is a publick Benefit, a great advantage to the World, and common ſtate of Men.

It is not only a good office of Charity to this or that Man; but it layeth a general Obligation on our Country, on our Age, on Poſterity it ſelf; upon which a fruitful Life, an exemplary Vertue may have notable influence.

As notorious Sin is a plague to the World, throwing Infection and Death about it; provoking the Wrath of Heaven, and thence deriving Vengeance on it; So notable Vertue is a general Bleſſing, producing moſt wholſome and comfortable Effects to Mankind.

For how can one more oblige the Publick, than by conferring help to uphold the Reputation, and to propagate the entertainment of thoſe things which are the main props of the World, for the ſake of which it ſtandeth, and by the means of which it is ſuſtained; than by preſerving the vertue and power of Conſcience, which is the band of all Society, the guardian of Faith and Honeſty, the beſt enſurer of Juſtice, Order, and Peace in the State; Prov. 14. 34. 20. 28. (that which exalteth a Nation, and eſtabliſheth a Kingdom) than by producing and promoting thoſe things, which certainly will procure the Favour and Bleſſing of God on any People?

How can a man better deſerve of the world, than by concurring to ſtop the contagion of ſin, and the overſpreading deluge of iniquity, together with all the lamentable miſchiefs conſequent on them; than by averting the fierce wrath, and ſevere judgments of God, which a general prevalence of wickedneſs neceſſarily will bring down?

Moſt men pretend to be concerned even for the honour of their Country; and how can we better promote that, than by checking the progreſs of ſin, which will not only be the bane, but is (as Solomon telleth us) the reproach of any people?

Prov. 14. 34.

It may poſſibly be, it hath really been, that the conſpicuous vertue of a few men (yea ſometimes of one ſingle perſon) hath leavened a Country, hath ſeaſoned an age, hath imbued poſterity with an admiration of goodneſs, and with an affection to it. (One man, ſaith St. Chryſoſtome, enflamed with zeal, may ſuffice to reform an entire people.) So among the Pagans, one Perſon did ſet up the Study of Morality, and worthily was ſtyled the parent of (that moſt uſeful) Philoſophy, whereby he did exceedingly beneſit mankind, and did confer much toward preparing men for the reception of our heavenly Philoſophy.

Ἀρχεῖ εἷς ἄνθρωπος ζήλῳ πεπυρωμένος ὁλόκληρον διορθώσασθαι δῆμον. Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. α.

Socrates philoſophiæ parens. Cic.

Such our Lord deſigned his Apoſtles to be; for, Ye (ſaith he) are the lights of the world, ye are the ſalt of the earth; and ſuch in effect they did prove, God by them (as St. Paul ſaith) manifeſting the favour of his knowledge in every place; they not onely by their heavenly doctrine, but chiefly by the luſtre and influence of their holy example, converting the world from impious errours and naughty practices, unto true religion, and vertuous converſation: They did lead men to goodneſs not only by the ears, but by the eyes, ſeeing their excellent life, and walking as they had them for enſample.

Matt 5. 13, 14.
2 Cor. 2. 14.
Phil. 3 17.
1 Cor. 11. 1.
1 Cor. 4. 16.

It conſequently may be, yea hath been, that the ſingular integrity of one, or of a few perſons, diſplaying it ſelf, hath appeaſed divine wrath, and hath ſtaved off imminent ruine from a people. So one Noah publickly maintaining, and preaching righteouſneſs, did preſerve the whole race of men from extirpation: So ten perſons avowing righteouſneſs would have kept Sodom from that ruful deſtruction: So one good man (notably owning God, and interpoſing for the concerns of piety) might have prevented that calamitous vengeance, which fell upon Iſrael; as Jeremy told before, and Ezekiel affirmed after it; Run ye to and fro (ſaith God in Jeremy) through the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, and ſee now and know, and ſeek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that ſeeketh truth, and I will pardon it; and, I ſought for a man (ſaith God in Ezekiel) among them, that ſhould make up the hedge, and ſtand in the gap before me for the land, that I ſhould not deſtroy it; but I found none: therefore have I poured mine indignation upon them. There was then a remnant of thoſe, who cloſely did ſerve God; and perhaps ſeven thouſand unknown perſons, who had not in their hearts deſerted religion; but this did not avert God's wrath, or preſerve the Nation from captivity; as a few openly profeſſing, and reſolutely practiſing goodneſs, might have done.

2 Theſſ. 3. 7, 9.
2 Pet. 2. 5.
Gen. 18. 32.
Jer. 5. 1.
Ezek. 22. 30.
Iſa. 1. 9.
1 Kings 19. 14, 18.

Now who would not be glad of being ſo publick a friend, ſo general a benefactour, in performing that, which doth otherwiſe ſo much become him, and ſo greatly behove him; yielding him the beſt ornaments, and higheſt advantages even upon his private accompt? Who would not be ambitious both to oblige his Country, and to ſave his own ſoul together, by a worthy converſation?

Aſſuredly nothing can be deviſed more conducible to the effecting a reformation and amendment of the world, (and conſequently to the proſperity and felicity of mankind here) than a conſpiracy of good men in a frank and briſk avowing of goodneſs in the face of the world.

V. A care of our converſation in the ſight of men, is needful for the preſervation of our good name, and fair repute among them.

1 Chr. 29. 12. Eccl 6. 2. (Eccl. 7. 1.) A good name in holy Scripture is repreſented as a ſpecial gift, and bleſſing of God; beſtowed in recompence of piety and vertue; and preferred before other moſt conſiderable gifts and bleſſings, concerning our external ſtate; Prov. 22. 4. (Pſ. 112. 9.) for, By humility (ſaith the Wiſe-man) and the fear of the Lord, are riches and honour; both are the rewards of piety; but comparing them, Prov. 22. 1. A good name (ſaith he) is rather to be choſen than great riches; It cannot therefore be a contemptible thing, nor ought it to be neglected by us; for none of God's gifts, no reward which he propoſeth, ought to be ſlighted.

Reaſon and experience alſo do concur in ſhewing that a good repute is a valuable thing, not only as a fair ornament of our perſons, and a commodious inſtrument of action toward our private welfare; as a guard of our ſafety and quiet, as ſerving to procure divers conveniences of life; Δι' οἰκονομίαν τινα. Anton. 4. §. 19. but as very advantageous, very uſeful upon moral and ſpiritual accompts; qualifying us with greater eaſe and efficacy to ſerve God, and to do good; for indeed 'tis manifeſt, that without it we ſhall be uncapable of doing God or man any conſiderable ſervice.

Wherefore in duty and wiſdom we ſhould be careful of preſerving this jewel; the which we cannot otherwiſe do, than by obſerving this Apoſtolical rule, of providing things honeſt in the ſight of all men; for a good converſation is the only guard and convoy of a good name: How can men conceive good opinion of us, otherwiſe than from a view of worthy qualities and good deeds? They may charitably hope, but they cannot confidently judge well of us otherwiſe than upon good evidence: Matt. 7. 16. 12. 33. Ye ſhall know them by their fruits, (that is, by apparent works, falling under humane cogniſance) is the rule, whereby our Saviour teacheth us to diſtinguiſh of men, and to build a right opinion concerning them: Honour is the ſhadow, the inſeparable attendant of conſpicuous vertue.

A good converſation will indeed command eſteem, and irreſiſtibly extort reſpect from all men.

Wiſe and good men heartily will approve it, and gladly will yield it due commendation; they cannot but honour it whenever they ſee it, as Rom. 14. 18. beſt ſuiting with their own judgment, and with their affection.

Yea, it will procure reſpect even from the worſt men; for it is a miſtake to think, that bad men really do or can deſpiſe true goodneſs; in truth, however they may pretend or make a ſhew to ſlight and ſcorn it, however in words they may flout and revile it, yet in their hearts they cannot but admire and reverence it; although their will may be ſo perverted as to ſet them againſt it, yet their reaſon cannot be ſo deſtroyed (or natural light ſo quenched in them) as to diſapprove it; they do but vilely diſſemble, and belye their conſcience, when they make as if they did condemn, or contemn it: As (ſaith St. Chryſoſtome) they who openly do flatter ill livers, do in their mind reprove them; ſo they who envy the workers of good, in their conſcience will admire and approve them: At leaſt they will do thus in their ſober mind; when with any ſerious application they do reflect on things; when the eye of their ſoul is any-wiſe cleared from the miſts of luſt and paſſion: It is not to be heeded what they ſay in a fluſter or ranting mood; when they are near out of their wits, and have their judgment ſtifled by ſenſual imaginations; but what they think, when their mind is ſomewhat compoſed, and natural light doth ſhine freely in it.

Οἱ ἐν βασκανίᾳ τοῦτο ποιοῦντες, κατὰ τὸ συνειδὸς ὑμᾶς θαυμάσονται, καὶ ἀποδέξονται· ὥσπερ οὖν οἱ φανερῶς κολακεύοντες τοὺς ἐν πονηρίᾳ ζῶντας, κατὰ νοῦν διαβάλλουσι. Chryſ. in Matt. 5. 16.

Indeed ſuch wretches really do moſt deſpiſe thoſe, who conſort and comply with them in ſinful follies: As they cannot in their hearts honour themſelves, ſo they cannot eſteem thoſe whom they find like unto them; eſpecially they deſpiſe thoſe whom they obſerve to be ſo baſe and ſilly, as againſt their own judgment and conſcience, to fear their diſpleaſure, or to regard their cenſure; looking upon them as vaſſals to their humour, and renegadoes from their own conſcience.

Moreover, a good converſation certainly will engage Almighty God to protect our reputation, and to confer honour upon us. For he as Governour of the World, the Patron of goodneſs, the Diſpenſer of proper rewards to all, is in a manner bound to encourage thoſe openly, who viſibly do own him and take his part, who promote his glory and intereſt, who pay him due ſervice and obedience; who in regard to his authority, do faithfully purſue that which is right and good; He ſurely will ſee fit to repay ſuch in the ſame kind, by openly acknowledging, countenancing, and honouring them; Accordingly he hath tied himſelf to do ſo by his expreſs word and promiſe; for, Them, ſaith he, that honour me, I will honour 1 Sam. 2. 30. ; and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed; he ſaid it in reference to old Eli, who had neglected the duty of reſtraining his ſons from ſin; which is a caſe very much of kin to all neglect of exemplary piety. And, Whoſoever, ſaith our Lord, ſhall confeſs me before men, him ſhall the Luke 12. 8. Son of man alſo confeſs before the Angels of God; but he that denieth me before men, ſhall be denied before the Angels of God; the which (one moſt comfortable, the other moſt terrible) ſentences are to be underſtood, He that confeſſeth our Lord not meerly by verbal profeſſion, (for divers ſuch who ſay, Lord, Lord, he will not ſo much as know at the final judgment) Matt. 7. 22, 23. but in real practice; He that denieth him, not only by renouncing him with the tongue, but by diſobeying him in ſcandalous converſation, by working iniquity, by the Apoſtaſie of bad manners.

VI. Laſtly, The publick diſcharge of a good conſcience will yield manifold advantages, and great benefits to our ſelves; not only as good (and thence needful to our ſalvation, and our comfort) but as publick; ſome of which I ſhall touch.

Such a practice will much ſecure and ſtrengthen us in goodneſs; for he that hath the heart, with reſolution and conſtancy, to doe well, notwithſtanding any worldly diſcouragement, although he thereby doth croſs the humour of the world, and incurreth the diſpleaſure, envy, hatred, cenſure, and obloquy of men, he thus having exalted his vertue above the favour and fear of the world, hath ſet it in a ſafe place, hath rendred it impregnable.

The conſideration of having obtained ſo happy, and ſo worthy a victory over the moſt dangerous temptations, (the victory of faith over the 1 John world) will be very comfortable; And the ſufferings which (from the diſfavour, enmity, and oppoſition of men) do attend ſuch a practice, being a kind of martyrdom, will yield all the joys and comforts (together with the hopes and rewards) of an heroical patience.

It will afford great ſatisfaction of mind, to reflect on the conſequences of ſuch a practice; and to conſider, that our reſolution hath engaged or confirmed others in goodneſs, hath preſerved them from ſin, hath withdrawn them from bad courſes, and ſaved them from perdition; that we have been inſtrumental to the ſalvation and happineſs of any ſoul; that beſide our own ſins (which are a burthen too heavy for any man well to bear) we have not the ſins of others to accompt for, and ſhall not be loaded with the guilt of thoſe, whom our neglect of duty, our compliance with ſin, our ſtupid coldneſs and indifference in regard to ſpiritual affairs, our diſſimulation or connivence at the ſcandalous violation of God's honour, and tranſgreſſion of his laws, might have encouraged in ſin; that Ezek. 13. 22. we are not liable to that reproof in the Prophet, Ye have ſtrengthned the hands of the wicked, that he ſhould not return from his wicked way.

We ſhall highly oblige thoſe, whom by our good endeavour or example we ſhall convert to righteouſneſs, or reclaim from iniquity, or ſhall anywiſe ſtop in their carriere to ruine; who when they ſhall recover from 2 Tim. 2. 26. their errour, and ſoberly reflect on their caſe, (when they ſhall ἀνανήφειν, become again ſober, getting out as it were of their drunken fit) will heartily thank us, will bleſs us, will pray for us, as having laid on them a very great obligation, and done them the greateſt kindneſs that could be; ſo that they will be ready to ſay to us, as David did to Abigail,
1 Sam. 25. 32. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, who ſent thee this day to meet me; and bleſſed be thy advice; and bleſſed be thou, which haſt kept me this day from ſhedding of blood: This will be the conſequence of plain dealing in ſuch
Prov. 28. 23. caſes, and that will be fulfilled, which the Wiſe-man ſaith, He that rebu-
27. 6. 19. 25. keth a man, afterwards ſhall find more favour, than he that flattereth with the tongue.

We thereby ſhall eſcape the ſore complaints, and fell curſes of thoſe, whom our naughty or careleſs demeanour hath involved in ſinful practice; for when their conſcience is awakened into a ſenſe of their guilt, when they feel the ſtings of remorſe, when they perceive the extreme damage and woe which they have incurred, then will they diſcharge their reſentments of heart againſt thoſe, who have any-wiſe been acceſſory to their fall into ſuch a condition; then in their bitterneſs of ſoul, in the agony of their ſorrow and perplexity, they will be apt to exclaim, Curſed be the day that I knew ſuch an one, or that I did converſe with him, who did betray me into this plight, who did inveagle me into temptation, who did not pluck me back from that ſinful practice, by which I now ſo deeply ſuffer; Curſed be his baſe cowardice, his fond modeſty, his affected wiſdom, his treacherous negligence, his unconſcionable indifference, his impious want of zeal for God's honour, and charity for my ſoul, which did keep him from checking me in my bad courſes, and reclaiming me to my duty by wholeſom reproof, by ſeaſonable advice, by exemplary practice before me: It will ſurely be a great comfort to us, that we have not given occaſion for ſuch complaints; but in proportion may ſay with Acts 20. 26. St. Paul, I am pure from the blood of all men, for I have not ſhunned to Ezek. 7. 17. declare unto you all the counſel of God.
33. 7.

It is alſo no ſmall advantage to us, that by a good converſation we ſhall procure the particular friendſhip and affection of good men; for it is that, which diſcovereth good men to one another, which kindleth their affection toward each other, which draweth them together, and breedeth a familiarity between them, and knitteth their hearts together in a holy love; from whence they come to enjoy the faithful advice, the kind aſſiſtance, the ſeaſonable conſolations, and the hearty prayers each of other; the which great benefits are loſt by concealment of our ſelves, and reſervedneſs in doing good; for how can any man know him to deſerve love, whoſe goodneſs is not diſcernible ?

Such conſiderations may induce all perſons, of every rank and condition, to obſerve this Apoſtolical Precept, ſo far as their capacities do reach. I ſhall only adjoin, that it eſpecially doth concern perſons of quality, in proportion to their eminency in dignity, power, authority, reputation, or any peculiar advantage, whereby the beneficial efficacy of good converſation is encreaſed.

Such perſons are like a city ſeated on a mountain, which cannot be hid; Mat. 5. 15. the height of their ſtation, and luſtre of their quality, do expoſe them to the obſervation of all; and their authority doth recommend their practice to the imitation of obſervers.

Their example cannot fail of having a mighty influence; its light doth guide men, its weight doth ſway them; it doth ſeem to warrant and authorize practice; inferiours would be afraid or aſhamed to diſcoſt from it.

They have not the temptations, which other men have, to comply with ſin out of fear, out of complaiſance, out of deſign; they being to lead and give law, not to follow or receive it; they being the firſt movers in converſation; the faſhion being regulated by them, or indeed being meerly a conformity to their deportment.

They ſhould by their innocence qualifie themſelves to reprove others with authority and courage. Conſt. Apoſt. 2. 17.

They in gratitude to God, who hath beſtowed on them ſuch advantages, are obliged to employ them for his ſervice.

They particularly were deſigned and endowed with thoſe advantages, that by them they might countenance, might encourage, might reward, might by all means promote goodneſs in the world. Rom. 13. 3---6. 1 Pet. 2. 14.

They accordingly are reſponſible for the influence their converſation hath; ſo that in the final accompt moſt actions of men will lie at their door, ſo that they ſhall reſpectively be either highly rewarded for the vertues and good works, or ſeverely puniſhed for the vices and ſins of mankind: The which moſt weighty conſideration I leave by God's grace to be ſeriouſly applied by them, who are concerned therein.

SERMON XXXIV.

Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all Men.

2 COR. VIII. 21.

Providing for honeſt things not only in the ſight of the Lord, but in the ſight of Men.

IF we obſerve the world, we may eaſily therein diſcern many perſons, who being inwardly well diſpoſed, (ſtanding right both in judgment and affection to goodneſs) are yet loth to appear very good, and hardly will own Chriſtian vertue, in the conſtant diſcharge of publick duties, or in ſtrict abſtinence from ſinful practices; but commonly (againſt the dictate of their reaſon, and ſenſe of their heart) neglect the one, and comply with the other: An odd ſort of hypocrites, or diſſemblers; who ſtudiouſly conceal their better part, and counterfeit themſelves worſe than they are; who adore God in their hearts, and addreſs devotions to him in their cloſets; but ſcarce will avow him in their viſible profeſſion and practice; who have a conſcience, but are ſhy of diſcloſing it, or letting it take air, and walk in open light; confining it as a criminal to cloſe reſtraint, or obſcure retirement; who gladly would be religious and ſtaunch, if there might be no notice taken of it, but take care of being remarkable (or as it were ſcandalous) for it; who think fit to compromiſe, and compound the buſineſs between God and the world, maintaining a neutrality, and correſpondence with both, ſo as privately to court the one, and publickly to cloſe with the other.

Rom. 12.17. Ἐνώπιον Κυρίου.

Such practice is flatly repugnant to that Rule, which otherwhere in precept, and here by his own example the holy Apoſtle doth recommend to us; directing us not only before God (that is, in our heart, and in our ſecret retirements, which God alone doth behold) but alſo before men, that is, in our external and viſible converſation carefully to perform things good and laudable, eſchewing whatever is bad or culpable.

Our obligation to which Rule hath already been confirmed by divers other Precepts in holy Scripture, concurring in the injunction of it; and its obſervance urged by various poſitive conſiderations of great weight and force, (declaring how neceſſary it is for promoting God's honour and glory, how requiſite it is for maintaining the dignity of our profeſſion, and advancing the intereſts of goodneſs, how charity and juſtice toward our neighbour do exact it from us, how conducible it is to the publick benefit of mankind, and how advantageous in many reſpects to our own particular welfare) and not inſiſting farther upon thoſe conſiderations, I ſhall now only inforce it, by ſcanning the common principles, grounds, motives, pretences, or excuſes of the contrary practice, which I before touched, of openly deſerting vertue, or declining the performance of duty before men; and by ſhewing how very fooliſh and vain, how very naughty and baſe, how very miſchievous, dangerous, and pernicious they are.

They chiefly are thoſe, which I ſhall immediately touch and reflect upon.

1. Men commonly in their viſible converſation do neglect their duty, or comply with ſin out of modeſty; becauſe they are aſhamed of doing that, which may expoſe them to ſome diſgrace or cenſure; becauſe vertuous practice may raiſe diſtaſte in the company, and provoke the ſcorn of thoſe with whom they converſe; becauſe ſuch a point of duty is out of requeſt, and ſlighted in the world; they are afraid of mens faces; their tender forehead cannot ſuſtain deriſion, or endure to be flouted for being out of the mode, and wearing an uncouth garb of conſcience. Jer. 1. 8.

But this plainly is a perverſe, and unmanly modeſty; a fond, a vile, a ſhameful ſhame: Fie on it; ſhould any man be aſhamed of that, which is his chief beauty, his beſt ornament, his ſole dignity and glory? Should a man be aſhamed of being evidently wiſe in his conduct, of following his reaſon, of conſulting his true intereſt, of purſuing his own certain welfare and felicity? Is it fit that any man ſhould be aſhamed of paying due acknowledgment, of yielding due reverence, of rendring due gratitude, of performing due ſervice to his Creatour, Sovereign Lord, and great Benefactor; to whom he oweth all, upon whoſe will he entirely dependeth, at whoſe abſolute diſpoſal he is? Surely theſe are no ſhameful things, but ſuch rather, wherein we ought to have the greateſt confidence, which we ought to perform with the greateſt aſſurance.

If we are baſhful, let us be ſo in regard to things which are truly ſhameful; let us be aſhamed of ſin, that is, of our moſt real deformity, our turpitude, our diſgrace, our wretchedneſs; the which indeed is the onely diſhonourable and deſpicable thing; the which did firſt produce ſhame, and did introduce it into the world, (for while innocence did abide, there was no ſhame) and the which will ever carry ſhame along as its inſeparable adherent: It would indeed become us to bluſh at our horrible unworthineſs, and deteſtable ingratitude toward our bountiful Lord, and moſt gracious Redeemer; it were proper for us to be confounded at our extreme folly, and foul treachery toward our ſelves, in betraying our ſouls to guilt, to regret, to wrath and puniſhment: Who ſhould be aſhamed, who not, the holy Pſalmiſt hath well taught us, Let none that wait on thee be aſhamed; let them be aſhamed which tranſgreſs without cauſe; and, Let the proud be aſhamed—— but, Let my heart be ſound in thy ſtatutes, that I be not aſhamed. Gen. 3. 2. 2. 25. Pſal. 25. 3. Pſal. 119. 78--80.

It is true modeſty to be aſhamed of doing unworthy and unhandſom things; but to be aſhamed of doing what reaſon and duty require, is pitiful weakneſs of mind.

We do not owe ſo much regard to vicious and vain perſons, as to be daſhed out of countenance by them; we ſhould rather by our maſculine reſolution and upright confidence put them to confuſion. Tit. 2. 8.

If ſhame be an evil which we would avoid, the onely remedy thereof we may learn from thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt, Then ſhall I not be aſhamed, when I have reſpect to thy teſtimonies: But it is a fond courſe to ſhun diſgrace by doing that which alone deſerveth it. Pſal. 119. 6.

Is it not alſo a wild thing, to ſeem modeſt toward men, while we are really ſo bold with God, as preſumptuouſly to offend him, to affront him, to

Quid quæſo rationis habet verecundari ad diem hominis, & vultum Dei non vereri? Bern. Ep. 108.

Iſa. 65. 3. Jer. 6. 17. 8. 12. to provoke him (as thoſe in the Prophet did) to his face? For ſo indeed every ſinner doth; and as it is the greateſt inadvertency not to conſider God always preſent with us, ſo it is the height of impudence to ſin in his preſence, or to prefer a regard to men before the reverence due to his eye.

Is it not alſo great folly, for declining a little preſent tranſient diſgrace, to do that, whereof afterward we ſhall be grievouſly and perpetually Sap. 4. 20. aſhamed; which we ſhall never remember or reflect upon without (Jer.22.22.) confuſion, (according to that of the Apoſtle, What fruit had ye of thoſe Rom. 6. 21. things, whereof ye are now aſhamed?) the conſequence whereof is our Dan. 12. 2. ſtanding obnoxious to ſhame and everlaſting contempt.

If we be thus aſhamed of God, and of our duty to him, may he not juſtly in recompence be aſhamed of us, and diſdain to own us in favour Luke 9. 26. and mercy? He will ſurely, he hath often declared ſo; Whoſoever, ſaith 12. 9. our Lord, ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, of him ſhall the Son of 2 Tim. 2. 12. man be aſhamed, when he ſhall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy Angels.

2. Another principle, near of kin to the former, diſpoſing men to commit ſin, or wave duty in their open converſation, is, fear of loſing the good-will, or getting the ill-will of men.

It muſt often happen, that whoever will be vertuous, and ſtick to his duty, will forfeit the favour of men, will incur their diſpleaſure, will provoke their indignation; by croſſing their humour and conceit, by implicitly ſlighting their opinion, and condemning their practice; this is the portion and fate of ſtrict and ſtiff piety; the friendſhip of God and the James 4. 4. world are not well conſiſtent; and St. Paul's rule may be converted, If I 1 John 2. 15. Gal. 1. 10. ſhould pleaſe men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt: Hence men prizing the favour of men, with the advantages of it, and dreading their anger, hatred, diſdain, with the miſchiefs conſequent on them, are ſcared from their duty.

But in truth this is a ſilly, a baſe, a ſorry fear, arguing wretched meanneſs of ſpirit, and pitiful cowardice. For,

Doſt thou, fond wretch, fear to loſe the favour of man, whoſe favour doth avail nothing to thy main intereſts, and cannot any-wiſe conſiderably benefit thee, (for in no reſpect doſt thou depend on his will and providence) but doſt not fear being deprived of God's favour, upon which all thy good hangeth, wherein thy felicity conſiſteth, without which thou art uncapable of any proſperity, of any ſecurity, of any joy or comfort?

Doſt thou fear the diſpleaſure of man, of poor impotent man, a ſorry Job 25. 6. Iſa. 2. 22. frail worm, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, (ready to fly away in every moment) whoſe anger can do thee no real harm, whoſe power can hardly Matt. 10. 28. touch thee, can no-wiſe reach thy ſoul, or its concerns; whilſt thou dreadeſt not to offend the Eternal Almighty God, under whoſe feet thou lieſt, ready to be cruſhed into nothing, or ſtampt down into hell at his pleaſure?

Dareſt thou not, O heartleſs daſtard, to do that, which is in thy power eaſily to do, which thou art infinitely concerned to do, which upon ſo many accompts thou art obliged to do, out of fear to croſs thine equal, yea far thine inferiour in this caſe; for he that ſtandeth to his duty, as he hath the better cauſe, ſo he hath the greater force, and aſſuredly will defeat all his oppoſers?

Art thou, O puſillanimous ſlave, in regard to any Creature, thy fellow-ſubject, and ſervant, afraid of expreſſing thy loyalty to thy Sovereign Lord, thy love to infinite Goodneſs, thy Gratitude to thy beſt Friend and kindeſt Benefactor, thy Reverence toward the Divine Majeſty, thine awe of uncontrollable Power; Is this a reaſonable, an excuſable, a tolerable fear?

Surely, if ever to be driven out of Heart is reproachful, if ever to be cowed doth argue Infirmity and Abjectneſs of Spirit, it is in this Caſe; when we have all the Reaſon and Obligation in the World to be moſt courageous and reſolute, to fear no Colours, to make our Party good againſt all oppoſition; when we have the greateſt neceſſity to engage us, and the greateſt advantage to encourage us to hold out ſtoutly; the greateſt neceſſity, ſeeing all that we have, our Life, our Salvation, our eternal Weal doth lie at ſtake; For it is not a vain thing for you, becauſe it is your Life: The greateſt advantage, for that if we will, we are invincible, and aſſured of an eaſie Victory, ſeeing we take part with God, and have Omnipotency on our ſide; ſo that we can ſay with David, The Lord is my helper, I will not fear what man can do unto me? The Lord is my light, and my ſalvation, whom ſhall I fear? the Lord is the ſtrength of my life, of whom ſhall I be afraid?

Deut. 32. 47.

Pſal. 118. 6. Heb. 13. 6.
Pſal. 56. 11. 11. 4. 27. 1, 3. 46. 2.
Jer. 1. 8. 20. 11. Iſa. 41. 10.
Gen. 26. 24. 15. 1.
Numb. 14. 9. Deut. 31. 8.
2 Chron. 20. 17.

There is not indeed to thoſe who are under God's ſpecial Protection, and confide in him, any thing in nature, really formidable or terrible; it is his peculiar Attribute to be the Mighty and Terrible One: He recommendeth himſelf to us as our fear, that is, the ſpecial Object of it; we therefore do ſacrilegiouſly wrong him, by fearing any other thing in ſuch Caſes of Competition, and when we are concerned to fear him; whence then we are prohibited to fear the greateſt Powers in the World; Fear not them which kill the Body (if God permit them) but are not able to kill the Soul; but rather fear him who is able to deſtroy both Body and Soul in Hell.

Jer. 5. 22. 10. 7
Rev. 15. 4.
Deut. 7. 21.
10. 17. 28. 58.
Pſ. 76. 7, 11.
99. 3.
Iſa. 8. 12.
41. 10.
Matt. 10. 26, 28.

Who (ſaith St. Peter) is he that will (or that can) harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? ——wherefore be not afraid of their Terror, neither be troubled; but ſanctifie the Lord God in your Hearts (by a pure Confidence in him.)

Τίς ὁ κακώσων; 1 Pet. 3. 13, 14.

In ſuch caſes, we ſhould be ready to accoſt the greateſt Potentates, in Terms like thoſe of the three brave Youths in Daniel: O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to anſwer thee in this matter: If it be ſo, our God whom we ſerve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery Furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine Hand, O King; But (however) if not, be it known unto thee, O King, that we will not ſerve thy Gods, nor worſhip thy golden Image which thou haſt ſet up: And if in imitation of ſo worthy an Example, we ſhould defie the Wrath of the greateſt Kings, demanding any ſinful Compliance from us, how poor a thing is it to fear the Diſpleaſure of ſorry Companions enticing us to the like? how much more ſhould we defie all the crew of hectorly Ruffians, and huffing Bragadochios?

Dan. 3. 16.

While wicked profane Men are ſo bold and ſtout in impugning Goodneſs; we ſhould be couragious in defence of it. The Righteous is as bold as a Lion.

Prov. 28. 1.

The Fear of God (the which is moſt reaſonable and prudent, and conſiſtent with the braveſt Courage) ſhould exclude the Fear of Men; the which is no leſs vain than baſe; the which indeed doth involve the wildeſt Boldneſs, and moſt raſh Fool-hardineſs in the World, puſhing us into the moſt deſperate Adventures that can be; while by ſinning we incenſe the moſt dreadful Anger, we invade the moſt formidable Power, we incur the moſt horrible Dangers, we run headlong into the Jaws of Death and Hell: ſuch a mixture there is of baſe Cowardice, and mad audacity in Practices iſſuing from that Principle.

3. Men commonly do neglect the open Practice of Vertue, out of care to decline Envy; for ill Men ſeeing others endowed with worthy Qualities, which they want; performing good Deeds, from which their Infirmity or Pravity doth hold them averſe; entitled to Commendations, Rewards and Advantages to which they cannot aſpire, and whereby they ſeem to eclipſe their Credit, or impair their Intereſt, or expoſe their Unworthineſs; cannot look on ſuch Perſons without an evil Eye, or without conceiving in their Heart malevolent Grudges at them, which they will be apt to vent in ſpiteful Practices, endeavouring to ſupplant or blaſt their Vertue; Men are apt to envy the Favourites of God, as they are of Princes. Nor indeed doth any thing more powerfully incite Men to hurt their Neighbour, than ſuch Malignity, being edged by that anguiſh, which their ſore Eye doth feel; to ſhun which Envy, and its miſchievous Effects Men commonly are tempted to withdraw its Cauſe, their own Vertue, that its bright Luſtre may not wound the Sight of ſuch Neighbours.

Invidiam placare paras virtute relictâ? Contemnere miſer. Hor. Serm. 2. 3.

But thus to appeaſe Envy by deſerting Vertue is very fond and abſurd. For,

Shall I caſt away my beſt Goods, becauſe another would not have me to enjoy them? ſhall I be terribly ſick, to cure another's diſtempered Fancy? ſhall I render my ſelf miſerable, becauſe another doth not like to ſee me happy? becauſe he doth want Charity, muſt I forego Innocence? becauſe he doth not love me, ſhall I hate my ſelf? to pleaſe him merely, without bettering him, to eaſe him of a wholſome Smart, ſhall I diſpleaſe God, and abuſe my ſelf?

Would he not be a ſilly Man, who being envied becauſe he ſeemeth a Favourite of his Prince, would to gratifie ſuch Enviers, offend his Prince? No ſurely, this is too fond a regard unto any Man's baſe Diſpoſition, this is too great a Gratification of an Enemy's Pleaſure, this is too ſlaviſh a Depreſſion of a Man's ſelf; rather let him fret, let him torment himſelf, let him inflict a juſt Puniſhment on his own uncharitable and unworthy Humour; whereby perhaps he may be reduced to diſcern his Folly, and correct his Fault.

Would any Man upon ſuch Terms part with his Eſtate, mar his Buſineſs, ſlur his Reputation, or purpoſely play the fool? would any Man become poor, infamous or contemptible, becauſe to be rich, to be proſperous, to be honourable, to be wiſe are invidious things? Much leſs ſhould a Man upon that account neglect his Duty, thereby betraying his Soul, diſcarding the Love and Favour of God, deſtroying the ſatisfaction of his Conſcience, and forfeiting his hopes of Felicity: Damages and Miſchiefs comparable to which all the Envy and ſpight in the World can no-wiſe bring upon him.

If we would avoid Envy, we ſhould not do it by incurring a worſe Evil, and rendring our ſelves contemptible for Unworthineſs; we ſhould rather damp it by Modeſty, Humility, an inoffenſive Tenour of Life.

We ſhould ſurmount it, and quaſh it by conſtant blameleſs Converſation. The which will kill the Envious, or the Envy.

An unqueſtionable Vertue will ſtop the Mouth of Detraction, and drive Envy into Corners, not daring to ſhew it ſelf againſt it.

4. A common Principle, from whence neglect of Duty, and commiſſion of Sin in viſible Converſation doth ſpring, is a fear of Infamy, and reproach, whereto the ſtrict practice of Vertue is liable: Men not enduring to bear the odious Cenſures, the foul Imputations, the ugly Characters, the ſcurvy Epithets, and opprobrious Names, wherewith the bold and ſpiteful Enemies of Goodneſs are wont to aſperſe and brand its faithful Adherents.

To be deemed weak, credulous, ſuperſtitious, formal, timorous, nice, ſqueamiſh, ſcrupulous, ſtraitlaced, conceited, affected, croſs, ſurly, moroſe, froward, ſtubborn, pertinacious, proud.

To be termed a foppiſh Simpleton, doting on Speculations, and enſlaved to Rules; a fantaſtical Humoriſt, a preciſe Bigot, a rigid Stoick, a demure Sneaksby, a clowniſh Singulariſt, a Non-conformiſt to ordinary uſage, a ſtiff Opiniatre; a Man of a pitiful narrow Spirit, pent up within a ſmall compaſs, confined by Principles, fettered by Laws, living in Bondage to his Conſcience.

Theſe and the like hard Cenſures, foul Reproaches, and abuſive Scoffs, even all which Invention quickned by Envy, Choler, rancorous Spite, and aided by the malicious Fiend, can ſuggeſt, wherewith the profane Crew of Men uſually do conſpire to daub and perſecute thoſe who refuſe to comply with their unconſcionable Extravagancies and Impieties, Men can hardly brook, and thence to ſhun them yield up all, croſs their Reaſon, proſtitute their Conſcience, violate all their Obligations; chuſing rather to be juſtly reproachable for bad Actions, than unjuſtly reproached for good.

Pſal. 57. 3, 4.

But with ſuch a Perſon, who is thus diverted from his Duty, let me expoſtulate:

Doſt thou well to regard what unbribled Tongues out of a wanton Mind and corrupt Heart do ſputter and foam? Shall thy Practice depend on their looſe Wit or licentious Talk, ſo that thou muſt do nothing which they ſhall not be in humour to commend?

Nihil eſt turpius quàm ſapientis vitam ab inſipientium ſermone pendere. Cic. de Fin. 2. (p. 147.)

Wilt thou renounce all Wiſdom, abandon thy beſt Intereſt, forfeit thy Happineſs to decline a Squib, or a Flurt?

Quid de te alii loquantur, ipſi videant. Scipio apud Cic. in Somn.

Would not he be a ſtark Fool who would he railed or jeered out of his Way in Travel, out of his Buſineſs in Traffick, out of his Eſtate, or real Intereſt upon any occaſion; and is he not evidently far more ſuch, who will be flouted out of his Duty, out of his Salvation, out of any ſpiritual Advantage? was not the Practice of David more adviſeable, who ſaid, The proud have had me in deriſion, yet have I not declined from thy Law?

Pſal. 119. 51.

David, a great King, a Man of ſingular Courage and Gallantry, a glorious Hero; yet even him did bold and baſe People deride. Whom will not profane Impudence aſſail? whom will not they attempt to deter from Goodneſs?

Art thou ſo blind, as not to diſcern whence it cometh, that they diſparage Vertue? that is, from their extreme Vanity and Raſhneſs, which move them to ſpeak any thing without conſideration or diſcretion; from their great naughtineſs and weakneſs, their being bewitched with Pleaſure, and beſotted with Vice, which engageth them to take part ſo furiouſly with them; from their malignity, and ſpite againſt that which croſſeth their fond Humours and exorbitant Luſts; from their Pride which ſwelleth againſt thoſe, who by contrary Practice diſſent from their Folly, and reprove their Wickedneſs, and eclipſe their Repute; from their Envy, which repineth at thy appearing better and happier than themſelves thy excelling them in true Worth, thy enjoying that ſatisfaction which they want, thy attaining that bleſſed Hope, to which they cannot aſpire; and ſeeing that their Reproaches do iſſue from ſuch Principles, wilt thou regard them?

Are their Words any Slander, who being profeſſed Enemies of Goodneſs, do naturally impugn it by the readieſt Arms they have, a virulent and petulent Tongue?

Οὐδεὶς φαῦλος τοὺς σπουδαίους ἐπαινεῖν ὑπομένει. Iſid. Peluſ. Ep. 2. 220.

(Οὐ γὰρ δοκεῖν ἄριστος, ἀλλ' εἶναι θέλω. Τὸ δοκεῖν οὐδὲν πρὸς ἡμᾶς, ὥσπερ οὐδὲ ὄναρ ἀλλότριον. Greg. Naz. Orat.—de ſede Conſt.) Ant. 8. §. 1.——

Can their dirty Language, beſpattering good things, after their nature, or render that diſhonourable and odious, which in it ſelf is moſt excellent, moſt amiable, moſt venerable, moſt uſeful and profitable?

Malis diſplicere laudari eſt. Sen. Excerpt. (p. 690.)

Non poteſt bonus non eſſe, qui bonis placet; nec minùs validum argumentum mihi videtur, quod bonus ſit ſi malis diſpliceat. Bern Ep. 248.

Ἄφρονες. 1 Pet. 2. 15.

Ἄτοποι. 2 Theſſ. 3. 2.

Is it not indeed a commendation of Vertue, which ſhould encourage us the more to like it, to honour it, to embrace it, that vain, wild, diſſolute Perſons, diſtempered in their Minds, notoriouſly void of Diſcretion, of Integrity, of Sobriety, do pretend to vilifie and diſgrace it?

Ant. 3. §. 4.

As their Commendation is of no worth, ſo their Reproach is leſs conſiderable.

Quanta dementia eſt vereri nè infameris ab infamibus? Sen. Ep. 91.

Doſt thou not diſparage thine own Judgment by heeding theirs, or ſuffering it to be of any conſideration with thee in the conduct of thy Life?

Doſt thou take them to be ſerious in this, or to ſpeak in good earneſt, when they reproach Vertue, and ſlight the plain Dictates of Reaſon, the clear Light of natural Conſcience, the expreſs commands of God, the apparent Concerns of their own Soul? they who are ſober in nothing, how can they be ſerious in this? why ſhould they ſeem judicious in ſuch a caſe?

Moverer ſi judicio ~~hoc facer~~unt, nunc morbo faciunt. Sen. Exc.

Ego cùm à noſtro Catone laudabar, vel reprehendi me à cæteris facilè patiebar. Cic. de Orat.

Is it not evidently better to be ſlandered by giddy, lewd, ungodly Wretches, who mind not what they ſay, nor care what they do, whoſe Judgment therefore can ſignifie nothing; than really to deſerve reproof; and thence certainly to incur blame from all ſtaid, ſober, conſiderate, wiſe and vertuous Perſons, who judge adviſedly and uprightly about things?

Is it not better to undergo their ſevereſt Cenſure, and moſt biting Scoffs, than to be condemned of Folly and Baſeneſs by thy own Mind, and reviled by thy own Conſcience?

Dan. 12. 2.

Is it not infinitely better to be unjuſtly defamed by Men, than to be diſreputed by God, expoſed to moſt diſgraceful condemnation at his Bar, and thrown into that ſtate of everlaſting Ignominy?

Tu ergò plus opprobria times quàm tormenta? &c. Bern. Ep. 108.

Matt. 25. 41.

Is it not more tolerable to hear ſuch Language, than having violated our Duty, and broken God's Commands one Day to hear that diſmal Sentence, Go ye curſed into everlaſting Fire?

Æquiſſimo animo ad honeſtum conſilium per mediam infamiam tendam, &c. Sen. Ep. 81.

It is a glorious Infamy, which one ſuſtaineth for the ſake of Righteouſneſs.

Non vis eſſe juſtus ſine gloria? at mehercule ſæpe juſtus eſſe debebis cum infamia. Sen. Ep. 113.

Ant. 5. §. 3. 11. 16. 9. 18.

Even Heathens, with whom Glory was the moſt ample Reward, and ſweeteſt fruit of Vertue, yet do injoin that we ſhould prefer Conſcience before it; and that we ſhould rather gladly embrace Infamy, than forſake Vertue.

2 Tim. 3. 12.
Acts 14. 22.
Heb. 12. 6—

[illegible] is the Lot of all good Men (for probation, exerciſe and improvement [illegible]heir Vertue to be perſecuted) at leaſt in ſome times, as when St. Paul ſaid, All that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt ſuffer Perſecution; And ſurely he that ſincerely loveth God, would even deſire occaſion of ſuffering ſomewhat for his ſake, in teſtimony of his faithful Affection: But what more tolerable Perſecution, what more eaſie Martyrdom could we wiſh, than to be laſhed by a ſcurrilous Tongue; or rather to obſerve the Ears of others to be infeſted with the Buzzes of Detraction? what is this but a little Air ſtirred in vain, but a mere ſound or blaſt of Wind, importing nought to him that doth not mind it, or will not be affected with it?

the which ſurely to a ſound Heart and pure Conſcience cannot be very ſenſible; a Man muſt have a froward Temper, or a tender Ear, whom a little ſuch creaking, or grating noiſe doth much vex; all its force is broken, all its miſchief is remedied eaſily, by neglect or contempt.

Quid ſtultius homine verba metuente? Sen Ep. 91.

It is in a manner more commendable to ſuffer for being good, than for being a Chriſtian; a truer Martyrdom to ſuffer for the Temper than for the Name of Chriſt; for doing well, than for profeſſing Truth.

Who indeed had ever been good, in any notable degree, if ſome had minded the Opinion, or the Diſcourſe of ſuch Men, whom in all times the great Adverſary of Goodneſs and Maligner of our Welfare hath excited to deter Men from Vertue by thus abuſing it? hath it not ever been the Portion of good Men to ſuffer in this kind?

Jer. 20. 7——
Pſal. 44. 16, 17. 57. 3, 4. 119. 51. 69. 10.
Job 12. 4. Sap. 5. 3.

Was not * our Lord himſelf, were not his Apoſtles, were not all the Prophets of old, were not all the Heroes in Goodneſs of all times thus purſued with Obloquy? what vile Imputation, what Name of Reproach can be deviſed, wherewith the ſpiteful World did not beſmear them?

Ἐμπαιγμῶν ϗ μαστίγων πεῖραν ἔλαβον. Heb. 11. 36.
* Heb. 12. 3. Ἀναλογίσασθε—— 2 Cor. 6. 8. Διὰ δόξης, ϗ ἀτιμίας.

Yet were they much diſturbed at it, were they any-wiſe diſcouraged or ſcared by it from their Duty? No; they rather did find Satisfaction and delight in it; it rather did heighten their mind and ſtrengthen their reſolution; it begat a gallant, and triumphant diſdain of ſuch Injuries, enlivening and animating them in their carier of Duty; they did embrace Reproach for Righteouſneſs not only with content, as their proper Lot and Portion from God's Providence, but with Joy, as their ſpecial Glory and Happineſs, from divine Goodneſs; feeling it moſt true, what our Maſter taught, Bleſſed are ye, when Men ſhall revile you, and ſhall ſay all manner of Evil againſt you falſly for my ſake: Bleſſed are ye when Men—ſhall reproach you, and caſt out your name as evil for the Son of Man's ſake; and according to St. Peter, ὀνειδίζεσθε, if ye be reproached for the Name of Chriſt (that is, for conſcionably diſcharging any Chriſtian Duty) happy are ye, for the Spirit of Glory and of God reſteth on you; on their part he is evil ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

Ὀνειδισμοῖς ϗ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι— Heb. 10. 33.
Acts 5. 41.
2 Cor. 12. 10. Εὐδοκῶ ἐν ὕβρεσιν——
Matt. 5. 11.
Luke 6. 22.
1 Pet. 4. 14.

In fine, it is all Reaſon, and it is the expreſs Command of God, that in ſuch Caſes we ſhould not regard the Cenſures, or the Reproaches of any Mortal: It is a part of Duty to deſpiſe Obloquy, to expoſe and loſe Reputation for God's ſake. For Hearken (ſaith he) unto me ye that know Righteouſneſs, the people in whoſe Heart is my Law; fear ye not the Reproach of Men, neither be ye afraid of their Revilings; for the Moth ſhall eat them up like a Garment, and the Worm ſhall eat them like Wooll: but my Righteouſneſs ſhall be for ever, and my Salvation from Generation to Generation.

Iſa. 51. 7, 8.

5. Men commonly decline the publick practice of Duty out of Affectation thereby to be deemed more honeſt and ſincere, or to decline the Suſpicion of being hypocritical.

As this is the moſt obvious and uſual Calumny wherewith diſſolute People do charge good Men; ſo to Men of generous Diſpoſition it is of all Cenſures moſt poinant, as moſt croſſing their Temper according to which as they hate to be, ſo they can hardly endure to be counted or called Diſſemblers; whence often they chuſe rather to ſeem indifferent to Goodneſs, than zealouſly affected to it: they rather wave ſome Points of Duty, than for the performance of them expoſe themſelves to that Imputation.

But this proceeding is very unreaſonable. For, What can be more abſurd, than to be really and notoriouſly bad (as whoever omitteth his Duty is) to prevent a ſurmiſe of being ſuch? or to be truly worſe than we ſhould be, that we may not be deemed worſe than we ſeem?

How can we more gratifie the Enemy of our Salvation, than by approving our ſelves in truth to be what he would falſly challenge us to be, Mockers of God, and Traitors to our own Soul?

Is it not a vain thing to regard that kind of Cenſure, which it is impoſſible for any Man to eſcape, upon other Terms than of being very naughty? for wicked Men will never fail to load thoſe with this Charge who will 1 Pet. 4. 4. not comply with their Follies, and run with them to the ſame exceſs of Riot, or are any-wiſe better than themſelves; it is inevitable for a ſtaunch Man not to be ſtigmatized for a Hypocrite by them.

2 Cor. 1. 12. We have certainly more reaſon to be ſatisfied with the ſure Conſcience
1 John 3. 21. and Senſe of our own Integrity, than to be moved with the preſumptuous Aſſertions of any Wretch devoid of Juſtice or Charity: His Cenſure being plainly Injurious, and contrary to all Rules of Equity, which preſcribe that no Man ſhould judge of things unknown, or uncertain, is utterly deſpicable.

1 John 3. 20. The Teſtimony of God (who is greater than our Hearts) perfectly know-
1 Theſſ. 2. 4. ing our Sincerity, may abundantly ſupport us; it is a great wrong to Gal. 1. 10. him for us to value the raſh Suſpicions of Men, when we are ſecure of his
Col. 3. 23. Eph. 6. 5. Knowledge, who ſeeth all our Works, and trieth our Hearts; who hath ſaid, 1 Cor. 4. 4. that if we commit our way to him, and truſt in him, he will bring forth our Pſal. 37. 4— Righteouſneſs as the Light, and our Judgment as the Noon day.

It is certainly better to be called Hypocrite by Men for doing our Duty, than to be treated as a Hypocrite by God for neglecting it; for all thoſe Matt. 24. 51. who upon any account do violate God's Laws; ſhall have their Portion with the Hypocrites, in that diſconſolate place, where is weeping and gnaſhing of Teeth. And good reaſon; for indeed by thus avoiding Hypocriſie, we really do incur it; by ſeeking to preſerve an opinion of Sincerity, we forfeit the reality of it; by the practice of diſavowing the Fear of God; and Care of Goodneſs, we do conſtitute our ſelves certain Hypocrites, and Impoſtors; diſſembling our Thoughts, ſmothering our Conſcience, deluding our Neighbours with falſe Conceits of us, feigning that Indifference which we have not, pretending to act without regret or remorſe, which we cannot do; ſeeming otherwiſe than we are, ſignifying otherwiſe than we mean, doing otherwiſe than we judge fit, or like to do; that is, if we be not ſtark Infidels, or utterly void of Conſcience.

This is Hypocriſie turned the wrong ſide outward, diſguiſing a Man in a fouler Shape, and uglier Garb, than that which is natural and true.

And if we compare the two Hypocriſies, (that of pretending Conſcience, which we want, and this of denying Conſcience, which we have; that of ſeeming better than we are, this of ſeeming worſe than we may be) this in nature may well ſeem more vile, in tendency more dangerous, in effect more miſchievous than the other.

There is in both the ſame Falſhood, the ſame Prevarication, the like Contempt and Abuſe of God; but the Hypocrite of whom we ſpeak doth worſe things, more directly wrongful to God, more prejudicial to Goodneſs more harmful to the World.

The ſpecious Hypocrite counterfeiting Goodneſs, and having a Form of Godlineſs, without the Power and Reality of it, doth yield to God ſome part (the exteriour part) of his due Honour and Reſpect; but the ſneaking Hypocrite, diſowning Goodneſs, doth apparently deſert, ſlight and affront

God; the one ſerveth God with his Face, and his Voice, though his Heart be far from him; the other doth not ſo much as ſacrifice a carcaſs of Obedience to him; That may bring ſome Credit and Advantage to Goodneſs, ſtrengthen its Intereſt by his Vote and Countenance; this by not avowing it doth aſſuredly weaken its Reputation and Cauſe; that Hypocriſie, as ſuch is a private and ſingle Evil, whereby a Man doth indeed prejudice himſelf, but doth not injure his Neighbour, yea may edifie him by the appearing (which in this reſpect is the ſame with the real) Goodneſs of his Example; but this Hypocriſie is a general Miſchief, a ſcandalous Evil, a contagious Peſtilence, whereby a Man not only harmeth himſelf, but wrongeth many others, ſeducing them into Diſſoluteneſs, infecting the World with baſe Indifference to Good, and eaſineſs to comply with Sin.

It is indeed a ſad thing, that God and Goodneſs ſhould be deſerted upon this accompt; that moſt Men ſhould be ſo uncharitable, ſo unjuſt, ſo imprudent as to ſuſpect all good Men of Hypocriſie; as if it were incredible that any Man ſhould heartily love or fear God; (when it is rather ſtrange that any Man ſhould do otherwiſe) that any Man in good earneſt or otherwiſe than in Pretence and for ſiniſter Reſpects ſhould embrace Vertue (when it is marvellous, that a reaſonable Man ſhould decline it) that ſo many of themſelves inclinable to Goodneſs, ſhould be ſo weak as to be deterr'd from it by ſo vain an Apprehenſion; and that the Name of Hypocriſie ſhould drive away Piety; that it ſhould become deſirable, that Hypocrites might abound in the World, leſt Religion both in truth and ſhew ſhould be diſcarded.

In fine, we may otherwiſe ſuppreſs this odious Imputation, than by deſerting Goodneſs; we may demonſtrate our ſelves ſerious and ſincere by an inflexible adherence to it, in the continual Tenour of our Practice; and eſpecially in ſome inſtances of Duty, which are hardly conſiſtent with Hypocriſie, for no Man can hold long in a ſtrained Poſture; no Man will take much Pains, or Encounter great Difficulties, or ſuſtain grievous Hardſhips and Afflictions, croſs his Appetites, forego Gains, and Honours, for that which he doth not heartily like and love; he may counterfeit in Ceremonies and Formalities, but he will hardly feign Humility, Meekneſs, Patience, Contentedneſs, Temperance, at leaſt uniformly and conſtantly. Even the patient enduring this Cenſure will confute it, and wipe off the Aſperſion of Hypocriſie.

Matt. 23. 23.

SER-

SERMON XXXV.

Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all Men.

2 COR. VIII. 21.

Providing for honeſt things not only in the ſight of the Lord, but in the ſight of Men.

6. ANother great Impediment of good Converſation before Men is a deſire of ſeeming courteous and civil; Men uſually conform to ſinful Practices, becauſe they would not be held Clowns, rude and diſtaſtful in Converſation; they would not give Offence to their Company, by claſhing with their Humour; by preferring their own Judgment, and ſeeming to be in their own Conceit wiſer and better than thoſe with whom they converſe; by provoking them to think they are held Fools or worſe by ſuch non-compliance.

This is an ordinary Snare to eaſie and ingenuous Natures; but the ground of it is very unreaſonable: For although in Matters of indifference, where Duty and Sin do not fall into conſideration, to be limber and ductile as can be (which is the Temper of the beſt Metal) to have no Humour of our own, or to reſign up all our Humour to the Will of our Company, to condeſcend unto, and comport with any thing; to raiſe no Faction or Debate, but preſently to yield to the ſwaying Vote; to become all things to all men in a ready Complaiſance, be Wiſdom and good Manners, doth argue good Nature, good Underſtanding, good Breeding; is a rightly gentile and obliging Quality:

Yet where Duty is concerned, where Sinning or not Sinning is the Caſe, there Courteſie hath no room; there it is vain to pretend any Engagement to Complaiſance.

For ſurely it is better to be held uncivil, than to be ungodly; it is far better Manners to offend any number of Men, than to be rude with God, to claſh with his Pleaſure, to offer Indignity and Injury to him; there can be no competition in the Caſe; no ſhadow of Reaſon, why we ſhould diſpleaſe God to pleaſe Men.

As it were more civil to offend ten thouſand Boors, (Peaſants) than to affront our King; ſo to offend ten thouſand Kings than to affront our God were in Policy more adviſeable, and in Equity more juſtifiable; ſo the Pſal. 119. 23. Royal Pſalmiſt did judge; for Princes (ſaid he) did ſit and ſpeak againſt
Matt. 10. 18. me, but thy Servant did meditate in thy Statutes; ſo Moſes, ſo Samuel, ſo Elias, ſo Jeremy, ſo Daniel, ſo the three noble Children, ſo the holy Apoſtles did conceive; who being Perſons otherwiſe very courteous and gentle, yet had not that conſideration of mighty Princes, as not rather to approve their Conſciences to God, than to comply with their Pleaſure, how much leſs ſhould we upon pretence of courteſie toward inferiour perſons, in ordinary converſation tranſgreſs our duty?

Our own intereſt in ſuch caſes is too conſiderable to be ſacrificed to the conceit or pleaſure of any men; Our ſalvation is no matter, wherein formality of reſpect ſhould intervene, or have any weight; to gain or forfeit our eternal happineſs, is no buſineſs of complement or ceremony: It were a ſilly courteſie for a man to wait on his company to Hell; a wild point of gallantry, to be damned in complaiſance.

Who would take himſelf to be obliged in good manners to hold on the round in a cup of poiſon; to leap down after thoſe, who from blind inadvertency, or wilful perverſeneſs tumble into a gulf, to gaſh or ſtab himſelf in conformity to ſome deſperate folk? Much leſs can a man be engaged out of any ſuch regard, (in compliance with the miſtake, weakneſs, or pravity of others) to incur guilt, to provoke divine wrath, to expoſe his ſoul to utter ruine, to undergo a damage, for which all the world cannot make any reparation or amends?

Is it not far better to diſguſt, than to gratifie thoſe, who have ſo little conſideration of our welfare; who indeed are very diſcourteous and heinouſly rude, in offering to tempt us unto ſin, to deſire a compliance therein with them; to expect from us, that we ſhould adventure ſo much for their vain ſatisfaction?

Indeed, to gratifie ſuch perſons, were great and noble courteſie; but really to do it, we ſhould not go this way; for this is a ſpurious courteſie, rather conſpiracy and treachery, than courteſie.

It is in truth, at the bottom, great diſcourteſie (involving much unkindneſs, real abuſe, unmerciful inhumanity and cruelty) to ſecond, to countenance, to ſupport or encourage any man in doing that which manifeſtly tendeth unto his great prejudice, to his utter bane.

It is the trueſt civility (implying real humanity, genuine charity, faithful kindneſs, and tender pity) to ſtand off in ſuch caſes, and by refuſing (in a modeſt, gentle, diſcreet manner refuſing) to concur in ſin with our friends and companions, to check them, to warn them, to endeavour their amendment and retreat from pernicious courſes; to exerciſe that compaſſion toward them, which S. Jude calleth pulling them out of the fire. Jud. 22,23.

In ſuch caſes to repel them, yea to reprove them, is the greateſt favour we can ſhew them; it is not only ſafe for our ſelves, but kind to them to obſerve St. Paul's precept, Have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them; for which deportment whenever they come to themſelves, and ſoberly reflect on things, they will thank and bleſs us; and it will happen, as the Wiſeman ſaith, He that rebuketh a man, afterward ſhall find more favour than he that flattereth with his tongue.

Eph. 5. 11,7.

Prov. 28. 23.

In fine, if we throughly ſcan the buſineſs, we ſhall find, that commonly it is not abundance of courteſie, but a defect of charity, or of conſcience, or of courage, which diſpoſeth us to reſervedneſs, or to concurrence upon ſuch occaſions, in regard to unallowable practices.

7. Another ſnare which catcheth and holdeth us in open practice of ſin, or neglect of duty, is deference to the opinion, authority, cuſtom, or example of others; to the common opinion, to the authority of great and leading perſons, to the faſhion of the world, and prevalent humour of the age.

A man (not conſulting or not confiding in his own reaſon) is apt to credit the vogue, to defer a kind of veneration to the general ſentiments of men (eſpecially of men qualified) apprehending that allowable or tolerable, which men commonly by their pactice ſeem to approve. He is prone to ſuſpect his own judgment of miſtake, when it doth thwart the opinion of ſo many; and hardly can have the heart to oppoſe his ſingle apprehenſions againſt ſo common notions.

——illos Defendit numerus. Juv. Sat. 12. 46.
Ecclus 16.17.

The commonneſs of ſin, and multitude of offenders, doth in a manner authorize and warrant it, doth at leaſt ſeem to excuſe and extenuate it. A man eaſily conceiteth himſelf ſafe enough, while he is in the herd, while he walketh in the road, when he hath the broad coverlet of general uſage to ſhrowd him from blame: He doth at leaſt fanſie conſolation in undergoing a doom with ſo many.

But upon many accompts, this is a very fallacious and dangerous ground of practice.

Ant. 9. §. 18. 11. §. 4. §. 3.
Argumentum peſſimi turba. Sen. de vit. B. 2.

For multitudes are no good authors of opinion, or guides of practice.

Wiſe men have ever been apt to ſuſpect that to be bad, which is moſt commonly admired and affected.

Nothing is more vulgarly noted, than the injudiciouſneſs, the blindneſs, the levity, temerity, and giddineſs of the vulgar; temper, inclination, appetite, intereſt, and the like perverting biaſſes have moſt ſway on them; any ſpecious appearance, any ſlight motive, any light rumour doth ſerve to perſuade them any thing, to drive them any whither.

Matt. 7. 13.
Luke 13. 24.
Rom. 9. 27.
Iſa. 10. 22.

All ages have deplored the paucity of wiſe and good men; the genuine diſciples of our Lord, and ſons of wiſdom, have ever been puſillus grex, a ſmall flock: Our Lord hath told us, that wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat.

Wherefore popular uſe is no good argument of truth or right; nor can yield any warrant, or any colour for infringing God's law: No plebiſcitum can be of force againſt it.

Acts 17. 30.
Luke 13. 3.
Rom. 9. 12.
Rom. 2. 9.

God never did allow the people to exempt themſelves or us from their loyalty, or obedience to his laws; they are univerſally obligatory; he hath commanded all men to repent; he hath threatned that otherwiſe all ſhall periſh; and that tribulation and anguiſh ſhall be upon every ſoul of man that doeth evil.

Exod. 23. 2.
Rom. 12. 2. Be not conformed to this world.
Iſa. 8. 11.
1 John 2. 15. Love not the world ——
Iſa 8. 10.
Prov. 1. 10.
Iſa. 1. 4.

He by expreſs prohibitions hath obviated all ſuch pretences and pleas; Thou ſhalt not (ſaith he) follow a multitude to do evil; and, Say ye not a confederacy— neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid, (fear not to diſſent and diſcoſt from the way of this people.) And, If ſinners entice thee, (how many ſoever they be, though it be a ſinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a ſeed of evil doers) conſent thou not.

Indeed if we conſider it, it is ſo far from excuſing ſin, that it is an aggravation thereof, that we therein conſpire with others, and the more the worſe: To oppoſe God ſingly, is not quite ſo criminal, as to join with a rout in hoſtility and rebellion againſt him; for hereby God's authority is more ſhaken, and his honour more rudely violated; hereby we do not only ſin our ſelves, but contribute to the ſin of others, encourage them to it, and uphold them in it by our patronage.

Hereby we become acceſſory to the degeneracy and general apoſtaſie of the age.

Hereby we do join our forces to pull down God's judgments on our Country, and by promoting general corruption, induce general vengeance.

The multitude of ſinners is ſo far from ſheltring any one from wrath, that it ſurely draweth it upon all; forcing the Almighty not only for the aſſertion of his own authority, and vindication of his honour; but for the good of the people, and purgation of the world, to pour forth remarkable vengeance.

Iſa. 1. 25. I will purge away the droſs,——

For example: In the time of Noah did God ſpare the old world when all fleſh had corrupted its way upon the earth, did that ſtave off God's wrath, or ſtop the deluge? No, it did grievouſly provoke him, it did in a manner neceſſitate him to deſtroy man from the face of the earth; bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly.

Gen. 6. 12. 2 Pet. 2. 5.
Gen. 6. 6. 2 Pet. 2. 5.

Did the number of ſinners in Sodom prevent vengeance on them? Was it not that which did condemn them to an overthrow ſo diſmal, pulling down fire and brimſtone on them?

2 Pet. 2. 6.

What was the reaſon of that woful captivity, into which Iſrael was carried? Was it not becauſe they were all grievous revolters, and had ſo generally conſpired in wickedneſs, that the Prophet could ſay, Run ye to and fro through the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, and ſee now and know, and ſeek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man; if there be any that executeth judgment, that ſeeketh the truth, and I will pardon it? Was it not this, which did wring from God that ſentence, Shall I not viſit for theſe things? ſhall not my ſoul be avenged on ſuch a nation as this?

Jer. 6. 28.
Jer. 5. 1.
Jer. 5. 29.

When the caſe is ſuch in any community, as it was in Iſrael, when God ſaid, From the ſoal of the foot even to the head there is no ſoundneſs in it, then judgment is neceſſary, and it muſt aſſuredly follow, Your country is deſolate—— Then God, his patience being tired, and his goodneſs unſupportably abuſed, will cry out, Ah, I will eaſe me of my adverſaries, and avenge me of mine enemies.

Iſa. 1. 6.
Iſa. 1. 7.

God, as Governour of the world, in diſcharge of his office, for clearing his honour, for aſſuring his majeſty, out of regard to publick good, for the ſafety and welfare of his ſubjects, is concerned to chaſtiſe notorious, ſcandalous, and infectious ſin: He may reſerve private ſins for the final doom, when the hidden things of darkneſs ſhall be brought to light, and the counſels of hearts manifeſted, and all things ſhall receive juſt award and recompence; but it is expedient to puniſh publick ſins publickly: They who declare their ſin as Sodom, with outrageous impudence, are like to find a puniſhment like that in a common vengeance.

1 Cor. 4. 15.
Iſa. 3. 9.

We ſhould therefore in ſuch a caſe be the more careful of our converſation, more ſhy of ſinful compliance with others, for preventing publick calamity; for that our ſingle piety and innocence (or the goodneſs of a few) may ſave our Country, together with our ſelves, from wrath and ruine; ſeeing it is the gracious method of God, in regard to a few righteous men, to ſpare the reſt; to releaſe a Nation from deſerved puniſhment; for if in Sodom had been found ten righteous perſons, it had eſcaped that horrible deſtruction; And Iſrael in Hezekiah's time (although in a very great and general corruption of that age) by a few good men did avoid the like doom; according to that of the Prophet, Except the Lord of hoſts had left unto us a very ſmall remnant, we ſhould have been as Sodom.

Gen. 38. 32.
Iſa. 1. 9.
Lam. 3. 22.

The righteouſneſs of one Noah did ſave the race of mankind from being extinct:

The zeal of one Phinehas did ſtop that plague, which had devoured Iſrael; Phinehas (ſaid God himſelf) the ſon of Eleazar hath turned my wrath away from the children of Iſrael; while he was zealous for my ſake among them, that I conſumed not the children of Iſrael in my jealouſie.

Num. 25. 11.
Pſal. 106. 30.

If there had been ſuch another publick Patron of Piety, at the time when Iſrael was ſo ſeverely puniſhed by deliverance into captivity, it would have obſtructed that lamentable event: God himſelf ſo teſtified; for, I ſought (ſaid he) for a man among them, that would make up the hedge, and ſtand in the gap before me for the land, that I ſhould not deſtroy it; but I found none; therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them—— and, Run ye to and fro —— (ſaid he again) Seek—if ye can find a man—in Jeruſalem —— and I will pardon it.

Ezek. 22. 30, 31.

Jer. 5. 1.

Wherefore beſide regard to our own welfare, a conſideration of publick good, charity toward the World, a compaſſion of our Country ſhould withhold us from conſpiring in common tranſgreſſions, or omiſſions of duty.

God will not overſee us. Eccleſ. 16. 17.

If we ſin with all, we muſt ſuffer with all; nor will the having ſo much company in ſuffering yield any true comfort to us; Socios habuiſſe doloris (to have companions in ſorrow) is in it ſelf a pitiful ſolace, and an unworthy one, ſavouring of inhumane malignity; for our fellows will bear no ſhare with us, or take off any thing from the burthen of our pains, which will be equally to them and us extreme.

Can it be any conſiderable ſatisfaction, that we are ſick of an epidemical diſeaſe, that ſweepeth away multitudes about us and with us?

Is it better for one part, that the whole body is overſpread with a noiſom leproſie? that its fellow-members are tortured with grievous anguiſh?

Can the ſoreſt pains of our brethren cure the akings of our heart, aſſuage the pangs of our conſcience, or ſlack the conſuming flames beneath?

What advantage can we enjoy from going down to hell in a troop? What eaſe ſhall we find there from being encompaſſed with the doleful groans, the piercing ſhrieks, and diſmal howlings of fellow-ſufferers in that infernal dungeon?

Alas! will it not rather augment our pains, to hear the ſore complaints, the fierce accuſations, the deſperate curſes of thoſe, whom our compliance hath engaged, or encouraged, or confirmed and hardned in that wicked practice, which did throw them into that diſconſolate caſe?

8. Another principle (near of kin to the former) is a diſlike of ſingularity, and ſolitude; together with the conſequences and imputations uſually cleaving thereto.

One would not be a man by himſelf; to be gazed on, to be hooted at as a kind of prodigy, to be deemed an extravagant, odd, humourous, fantaſtick perſon, conceited of his own opinion, addicted to his own way, arrogating to himſelf a liberty of croſſing and condemning, or contemning the world; therefore he runneth along with the age, complying with its ſinful cuſtoms, and naughty faſhions.

He is grievous unto us even to behold; for his life is not like other mens, his ways are of another faſhion. Sap. 2. 15, &c.

But this is a vain Principle; for really to be ſingular is no fault, to be held ſo is no diſgrace; it is rather in many caſes laudable and honourable; and if in any moſt reaſonable, 'tis in this.

Doth not ſingularity, or paucity, encreaſe the price and eſtimation of every valuable thing? What maketh a jewel, but rarity? What but that maketh a diamant more precious than a peble?

Do not men for ſingular eminency in any art, skill, faculty, endowment, gain credit and renown? What recommended to poſterity the names of Apelles, Praxiteles, Phidias, but excelling in their art beyond the ordinary rate? What gave to Demoſthenes and Cicero their eſteem, but a ſingular knack of eloquence? To what did Alexander and Cæſar owe their fame, but to an extraordinary valour? Whence got Socrates ſuch a name, but from his ſingular wiſdom? Whence Fabricius, Ariſtides, Cato, but from their ſingular integrity?

Why then ſhould it be a diſcouragement or reproach to be ſingular or extraordinary in the nobleſt of all faculties, that of living well, in the moſt excellent of all perfections, that of vertue?

In truth a man is hardly capable of a greater commendation than this, that he is ſingularly good; that he ſurpaſſeth the vulgar level, and mounteth near Heaven in the divineſt qualities; that no bad example or faſhion hath been able to ſeduce or corrupt him; this ſhould render him to be moſt highly eſteemed, and moſt dearly cheriſhed, as a choice ornament of the world, as a moſt uſeful inſtrument of good to mankind.

It were deſirable that vertue were more common in the world, but ſurely its being more rare doth render it more admirable, more illuſtrious, more glorious.

Heroical vertue is therefore ſuch, becauſe ſo few do attain, or can reach it;

—— —pauci quos æquos amavit
Jupiter,

A few, who by ſpecial aſſiſtance of God's Grace, and by extraordinary reſolution, do ſurmount the obſtacles which are ſet againſt it.

It was well ſaid of St. Bernard, To be good among good men hath ſafety; but to be ſuch among bad men hath alſo praiſe; (a man will be ſaved by that, but he ſhould be commended for this) that hath as much facility as it hath ſecurity, this is of as much worth as difficulty.

Inter bonos, bonus eſſe ſalutem habet, inter malos verò & laudem; illud tantæ facilitatis eſt, quantæ & ſecuritatis; hoc tantæ virtutis, quantæ & difficultatis. Bern. Ep. 25.

Indeed if we conſider the nature of things, or conſult the hiſtory of times, we ſhall find that vertue muſt be, and ever hath been liable to this imputation; it is commonly ſo hard and hazardous to be good in any notable degree, that few will take the pains, or undergo the hardſhips requiſite to attain or exerciſe it.

Hence the beſt men, (who are ſuch not according to the blind conjecture of men, but in God's ſure eſteem) are an elect, and peculiar ſort 1 Pet. 2. 9.
of people, a few choice perſons cull'd out of a great lump of thoſe, who either reject Religion, or embrace it only in verbal profeſſion, or formal ſhew.

Hence it hath been the obſervation, and complaint of all times,

Rari quippe boni. Juv. Sat. 13. 28.

Hence the moſt renowned men for goodneſs, and who by God's ſpecial care have been recommended to us as patterns thereof, have been very ſingular in it; and their ſingularity did much enhance the price of their goodneſs.

It is ſaid of Enoch, that he walked with God; but it ſeemeth with ſmall, Gen. 5. 22.
or no company beſide; otherwiſe it would not have been ſo particularly recorded of him.

Noah was content to be a man by himſelf, a preacher of righteouſneſs againſt the vogue, and a practicer thereof againſt the ſtream of his whole age; for, thee (ſaid God of him, that is, thee alone) have I ſeen righte- Gen. 7. 1.
ous before me in this generation: He was no leſs ſingular in his goodneſs, than in his ſalvation.

Abraham had no common qualities, which moved God to pick him
Gen. 12. 1. out, and ſeparate him from the reſt of mankind (to ſingle him from his kindred and country) to confer ſpecial graces and bleſſings on him.

2 Pet. 2. 7. Lot had his righteous ſoul vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked, which did encloſe him; yet ſo that he did retain a ſound and clear integrity among them.

Job had this teſtimony from God, examining Satan concerning him, Job 1. 8. Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him on the earth; a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and eſcheweth evil?

What was the reſolution of Joſhua? Did he value being ſole or ſingular in his practice? No, for propounding to his people whether they would chuſe God or not, he told them, that however it were, although all of them ſhould forſake God, he was reſolved to ſtick faſt to him, not re-
Joſh. 24. 15. garding their practice; But (ſaid he) as for me and my houſe, we will ſerve the Lord; that indeed was nobly reſolved; it was a reſolution worthy of ſuch an Heroe, to ſtand alone in ſo good and wiſe a choice againſt his whole Nation. It was a reſolution ſuitable to that his behaviour, which Joſh. 14. 8. he expreſſed in theſe words, My brethren that went up with me made the heart of the people melt; but I wholly followed the Lord my God; in regard to which his camerade Caleb, being of the ſame ſpirit with him, is called
Num. 14. 24. a man of another ſpirit; different from, and above the mean ſpirit of his fellows.

What was David? Was he not a man by himſelf? Was he not like one, of whom the Poet ſaith,

Juv. Sat. 13.

> Egregium ſanctumque virum ſi cerno, bimembri
> Hoc monſtrum puero, vel fœtæ comparo mulæ.

* A Wonder. N. Tr. Pſal. 71. 7. 119. 51.
1 Pet. 'Εν ᾧ ξενίζ.

So he telleth us, I (ſaith he) am become as it were a * monſter unto many, but my ſure truſt is in thee.

Did Elias, to ſhun the imputation of ſingularity, or in regard to common practice, ſwerve from his faithful adherence to God's ſervice; al-
1 Kings 19. 10 though he did paſſionately reſent and bewail his caſe? No; for, I have, ſaid he, been very jealous for the Lord of hoſts; for the children of Iſrael have forſaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and ſlain thy prophets with the ſword; and I, even I only am left, and they ſeek my life to take it away.

Lam. 3. 14. What was the caſe of Jeremy? I (ſaith he) was a deriſion to all my people, and their ſong all the day; yet did he maintain his integrity, and was
Jer. 1. 18. Murus aheneus. a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and a brazen wall againſt the whole land; againſt the kings of Judah, againſt the princes thereof, and againſt the people of the land.

What was the condition of our Lord? Was not he σημεῖον ἀντιλεγόμενον, Luke 2. 34. Heb. 12. 3. Acts 4. 27. Iſa. 63. 3. John 12. 37. John 16. 32. Matt. 26. 31, 56. a prodigie ſpoken againſt by all, againſt whom both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Iſrael were gathered together; who trod the wine-preſs alone, and of the people there was none with him; who in his life was regarded by few, and at his death (when he yielded his great atteſtation to truth and righteouſneſs) was deſerted by all?

What was the Apoſtles condition? Were they not ſingular men? Were Acts 28. 22. 2 Cor. 4. 9. Heb. 10. 33. 1 Cor. 1. 26. not they held a Sect, every where ſpoken againſt, and impugned with all violence of ſpirit and rage? Were not they made a ſpectacle to the world, to be gazed at with ſcorn and reproach? Did not they (a few, ſimple, poor, weak weak folk) in doctrine and practice croſs and controll the world, confuting, reproving, condemning the generality of men, of errour, of folly, of wickedneſs?

It can therefore be no juſt blame or reaſonable diſcouragement to appear ſingular in the practice of vertue.

Such a ſingularity is no good argument of fond conceitedneſs, of wilful humour, of arrogant pride. For,

Can it be fond conceitedneſs to follow the dictates of the beſt reaſon, to obſerve the advices of the wiſeſt men in all times, to follow the direction and conduct of infinite wiſdom, to embrace that which in moſt caſes natural light, common ſenſe, and continual experience do approve? Is it not wildneſs to do otherwiſe, though all ſhould do it?

Can it be wilful humour to hold faſt our beſt intereſt, our trueſt comfort, our eternal ſalvation? Is it not rather ſo, to comply with a perverſe generation, in running headlong to their own ruine?

Can it be pride or arrogance, to acknowledge our Maker; to be loyal and dutiful to our heavenly Sovereign; to fear the Almighty God, to ſubmit to his will, to tremble at his word, to be afraid of his judgments, to ſhun his fierce anger and ſevere vengeance?

Is it a bad ambition to ſeek that honour and immortal glory, which God doth offer; to ſhun that everlaſting ſhame and contempt, which he doth menace?

Is it not rather monſtrous preſumption, and enormous vanity, to conſort and conſpire with rebels againſt God's law, with deſpiſers of his grace?

In fine, when the moſt men are fooliſh and vain, when the world is depraved and diſſolute, it is neceſſary that the beſt reaſon ſhould be called humour, and the wiſeſt men ſhould be deemed extravagant; that the beſt things ſhould be ſlighted, and the beſt perſons repreſented with odious characters: But hence to renounce wiſdom and goodneſs is abominably abſurd; as if we ſhould therefore put out our light, becauſe it is night about us; or in deep winter ſhould put off our clothes among the wild Indians.

9. Of affinity to the foregoing Principles is this moſt plauſible apology for ſmothering our conſcience, namely, a prudential apprehenſion, that we ſhall not come off well in openly avowing and abetting goodneſs, ſo as to do any good, or ſervice to it thereby; but ſhall thereby rather work prejudice and diſſervice to it.

The Age (will ſuch a wiſe man ſay) is incorrigibly degenerate; wickedneſs is not only bold and impudent, but even outragiouſly inſolent; ſo that to appear ſtrictly good, is a kind of ſcandal; to pretend conſcience for our rule of action, is to be ridiculous; to patronize duty, is to provoke ſcorn and obloquy; to mention religion, is to proſtitute and profane it; to concern God in our doing, is to expoſe his moſt ſacred and venerable Name to irriſion and foul abuſe. Job 12. 4.

Such is the poſture of things, that of all the ſects and factions which divide the world, that of Epicurean ſcorners and mockers is become the moſt formidable; with diſdainful pride inſulting and vapouring over the profeſſors of religion; perſecuting all ſoberneſs of mind and ſtaunchneſs of manners with a fierce rage, and a kind of Satanick zeal.

The ſtate of the world being like to that, when the holy Pſalmiſt cried out, Lord, how long ſhall the wicked, how long ſhall the wicked triumph? How long ſhall they utter and ſpeak hard things, and all the workers of iniquity boaſt themſelves. Pſal. 94. 3, 4. 52. 1. 10. 3.

Matt. 7. 6. In ſuch a caſe, is it not ſeaſonable to obſerve our Lord's advice, not to give that which is holy unto dogs, nor to caſt our pearls before ſwine; not to expoſe good doctrine, and holy practice, to ſcurrillous and ſenſual people, who will ſnarl and bark at it, will ſcorn and trample on it, will bite and tear you for it?

Is it not then wiſdom rather fairly to retreat, withdrawing our vertue into a ſafe retirement, than by openly conteſting for it againſt overmatching forces, to hazard its being baffled and abuſed, its being trampled on, and triumphed over, by ſcornful pride and malice?

In ſuch a world to oppoſe impiety, what is it but attempting to ſtop a torrent, to allay a ſtorm, to gape againſt an oven, to blow againſt the wind, to kick againſt the pricks?

But if this caſe be rightly weighed, it rather ſtrongly may engage us to an open profeſſion and practice of the ſtricteſt vertue, than excuſe us from it.

Eph. 5. 15. Phil. 2. 5. St. Paul doth enjoin us to walk accurately, not as fools, but as wiſe, redeeming the time, for this reaſon, becauſe the days are evil; and *that we ſhould be blameleſs and harmleſs, the ſons of God without rebuke, in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe nation, ſhining among them as lights in the world; and * holding forth the word of life.*

* (Or, holding faſt, ἐπέχοντες;)

And great reaſon for it; for the worſe the world is, the more need there is of good patterns to inſtruct and guide it, to admoniſh and excite it to goodneſs.

If the days are evil, it is high time that we ſhould apply our beſt endeavours to the mending of them.

Spectа juvenis —— in ea tempora natus es, quibus formare animum expediat conſtantibus exemplis. Tac. Ann. 16.

If vertue be ſo near loſt, or ſo quite gone from among us, it is needful that we ſhould preſently ſeek to recover, or to retrive it.

If goodneſs be ſo hardly preſſed by oppoſition, then hath every good man the more reaſon to appear ſtrenuouſly in its defence, the more are we engaged to haſten with all our might to its relief and ſuccour from irrecoverable oppreſſion.

Every one ſhould labour to raiſe a bank againſt that inundation, which threatneth to overthrow and overwhelm all.

Shall we endure to ſee the adverſary of our welfare to carry all before him, without any oppoſition or obſtruction? Shall we ſuffer iniquity to enjoy a quiet reign, to root and ſettle it ſelf in its uſurpation, to raiſe it ſelf a title of long occupancy and preſcription againſt goodneſs?

Is it not then more generous to avow our friendſhip to vertue, and to abet it in our patronage, when it is under the hatches, and crieth for our aid? Is it not vile treachery in ſuch a caſe to deſert it?

Is it not gallant then to reſiſt ſin, and check wickedneſs, when it is ſo high and rampant?

Who will not be vertuous (or endeavour at leaſt to appear ſuch) when vertue is in faſhion and requeſt; when it flouriſheth in reputation, when all the world doth countenance and abet it? Who will not ſhun or diſown wickedneſs, when it is commonly odious and deſpicable? Who will not

Jud. 5. 23. help the Lord againſt weak adverſaries?

But to embrace vertue upon greateſt diſadvantages, to diſclaim vice in its triumphant proſperity, this is indeed brave and maſculine.

He is a worthy man indeed, who can keep the field among ſo many ſtout enemies, who can ſtand upright in a crooked generation; who can deſpiſe the ſcorn, defie the rage, bear up againſt the impudence and malignity of vain, baſe, wretched men, combining to ſupplant and extirpate goodneſs.

Nor have we reaſon in proceeding thus to deſpair of good Succeſs; we need not fear thereby to expoſe the credit, or endanger the intereſt of Goodneſs. For,

How can we fail of proſpering in the maintenance of God's Cauſe, and ſpecial Concern? Although Men may commonly deſert him, yet doth he not utterly forſake them, or give over the government of the World; he may let the Reins lie a little looſe, but he doth not put them out of his Hands; his Power cannot be abated, his Providence can never ſleep; though he is ſo patient in ſuffering wicked Men to provoke him, yet he will not be ſlack in aſſiſting good Men, who take his part, and undertake to maintain his Honour; Aſſuredly he will help them, who help him againſt the mighty.

In this ſervice one will chaſe a thouſand, and two put ten thouſand to flight; Deut. 32. 30.
One David will knock down never ſo many Philiſtines reproaching God's Joſh. 23. 10.
Name; One Phinehaz will repreſs the petulancy of a whole Nation; One Num. 25. 3.
Jeremy ſhall be a brazen Wall againſt a whole Land; God will make it good Jer. 1. 19. 15.
to ſuch an one, They ſhall fight againſt thee, but they ſhall not prevail a- 20. 20. 11.
gainſt thee; for I am with thee, ſaith the Lord, to deliver thee.

One ſober Man, in defence of Vertue, is able to diſcomfit all the Hectors, the huffing Blades, and boiſterous Ruffians in the World; attacking them with ſound Diſcretion, and ſteady Reſolution: For all their Bravery and Confidence, they are eaſily Mated, and being like their Sire, if you reſiſt them, they will flee from you: A prudent, ſeaſonable, ſmart check Jam. 4. 7.
will quaſh their ſpurious Courage, and giddy Audacity. Their contempt of Goodneſs is but feigned; they cannot really for their Hearts deſpiſe it; there is ſtamped on their Souls and Conſciences ſuch a reſpect, ſuch an awe thereof, which they cannot quite race out; wherefore if you briskly repreſent it to them, and challenge their reverence to it, they cannot but ſuccumb, their own Mind and Conſcience joining to back your Reproof; ſo that if you cannot reclaim them, you ſhall however repreſs them; if you cannot correct their Vice, you ſhall yet confound their Impudence; For ſo (ſaith Jer. 20. 11.
St. Peter) it is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to ſilence the 1 Pet. 2. 15.
Ignorance of fooliſh Men; and, Having a good Conſcience, that whereas they 3 16. Tit. 2. 8.
ſpeak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be aſhamed that falſly accuſe your Converſation in Chriſt.

It is only a ſneaking, or a timorous pretence to Vertue, which they contemn, but they will admire thoſe who ſtifly adhere to it, and ſtoutly maintain it.

We ſhall therefore expoſe Vertue, not by frankly avowing it, but by faintly ſlinking from it, when occaſion requireth an open acknowledgment and exemplary practice of it.

If the World is ſo very bad, it will not be worſe for our attempt to better it; it will be ſo much at leaſt better, that one therein hath that worthy purpoſe.

It was bad, when Noah preached Righteouſneſs to it.

It was bad, when Elias was ſo zealous for the Lord of Hoſts.

It was bad, when Jeremy was derided for declaring God's Will, and exhorting to Repentance.

They were very bad times, when all the Prophets did ſtrive ſo earneſtly to reclaim Men from their Wickedneſs; being reproached and perſecuted for doing ſo, but not deterred from doing it; the reſentment they had of the badneſs of Times did not make them abandon the means of its recovery from it.

1 John 5. 19. The whole World did lie in wickedneſs when the Apoſtles did undertake the Reformation of it.

None calleth for juſtice, nor any pleadeth for truth —— Iſa. 59. 4.

In fine, if Men generally upon ſuch accompts of deſpairing Prudence neglect to own Goodneſs, what muſt the conſequence be? what, but that Piety ſhall be caſhiered, that Vertue ſhall be diſcarded, that Conſcience ſhall be quite exploded and exterminated from the World; that conſequently an horrible deluge of various Miſchiefs, a general prevalence of Lewdneſs and Luxury, of Fraud and Violence, of Faction and Tumult; a violation of all Faith and Friendſhip, a diſſolution of all Order and Peace will enſue?

And what muſt grow upon this ſtate of things? what but another flood of Judgments and woful Vengeance; when God's Patience hath been tried to the utmoſt, and his Goodneſs tired with bearing ſuch a load of Abominations, he will be forced to cry out, Shall I not viſit for theſe things? ſhall not my Soul be avenged on ſuch a Nation as this? Jer. 5. 29. Iſa. 1. 24. 59. 17.

Stulta caliditas, perverſè imitata prudentiam. Cic. de Offic. 3. p. 143.

10. Another Principle of diſpenſing with Conſcience in publick Duties, and Converſation before Men, is a kind of perverſe Wiſdom, or ſubtile Craft, affecting the name of Diſcretion.

Men ſee there are divers Inconveniences attending the profeſſion of reſpect to God, and conſcience in all their doings; that the World may diſlike and diſeſteem them, that divers Perſons will hate, malign, reproach and perſecute them for it; that they may chance to be croſſed in their Deſigns, and loſe Profits and Preferments thereby; therefore they deem it adviſeable to decline it in open view, making up the defect by adoring and ſerving God in private.

Thus they think to ſalve all, by maintaining a neutrality, and compounding the buſineſs, yielding an open conformity to the World, and reſerving a ſecret regard to God; ſinning publickly, and privately repenting; retaining their Credit, Quiet, Eaſe, Pleaſure with their Conſcience, and peace of Mind: affecting ſome Piety, but avoiding the ſcandal of it. Gal. 5. 11.

They would hold fair with both ſides, ſo that neither the World ſhould perſecute them for croſſing its Humour, nor God puniſh them for tranſgreſſing his Will.

They drive a ſubtile trade, hoping to gain on all hands, both the benefits of the other, and the advantages of this World; to ſave their Soul, and ſerve their worldly Intereſt together:

This they would believe a point of ſpecial Wiſdom; preſcribed by Solomon, Be not righteous overmuch, neither make thy ſelf over-wiſe, for why ſhouldeſt thou deſtroy thy ſelf? Be not overmuch wicked, neither be thou fooliſh, why ſhouldeſt thou die before the time? Eccleſ. 7. 16, 17.

But this rooking trick, to hedge thus, and ſave Stakes, to play faſt and looſe, to dodge and ſhuffle with God, God doth not like, nor will ſuffer himſelf to be gull'd with it.

1 Kings 18. 21. He will not be ſatisfied with ſuch a mongrel, partial, and halting Service.

He will not allow us to with-hold that half of his Service (the external, viſible part thereof) which is moſt honourable to him, and moſt beneficial to our Neighbour.

Pſal. 12. 2. Jam. 1. 8. 4. 8.
2 Chron. 12. 33.
1 Tim. 3. 8. Δίγλωσσ.
Pſal. 38. 37. Their heart was not whole with him. (O. Tr.)
Deut. 18. 13. Job 1. 8.
Pſal. 44. 18. 119. 51.
2 Chron. 34. 2. Job 23. 11.
Matt. 6. 24. } Δυσὶ κυρίοις.
Luke 16. 13. }

He cannot endure a double Heart, a double Face; one looking upward to Heaven, another downward to the Earth.

He exacteth from us an integrity of Heart, and perfection of Obedience; that we ſhould love him with our whole Heart, that we ſhould be perfect with him, that we ſhould walk uprightly, not deflecting to the right hand or left from our Duty.

He will not endure, that we ſhould hold amity, or correſpondence with his Enemies; particularly with the World, the friendſhip whereof he hath declared inconſiſtent with his favour; and that it is a ſpiritual adultery to impart any of our affections to it; according to that of St. James, Ye Adulterers, and adultereſſes; know ye not that the friendſhip of the World is enmity with God; ſo that whoſoever will be a friend of the World, becometh the enemy of God.

Jam. 4. 3. 1 John 2. 15.
Καθίςαται.
(John 15. 19. 17. 14.)

We may ſhift as well as we can in the World, provided that we hold Innocence, and do not conſpire with it againſt God, by violation of our duty to him. Be wiſe as Serpents, innocent as Doves, Matt. 10. 16. (As Lambs, Luke 10. 3.)

Pſal. 37. 38. O. Tr.
Phil. 2. 5.

Rom. 16. 19. Σοφοὺς εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν, ἀκεραίους δὲ εἰς τὸ κακόν.

They reproach good Men as ſuperſtitious; who are afraid of inviſible Powers; who let go things in hand (preſent Intereſts and Pleaſures) for a reverſion and hope.

As if God's Word were not ſufficient Security: As if we may not as well rely upon things conſpicuous to Reaſon, as thoſe which are obvious to ſenſe.

If Chriſtianity be plainly falſe, they ſay well; but if it be true, very abſurdly; yea, if probable, very imprudently; yea, if poſſible, not wiſely.

Ἄτοποι.
2 Theſſ. 3. 2.

They charge conſcientious Men with timorouſneſs, faint-heartedneſs.

It is timorouſneſs or blameable fear to dread things without reaſon, things no wiſe formidable, which cannot hurt us; ſuch a timorous Man is he, that out of fear of Men, (of diſpleaſing them, of ſuffering by them, of their reproach, &c.) tranſgreſſeth his Duty.

But to fear God is Wiſdom, Soberneſs, Duty, Vertue; 'tis handſome and honourable, becoming our Nature, our Condition; the paſſion of fear was chiefly put in us for this purpoſe, as its beſt uſe.

Is it Courage, and not rather Madneſs to provoke, to reſiſt, to challenge, to cope with the Almighty? Is it Courage to throw ones ſelf down a Precipice, to leap into the infernal Lake? Is it gallantry to dare tranſgreſs all Reaſon and Sobriety? Is it brave to be wild and ſenſeleſs, &c.?

It is true courage to reſiſt and repel Sin, aſſaulting a Man with whatever advantages; to dare to do well, although vain Men deride, and ſpiteful Men hate us for it.

It is a kind of Martyrdom to be ill uſed by the World for adhering to his Duty, and he hath a ſhare in that, Bleſſed are they who ſuffer for righteouſneſs.

In fine, it is a vain Prudence, to be thus politick with God; whereby we ſhall loſe the whole, or that part which is invaluable, out of preſumption to ſave a ſmall inconſiderable part.

Matt. 10. 39.
Ὁ εὑρὼν τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ, ἀπολέσει αὐτήν.

If this be prudence, then (as St. Paul ſaith) is the offence of the croſs ceaſed.

Gal. 5. 11.

Then our Lord preſcribed a fooliſh Condition.

Matt. 10. 38.
16. 24.

Then were the Apoſtles very imprudent, who deſerted all, and ſuffered ſo much for their Conſcience; being content to ſecure their Spiritual Intereſt, and to obtain the eternal rewards of Piety; chuſing the better part, which could not be taken from them.

Phil. 3. 8.
Luke 10. 42.

What the true Wiſdom is in ſuch caſes St. James hath told us, Who is a wiſe Man, and endowed with knowledge among you? let him ſhew out of a good converſation his Works, with meekneſs of Wiſdom.

Jam. 3. 13.

SERMON XXXVI.

Of the Goodneſs of GOD.

PSALM CXLV. 9.

The Lord is good to All, and his tender Mercies are over all his Works.

THE goodneſs of God is a frequented Theme; to many perhaps it may ſeem vulgar and trite; ſo that Diſcourſe thereon, like a Story often told, may be nauſeous to their Ears: but in truth neither can we ſpeak too much upon this moſt excellent Subject, nor ought we ever to be weary in hearing about it; for 'tis a ſign that the Palate of our Mind is diſtempered, if we do not with delight and affection reliſh any mention of Divine Goodneſs. Yea, the obſervation of Mens common practice would induce us to think, that either this point is not ſo well known, or but little believed, or at leaſt not well conſidered and applied. For how could we be ſo void of love to God, of gratitude toward Him, of faith and hope in Him, were we throughly perſuaded, did we ſeriouſly conſider, that He is ſo exceedingly good toward us? how can we be ſo inſenſible of the Benefits we enjoy, ſo diſtruſtful of finding Succours and Supplies in our Need, ſo diſſatisfied and diſcontented with what befalls us, if we conceive and weigh, that all things do proceed from, are guided and governed by immenſe Goodneſs? how alſo, if Men have ſuch an opinion of God impreſſed on their Minds, comes it to paſs that they are ſo little careful to reſemble and imitate him in Kindneſs, Bounty, and Mercy to one another? How is it in fine, that the moſt powerful Argument to all manner of good Practice, and the mightieſt aggravation of Sin, if well known and pondered, hath ſo little force and efficacy upon us? from Experience therefore this Argument may ſeem ſcarce ſufficiently inculcated. We may add, that Diſcouſe upon this Attribute (which above all other Attributes doth render God peculiarly admirable, and amiable) hath this ſpecial advantage beyond other Diſcourſes, that it doth, if our Hearts conſpire therewith, approach moſt nearly to the formal exerciſe of the moſt high and heavenly parts of Devotion, Praiſe and Thankſgiving; that it more immediately conduces to the breeding, the nouriſhing, the augmenting in us the beſt and nobleſt of pious Affections, love and reverence to God? truſt and hope in him; willing reſolutions to pleaſe and ſerve him; whence is conſequent, that we cannot too much employ our Thoughts, our Words, or our attention upon this Point. Beſide ſo much reaſon, we have alſo good good Example to countenance us in ſo doing : we have the precedent of the holy Pſalmiſt reſolving to make it his conſtant and continual employment: I will ſing (ſaith he) of the Mercies of the Lord; with my mouth will Pſal. 89. 1. I make known thy faithfulneſs to all Generations. And, Every day will I bleſs Pſal. 145. 2. thee, and I will praiſe thy Name for ever and ever; (that bleſſing and praiſing God, the Context ſhews to have conſiſted eſpecially in the declaration of God's great goodneſs) and, It is a good thing (ſaith he again) to Pſal. 92. 1. give thanks unto the Lord, and to ſing praiſes unto thy Name, O thou moſt High; to ſhew forth thy loving kindneſs in the morning, and thy faithfulneſs every night. Such were his Intentions, and ſuch his Judgment about this Practice; and we find him in effect true and anſwerable to them; Every Song of his, every Meditation, every exerciſe of Devotion chiefly harping upon this String; and he earneſtly wiſhes that others would conſent and conſort with him therein: he earneſtly exhorts and excites them thereto: O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſs, and for his wonderful Pſal. 107. 8. Pſal. 106. 1. works to the children of men. Praiſe the Lord, O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. That one Example might ſufficiently authorize this Practice; but we have innumerable others, and thoſe the higheſt that can be, to encourage and engage us thereto; even the whole Choire of Heaven, whoſe perpetual buſineſs and happy entertainment it is to contemplate with their Minds, to celebrate with their Voices the immenſe goodneſs of God; they have (as it is in the Revelation) no reſt day or night from performing this office. Apoc. 4. 8. Such is the ſubject of our Diſcourſe; the which our Text moſt plainly and fully expreſſes; aſſerting not only the goodneſs of God; but the univerſal and boundleſs extent thereof: The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies (or his bowels of affection and pity) are over all his works. And that God indeed is ſuch, we ſhall firſt endeavour to declare, then ſhall briefly apply the conſideration thereof to practice.

—— Θεὸς, οὗ πολλῶν ὄντων, ἐφ' οἷς θαυμάζεται, οὐδὲν οὕτως ὡς τὸ πάντας εὐεργετεῖν ἰδιώτατον. Naz. Orat. 26.

That God the Lord, and Maker of all things is of himſelf, in regard to all his Creatures, eſpecially to us Men, ſuperlatively good, that is diſpoſed never without juſt or neceſſary cauſe to harm us, and inclinable to do us all poſſible and befitting good, the univerſal frame of Nature, and the conſtant courſe of Providence do afford us ſufficient reaſon to conceive, and moſt frequent, moſt expreſs Teſtimonies of holy Scripture do more fully demonſtrate. There is no argument from natural effects diſcernible by us, which proveth God's Exiſtence, (and innumerable ſuch there are, every ſort of things well ſtudied may afford ſome) the which doth not together perſuade God to be very kind and benign; careful to impart to us all befitting Good, ſuitable to our natural Capacity and Condition; and unwilling that any conſiderable Harm, any extreme Want or Pain ſhould befal us (I interpoſe ſuch limitations, for that an abſolute, or univerſal and perpetual exemption from all kinds, or all degrees of Inconvenience, an accumulation of all ſorts of appearing good upon us, doth not become, or ſute our natural ſtate of being, or our rank in perfection among Creatures; neither all things being duly ſtated, and computed, will it turn to beſt account for us.) The beſt (no leſs convincing, than obvious) Arguments, aſſerting the exiſtence of a Deity are deduced from the manifold and manifeſt footſteps of admirable Wiſdom, Skill and Deſign apparent in the general Order, and in the particular frame of Creatures; the beautiful harmony of the whole, and the artificial contrivance of each part of the World; the which 'tis hardly poſſible that any unprejudiced and undiſtempered Mind ſhould conceive to proceed from blind chance, or as blind neceſſity. But with this Wiſdom are always complicated no leſs evident marks of Goodneſs. We cannot in all that vaſt bulk of the Creation, and numberleſs variety of things diſcover any piece of meer Pomp, or dry Curioſity; every thing ſeems to have ſome beneficial tendency; according to which it confers ſomewhat to the need, convenience, or comfort of thoſe principal Creatures, which are endued with Senſe and Capacity to enjoy them. Moſt of them have a palpable relation to the benefit (to the ſubſiſtence, or delight) of living Creatures; and eſpecially in an ultimate relation to the benefit of Man; and the reſt, although their immediate uſe be not to our dim ſight ſo diſcernible, may therefore be reaſonably preſumed in their natural deſignation to regard the ſame end. Wherefore as upon conſideration of that ample proviſion, which is made in Nature for the neceſſary ſuſtenance, defence, and relief, for the convenience, delight, and ſatisfaction of every Creature, any Man, Pſal. 104. 24. who is not careleſs or ſtupid, may be induced to cry out with the Pſalmiſt:

33. 5. 119. 64. O Lord, how manifold are thy Works, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all? ſo
57. 10. 108. 4. may he with no leſs reaſon and ground after him pronounce and acknowledge;
Pſal. 33. 5. 119. 64. The Earth is full of the goodneſs of the Lord: The Earth, O Lord, 57. 10. 108. 4. is full of thy Mercy. Thy Mercy is great unto the Heavens; thy Mercy is Pſal. 104. 10. &c. great above the Heavens. 'Tis indeed becauſe Divine Goodneſs is freely Pſal. 65. 11. diffuſive and communicative of it ſelf; becauſe eſſential Love is active,
103. 4. and fruitful in beneficence; becauſe higheſt excellency is void of all Envy, Selfiſhneſs, and Tenacity, that the World was produced ſuch as it was; thoſe Perfections being intrinſical to God's Nature, diſpoſed him to beſtow
Pſal. 104. 28. ſo much of Being, of Beauty, of Pleaſure upon his Creatures. He openeth his hand, they are filled with good: 'Tis from God's open Hand, his unconfined Bounty and Liberality, that all Creatures do receive all that good which fills them, which ſatisfies their Needs, and ſatiates their Deſires. Every pleaſant Object we view, every ſweet and ſavoury Morſel we taſte, every fragrancy we ſmell, every Harmony we hear; the wholſome, the chearing, the uſeful; yea, the innocent and inoffenſive Qualities of every thing we do uſe and enjoy, are ſo many perſpicuous Arguments of Divine Goodneſs; we may not only by our reaſon collect it, but we even touch and feel it with all our Senſes.

The like concluſion may be inferr'd from the obſervation of Divine Providence. Every Signification, or Experiment, whence we may reaſonably infer that Divine Power and Wiſdom do concur in upholding, managing, and directing the general State of Things, or the particular Affairs of Men, being well examined and weighed, would afford reaſon apt to perſuade, that the Governour of the World is graciouſly affected toward his Creatures and Subjects. The general preſervation of things in their natural Conſtitution and Order; the diſpenſing conſtant viciſſitudes of Seaſon, ſo as may ſerve for the ſupply of our Needs; the maintaining ſuch a courſe of things in the World, that notwithſtanding the great irregularity of Will, and violence of Paſſion in ſo many Perſons, yet Men do ordinarily ſhift ſo as to live tolerably upon Earth in Peace and Safety, and enjoyment of competent accommodations for Life; with the Aids and Conſolations ariſing from mutual Society; the ſupports, encouragement, and rewards of Vertue many times in a ſtrange manner adminiſtred; the Reſtraints, Diſappointments, and ſeaſonable Chaſtiſements of Wickedneſs, eſpecially when it grows exorbitant and outrageous, unexpectedly intervening, with the Pſal. 28. 5. like paſſages of Providence, will, to him that ſhall regard the works of the
Iſa. 5. 12. Lord, and the operation of his hands, ſufficiently declare as the other glorious Attributes (Wiſdom, Power, and Juſtice) ſo eſpecially the goodneſs of

of him, who preſides over the World; aſſuring that he is a friend to the welfare, and diſlikes the Miſery of Mankind. He that ſhall well obſerve, and conſider how among ſo many fierce and hard-hearted, ſo many crafty and ſpiteful, ſo many domineering and devouring Spirits, the poor and weak, the ſimple and harmleſs ſort of People do however ſubſiſt, and enjoy ſomewhat, cannot but ſuſpect that an undiſcernible hand, full of Pity and Bounty, doth often convey the neceſſary ſupports of Life to them, doth often divert imminent Miſchiefs from them; cannot but acknowledge it credible, what the holy Scripture teacheth, that God is the Friend, and Patron, and Protector of thoſe needy and helpleſs People, redeeming Pſal. 14. 6. tot. 10. 14. 72. 12. their Soul from deceit and violence, (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) that he is (as the Prophet expreſſeth it) a ſtrength to the Poor, a ſtrength to the Needy in Iſa. 25. 4. his diſtreſs, a refuge from the Storm, a ſhadow from the Heat, when the blaſt of the terrible ones is as a Storm againſt the Wall. He that ſhall remark, how frequently in an unaccountable way, ſuccour and relief do ſpring up to juſt and innocent Perſons; ſo that in a whole Age (as the Pſalmiſt obſerved) Pſal. 37. 25. ſuch Perſons do not appear deſtitute or forſaken; how alſo Iniquity is commonly ſtop'd in his full cariere, and then eaſily receives a check, when its violence ſeem'd uncontrollable; how likewiſe many times the World is reſcued from Confuſions and Diſtractions unextricable by any viſible wit or force; with other like occurrences in humane Affairs, muſt admit it for a reaſonable hypotheſis (fit to render a cauſe of ſuch appearances) that a tranſcendent Goodneſs doth ſecretly interpoſe, furthering the production of ſuch effects; he muſt upon ſuch obſervation be ready to verifie that of the Pſalmiſt: Verily there is a reward for the righteous, verily Pſal. 58. ult. there is a God that judgeth the Earth. St. Paul inſtructs us, that in paſt-times (that is, in all Generations from the beginning of things) God did Acts 14. 17. atteſt himſelf to be the Governour of the World: how? ἀγαθοποιῶν, by his beneficence; giving to Men ſhowers from Heaven, and fruitful Seaſons, filling their Hearts with food and gladneſs: competent evidences it ſeems theſe were of his Providence, and withall (ſuppoſing that) certain demonſtrations of his Goodneſs: Although ſome have abuſed this kind of Teſtimony, or argumentation ſo valid in it ſelf, unto a contrary purpoſe alledging, that if God ruled the World, ſo much Wickedneſs and Impiety would not be tolerated therein, that ingrateful and evil Men could not ſo thrive and flouriſh; that more ſpeedy and more ſevere Vengeance would be executed; that Benefits would not be ſcattered among the crowd of Men, with ſo promiſcuous and undiſtinguiſhing a freeneſs: But ſuch Diſcourſes, upon a juſt and true account, do only infer the great Patience and Clemency, the unconfined Mercy and Bounty of our Lord; that he is in Diſpoſition very different from pettiſh and impatient Man, who ſhould he have the Reins put into his hands, and in his adminiſtration of things ſhould be ſo often neglected, croſſed, abuſed, would ſoon overturn all things; and being himſelf diſcompoſed with Paſſion, would precipitate the World into confuſion and ruine. Things would not have ſubſiſted hitherto, and continued in their orderly courſe, but by the moderation of an immenſe Goodneſs; by that

—— magni cuſtos clementia mundi. Claud.

'Tis by the Lord's Mercies that we (we the whole body of ſinful Men, Lam. 3. 32. ſo guilty of heinous Provocations, and Rebellions againſt our Maker) are not conſumed. And what again God in the Prophet ſpeaks concerning Iſrael, he might have applied to the whole Nation of Men: How ſhall I Acts 17. 26. give give thee up, Ephraim; how ſhall I deliver thee, Iſrael? how ſhall I make thee as Admah? how ſhall I ſet thee as Zeboim? I will not execute the fierceneſs of my Anger, I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim; for I am God, and not Man: the reaſon (for I am God, and not Man) is obſervable; implying (upon parity of Reaſon in the Caſes, concerning that one Nation, and concerning the Body of Men) that it is an Indulgenee, and forbearance above, if not contrary to the Temper of Man, and even beyond humane Conceit, whereby the ſtate of things here doth ſubſiſt, and is preſerved from Ruine.

Thus Nature, and thus Providence do bear witneſs concerning the diſpoſition of God. As for holy Scripture, there is nothing either in way of poſitive aſſertion more frequently inculcated, or by more illuſtrious Exam- Exod. 34. 6. ples ſet forth and made palpable, than this Attribute of God. When God would impart a Portraicture, or deſcription of himſelf to his deareſt Friend, and Favourite Moſes; the firſt and chief Lineaments thereof are ſeveral ſorts, or ſeveral Inſtances of Goodneſs; he expreſſes himſelf Merciful and אלן רחום gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs: (Merciful: El rachum;) a God of pitying, or ſtrong in pity; that is, moſt apt to commiſerate and to ſuccour thoſe who are in Need or Diſtreſs. Gracious, that is, ready both freely to forgive Wrongs, and to diſpence Favours. Long-ſuffering, or longus irarum, that is, not ſoon moved, or apt eaſily to conceive diſpleaſure; not haſty in execution of Vengeance, or venting his Anger in hurtful effects. Abundant in goodneſs, that is, not ſparing as to quantity or quality, either in the multitude or magnitude of his Favours, but in all reſpects exceedingly liberal; conferring willingly both very many, and ve- Pſal. 86. 5. 103. 8, &c. ry great Benefits. Such did God repreſent himſelf to Moſes, when he deſired a fuller Knowledge, and nearer acquaintance with him, than ordinary means afford. The ſame character in ſubſtance we have often repeated; and ſometimes with advantage of emphatical Expreſſion, well deſerving Joel 2. 13. our obſervation and regard; as when the Prophet Joel ſaith, that God is Mich. 7. 18. penitent, or ſorry for evil inflicted; and Micah, that he delighteth in Mercy; Neh. 9. 17. and when Nehemiah calleth him a God of Pardons; and when Eſay repre- Iſa. 30. 18. ſents him as waiting (or ſeeking occaſions) to be gracious: and all this in the Old Teſtament, where God ſeems to look upon Man with a leſs ſerene, and debonair Aſpect: Indeed as that diſpenſation (ſutably to the nature and condition of things under it) doth ſet out God's Mercy and Goodneſs with eſpecial relation to this preſent World, or temporal Eſtate; ſo the New one more abundantly diſplays his more excellent care and love of our Souls; his great tenderneſs of our ſpiritual and eternal welfare. It is all of Rom 2. 4. it in its nature and deſign but as it were one entire declaration of the τὸ χρηστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ (the beneficial diſpoſition, the benignity, or bountifulneſs of God, as St. Paul telleth us) 'tis a rare project of divine philanthropy; an illuſtrious affidavit of God's wonderful propenſity to bleſs and ſave Mankind; manifeſted by the higheſt expreſſions and inſtances of Love and Goodneſs that were poſſible. (For his not ſparing his own Son, the expreſs Image of his ſubſtance, the deareſt object of his infinite Love, the partaker of his eternal Nature and Glory, but delivering him up a Sacrifice for our Offences; his moſt earneſt woing our baſeneſs and unworthineſs to reconciliation with him, and admiſſion or acceptance of his favour; his tendering upon ſo fair and eaſie terms an endleſs Life in perfect joy and bliſs; his furniſhing us with ſo plentiful Means and powerful Aids for attaining that Rom 5. 33. happy State; how pregnant demonſtrations are theſe, of unſpeakable good- 13. 5. 2 Cor. 13. 11. neſs toward us, whence) The ordinary titles in this diſpenſation attribu- 1. 3 ted unto him are, the God of love and peace, of hope, of patience; of all grace, of all Conſolation; the Father of Pities, rich in Mercy, full of Bowels; Love and Goodneſs it ſelf. Thus doth the Scripture poſitively aſſert God's Goodneſs; thus it directly repreſents and deſcribes his gracious Diſpoſition toward us. And as for Examples (which muſt ſerve as to illuſtrate and explain, ſo alſo to verifie, and aſſure Matters of this Nature) if we carefully attend to God's ordinary Proceedings with Men there recorded, we ſhall find this Diſpoſition very conſpicuous in them. Who can recount the number, or ſet out the value of thoſe Inſtances, wherein God's Goodneſs is expreſſed toward ſuch as lov'd him? of his admirable Condeſcenſion in drawing them to him; of the Affectionate Tenderneſs, with which he conſtantly embraced them; of his merciful Indulgence toward them, when provoked by their untowardly Behaviour; of his kind Acceptance, and munificent recompencing their Endeavours to pleaſe him; of his deep compaſſionating their Sufferings; of his vigilant Carefulneſs over them, and over all their Concernments? Methinks the higheſt Expreſſions that Language, aſſiſted with all its Helps of Metaphor and Reſemblance can afford, are very languid and faint in compariſon of what they ſtrain to repreſent, when the Goodneſs of God toward them who love him, comes to be expreſſed: As the Heaven is high above the Earth, ſo great is his Mercy toward them that fear him. Like as a Father pitieth his Children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him; So David ſtrives to utter it, but with Similitudes far ſhort of the Truth. If any will come near to reach it, 'tis that in Moſes and Zachary, when they are compared to the Apple of God's Eye, that is, to the moſt dear and tender part, as it were, about him.

Eph. 2. 4.
Jam. 5. 11.
1 John 4. 8.

Luke 6. 35. For he is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil.

Pſal. 36. 6.
Pſal. 103. 11, 13.

Deut. 32. 10
Zach. 2. 8.

We find them often ſtyled, and ever treated as Friends, and as Children; and that in a Senſe tranſcending the vulgar ſignification of thoſe Words; for, what Friendſhip could endure, could paſs over, could forget, could admit an entire Reconciliation, and Re-eſtabliſhment in Affection after ſuch heinous Indignities, ſuch Infidelities, ſuch Undutifulneſs as were thoſe of Adam, of Noah, of David, of Peter: who would have received into Favour and Familiarity a Manaſſes, a Magdalen, a Paul? who would ſo far extend his regard upon the Poſterity (upon ſuch a Poſterity, ſo untoward, ſo unworthy) of his Friend, as God did upon that of Abraham, in reſpect unto him? what great Prince would employ his principal Courtiers to guard and ſerve a poor Attendant, a mean Subject of his? Yet; The Angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them; And many Inſtances we have of thoſe glorious Inhabitants of Heaven by God's Appointment ſtooping down to wait upon, and to perform Service to the Sons of Men. But upon Examples of this Nature, being numberleſs, and compoſing indeed the main Body of the Sacred Hiſtory (it being chiefly deſigned to repreſent them) I ſhall not inſiſt; I ſhall only obſerve for preventing or ſatisfying Objections (yea indeed for turning them to the advantage and confirmation of that which we aſſert) that even in thoſe Caſes, wherein God's higheſt Severity hath been exerciſed, when God hath purpoſed to exhibit moſt dreadful Inſtances of his Juſtice upon the moſt provocative Occaſions; we may diſcern his Goodneſs eminently ſhewing it ſelf: That even in the greateſt Extremity of his Diſpleaſure, in his Acts of higheſt Vengeance, Mercy doth κατακαυχᾶσθαι τῆς κρίσεως (as St. James ſpeaketh) boaſt it ſelf, and triumph over Juſtice: that God, as the Sun (to uſe

John 15. 14.
2 Chron. 20. 7.

Pſal. 34. 7.

Γίνεται φιλανθρωπία ἡ τιμωρία· οὕτω γὰρ ἐγὼ πείθομαι κολάζειν τὸν θεόν. Naz. Orat. 38.

Ἐγὼ τοσαύτην περιουσίαν εἶναί φημι τῆς τοῦ θεοῦ κηδεμονίας, ὡς μὴ μόνον ἀφ᾽ ὧν ἐτίμησεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀφ᾽ ὧν ἐκόλασεν ὁμοίως ἡμᾶς δύνασθαι τὴν ἀγαθότητα αὐτοῦ δεικνύναι, καὶ τὴν φιλανθρωπίαν. Chryſ. ἀνδρ. ζ´.

Ὁ θεὸς ἀπαθὴς ὢν κἂν εὐεργετῇ, κἂν κολάζῃ, ὁμοίως ἐστὶν ἀγαθός. Ibid.

Jam. 2. 13.

Tunc maximè eſt optimus, cùm tibi non bonus; ſicut Sol tibi etiam quando non putas, optimus & utilis, &c. Tertull. in Marc. II. 2.

Tertullian's Similitude) when he ſeems moſt to infeſt and ſcorch us, doth even then diſpenſe uſeful and healthful Influences upon us. Even I ſay in the moſt terrible and amazing Examples of Divine Juſtice (ſuch as were the ejecting and excluding Mankind from Paradiſe; the general Deſtruction in the Deluge; the exſcinding and extirpation of the Amorites together with other Inhabitants of Canaan; the delivering Iſrael and Judah into the Aſſyrian Thraldom, the final deſtruction of Jeruſalem, together with the diſperſion of the Jewiſh Nation over the World, and its ſad Conſequences) we may (not hardly) obſerve Particulars, more than ſavouring of great Mercy and Goodneſs.

Vide Chryſ. Tom. 6. Or. 8. p. 63. optimé.

1. That (in moſt of theſe Caſes, in all according to ſome Account) God was not moved to the Diſpleaſure productive of thoſe Effects but upon very great Conſiderations. That he did not ſeek Advantages, nor embrace all Occaſions; but was incenſed by ſuperlative Degrees of Iniquity and Impurity (ſuch in their own Nature, and much aggravated by their Circumſtances) ſuch as rendred common Life inconvenient and inſupportable to Men; made the Earth to ſtink with their Filth and Corruption; to groan under the burthen and weight of them; to pant and labour for a riddance from them.

2. That God did not upon the firſt Glimpſes of Provocation proceed to the execution and diſcharge of his Wrath, but did with wonderful Patience expect a change in the Offenders, waiting to be gracious, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; affording more than competent time, and means more than ſufficient of appeaſing him by Repentance; vouchſafing frequent Admonitions, Solicitations, Threatnings, moderate Corrections, and other ſuch proper Methods conducing to their Amendment, and to their Preſervation.

Eſa. 30. 18.

3. That their Inflictions themſelves, how grievous ſoever in appearance, were not really extreme in meaſure; not accompanied with ſo acute Torments, nor with ſo lingring Pains, nor with ſo utter a Ruin as might have been inflicted; but that (as Ezra, in reſpect to one of thoſe Caſes, confeſſeth) they were leſs than their Iniquities deſerved. That (as it is in the Pſalm) He did not ſtir up all his Wrath; which would have immediately conſumed them, or infinitely tormented them.

Ez. 9. 13.
Pſal. 78. 38.

4. That (conſequently upon ſome of thoſe Premiſſes) the Afflictions brought upon them were in a ſort rather neceſſary than voluntary in reſpect of him; rather a natural Fruit of their Diſpoſitions and Dealings than a free Reſult of his Will; however contrary to his primary Intentions and Deſires. Whence he no leſs truly, than earneſtly diſclaims having any Pleaſure in their Death, that he afflicted willingly, or grieved the Children of Men; and charged their Diſaſters upon themſelves, as the ſole Cauſes of them.

Ezek. 18. 23, 32. 33. 11.
Lam. 3 33.
Hoſ. 13. 9.

5. That farther, the Chaſtiſements inflicted were wholſome and profitable, both in their own Nature, and according to his Deſign; both in reſpect to the generality of Men (who by them were warned, and by ſuch Examples deterr'd from incurring the like Miſchiefs; were kept from the Inconveniences, ſecured from the Temptations, the Violences, the Allurements, the Contagions of the preſent evil State? according to that Reaſon alledged for Puniſhments of this kind: All the people ſhall hear, and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly) and in regard to the Sufferers themſelves, who thereby were prevented from proceeding farther in their wicked Courſes; accumulating Chryſ. Ἀνδρ. ζʹ.

Ὁμοῦ καὶ δικαστὴς καὶ ἰατρὸς καὶ διδάσκαλός ἐστιν ὁ Θεός. Ibid.
Deut. 17. 13.
Ἐπιτίθησι τιμωρίαν, οὐ τῶν ἀπελθόντων ἀπαιτῶν δίκην, ἀλλὰ τὰ μέλλοντα διορθούμενος. Chryſ. Tom. 8. p. 99

lating (or, treaſuring up, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) farther degrees of Wrath, Rom. 2. 5.
as obdurate and incorrigible People will ſurely do. (Why, ſaith the Prophet, ſhould ye be ſtricken any more? (to what purpoſe is moderate Cor- Iſa. 1. 5. 26. 10.
rection?) ye will revolt more and more. That he did with a kind of Vio- — lence to his own Inclinations, and Reluctancy inflict Puniſhments on them.
O Ephraim, how ſhall I give thee up, O Ephraim. Yea farther, Hoſ. 6. 4.

6. That during their Sufferances God did bear Compaſſion toward them, who underwent it. His Bowels, as we are told, ſounded and were troubled; Iſa. 63. 9, 15.
his Heart was turned within him; his Repentings were kindled together; in all Hoſ. 11. 8.
their Afflictions himſelf was afflicted; he remember'd and conſider'd they were Jer. 31. 20. Gen. 6. 3.
but Duſt; that they were but Fleſh (that they were but of a weak and frail 8. 21.
Temper; that they were naturally prone to Corruption and Evil) and did Pſal. 103. 14. 78. 39.
therefore pity their Infirmity, and their Miſery.

7. That God in his Wrath remembred Mercy (as the Prophet Habakkuk Hab. 3. 2. ſpeaks) mixing gracious Intentions of future Refreſhment and Reparation with the preſent Executions of Juſtice. I know (ſaith he in the Prophet Je- Gen. 6. 3. remy) the Thoughts that I think toward you; Thoughts of Peace, and not of 8. 21.
Evil, to give you an expected End. Behold, I will bring Health and Cure, I will Jer. 29. 11.
cure them, and will reveal unto them abundance of Peace and Truth. And, For 33. 6.
a ſmall Moment (ſaith he again in Eſay) have I forſaken thee, but with great Iſa. 54. 7.
Mercies will I gather thee. And, Ye ſhall be comforted concerning the Evil that I have brought upon Jeruſalem. ——and ye ſhall know, that I have not done Ezek. 14. 21.
without cauſe all that I have done in it; ſaith the Lord (he ſaith ſo in Ezekiel) without cauſe, that is, without a beneficial Deſign toward them.

8. Laſtly, that he always ſignified a readineſs to turn from his Anger, and to forgive them; and upon very equal and eaſie Terms to be fully reconciled to them; according to that in the Pſalmiſt, He doth not always Pſal. 103. 9.
chide, neither will he keep his Anger for ever; but upon any reaſonable Overtures of Humiliation, Confeſſion and Converſion to him, was ready to Pſal. 99. 8. abate, yea, to remove the Effects of his Diſpleaſure; Thou waſt a God that forgaveſt them, though thou tookeſt vengeance of their Inventions.

Theſe Particulars, if we attentively ſurvey thoſe dreadful Examples of Divine Severity forementioned (the greateſt which Hiſtory acquaints us with, or which have been ſhewed on this Theater of Humane Affairs) we may obſerve moſt of them in all, all of them in ſome, either plainly expreſſed, or ſufficiently inſinuated by the Circumſtances obſervable in the Hiſtorical Narrations concerning them; ſo that even the harſheſt Inſtances of God's wrathful dealing with ſome Men, may well ſerve to the illuſtration of his Mercy and Goodneſs toward all Men; may evince it true, what our Lord affirms, that God is, χρηστὸς ἐπὶ ἀχαρίστους, καὶ πονηρούς, kind and be- Luke 6. 35.
neficent even to the moſt ingrateful and unworthy Perſons. To make which Obſervation good, and conſequently to aſſert the verity of our Text (That God is good unto all, and merciful over all his Works)) againſt the moſt plauſible Exceptions; I ſhall examine the Particulars in the following Diſcourſe.

SERMON XXXVII.

Of the Goodneſs of GOD.

PSALM CXLV. 9.

The Lord is good to All, and his tender Mercies are over all his Works.

I Shall now more particularly conſider the ſeveral Inſtances beforementioned.

I. The Puniſhment inflicted on Mankind for the firſt Tranſgreſſion containeth in it much of Depth and Myſtery, ſurpaſſing perhaps all Capacity of Man to reach; its full Comprehenſion being by Divine Wiſdom (I conceive) purpoſely concealed from us; ſo that I cannot pretend thoroughly to explain it; and ſhall not therefore ſpeak much about it.

This indeed is clear, that God did in his Proceedings occaſion'd thereby intend remarkably to evidence his grievous Reſentment and Indignation againſt wilful Diſobedience; yet in the management thereof we may obſerve; that,

Vid. Chryſ. 'Ανδρ. ζ'. Οὐ γὰρ εἶπε, καθάπερ εἰκὸς ἦν ὑβρισμένον εἰπεῖν, ὦ μιαρὲ καὶ παμμίαρε, &c. Ibid.

1. After that Provocation (in it ſelf ſo high, and liable to ſo great Aggravations) God did expreſs his Reſentment in ſo calm and gentle a manner that Adam, though abaſhed upon the Conſcience of his Fault, was not yet by the vehemency of the Reproof utterly diſmayed or dejected.

2. God uſed great Moderation in the infliction of this Puniſhment; mitigating the extremity of the Sentence juſtly decreed and plainly declared to Adam (that in caſe of his offending againſt the Law preſcribed him, he ſhould immediately die) for notwithſtanding his Forfeiture that very day of Life, God reprieved him, and allowed him a long Life, almoſt of a Thouſand Years after. Gen. 2. 17.

3. God did not quite reject Man thereupon, nor did withdraw his fatherly Care and Providence from him, but openly continued them; inſomuch that immediately after the Curſe pronounced upon our firſt Parents, the next Paſſage we meet with is, that unto Adam and his Wiſe did the Lord God make Coats, and cloathed them. Gen. 3. 21.

4. Although indeed Man was by his Fault a great Loſer, and became deprived of high Advantages; yet the Mercy of God did leave him in no very deplorable Eſtate, ſimply conſidered, as to his Life here; the Relicks of his firſt Eſtate, and the Benefits continued to him being very conſiderable; ſo that we the Inheritors of that great Diſaſter do commonly find the Enjoyment of Life, with the Conveniences attending it, to be ſweet and deſirable.

5. The Event manifeſts, that while God in appearance ſo ſeverely puniſhed Mankind, he did in his Mind reſerve Thoughts of higheſt Kindneſs toward us; even then deſigning not only to reſtore us to our former Degree, but to raiſe us to a Capacity of obtaining a far more high Pitch of Happineſs. While he excluded us from a Terreſtrial Paradiſe here, he provided a far better Celeſtial one, into which, if we pleaſe, by Obedience to his Holy Laws we may certainly enter. So that in this of all moſt heavy inſtance of Vengeance God's exceeding Goodneſs and Clemency do, upon ſeveral Conſiderations moſt clearly ſhine.

II. The Calamity, which by the general Deluge did overflow the World, was not (we may conſider) brought upon Men but in regard to the moſt enormous Offences long continued in, and after amendment was become deſperate. Not till after much forbearance, and till Men were grown to a ſuperlative pitch of wickedneſs by no fit means (by no friendly warning, no ſharp reprehenſion, no moderate chaſtiſement) corrigible. Not until the Earth was become (eſpecially for Perſons of any Innocence or Integrity) no tolerable Habitation, but a Theater of lamentable Tragedies, a Seat of horrid Iniquity, a Sink of loathſome Impurity. So that in Reaſon it was to be eſteemed rather a Favour to Mankind to reſcue it from ſo unhappy a State, than to ſuffer it to perſiſt therein. To ſnatch Men away out of ſo uncomfortable a Place, from ſo wretched a Condition, was a Mercy; it had been a Judgment to have left them annoying, rifling and harraſing; biting, tearing and devouring; yea defiling and debauching each other; and ſo heaping upon themſelves Loads of Guilt, and deeper Obligations to Vengeance. The Earth (ſaith the Text) was corrupt before God; and the Earth was fill'd with Violence. God looked upon the Earth, and behold it was corrupt; for all Fleſh had corrupted its way upon the Earth; which univerſal and extreme Corruption had not in probability ſprung up in a ſmall time (for, Gen. 6. 11.

Nemo repente fuit turpiſſimus, is true not only of ſingle Men, but of Communities; no People, no Age doth ſuddenly degenerate into extreme Degrees of Wickedneſs) ſo that the Divine Patience had long endured and attended upon Men, before the Reſolution of thus puniſhing them was taken up; the which alſo was not at firſt peremptory and irreverſible, but in God's Deſign and Deſire it was revocable; for the World had a long Reprieve after the Sentence paſs'd; Execution was deferr'd till Noah's long preaching of Righteouſneſs, and denouncing of Judgment in a manner ſo notorious and ſignal (not by verbal Declarations only, but by the viſible Structure of the Ark) could prevail nothing toward their amendment, but was either diſtruſted or diſregarded, and perhaps derided by them. For, as St. Peter tells us, They were diſobedient, when once the Long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the Ark was preparing; that is (as is collected by ſeveral Interpreteas from the * Text of the Story) during no leſs than 120 Years; a competent time for their recollecting themſelves, and endeavouring by amendment of Life to prevent the Ruin threatned to come upon them. Yet notwithſtanding that, this obſtinate and incorrigible Diſobedience did ſo much diſpleaſe God

1 Pet. 3. 20.
2 Pet. 2. 5.
* Gen. 6. 3.

Gen. 6. 6. God, as that in conſideration thereof God is ſaid to have repented that he made Man on the Earth, and to have been thereby grieved at the Heart: Yet did he ſo temper his Anger as not utterly to deſtroy Mankind, but provided againſt its total ruin, by preſerving one Family as a Seminary thereof; preſerving the Father thereof (queſtionleſs by a ſpecial Grace) from the ſpreading Contagion, inſpiring him with Faith, and qualifying him for the Favour, which by him he deſigned to communicate unto the World; the reparation thereof, and reſtoring the Generations of Men. So that alſo through this Paſſage of Providence, how diſmal and dreadful ſoever at firſt ſight, much Goodneſs will be tranſparent to him that looks upon attentively.

III. In the next place, as to that extermination and exciſion of the Canaanites, which carries ſo horrible an appearance of Severity, we may find it qualifiable, if we conſider, that for the nature of the Treſpaſſes, which procured it, they were inſufferably heinous and abominable: Moſt ſottiſh, barbarous, and baſe Superſtitions (Cruelty and Impurity being eſſential Ingredients into their Performances of Religion, and it being Piety with them to be exceedingly wicked) and in their other Practice moſt beaſtly laſciviouſneſſes, moſt bloody Violences, Oppreſſions and Rapines generally abounding. So that for thoſe Men themſelves, who were by turns, as it hapned, the Authors and the Objects of theſe Dealings, it could not be deſirable to continue in a State of living ſo wretched and uncomfortable. Impunity had been no Mercy to ſuch People, but rather a Cruelty; cutting them off muſt needs be the greateſt Favour they were capable of; it being only removing them from a Hell here, and preventing their deſerving many worſe Hells hereafter. Even to themſelves it was a Favour and a greater one to their Poſterity, whom they might have brought forth to ſucceed in their Courſes, and to the Conſequences of them; whom they would have engaged into their wicked Cuſtoms, and their woful Miſchiefs. They were not ſo deſtroyed from the Land, until it grew uninhabitable in any tolerable manner, and it ſelf could not, as it were, endure them any longer, but (as the Text doth moſt ſignificantly expreſs Levit. 18. 28. it) did ſpue them out; being like a Stomach ſurcharg'd with foul, or poiſonous Matter, which it loaths, and is pained with, and therefore naturally labours to expel. Neither was this ſad Doom executed upon them till after 400 Years of forbearance: for even in Abraham's time God took notice of their Iniquity, then born and growing; and gave account of his ſuſpending their Puniſhment; becauſe (ſaid he) the Iniquity of the Amorites Gen. 15. 16. was not yet full (that is, was not yet arrived to a pitch of deſperate Obſtinacy and Incorrigibility:) While there was the leaſt glimpſe of Hope, the leaſt Relicks of any Reaſon, any Regret, any Shame in them, the leaſt poſſibility of Recovery, God ſtopped his avenging Hand; but when all ground of Hope was removed; the whole Stock of natural Light and Strength was imbezill'd; all Fear, all Remorſe, all Modeſty were quite baniſhed away; all Means of Cure had proved ineffectual; the Gangreen of Vice had ſeized on every part, Iniquity was grown mature and mellow; then was the Stroke of Juſtice indeed not more ſeaſonable than neceſſary; then was the fatal Sword the only proper Remedy; then ſo with one Stroke to cut off them, and their Sins and their Miſchiefs, and their Miſeries together, was an Argument no leſs ſtrong and clear of God's merciful Goodneſs, than of his juſt Anger toward them.

Levit. 18.

IV. The like Account we may render of God's Judgments upon the People of Iſrael. If we conſult the Prophets, who declare the ſtate of things, the Facts, the Diſpoſitions, the Guilts, that brought them down from Heaven, we ſhall ſee, that they came upon account of an univerſal Apoſtaſie from both the Faith and Practice of true Religion; a deep corruption (like that in the days of Gibeah, as the Prophet Hoſea ſpeaketh) in Mind and Manners; an utter perverting of all Truth and Right; an obſtinate compliance with, or emulation of the moſt abominable Practices of the Heathen Nations about them; an Univerſal Apoſtaſie, I ſay, from God and all Goodneſs; a thorough Prevalence of all Iniquity. Hear the Prophets expreſſing it, and deſcribing them. Jeremy; Run ye to and fro through the Streets of Hieruſalem; ſee now, and know, and ſeek in the broad places thereof; if ye can find a Man; if there be any that executeth Judgment, that ſeeketh the Truth, and I will pardon it. Eſay; The Earth is defiled under the Inhabitants thereof; becauſe they have tranſgreſſed the Laws, changed the Ordinances, broken the everlaſting Covenant: Ah ſinful Nation, a people laden with Iniquities, a Seed of Evil Doers, Children that are Corrupters; they have forſaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Iſrael unto Anger; they are gone away backward, &c. Thus do theſe and other Prophets in a like ſtrain deſcribe in the groſs the ſtate of things preceding thoſe Judgments. And in Ezekiel (in divers places, particularly in the 8*th*, but eſpecially in the 22*d*. Chapter) we have their Offences in retail, and by parts (their groſs Impieties, their grievous Cruelties, Extortions and Oppreſſions) ſet out copiouſly, and in moſt lively Colours. And as the Quality of their Provocations was ſo bad, and the Extenſion of them ſo large, ſo was their Condition deſperate; there were no means of Remedy left, no hopes of Amendment; ſo was their Forehead covered with Impudence, their Heart hardned with Obſtinacy, their Minds deeply tinctured with habitual Pravity and Perverſeneſs: Can the Ethiopian change his Skin, or the Leopard his Spots, then may ye alſo do good that are accuſtomed to do evil, ſaith Jeremy concerning them. All Methods of reclaiming them had proved fruitleſs; no favourable Dealings, no gentle Admonition, or kind Inſtruction would avail any thing; for 'tis of them the Prophet Eſay ſaith; Let Favour be ſhewed to the Wicked, yet will he not learn Righteouſneſs. No Advices, no Reproofs (how frequent, how vehement, how urgent ſoever) had any Effect upon them. Almighty God declares often that he had ſpoken unto them riſing up early, but they would not hear nor regard his Speech; did not only neglect, and refuſe, but deſpiſe, loath, mock, and reproach it (turning their Back upon him, pulling away their Shoulder, ſtiffning their Neck, and ſtopping their Ears, that they ſhould not hear) that he had ſpread out his Hands all the day long to a rebellious and gainſaying People; to a People that (with extreme Inſolence and Immodeſty) provoked him to Anger continually to his Face. Nor could any Tenders of Mercy allure or move them: I ſaid (God ſaid it in Jeremy) after all theſe things, turn unto me, but ſhe returned not. Amend your Ways and your Doings, and obey the Voice of the Lord your God, and the Lord will repent him of the Evil, that he hath pronounced againſt you. Repent, and turn your ſelves from all your Tranſgreſſions, ſo Iniquity ſhall not be your Ruin; and innumerable the like Overtures we have of Grace and Mercy to them; all which they proudly and perverſely rejected, perſiſting in their wicked Courſes: they even repelled and ſilenced, they rudely treated and perſecuted the Prophets ſent unto them with Meſſages of kind Warning, and Overtures of Grace; ſo obſtructing all acceſs of Mercy to themſelves: They ſay to the Seers, ſee not; and to the Prophets, propheſie not unto us right things: ſo Eſay reports their pro-

Hoſ. 9. 9.
Je. 5. 1.
Eſ. 24. 5. 1. 4.
Ezek. 22.
Jer. 13. 23.
Iſa. 26. 10.
Jer. 25. 4.
32. 33. 6. 10.
Zech. 7. 11.
Neh. 9. 29, 30.
Eſ. 65. 2.
2 Chr. 36. 16.
Jer. 3. 7. 7. 3.
4. 1, 14. 18.
11. 26. 13.
Jer. 11. 21.
32. 30.
Eſa. 30. 10.
Matt. 23. 37.
Ezek. 18.
Eſa. 30. 10.

Acts 7. 51. ceeding; which of the Prophets did not your Fathers perſecute: ſo St. Stephen expoſtulates with them. Neither were gentler Chaſtiſements deſigned for their Correction and Cure any-wiſe available; they made no Impreſſion on Iſa. 1. 16, 17, &c. them, they produced no change in them: In vain (ſaith God) I have
(Neh. 9. 29.) ſmitten your Children, they have received no Correction. And, Thou haſt ſmitten Jer. 2. 30. 5. 3. them, but they have not grieved; thou haſt conſumed them, but they have refuſed to receive Correction; they have made their Faces harder than a Rock, Iſa. 9. 13. they have refuſed to return; and, The People turneth not to him that ſmiteth
Rom. 9. 22. them, neither do they ſeek the Lord of Hoſts. Unto this καταρτισμὸς εἰς ἀπώλειαν, this perfect Fitneſs (as St. Paul ſpeaketh) this maturity of deſperate and irrecoverable Impiety, had that People grown, not at once, and on a ſudden, but by continual ſteps of Provocation, through a long courſe of time, during that divine Patience ſparing them, and by various Expedients ſtriving to recover them. This Conſideration is frequently inſiſted Jer. 32. 30. upon, eſpecially in the Prophet Jeremy, The Children of Iſrael, and the Children
7. 25. 16. 12. 11. 7. of Judah have only done evil before me from their youth; ſince the day
Ezr. 9. 7. that your Fathers came forth out of the Land of Egypt unto this day, I have even ſent unto you all my Servants the Prophets, daily riſing up early, and ſending them; Yet they hearkned not unto me, &c. Well then, after ſo many hundred Years of abuſed Patience, and unſucceſsful Labour to reclaim them, it was needful that Juſtice ſhould have her Courſe upon them: Yet how then did God inflict it, with what Mildneſs and Moderation, with what Neh. 9. 31. Pity and Relenting? Nevertheleſs (ſay they in Nehemiah) for thy great Mercies ſake thou didſt not utterly conſume them, nor forſake them, for thou art a gracious and merciful God. And, Thou haſt puniſhed us leſs than our Iniquities Ezr 9. 13. deſerve, doth Ezra confeſs. I will not execute the fierceneſs of my Anger;
Hoſ. 11. 19. doth God himſelf reſolve and declare in Hoſea. So mild he was as to the meaſure of his puniſhing; and what Compaſſion accompanied it, Jer. 31. 20. thoſe pathetical Expreſſions declare: My Heart is turned within me, my Repentings are kindled together. Is Ephraim my dear Son, is he a pleaſant Child?
for ſince I ſpake againſt him, I do earneſtly remember him ſtill, therefore my Iſa. 63. 9. Bowels are troubled for him. In all their Afflictions he was afflicted, &c. We may add; that notwithſtanding all theſe Provocations of his Wrath, and Abuſings of his Patience, which thus neceſſitated God to execute his Vengeance, yet even during the execution thereof, and while his Hand was ſo ſtretched forth againſt them, he did retain Thoughts of Favour and Intentions of doing good even toward this ſo ingrateful, ſo inſenſible, ſo incorrigible Iſa. 54. 7. a People: For a ſmall time (ſaith God) have I forſaken thee,
Jer. 29. 11. but with great Mercies will I gather thee: I know the Thoughts that I think
33. 6, 7. toward you, ſaith the Lord, Thoughts of Peace, and not of Evil, to give you an expected End. Now theſe things being ſeriouſly laid together, have we not occaſion and ground ſufficient even in this Inſtance no leſs to admire and adore the wonderful Benignity, Mercy, and Patience of God, than to dread and tremble at his Juſtice?

V. As for the laſt ſo calamitous and piteous Deſtruction of Hieruſalem, with the grievous Conſequences thereof, as we might apply thereto the former Conſiderations, ſo we ſhall only obſerve what was peculiar in that Caſe; that God diſpenſed ſuch Means to prevent it; (to remove the meritorious Cauſes thereof, obſtinate Impenitency and Incredulity; reſiſting the Truth by him ſent from Heaven with ſo clear a Revelation and powerful Confirmation; deſpiſing the Spirit of God, and the Dictates of their own Conſcience; baſely miſuſing divers ways, and at laſt cruelly murthering the Son of God) ſuch Means, I ſay, God did employ for the removing thoſe Provocatives of Vengeance, which (as our Lord himſelf ſaith) faith) were ſufficient to have converted Tyre and Sidon; yea, to have preſerved Sodom it ſelf; Matt. 11.21. ſo that our Saviour could with a compaſſionate grief deplore the unſucceſsfulneſs of his tender affection, and ſolicitous care for their welfare, in theſe paſſionate terms; How often would I have gathered thy children as a hen gathers her chickens under her wing, but ye would not? 23. 37. That St. John the Baptiſt his ſharp reproofs, his powerful exhortations, his downright and clear forewarnings of what would follow (Even now, ſaid he, the axe is laid to the root of the tree) 3. 10. attended with ſo remarkable circumſtances of his perſon, and his carriage (which induced all the World about him to regard him as no ordinary man, but a ſpecial inſtrument of God, and meſſenger from Heaven) did yet find no effect conſiderable; the Phariſees and Lawyers, thoſe corrupt guides, whoſe authority managed the blind multitude, Luke 7. 30. defeating the counſel of God toward themſelves, Matt. 11. 18. as St. Luke ſpeaketh; (that is, defeating his gracious purpoſe of reclaiming them from diſobedience, and conſequently of with-holding the judgments imminent) they reviled the perſon of that venerable Prophet, He hath a devil, ſaid they; they ſlighted his premonitions, and rejected his advices, by obſerving which, thoſe dreadful miſchiefs, which fell upon their rebellious heads, might have been averted. We may add, that even thoſe fearful judgments were tempered with mixtures of favourable deſign, not only to the community of mankind (which by ſo remarkable a vengeance upon the perſecutors of our Lord and the ſcorners of his doctrine was converted unto, or confirmed in the Chriſtian Faith) but even toward that people whom it ſerved to convince of their errors and crimes; to induce them to repentance, to provoke them unto the acknowledgment and embracing of God's truth, ſo palpably vindicated by him. So that I might here apply that paſſage of St. Paul (if not directly and adequately according to his ſenſe, yet with no incongruous alluſion at leaſt) Have they ſtumbled, that they ſhould fall (or, was there no other deſign of Rom. 11. 11. God's judgments upon them, but their utter ruine?) μὴ γένοιτο· No ſuch matter; but through their fall ſalvation came to the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealouſie (or emulation.) And, in effect, as our Lord in the midſt of his ſufferings did affectionately pray for God's mercy upon them, as the Apoſtles did offer reconciliation unto them all indifferently, who would repent, and were willing to embrace it; ſo were ſuch of them as were diſpoſed to comply with thoſe invitations, received to grace, how deeply ſoever involved in the continued guilt of thoſe enormous perſecutions, injuries and blaſphemies; as particularly Saint Paul, that illuſtrious example 1 Tim. 1. 16. of God's patience, and mercy in this caſe. So that neither by this inſtance is any attribute of God more ſignalized, than his tranſcendent goodneſs, in like manner as by the former inſtances, and in analogy to them by all others, that may be aſſigned. By all of them it will appear that God is primarily and of himſelf diſpoſed to do all fitting and poſſible good to men, not to inflict evil more than is fit and neceſſary; that God is indeed Optimus ex naturæ proprietate (moſt good according to property of nature) although juſtus ex cauſæ neceſſitate (ſevere from the neceſſity of the caſe) as Tertullian ſpeaketh. De reſurr. Carnis, c. 14. To afflict men (either ſome men ſingly, or whole ſocieties of men) may be ſometimes expedient upon ſeveral accompts; for vindicating the eſteem, and ſupporting the intereſt of goodneſs, which may by impunity be diſgraced, endamaged, endangered; for the diſcrimination of good and evil men, in an obſervable manner; for the encouragement and comfort of the good; the reduction and amendment of the bad; for preventing the contagion, and ſtopping the progreſs of iniquity, whereupon greater guilts, and worſe miſchiefs would enſue; it may be as neceſſary as ſharp Phyſick to cure publick or private diſtempers; as an inſtrument of rowſing us out of our ſinful lethargies; as that which may cauſe us better to underſtand our ſelves, and more to remember God; as a ground of fearing God, and an inducement to believe his providence. For thoſe and many ſuch purpoſes to bring upon men things diſtaſtful to ſenſe, may be very requiſite; nor doth the doing it any wiſe prejudice the truth of divine goodneſs, but rather confirms it, commends it, and advances its juſt eſteem. It would be a fond indulgence, not a wiſe Kindneſs; a cruel, rather than a loving pity to deal otherwiſe. In fine, we are to conſider, that all the miſchiefs we undergo, God doth not ſo much bring them on us, as we do pull them on our ſelves. They are αὐθαίρετα πήματα, affected, or ſelf-choſen miſchiefs; they are κακὰ βλαστήματα προαιρέσεως, bad ſprouts of our free choice (as a Father calls them) they are (as another Father ſaith) ἑκουσίων κακῶν ἀκούσια ἔκγονα (the unwilling off-ſprings of wilful evils) they are the certain reſults of our own will, or the natural fruits of our actions; actions, which (however God deſire, adviſe, command; perſuade, entreat, excite) we do will, we are reſolved to perform. We in a manner (as Salvian ſaith) do force God to do whatever he doeth in this kind; violently plucking down vengeance on our own heads; compelling the kind and merciful Lord, againſt his nature and will, to afflict us; not ſo much as giving him leave to ſpare us. God vehemently diſclaims himſelf to be the original cauſe; to deſign (according to abſolute or primary intention) to deſire to delight in our grief, or our ruine. As I live, ſaith the Lord, (and ſurely when God ſwears, we may believe that he is very ſerious) I have no pleaſure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live. I call heaven to record this day againſt you, that I have ſet life and death before you, therefore chuſe life. He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. He would have all men to be ſaved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth. He would not have any periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance. He made not death, nor hath he pleaſure in the deſtruction of the living. God then, if we may believe him, is not the firſt authour of our calamities: who then? He tells us himſelf: O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thy ſelf: thou haſt fallen by thy own iniquity. Your ſins have with-holden good things from you. Our iniquities like the wind have taken us away. How often would I have gathered you, but ye would not? The deſigns, and the endeavours of God do tend to our welfare and ſalvation; 'tis our will and our actions which only procure our ruine: 'Tis we, that (as the Wiſe-man ſaith) ſeek death in the errour of our life; and pull upon our own ſelves deſtruction. So that, to conclude this part of our diſcourſe, Even thoſe paſſages of providence, which at firſt glimpſe appear moſt oppoſite, or diſadvantageous to the goodneſs of God (or to our opinion and belief concerning it) do, being well ſifted, no wiſe prejudice it, but rather ſerve to corroborate and magnifie it.

Baſil. Orat. Quòd Deus non eſt cauſa mali, elegantèr & pulchrè de hac re.

Wiſd. 1. 12.
Carm. Pythag.
Cyril. Hier.
Damaſc.

Πάντα κινεῖ καὶ πραγματεύεται ὁ Θεὸς, ὥστε ἡμᾶς ἀπαλλάξαι κολάσεως, καὶ τιμωρίας. Chryſ. Tom. 8. p. 100.

Nos vim Deo facimus iniquitatibus noſtris; nos nolentem ulciſci cogimus. Deus enim pius & miſericors eſt, & qui neminem velit perire, vel lædere, &c. Salv. lib. 5. & 8.

Miſeros nos ſi nec juranti Deo credimus. Hier.
Ezek. 18. 30.
33. 11.
Deut. 30. 19.
Lam. 3. 32.
Wiſd. 1. 13.

Hoſ. 13. 9.
14. 1.
Jer. 5. 25.
Iſa. 64. 6.
Matt. 23. 37.

Sap. 1. 5.

St. Chriſoſtome in divers places doth inſiſt upon the goodneſs of God in making and threatning Hell it ſelf.

Τῆς βασιλείας οὐκ ἔλαττον, ἡ τῆς γεέννης ἀπειλὴ δείκνυσιν, αὐτοῦ τὴν ἀγαθότητα, &c. Ἀνδρ. ζ'.

I ſhall only farther briefly touch (or rather but mention) the uſes and effects, to the producing which, the conſideration of God's goodneſs, in ſo manifold ways declared, ſhould be applied.

1. It ſhould beget in us hearty love and reverence toward God, in regard to this attribute ſo excellent and amiable in it ſelf, ſo beneficial and advantageous to us. What can we eſteem, what can we love, if ſo admirable goodneſs doth not affect us? how prodigiouſly cold and hard is that heart, which cannot be warm'd and ſoftned into affection by ſo melting a conſideration?

2. It ſhould produce as grateful ſenſe in our hearts, ſo real endeavours of thankful obedience in our lives. It ſhould make us walk worthy of God, Col. 1. 20.
to all well-pleaſing, bringing forth fruit in every good work; taking heed of doing, as did Hezekiah, of whom it is ſaid; that he rendred not according to 2 Chro. 32. 35.
the benefit done unto him, for his heart was lifted up; therefore was wrath upon him; that we may not have that expoſtulation juſtly applied unto us: Do Deut. 2. 3.
ye thus requite the Lord; O fooliſh people and unwiſe?

3. It ſhould engage us the more to fear God; complying with the Prophet's admonition; Fear the Lord and his goodneſs. Conſidering that inti- Hoſ. 3. 5.
mation of the Pſalmiſt; There is forgiveneſs with thee, that thou mayſt be Pſal. 130. 4.
feared; obſerving that advice of Samuel, Only fear the Lord, and ſerve him, 1 Sam. 12. 24. for conſider what great things he hath done for you. For that indeed nothing is more terrible, than goodneſs ſlighted, and patience abuſed.

4. It ſhould humble, aſhame and grieve us, for having croſſed and offended ſuch exceeding goodneſs and mercy. It ſhould cauſe us greatly to deteſt our ſins, which lie under ſo heinous an aggravation, to be deeply diſpleaſed with our ſelves, who have ſo unworthily committed them.

5. It ſhould therefore render us wary and vigilant againſt the commiſſion of any ſin; that is, of incurring the guilt of ſo enormous ingratitude and baſeneſs; making us cautious of doing like thoſe, of whom 'tis confeſſed in Nehemiah; They did eat, and were filled and delighted themſelves in thy Neh. 9. 25, 26.
great goodneſs; nevertheleſs they were diſobedient, and rebelled againſt thee, and caſt thy laws behind their back.

6. It ſhould alſo breed and nouriſh in us faith, and hope in God. For what reaſon can we have to diſtruſt of ſo great goodneſs; that he will refuſe to help us in our need; that he will fail in accompliſhment of his promiſe; that he will with-hold what is convenient for us? It ſhould pre- Vid. Chryſ. ad ſerve us from deſpair. What temptation can we have to deſpair of mer- Theod. 2.
cy, if we heartily repent of our miſdoings, and ſincerely endeavour to Tom. 6. p. 63. optimè & fuſè.
pleaſe him?

7. It ſhould upon the ſame account excite us to a free and conſtant exerciſe of all devotions. For why ſhould we be ſhy or fearfull of entring Matt. 7. 11.
into ſo friendly and favourable a preſence; why ſhould we be backward from having (upon any occaſion or need) a recourſe to him, who is ſo willing, ſo deſirous, ſo ready to do us good? what ſhould hinder us from delighting in oblations of bleſſing, and praiſe unto him?

8. It ought to render us ſubmiſſive, patient and contented under God's hand, of correction, or trial: as knowing, that it cannot be without very juſt cauſe, that ſuch goodneſs ſeemeth diſpleaſed with us; that we are the chief cauſes of our ſuffering, or our want; ſo that we can have no good cauſe to repine, or complain: for, Wherefore doth the living man com- Lam. 3. 39, 8.
plain? ſince, a man (ſuffers) for the puniſhment of his ſins; ſince it is our Jer. 5. 25.
ſins, that withhold good things from us. Since alſo, we conſidering this attribute may be aſſured, that all God's diſpenſations do aim and tend to our good.

9. It ſhould alſo in gratitude toward God, and imitation of him, engage us to be good; kind and bountifull, peaceable, and apt to forgive; meek and gentle, pitifull and affectionate toward our brethren. To be Luke 6. 35, 36.
good and mercifull, as our heavenly Father is mercifull and benign even toward 1 John 3. 16.
the wicked and ungratefull; to be kind unto one another, full of bowels, for- Coloſſ. 3. 13.
giving one another, as God for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven us. Eph. 4. 32.

Jude 4. 10. Laſtly, We ought to have an eſpecial care of perverting this excellent truth by miſtakes and vain preſumptions; that we do not turn the grace of God into wantonneſs, or occaſion of licentious practice. Becauſe God is very good and mercifull, we muſt not conceive him to be fond, or ſlack, or careleſs; that he is apt to indulge us in ſin, or to connive at our preſumptuous tranſgreſſion of his laws. No; ἕπεται τῷ ἀγαθῷ, ᾗ ἀγαθὸν, ἡ μισοπονηρία (the hatred of wickedneſs is conſequent upon goodneſs even as ſuch, as Clemens Alex. ſaith) God even as he is good, cannot but deteſt that which is oppoſite and prejudicial to goodneſs; he cannot but maintain the honour and intereſt thereof; he cannot, he will not endure us to diſhonour him, to wrong our neighbour, to ſpoil our ſelves. As he is a ſure friend to us, as his creatures, ſo he is an implacable enemy to us as impe-
Pſal. 11. 5. nitent rebels and apoſtates from our duty. The wicked, and him that loveth violence his ſoul hateth. As he is infinitely benign, ſo he is alſo perfectly Hab. 1. 13. holy, and of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. He is not a God that hath plea-
Pſal. 5. 4. ſure in wickedneſs, neither ſhall evil dwell with him. The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand
Pſal. 34. 16. in his ſight, he hateth all workers of iniquity. His face is againſt them that do evil. Finally, as God is gratious to all ſuch as are capable of his love, and qualified for his mercy; ſo he is an impartial and upright judge, who will deal with men according to their deſerts, according to the tenour of his laws and ordinances; according to his immutable decree and word; ſo that as we have great reaſon to truſt, and hope in him, ſo we have no true ground to preſume upon him; vainly to trifle, or inſolently to dally with him.

But I leave this point to be farther improved by your meditations.

Grant we beſeech thee, Almighty God, that the words which we have heard this day with our outward ears, may through thy grace be ſo grafted inwardly in our hearts, that they may bring forth in us the fruit of good living to the honour and praiſe of thy Name, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

Sermon XXXVIII.

No Reſpect of Perſons with GOD.

Rom. II. 11.

For, There is no reſpect of perſons with God.

IT is an ordinary conceit, grounded on a ſuperficial view of things, that Almighty God diſpenſeth his gifts with great inequality, and dealeth very partially with men; being laviſh in his bounty to ſome, but ſparing therein to others; ſlack and indulgent in calling ſome to accompt, but rigorous and ſevere in judgment toward others.

Which imagination often hath influence upon the affections and the actions of men; ſo that hence ſome men do highly preſume, others are much diſcouraged; ſome are apt to boaſt themſelves ſpecial darlings and favourites of heaven; others are tempted to complain of their being quite deſerted, or neglected thereby. Pſal. 73. 6.

But whoever more carefully will obſerve things, and weigh them with good conſideration, ſhall find this to be a great miſtake; and that in truth God diſtributeth his favours with very equal meaſures, he poiſeth the ſcales of juſtice with a moſt even hand; ſo that reaſonably no man ſhould be exalted, no man ſhould be dejected in mind, upon accompt of any conſiderable difference in God's regard towards him, and other perſons; the which is clearly diſcovered by God, or merely dependeth on his will and providence. Job 31. 6.

The advantages, which one man hath above another, being eſtimated morally, in reference to ſolid felicity and content, are indeed none; or are not abſolutely made by God, but framed by men unto themſelves. For

God is indifferently affected toward perſons as ſuch nakedly and privately conſidered; or as deveſted of moral conditions, qualifications and actions; He in his dealing, whether as benefactour or judge, purely conſidereth the reaſon and exigency of things, the intrinſick worth of perſons, the real merits of each cauſe; He maketh no arbitrary or groundleſs diſcriminations; he neither loveth and favoureth, nor loatheth and diſcountenanceth any perſon unaccomptably: He doth utterly diſclaim partiality, or reſpect of perſons, as a calumnious aſperſion on him, and a ſcandal to his providence.

Such in holy Scriptures he repreſenteth himſelf, upon various occaſions; declaring his perfect impartiality, and that nothing beſide the right and reaſon of caſes doth ſway with him; all other conſiderations being impertinent and inſignificant to him. For inſtance,

It is declared, that he hath no partial reſpect to nations; for the piety of Job an Edomite, of Melchiſedeck a Canaanite, of Jethro a Madianite were very pleaſing to him; he favourably did hear the prayers, and accept the alms of Cornelius a Roman Souldier; whereupon St. Peter made this general reflexion, Of a truth I perceive, that God is no reſpecter of perſons; But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. (Rom. 10. 12. 3. 29.) Acts 10. 31.

He is declared not to regard the external profeſſion of true Religion, but real practice according to it; He rendreth (ſaith St. Paul) to every man according to his deeds--- tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile; but glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile; for (addeth the Apoſtle, aſſigning the reaſon of this proceeding) there is no reſpect of perſons with God. (Gal. 5. 6. 6. 15. 3. 28.) Col. 3. 11, Rom. 2. 6,-- 9, 10. (10. 12. 3. 29.)

He is ſaid not to reſpect faces, or any exteriour appearances, however ſpecious in the eye of the world; according to that ſaying of God to Samuel, at the choice of David before his brethren; Look not on his countenance, or on the heighth of his ſtature, becauſe I have refuſed him; for the Lord ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance; but the Lord looketh on the heart. 1 Sam. 16. 7.

It is expreſſed, that he hath no reſpect to the outward eſtate, or worldly rank and dignity of men; but that Princes and Peaſants, Maſters and Servants, the honourable or wealthy, and the mean or poor are of equal conſideration with him; He (ſaith Job) accepteth not the perſons of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor; for they are all the work of his hands; Job 34. 19. Sap. 6. 7.

and St. Paul biddeth Maſters to deal fairly with their Servants, knowing (ſaith he) that your Maſter is alſo in heaven; neither is there reſpect of perſons with him.

Epheſ. 6. 9. Coloſſ. 3. 25. 4. 1.

We are taught, that He doth not regard even the moſt ſacred offices, or more worthy accompliſhments of men, in prejudice to the verity of things, or equity of the caſe; for hence St. Paul maintaineth his reſolute behaviour toward thoſe great pillars of Religion, St. Peter and St. James; Of theſe who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, whatſoever they were, it maketh no matter to me, God accepteth no man's perſon.

Gal. 2. 6.

It is frequently inculcated, that he hath no conſideration of any gifts, of ſacrifices, of ſervices preſented to him with ſiniſter intent, to compound for ſin, or excuſe from duty, to pervert juſtice, or palliate wrong; according to that [declaration of Moſes, The Lord your God is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, which regardeth not perſons, nor taketh reward; and that] charge of King Jehoſhaphat to his Judges, Let the fear of the Lord be upon you; take heed, and do it; for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor reſpect of perſons, nor taking of gifts. And, Do not think (ſaith the Hebrew Wiſe-man) to corrupt (him) with gifts; for ſuch he will not receive; and truſt not to unrighteous ſacrifices; for the Lord is Judge, and with him is no reſpect of perſons.

Deut. 10. 17.

2 Chron. 19. 7.

Ecclus. 35. 12. (Iſa. 1. 3. 61. 8. 66. 3. Prov. 15. 8. 21. 27. Amos 5. 21, 22. Jer. 6. 20. Mic. 6. 7, 8. Hoſ. 6. 6.

In fine, it is often generally declared, that God impartially diſpenſeth recompences, in juſt proportion, according to the deeds of men: He (ſaith St. Paul) that doeth wrong, ſhall receive for the wrong which he hath done, and there is no reſpect of perſons; And if (ſaith St. Peter) ye call upon the Father, who without reſpect of perſons judgeth according to every man's work, paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear.

Rom. 2. 11. Col. 3. 25. 1 Pet. 1. 17.

There is nothing more frequently aſſerted, or more ſeriouſly urged in holy Scripture, than this point, that God will judge, and deal with men, not according to his abſolute, antecedent affections, but according to their own works, or the tenour of their practice, duly ſcann'd and eſtimated by the rules of juſtice; ſo that the really better man will certainly prove the happier, and the worſe man ſhall be the more wretched: He will reward every man (ſaith our Lord) κατὰ τὴν πρᾶξιν αὐτοῦ, according to his practice; Every one (ſaith St. Paul) ſhall receive the things done in his body, πρὸς τὰ ἔργα, ſutably (in juſt proportion) to his works; and Each man ſhall receive ἴδιον μισθὸν, his own wages according to his own labour; and then praiſe (or a due taxation) ſhall be to every man from God: Behold (ſaith He in the Revelation) I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to recompence each man, ὡς τὸ αὐτοῦ ἔργον ἔσαι, as his work ſhall be.

Matt. 16. 27. Rom. 2. 6. Apoc. 2. 23. 20. 12. 2 Cor. 5. 10. 1 Cor. 3. 8. (Jer. 17. 10. 32. 19. Pſal. 62. 13.) 1 Cor. 4. 5. Apoc. 22. 12. Ἀποδοῦναι ἑκάστῳ.

Wherefore by ſacred teſtimonies it is abundantly manifeſt, that impartiality is a divine attribute, and perfection of God; the which (for our greater ſatisfaction, and farther illuſtration of the point) may be alſo evinced by divers arguments, ſome proving that it muſt be ſo, others ſhewing that it is ſo; ſome inferring it à priori, from the prime moſt avowed attributes of God's nature; and from his relations to men; others arguing it à poſteriori, from principal inſtances of God's proceedings and providential diſpenſations toward men.

Of the firſt ſort are theſe.

1. God is impartial, becauſe he is perfectly wiſe, and thence doth truly eſtimate perſons and things.

Wiſedom doth look evenly, with a free and pure (an indifferent and uncorrupt) eye upon all things; apprehending and eſteeming each as it is in it ſelf; making no diſtinction where it findeth none; not preferring one thing before another without ground of difference in them. It doth not fix a valuation on its objects, but acknowledgeth it, and taketh it for ſuch as it is in themſelves.

Wherefore God cannot have any blind affection, or fondneſs toward any perſon, grounded on no reaſon, or upon any unaccountable prejudice. No perſon can ſeem amiable, or odious to him, who is not in himſelf truly ſuch.

This argument is often uſed in Scripture; and to aſſure us of this truth it is there frequently affirmed, that God doth ſearch the hearts, doth try the ſpirits, doth weigh the actions of men; The Lord (ſaid Hannah) is a 1 Sam. 2. 3.
God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed: All the ways of man (ſaith Prov. 16. 2. Pſal. 11. 4.
Solomon) are clean in his own eyes, but the Lord weigheth the ſpirits: His eyes Jer. 11. 20.
(ſaith the Pſalmiſt) behold, his eye-lids try the children of men: and, O Lord 20. 12.
of Hoſts (ſaith Jeremy) that judgeſt righteouſly, that trieſt the reins and the Jer. 32. 19.
heart--Thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the ſons of men, to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings: [I the Lord ſearch the heart, I try the reins, to give every man according to his ways, Jer. 17. 10.
and according to the fruit of his doings.]

2. God cannot be partial, becauſe he is perfectly righteous, juſt and holy. This reaſon adjoined to the former doth make up a complete demonſtration: for partiality doth proceed either from blindneſs of mind, or from perverſeneſs of will; He therefore, who hath both an exact knowledge of things, and a perfect rectitude of will, can no-wiſe be partial; the one enabling him to judge, the other diſpoſing him to affect things as they are and deſerve; to eſteem and love that which is indeed worthy and lovely; to deſpiſe and diſlike that which is deſpicable and odious; to have no opinion, or affection toward a perſon, abſtracted from all qualifications; ſuch an one being no ſpecial object of a wiſe and juſt either eſteem or contempt, love or hatred.

As theſe cauſes are always inſeparably connected (for what is juſtneſs, but a diſpoſition of will, to follow, without deflexion, the dictates of wiſedom?) ſo the effect muſt neceſſarily follow; according to numberleſs te-ſtimonies in Scripture importing, that The righteous Lord loveth righteouſ- Pſal. 11. 7.
neſs; but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his ſoul hateth: The eyes (7. 11. 33. 5. 45. 7. 146. 8.)
of the Lord are upon the righteous---- but the face of the Lord is againſt them Pſal. 11. 5. 5. 5.
that do evil. Pſal. 134. 15, 16.

3. God is impartial, becauſe he is infinitely great and potent; whence all creatures are in the ſame degree inferiour, at the ſame diſtance remote from him; all are equally at his diſcretion and diſpoſal; he hath no need of any; what therefore ſhould incline him to regard one before another, excepting onely goodneſs, wherein he delighteth? So the Wiſe-man diſcourſeth, He that is Lord of all, ſhall fear no man's perſon, neither ſhall he Sap. 6. 7.
ſtand in awe of any man's greatneſs, for he hath made the ſmall and great, and careth for all alike. So Moſes did imply, The Lord your God is God of Gods, Deut. 19. 17.
and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty, and a terrible, which regardeth not perſons.

4. God is impartial, becauſe he is immenſely good and benign; both Exod. 24. 6, 7.
intenſively in the degree, and extenſively as to the objects of his goodneſs; Numb. 14. 18.
ſo that he favoureth all equally, becauſe all thoroughly, ſo far as may well Pſal. 86. 5, 15.
be according to their condition and capacity; whence if there be any diffe- 103. 8. 145. 8.
rence or defect, the ground thereof is not in his nature or will, but in the different qualifications of Creatures.

There is a double goodneſs or love of God; one abſolute, preceding all regard to perſonal qualities, or deeds; the other conditionate, and conſe-

Epheſ. 6. 9. Coloſſ. 3. 25. 4. 1. and St. Paul biddeth Maſters to deal fairly with their Servants, knowing (ſaith he) that your Maſter is alſo in heaven; neither is there reſpect of perſons with him.

We are taught, that He doth not regard even the moſt ſacred offices, or more worthy accompliſhments of men, in prejudice to the verity of things, or equity of the caſe; for hence St. Paul maintaineth his reſolute behaviour Gal. 2. 6. toward thoſe great pillars of Religion, St. Peter and St. James; Of theſe who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, whatſoever they were, it maketh no matter to me, God accepteth no man's perſon.

It is frequently inculcated, that he hath no conſideration of any gifts, of ſacrifices, of ſervices preſented to him with ſiniſter intent, to compound for ſin, or excuſe from duty, to pervert juſtice, or palliate wrong; according to that [declaration of Moſes, Deut. 10. 17. The Lord your God is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, which regardeth not perſons, nor taketh reward; and that] charge of King Jehoſhaphat to his Judges, 2 Chron. 19. 7. Let the fear of the Lord be upon you; take heed, and do it; for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, nor reſpect of perſons, nor taking of gifts. And, Do not think (ſaith the Hebrew Wiſe-man) to corrupt (him) with gifts; for ſuch he will not receive; and truſt not to unrighteous ſacrifices; for the Lord is Judge, and with him is no reſpect of perſons. Ecclus. 35. 12. (Iſa. 1. 3. 61. 8. 66. 3. Prov. 15. 8. 21. 27. Amos 5. 21, 22. Jer. 6. 20. Mic. 6. 7, 8. Hoſ. 6. 6.

In fine, it is often generally declared, that God impartially diſpenſeth recompences, in juſt proportion, according to the deeds of men: He (ſaith Rom. 2. 11. St. Paul) that doeth wrong, ſhall receive for the wrong which he hath done, and Col. 3. 25. there is no reſpect of perſons; And if (ſaith St. Peter) ye call upon the Father, 1 Pet. 1. 17. who without reſpect of perſons judgeth according to every man's work, paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear.

There is nothing more frequently aſſerted, or more ſeriouſly urged in holy Scripture, than this point, that God will judge, and deal with men, not according to his abſolute, antecedent affections, but according to their own works, or the tenour of their practice, duly ſcann'd and eſtimated by the rules of juſtice; ſo that the really better man will certainly prove the happier, and the worſe man ſhall be the more wretched: Matt. 16. 27. He will reward every man (ſaith our Lord) κατὰ τὴν πρᾶξιν αὐτοῦ, according to his practice; Rom. 2. 6. Apoc. 2. 23. 20. 12. Every one (ſaith St. Paul) ſhall receive the things done in his body, πρὸς τὰ ἔργα, 2 Cor. 5. 10. ſutably (in juſt proportion) to his works; and Each man ſhall receive 1 Cor. 3. 8. ἴδιον μισθὸν, his own wages according to his own labour; and then praiſe (or a (Jer. 17. 10. 32. 19. due taxation) ſhall be to every man from God: Behold (ſaith He in the Re- Pſal. 62. 13.) velation) I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to recompence each man, 1 Cor. 4. 5. ὡς τὸ αὐτοῦ ἔργον ἔσται, as his work ſhall be. Apoc. 22. 12. Ἀποδοῦναι ἑκάστῳ.

Wherefore by ſacred teſtimonies it is abundantly manifeſt, that impartiality is a divine attribute, and perfection of God; the which (for our greater ſatisfaction, and farther illuſtration of the point) may be alſo evinced by divers arguments, ſome proving that it muſt be ſo, others ſhewing that it is ſo; ſome inferring it à priori, from the prime moſt avowed attributes of God's nature; and from his relations to men; others arguing it à poſteriori, from principal inſtances of God's proceedings and providential diſpenſations toward men.

Of the firſt ſort are theſe.

1. God is impartial, becauſe he is perfectly wiſe, and thence doth truly eſtimate perſons and things.

Wiſedom doth look evenly, with a free and pure (an indifferent and uncorrupt) eye upon all things; apprehending and eſteeming each as it is in it ſelf; making no diſtinction where it findeth none; not preferring one thing before another without ground of difference in them. It doth not fix a valuation on its objects, but acknowledgeth it, and taketh it for ſuch as it is in themſelves.

Wherefore God cannot have any blind affection, or fondneſs toward any perſon, grounded on no reaſon, or upon any unaccountable prejudice. No perſon can ſeem amiable, or odious to him, who is not in himſelf truly ſuch.

This argument is often uſed in Scripture; and to aſſure us of this truth
it is there frequently affirmed, that God doth ſearch the hearts, doth try the ſpirits, doth weigh the actions of men: The Lord (ſaid Hannah) is a 1 Sam. 2. 3.
God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed: All the ways of man (ſaith Prov. 16. 2.
Solomon) are clean in his own eyes, but the Lord weigheth the ſpirits: His eyes Pſal. 11. 4.
(ſaith the Pſalmiſt) behold, his eye-lids try the children of men: and, O Lord Jer. 11. 20.
of Hoſts (ſaith Jeremy) that judgeſt righteouſly, that trieſt the reins and the 20. 12.
heart--Thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the ſons of men, to give every Jer. 32. 19.
one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings: [I the Lord ſearch the heart, I try the reins, to give every man according to his ways, Jer. 17. 10.
and according to the fruit of his doings.]

2. God cannot be partial, becauſe he is perfectly righteous, juſt and holy. This reaſon adjoined to the former doth make up a complete demonſtration: for partiality doth proceed either from blindneſs of mind, or from perverſeneſs of will; He therefore, who hath both an exact knowledge of things, and a perfect rectitude of will, can no-wiſe be partial; the one enabling him to judge, the other diſpoſing him to affect things as they are and deſerve; to eſteem and love that which is indeed worthy and lovely; to deſpiſe and diſlike that which is deſpicable and odious; to have no opinion, or affection toward a perſon, abſtracted from all qualifications; ſuch an one being no ſpecial object of a wiſe and juſt either eſteem or contempt, love or hatred.

As theſe cauſes are always inſeparably connected (for what is juſtneſs, but a diſpoſition of will, to follow, without deflexion, the dictates of wiſedom?) ſo the effect muſt neceſſarily follow; according to numberleſs te-ſtimonies in Scripture importing, that The righteous Lord loveth righteouſ- Pſal. 11. 7.
neſs; but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his ſoul hateth: The eyes (7. 11. 33. 5.
of the Lord are upon the righteous---- but the face of the Lord is againſt them 45. 7. 146. 8.) Pſal. 11. 5. 5. 5.
that do evil. Pſal. 34. 15, 16.

3. God is impartial, becauſe he is infinitely great and potent; whence all creatures are in the ſame degree inferiour, at the ſame diſtance remote from him; all are equally at his diſcretion and diſpoſal; he hath no need of any; what therefore ſhould incline him to regard one before another, excepting onely goodneſs, wherein he delighteth? So the Wiſe-man diſcourſeth, He that is Lord of all, ſhall fear no man's perſon, neither ſhall he Sap. 6. 7.
ſtand in awe of any man's greatneſs, for he hath made the ſmall and great, and careth for all alike. So Moſes did imply, The Lord your God is God of Gods, Deut. 10. 17.
and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty, and a terrible, which regardeth not perſons.

4. God is impartial, becauſe he is immenſely good and benign; both Exod. 34. 6, 7.
intenſively in the degree, and extenſively as to the objects of his goodneſs; Numb. 14. 18.
ſo that he favoureth all equally, becauſe all thoroughly, ſo far as may well Pſal. 86. 5, 15.
be according to their condition and capacity; whence if there be any diffe- 103. 8. 145. 8.
rence or defect, the ground thereof is not in his nature or will, but in the different qualifications of Creatures.

There is a double goodneſs or love of God; one abſolute, preceding all regard to perſonal qualities, or deeds; the other conditionate, and conſe-quent on ſpecial regards; in both theſe God is impartial; for the firſt is Pſal. 145.9,16. general and unconfined, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, The Lord is good Luke 6. 35. to all, and his mercies are over all his works; and thoſe ſayings in the Goſpel, Matt. 5. 45. He is kind unto the unthankfull, and to the evil; He maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil, and on the good; and ſendeth rain on the juſt, and on the unjuſt;

The ſecond is grounded on ſpecial reaſons of the caſe, and adapted to the Rom. 10. 12. rules of juſtice, demanding it; according whereto The Lord is rich (in Pſal. 145. 18. mercy) toward all that call upon him. He will fulfill the deſire of them that Pſal. 34. 15. fear him, and preſerveth all them that love him.
Pſal. 145. 19, 20. 34. 9. In the firſt there is no difference; in the ſecond the difference is made 33. 18. by our ſelves; being founded in our voluntary demeanour.

5. God is impartial toward all perſons, becauſe he hath the ſame (natural and original) relations toward all.

1. He is the maker and father of all; according to that of the Prophet, Mal. 2. 10. Have we not all one Father? hath not one God created us? and that of the Epheſ. 4. 6. Apoſtle, There is One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all; He therefore hath the ſame parental kindneſs toward all, the ſame tenderneſs for the good of each; He is not capable of that imperfection, which is obſervable in ſome parents, to be fond and indulgent to ſome children above others; but in his affection The rich and poor (as the Prov. 22. 2. Wiſe-man ſaith) do meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all.

Hence Job did collect that God accepteth not the perſons of Princes, nor re- Job 34. 19. gardeth the rich more than the poor; for (ſaith he) they are all the work of his hands.

Job 31. 13, 14, 15. Hence the ſame holy Man did infer, that he was obliged to deal fairly with his own ſervants, for that God in judgment would conſider their caſe Job 31. 15. no leſs than his, upon this accompt, for Did not he that made me in the womb, make him; and did not one faſhion us in the womb?

Hence the Wiſe-man, who imitated Solomon, did argue an equality of Sap. 6. 7. gratious providence toward all, He hath made the ſmall and the great, and careth for all alike.

2. God is the common Lord of all; and therefore is concerned to protect all with the like care, to govern all with the ſame equity.

Hence St. Paul gathereth that God is indifferently willing to ſhew mercy, and diſpence bleſſings to all people; to confer the means of ſalvation, Rom. 3. 29. and to accept pious endeavours, without diſtinction of Jew or Gentile; Is (ſaith he) he the God of the Jews onely? is he not alſo of the Gentiles? and, Rom. 10. 12. There is therefore no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the ſame Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him.

Hence the ſame Apoſtle doth urge Maſters to be juſt and kind to their ſervants; for that God as the common Maſter hath an equal reſpect to Epheſ. 6. 9. both; knowing that your Maſter alſo is in heaven, and there is no reſpect of per- 1 Tim. 4. 10. ſons with him.

2. 3. 3. God is the Saviour of all; deſiring and deſigning that all men ſhould
1 Tim. 2. 4. be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the truth; being willing that no man
2 Pet. 3. 9. ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance.

Tit. 3. 11. 2. 11. 1 John 4. 14. Luke 9. 56. John 3. 17. 12. 47. 2 Cor. 5. 19. 1 Tim. 2. 6. Heb. 2. 9. Wherefore out of philanthropy and love to mankind he ſent his Son to be the Saviour of the world; to give himſelf a ranſome for all men, to taſte death for every man.

And what greater inſtance could there be of perfect impartiality?

So by reaſons from the principal attributes and relations of God his impartiality may be deduced: The ſame alſo may be declared from his proceedings and dealings with men. For

1. God hath propoſed to all men indifferently the ſame terms and conditions Clem. *Pæd.l.*4. of obtaining his love and favour, of enjoying his bounty and mercy, of obtaining rewards and felicity from him.

The ſame laws and rules of life are preſcribed to all perſons, as men, and as Chriſtians.

The natural dictates of reaſon, the precepts of holy Scripture, the great moral duties of Religion, by obſervance whereof God's favour is retained, and ſalvation aſſured, are of general concern and common obligation to all without exception.

God hath not framed one Law, or one Goſpel for Princes and great Men, another for Peſants and mean Artiſans; He hath not chalked out one way toward heaven for the rich, another for the poor to walk in; But all, high and low, rich and poor one with another, are tied to obſerve the Pſal. 49. 2. precepts of piety, of charity, of juſtice, of temperance, ſobriety and chaſtity, of modeſty, humility and patience; none (great or ſmall) can otherwiſe than by proceeding in the common road of vertuous practice, arrive to happineſs. He that doeth the will of my Father that is in heaven, ſhall enter Matt. 7. 21. into the kingdom of heaven.

If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments: Enter in through the Matt. 19. 17. ſtrait gate; Bleſſed are they that do his commandments, that they may have Matt. 7. 13. Luke 13. 24. right to the tree of life; To them, who by patient continuance in well-doing ſeek Pſal. 34. 12. glory and honour and immortality, eternal life will be conferred; Theſe are the Apoc. 22. 14. Rom. 2. 7. grand infallible maxims, the fixt irreverſible decrees, expreſſing the general duty and doom of mankind, according to the eternal reaſon of things, and the declared will of God Almighty, our Sovereign Governour and Judge.

Whoever it is, that will pleaſe God, that will have his love, that will John 15. 14. be happy by his grace, muſt humbly ſubmit to God's will, muſt faithfully obey God's laws, muſt carefully walk in God's way; from this courſe there can be no exemption, no diſpenſation, no ſpecial privilege for any perſon whatever.

As all men naturally, by indiſſoluble bands of obligation, are the ſubjects and ſervants of God; ſo God indiſpenſably and inexcuſably doth require the ſame loyalty and fidelity, the ſame diligence, the ſame reverence from all.

Great men ſometimes may live, as if they conceited themſelves free from the obligations, which bind other men; as if they had not ſouls (as we poor mortals have) to be ſaved, or were to be ſaved in ſome other way; as if obedience to the divine laws doth not touch them, but onely doth belong to the commonalty; as if they had ſpecial indulgence to live in pride, luxury and ſloth, might warrantably practiſe injuſtice, oppreſſion, revenge; might cum privilegio be lewd and laſcivious, with-hold their debts, take God's name in vain, neglect devotion and the ſervice of God; but in thus doing they much abuſe themſelves; for they no leſs than others are obnoxious to guilt, and to puniſhment for ſuch miſdemeanours againſt the divine laws. In truth, if there be any difference in the caſe, it is onely this that they in all equity, ingenuity and gratitude are obliged to a more ſtrict, more faithfull, more diligent obſervance of God's laws; they being more indebted to God for his ſpecial bounty to them; they having larger talents and advantages committed to their truſt, their deportment being of higher conſequence, and moſt influential on the world, they being liable to render an accompt according to that juſt rule, Unto whom much is given, of him much ſhall be required; whence their eminency Luke 12. 48. of condition doth not excuſe them from common duties, but doth advance their obligation, will aggravate their neglect, will enflame their reckoning, will plunge them deeper into wofull puniſhment; according Sap. 6. 5,6. to that of the Wiſe-man A ſharp judgment ſhall be to them that are in high places; for mercy will ſoon pardon the meaneſt, but mighty men ſhall be mightily tormented.

2. All perſons have the ſame means, the ſame aids, the ſame ſupports afforded to them, for ability to perform their duty, and attain their happineſs.

The word of God, as the light of heaven, doth indifferently ſhine to all men, for inſtructing their minds, for directing their practice, for guiding their feet in the way of peace.

The divine grace is ever at hand ready to aſſiſt all thoſe, who ſincerely and ſeriouſly do apply themſelves to ſerve God.

Seaſonable comforts are never wanting to ſupport thoſe who need them, Pſal. 147. 3. (146. 7--) and who in their diſtreſs ſeek them from God, who healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds; ſo that when The poor man crieth, the Pſal. 34. 16-- Lord heareth him, and ſaveth him out of his troubles.

The univerſal good Spirit of God (the fountain of light and wiſedom, 1 Cor. 12. 7. of ſpiritual power and ſtrength, of conſolation and joy) is communicated according to the needs of men, and exigencies of occaſion; preventing them by direction to the right way, by reclaiming them from ill courſes, by exciting in them good thoughts, and good deſires; quickning their good reſolutions, and aſſiſting in the purſuit of them; enabling them to reſiſt temptations, and to combat with their ſpiritual adverſaries; to ſuch beſt purpoſes the holy Spirit is given to all in needfull ſeaſons and meaſures; Luke 11. 13. eſpecially to thoſe who do earneſtly ſeek it, do faithfully uſe it, do treat it well.

3. God hath provided, and doth propoſe to all men the ſame encouragements for obedience, the ſame puniſhments for tranſgreſſion; the which being the ſame in kind do onely differ in degree, proportionably to the good deeds, or bad demerits of perſons.

God hath appointed one heaven for all pious and vertuous perſons; of what nation, of what rank, of what condition ſoever they are; He hath Col. 3. 11. 1 Cor. 2. 9. prepared thoſe things, which eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, nor heart of man conceived for all that love him. For all that have fought the good fight, and 2 Tim. 4. 7. kept the faith, and love his appearance, the Lord, the righteous judge, hath laid up a crown of righteouſneſs.

Immortality of life, an unfading crown of glory, a Kingdom that cannot be ſhaken, unſpeakable joys, endleſs bliſs God hath covenanted, and Luke 22. 26. promiſed to all his faithfull ſervants; to all who in his way pleaſe to accept Apoc. 22. 17. and embrace them, ὁ ϑέλων, He that willeth, let him take of the water of life, freely; And what greater rewards could there be aſſigned? what room is there for partiality, where all are capable of the ſame equally great, be- Matt. 8. 11. cauſe in a manner immenſe felicity? Many (ſaith our Saviour) ſhall come Luke 13. 29. from the Eaſt and from the Weſt, and from the North, and from the South, and ſhall ſit down with Abraham and with Iſaac and with Jacob in the Kingdom of heaven.

Lazarus the poor beggar, ſhall reſt with the illuſtrious Moſes, and the noble Daniel, with David, and Hezekiah, and Joſiah, and all pious Princes in the boſome of Abraham. The poor Fiſhermen, the painfull Tentmakers, the ſorry Publicans ſhall reign together with Conſtantine, and Theodoſius, and all thoſe good Princes, who have faithfully ſerved God, and promo- 1 Tim. 6. 19. ted his glory. The rich, well uſing their wealth, may obtain that ſtate, Luke 12. 33. 16. 9. treaſuring up to themſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life; The poor, contentedly bearing their condition, have a good title thereto, expreſſed in thoſe words, Bleſſed be ye poor, for yours is the Kingdom of God.

Luke 6. 20.

On the other hand the ſame diſmal puniſhments are threatned to all preſumptuous, contumacious, and impenitent tranſgreſſours of God's law, however dignified or diſtinguiſhed; be they Princes, or Subjects, noble or baſe, wealthy or indigent; the ſame unquenchable fire, the ſame gnawing worm, the ſame weeping, and wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth; the ſame utter darkneſs; the ſame burning lake of brimſtone; the ſame extreme diſconſolate anguiſh is reſerved for them all: Depart from me, Go ye curſed into everlaſting fire, will be the doom pronounced on all the workers of iniquity; Indignation and wrath, tribulation and angniſh will be upon every ſoul that doeth evil.

Matt. 7. 23. 25. 41. Luke 13. 27. Rom. 2. 8, 9.

No regard will be had to the quality of men in this world; for the rich man, who was cloathed in purple and fine linnen, and fared ſumptuouſly every day, was not excuſed from hell, and torment; there is a Tophet ordained of old, even for Kings; mighty men ſhall be mightily tormented, if they have mightily ſinned.

Luk. 16. 19. 23. Jam. 5. 1. Luke 6. 24. Iſa. 30. 33. Sap. 6. 6.

Even preſent encouragements of vertue in this life, The joys and comforts of God's holy Spirit, the ſweet elapſes of ſpiritual conſolation in devotion, the peace of God, and delicious ſenſe of his love, the cheerfull ſatisfaction of a good conſcience, the joy in believing God's truth, and hoping for accompliſhment of his promiſes, the delight in obeying God's commandments, the bleſſing of God upon good undertakings and happy ſucceſs therein, the co-operation of all things for good to them who love God, the ſupply of all wants, and ſatisfaction of all deſires, the experimental aſſurance of God's conſtant protection and gratious providence over thoſe who fear him, and truſt in him, (according to numberleſs declarations and promiſes in holy Scripture) are indifferently diſpenſed to all, who ſhall uſe the means to attain them, in way of conſcientious practice.

Pſal. 37. 5. 1. 3. Rom. 8. 28. Pſal. 145. 19. 37. 4. 34. 10.

As correſpondently the temporal diſcouragements from ſin (croſſes, diſappointments, vexations, miſeries) are without exception allotted to all tranſgreſſours of God's law, according to many denunciations therein.

Pſal. 11. 6. 73. 19. 32. 10. Iſa. 48. 22. 57. 20. 54. 17.

4. The impartiality of God doth appear from his univerſal providence, carefully watching over all and every perſon, diſpenſing good things to each, according to his need, without diſtinction.

Bonus omnipotens ita curat univerſos tanquam ſingulos, ita ſingulos tanquam ſolos. Aug. Conf.

Is any man in extreme want, his liberal hand preſently doth reach forth a ſupply; for He ſatisfieth the longing ſoul, and filleth the hungry ſoul with goodneſs; He openeth his hand, and ſatisfieth the deſire of every living thing.

Pſal. 107. 9. Pſal. 145. 16.

Is any man in diſtreſs? the Lord is ready to afford relief; according to that repeated burthen of the 107*th* Pſalm, Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he ſaveth them out of their diſtreſſes?

Pſal. 107. 9, 13, 19, 28.

Is any man engaged in ſin and guilt? He is patient and long-ſuffering; not powring forth his anger, not with-holding his mercies; letting his Sun ariſe, and his ſhoures deſcend upon the moſt unworthy and ingratefull; this he doth ſo generally, that commonly by apparent events it is not eaſily diſcernible, to whom God beareth ſpecial favour; according to that obſervation of the Preacher, No man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them; all things coming alike to all. How then can any man complain of partiality in him, who exerciſeth ſo unconfined bounty, clemency and patience?

Pſal. 34. 6. 146. 7— 147. 6— Pſal. 103. 8— 106. 8, 44. 78. 38. Eccles. 9. 1, 2.

If there be any conſiderable difference, it is onely this, that God hath a peculiar care of the poor, the afflicted, the oppreſſed, the helpleſs and

Pſal. 146. 147. 10. 14. 9. 9. 34. 18.

Iſa. 25. 4. diſconſolate, who do moſt need (and thence are moſt induced to ſeek) his ſuccour and comfort; being alſo commonly better qualified to receive them; as is frequently declared in Scripture.

It is true, that God hath his particular friends, his favourites, his privados, whom he doth ſpecially regard and countenance; upon whom he conferreth extraordinary boons and graces; namely thoſe who do love, who do fear, who do truſt in, who do honour him, who do obey him;
Rom. 8. 28. concerning whom it is ſaid, We know that all things work together for good
Pſal. 145. 20. 31. 23. to them that love God; and The Lord preſerveth all thoſe that love him;
Pſal. 34. 9. There is no want to them that fear him; He will fulfill the deſire of them that Pſal. 145. 19. fear him, he alſo will hear their cry, and will ſave them: The Lord redeem- Pſal. 34. 22. eth the ſoul of his ſervants, and none of them that truſt in him, ſhall be deſo-
1 Sam. 2. 30. late: Them that honour me, I will honour: The Lord loveth the righteous; Pſal. 146. 8. Pſal. 34. 15. The Eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their John 15. 14. cry; Ye are my friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you:

But evidently there is no partiality in this; for he doth not favour them irreſpectively as perſons, but as in juſtice ſpecially qualified for favour; friendſhip, dutifulneſs, reverence toward him being the higheſt vertues, and arguing a mind endewed with diſpoſitions (with equity, with ingenuity, with gratitude, with ſober wiſdom, with love of truth and goodneſs) which demand a correſpondence of love and reſpect from God himſelf. And as we do not hold a man partial, who beareth a ſpecial affection and regard to thoſe, who expreſs good-will, who deal kindly and fairly with them, who ſerve them faithfully, and pay them due reſpect; ſo neither is God partial, if he doth ſpecially bleſs good men upon the like accounts.

Eſpecially conſidering, that God doth not ſo favour mere pretenders, who profeſs to love and honour him, but do not love true goodneſs;
Matt. 7. 22. Luke 6. 46. fond, ſuperſtitious, hypocritical people, who call Lord, Lord, but pra-
Tit. 1. 16. Matt. 15. 9. ctiſe iniquity; who think to pleaſe him by affected ſervices; who court
Col. 2. 22. and flatter him with their lips; who would bribe him with their gifts and Matt. 15. 8. ſacrifices.

5. All Chriſtians, without diſtinction, have the ſame illuſtrious relations, and honourable privileges, the moſt great and glorious that can be imagined.

(Col. 3. 11.) Of what greater honour is a man capable, than to be adopted into the 1 Cor. 12. 13. bloud-royal of heaven, to be called, to be the Sons of God? Ye are all the Gal. 3. 28. 3. 26. Sons of God, by faith in Chriſt Jeſus. God ſent forth his Son, born of a
4. 5. woman, that he might redeem us——and, that we might receive the adoption
Rom. 8. 16. of Sons.

Ἴδετε ποταπὴν ἀγάπην· Behold (ſaith St. John) what love the Father
1 John 3. 1. hath given us, that we ſhould be called the Sons of God. This is a privilege, John 1. 12. Gal. 4. which God hath given, which Chriſt hath purchaſed for us all. And whoſoever received him, he gave them ἐξουσίαν ταύτην, (this power, this privilege, this advantage) that they ſhould become the Sons of God.

To what higher dignity can any one pretend, than to be heir of a Kingdom? by the moſt infallible aſſurance that can be; by covenant, by pro-
Rom. 8. 17. miſe of God; ſuch are all good Chriſtians, God's children; for if ſons, then
Gal. 4. 7. heirs (ſaith the Apoſtle) heirs of God, co-heirs with Chriſt: Heirs of God's Tit. 3. 7. Heb. 1. 14. Kingdom; for, Hearken (ſaith St. James) my beloved brethren, Hath not
Jam. 2. 5. God choſen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdom, which he hath promiſed to them that love him.

Matt. 25. 34. Inherit the Kingdom prepared for you.

Luke 12. 32. Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleaſure to give you a Kingdom.

I appoint unto you a Kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me. 22. 29.
To what higher pitch can the moſt ambitious ſoul aſpire, than to be a King?

Such St. John ſaith, that our Lord hath conſtituted every good Chriſtian; Rev. 1. 6. 5. 10. 1. 9.
partakers, not of a carnal, an earthly, a temporal Kingdom (which is unſtable, is ſubject to various chances and croſſes, cannot endure long, or laſt any conſiderable time) but of a ſpiritual, a celeſtial, an eternal Kingdom, 2 Tim. 4. 18. ἐπουράνιος, 2 Pet. 1. 11. αἰώνιος.
which cannot be ſhaken; which hath continual reſt, peace, joy. Heb. 12. 28. ἀσάλευτος.

We are by God called unto his Kingdom and glory. 1 Theſſ. 2. 12.

—tranſlated into the Kingdom of his own dear Son. Col. 1. 13.

To be the brethren of Chriſt; who is the Sovereign Lord of Glory, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords,

Is it not a conſiderable honour to be the friends of our Lord? ſo is every poor ſoul, which hath the conſcience to ſerve him faithfully; for, Ye are my friends if ye do whatſoever I command you. John 15. 14.

All are Citizens, free denizens, of the heavenly Commonwealth; συμπολίται τῶν ἁγίων—— Phil. 3. 20. Heb. 13. 20. 12. 22. Eph. 2. 19.

6. All men are liable to the ſame judgment, at the ſame tribunal, before that one impartial, inflexible Judge, who cannot be corrupted with gifts, or dazled with ſhews, or moved by any ſiniſter regards. Deut. 10. 7. (Col. 3. 25.)

All perſons muſt ſtand before that Bar upon equal ground; without any advantage; according to that repreſentation of St. John; I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtand before God, and the books were opened ---- and the dead were judged out of thoſe things which were written in the books, according to their works. Apoc. 20. 12.

The greateſt Monarchs, the mightieſt Potentates, the moſt redoubtable Warriours, and ſucceſsfull Conquerours (the man, who made the earth to tremble, that did ſhake Kingdoms,;) that made the world as a wilderneſs, and deſtroyed the cities thereof; who affected to aſcend into heaven, and to exalt his throne above the ſtars of God, to aſcend above the heights of the clouds, and to be like the moſt high. Iſ. 14. 16, 17. v. 13, 14. (v. 11.)

There ſhall they ſtand bare and deveſted of all their phantaſtry; their ſplendid pomp, their numerous retinue, their guards, their paraſites.

No conſideration there will be had of their windy titles, of their gay attire, and glittering pomp.

No reſpect will be had to the dread of their name, to the fame of their prowess; to that ſpurious glory, for which they unſetled mankind, and overturned the world; their Actions will be ſtrictly ſcann'd, according to the rules of God's law, and common equity.

They will be put to anſwer for all the violences and outrages, for all the ſpoils and rapines, for all the bloud and ſlaughters, for all the ruines, devaſtations and deſolations their cruel ambition hath cauſed; for all the ſins they have committed, and all the miſchiefs they have done.

They who now have ſo many flatterers and adorers, will not then find one advocate to plead for them.

Thus it may appear that God is impartial.

But there are divers obvious exceptions againſt this doctrine. As,

Obj. 1. Is it not apparent that the gifts of God are diſtributed with great inequality?

Doth not one ſwim in wealth and plenty, while another coucheth under the burthen of extreme want and penury?

Are not ſome perched aloft in high dignity, while others crawl upon the ground, and grovel in deſpicable meanneſs?

Luke 16, 19, 20, Are not ſome clothed with purple and fine linen, and fare deliciouſly every day; while others ſcarce find rags to cover them, and lie at the door begging for relief?

Do not ſome thrive and proſper in their affairs, while others are diſappointed and croſſed in their undertakings?

Pſal. 17. 10— 73. 7. Job 21. 7— 12. 6. Was it not truly obſerved of ſome perſons (and thoſe leaſt deſerving good fortune) They are incloſed in their own fat--. Their eyes ſtand out with fatneſs, they have more than heart could wiſh?

Jer. 12. 1. Hab. 1: 16. 1 Cor. 4. 7: And whence doth this difference come, but from God's hand; who (as the Apoſtle asketh) maketh thee to differ from another, but God, the diſpoſer of all things?

To this exception I anſwer:

Rom. 8. 18. Λογίζομαι γὰρ ὅτι οὐκ ἄξια--- 2 Cor. 4. 17. 1. That temporal things are ſo inconſiderable, that they ſcarce deſerve to come into the balance, or to be computed; for they have but the ſame proportion to ſpiritual things, as time hath to eternity; or a finite to an infinite; which is none at all.

Luke 6. 24. 16. 25. Pſal. 17. 14. What partiality therefore is there, if God in mercy and patience beſtow on bad men a farthing in the temporal conſolations of this life (if the univerſal Father give a ſmall portion in this life to untoward children) while he reſerveth infinite millions for his obedient children?

2. The goods of fortune commonly are diſpenſed not by a ſpecial hand of God, but according to the general courſe of providence: And what partiality is he guilty of, who ſcattereth money into a crowd of poor people; although in ſcrambling ſome get more than other; and often the worſt (being moſt bold and fierce) do get moſt?

Eccleſ. 9. 1, 2. 3. Indeed the receiving thoſe gifts, is no ſign of God's ſpecial regard; as the Preacher well obſerved; No man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them; All things come alike to all, there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked.

4. God (as St. Auſtin ſaith) purpoſely doth ſparingly deal theſe things to good men, and freely beſtoweth them on bad men, to ſhew how little we ought to value them; how much inferiour they are to ſpiritual goods. For ſurely he would give the beſt things to his friends, and the worſt to his enemies.

5. Even temporal gifts are diſpenſed with a very even hand; for, if barring injudicious fancie and vulgar opinion, we rightly prize things, we compare the conveniences and inconveniences of each ſtate, it will be hard to judge which hath the advantage.

Wealth hath more advantages for pleaſure; but it hath alſo more cares, more fears, more croſſes, more dangers, more troubles, more temptations.

It hath more plenty, but withall it hath leſs ſafety, leſs eaſe, leſs liberty, leſs quiet, leſs real enjoyment.

Set the diſtraction of the rich man's mind againſt the toil of the pooreſt man's body; the nauſeous ſurfeits of one againſt the griping hunger of the other.

That which really doth conſtitute a ſtate happy, content, may be common to both, or wanting to either, as the perſon is diſpoſed.

6. The goods of fortune are not purely gifts, but talents depoſited in truſt for God's ſervice, for which a proportionable return is expected; ſo that he that hath leſs of them, hath a leſs burthen to bear, and an eaſier account to render.

7. Many gifts are not diſpenſed with perſonal regard, but for publick good; and therefore all have an intereſt in them.

The wealth, the power, the reputation, the proſperity of a Prince, of a Nobleman, of a Gentleman are not his, but his neighbours; for governing, for protecting, for encouraging, for aſſiſting whom they are conferred; the world not being able to ſubſiſt in order and peace without ſubordinate ranks, and without anſwerable means to maintain them.

Obj. 2. It is apparent, that God diſpenſeth his grace, the light of knowledge, and means of ſalvation very unequally; ſome Nations living in the clear ſunſhine of the Goſpel, while others ſit in darkneſs and the ſhadow of death; whole Nations being detained in barbarous and brutiſh ignorance. Luke 1. 69. Matt. 4. 16. Eph. 4. 18. 2. 1— Tit. 3. 3. 1 Pet. 4. 3.

To anſwer this exception fully, would require much diſcourſe; it being a dark and difficult point; but briefly we may ſay:

1. That God diſpenſeth meaſures of grace, according to a juſt yet inſcrutable wiſedom, knowing what uſe will we made thereof, and what fruit men will bear: It may therefore be a favour not to diſpenſe light to them, who are not prepared to embrace and improve it well.
2. No man can tell what God doeth in preparation, and what obſtructions are made by men to his grace.
3. As lower means of grace are conferred, ſo proportionably leſs returns are expected.
4. How hard ſoever it may be to deſcry the reaſon of God's proceedings in this caſe, yet aſſuredly it is juſt, and our ignorance of it, ſhould not prejudice the belief of thoſe general truths, which are ſo plainly declared, concerning the univerſal benignity, and impartial equity of God.

Obj. 3. Is it not in holy Scripture ſometimes aſſerted, that God doth act arbitrariouſly, and abſolutely; diſpenſing his bounty and mercy, without regard to any quality in men, or deed committed by them, either in whole, or in proportion. ---God ſaith, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy--- Rom. 9. 15. and, Is it not lawfull for me to do what I will with mine own? Matt. 20. 15.

Is not a plain inſtance of this dealing alledged by St. Paul concerning Jacob and Eſau, that before the children were born, or had done either good or evil, God ſaid, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger; and in regard thereto (in the Prophet) Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated. Rom. 9. 13.

We anſwer briefly, that Such expreſſions do import, not that God acteth abſolutely in the thing it ſelf, but quoad nos; not that he acteth without reaſon, but upon reaſons (tranſcending our capacity, or our means to know it) incomprehenſible or undiſcernible to us; not that he can give no account, but is not obliged to render any to us: that the methods of his providence commonly are inſcrutable; that his proceedings are not ſubject to our examination and cenſure; that his acting doth ſufficiently authorize and juſtifie it ſelf; that is high preſumption and arrogance for us to ſcan, ſift, or conteſt, or cavil at the equity or wiſdom of God's acting. Rom. 11. 33. Rom. 9. 20.

That God doth not act according to neceſſity, but is free in diſpenſing his mercy, and applying it to any perſon, ſo that they have nothing to challenge upon account of their own deſerts or works; but muſt refer all to his mere bounty.

However there can be nothing in theſe myſteries of predeſtination and providence, which really doth ſubvert an aſſertion ſo often clearly expreſſed, and ſo well grounded in reaſon, or the conſideration of God's nature, attributes, ordinary way of acting, &c.

Whatever expreſſions are repugnant thereto in ſound, whatever inſtances (depending on occult cauſes) in appearance do croſs it; it yet muſt ſtand, that God is impartially mercifull, benign, juſt, &c.

Obj.

(Iſa. 49. 1, 5.) Jer. 1. 5. Luke 1. 15. Gal. 1. 5.

Obj. 4. Had not Jeremy, St. John Baptiſt, St. Paul abſolute favours and graces conferred on them, who were ſanctified, and ſeparated from the womb to be Prophets and Apoſtles?

Jer. 1. 10. Luke 1. 16. Acts 9. 15. 26. 16—

Reſp. Theſe favours were in deſign not ſo much particular, and perſonal, as general and publick; thoſe perſons being raiſed up by God upon occaſions as needfull inſtruments (elect veſſels) of his providence, to inſtruct men, and to reduce them to God; ſo that God in raiſing up ſuch extraordinary perſons, did expreſs his common goodneſs to mankind.

Χαῖρε κεχαριτωμένη. Luke 1. 28.

The like may be ſaid of that ſpecial favour which was vouchſafed to the holy Virgin, who was κεχαριτωμένη and bleſſed among women, for the general good of mankind.

The conſideration of this Point is very uſefull, and may diſpoſe us to many ſorts of good practice.

1. No man ſhould preſume upon God's dealing with him more favourably than with others; as if he were a darling, or favourite; that God will indulge him in the commiſſion of any thing prohibited, or in omiſſion of any duty.

No man ſhould indulge himſelf in any thing, upon a conceit that God will indulge him; or overſee ---- and that in this ſenſe, He ſeeth not iniquity in Jacob.

No man ſhould be puffed up with conceit, that God hath a ſingular regard to him. For all ſuch conceits are groundleſs and vain; in them men do miſerably delude themſelves.

1 Joh. 3. 19. 21.

No man can otherwiſe found any aſſurance of God's ſpecial love to him, than upon a good conſcience; teſtifying, that he doth ſincerely love God, and endeavour faithfully to obey his commandments.

3. No man ſhould deſpair of God's favour; ſeeing God hath no particular averſation from any; but every perſon hath the ſame grounds of hope.

If we can buckle our hearts to obſerve our duty, we may be ſure to be accepted.

Gen. 4. 7.

If thou doeſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted?

4. No man ſhould be diſcouraged for his condition, or fortune. Since in allotting it to him God had no diſfavour, nor did intend him ill.

God hath no leſs regard to him, than to perſons of the moſt high, wealthy, proſperous ſtate.

5. No man ſhould repine, murmur or complain of God's dealing, as if he were unkindly uſed, more than others. For there is no ſuch thing. God dealeth alike kindly with all.

6. No man, upon accompt of his rank, wealth, or worldly advantages ſhould boaſt or pride himſelf; ſeeing thence he partaketh no more, than his meaneſt, and pooreſt neighbour, of the principal advantage, God's favour.

Jam. 1. 9. Ὁ ταπεινὸς. Prov. 11. 12. 14. 21. Job 36. 5. (Jam. 2. 6.)

7. No man, upon ſuch accompts, ſhould deſpiſe his neighbour, the brother of low degree: for upon theſe accompts it appeareth, that the Wiſeman ſaith truly, that He is void of wiſedom, who deſpiſeth his neighbour; ſeeing no man can be deſpicable, whom God regardeth; ſeeing God (as Elihu ſaith) is mighty, and deſpiſeth not any; ſeeing the meaneſt perſon ſtandeth on equal terms with the greateſt in the eye of God.

Quorum fatis cælum omne vacavit. Luc. lib. 7.

8. Great men ſhould not take themſelves for another ſort of creatures, or another race of men than their poor neighbours; that the world is theirs, and all things are for them; that they may do what they pleaſe; that they are exempted from laws, which oblige others; for in moral and ſpiritual accompts they are upon a level with others.

They are but fellow-ſubjects, and fellow-ſervants with others; all accomptable to the ſame Maſter.

9. Superiours hence ſhould be moved to deal fairly, gently, and courteouſly with inferiours; ſeeing theſe are their fellow-ſervants; equally conſiderable as themſelves with the great Maſter of the Family.

This is the uſe to which St. Paul applieth the conſideration;

Maſters give unto your ſervants that which is juſt and equal, knowing that ye have a Maſter in Heaven---- Ye Maſters do the ſame things unto them, (that is, be conſcientiouſly good to them, as they faithfull to you) forbearing threatning; knowing that your Maſter alſo is in heaven, neither is there reſpect of perſons with him. Col. 4. 1. 3. ult. Eph. 6. 9.

10. This conſideration ſhould preſerve us from ſuperſtition, or thinking to pleaſe or ſatisfie God, win his favour, or appeaſe his diſpleaſure, by uncouth ways, which he hath not preſcribed to all men; to corrupt him by our ſacrifices and oblations; our flatteries, glozings, collogueings with him; ſo that he will indulge us in any bad thing, or excuſe us from our true duty, in regard to thoſe affected ſervices.

We do herein but abuſe our ſelves; for he will not approve or accept us upon any other accompt, than of diſcharging our duty, being truly righteous and good. Coloſſ. 2.— Mic. 6. 7, 8.

11. It is matter of comfort and ſatisfaction to a man, who is conſcious of his ſincerity, that (whatever his condition and circumſtances be) that God will have a fair regard thereto, and will not reject him.

It was ſo to Job; Doth not God ſee my ways, and count all my ſteps-- Let me be weighed in an even balance, that God may know my integrity. Job 31. 4---6.

12. The conſideration of this Point ſhould keep us from partial reſpects of men. Jam. 2. 1, 9. Prov. 28. 21.

Not to admire the ſtate of great men, nor to yield them undue deferences (in prejudice to meaner perſons, making greater difference than there is ground for) not to flatter, or humour them in an immoderate meaſure, or unbeſeeming manner.

This is that which St. James doth urge in his 2d Chapter; as a very unequal thing. Οὐ μέλει σοὶ περὶ οὐδενός.

We ſhould imitate God; we ſhould conſider that our opinions and affections ſhould reſemble his. Matt. 22. 16. Θαυμάζειν πρόσωπα.

As in exteriour judgment no reſpect is to be had to the rich above the poor; ſo neither in the interiour judgment or eſteem of our mind; to which St. James ſeemeth to apply the law; If ye have reſpect to perſons, ye commit ſin, and are convinced of the law as tranſgreſſours. Jude. Levit. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 17. 16. 19. Prov. 24. 23.

13. This ſhould keep us from envying at thoſe who have more worldly advantages. 16. 5. 28. 21. Jam. 2. 9.

14. It ſhould keep us from being offended, or ſcandalized, or perverted into falſe notions of God, upon occaſion of any myſterious points, or hard expreſſions importing abſolute and arbitrary proceedings of God, in predeſtination or providence. For however they are to be underſtood, they cannot derogate from the impartial goodneſs and juſtice of God.

15. This conſideration ſhould engage us readily to pay due reſpect and reverence to Princes, to Magiſtrates, to all our Superiours.

For hence we ſee, that the reaſon why we are commanded to honour and fear them is, not their worldly grandeur of wealth or power, (things of ſmall conſideration with God) but it ſtandeth on a more ſolid ground, their ſacred relations to God, as his repreſentatives and officers; who in his name and behalf do adminiſter Juſtice, and protect right and innocence, encourage vertue, maintain order and peace in the world.

Though God doth not favour their perſons as rich and mighty; yet he regardeth his own character imprinted on them, he regardeth his honour and intereſt concerned in their reſpect, he regardeth the publick good of mankind, which they are conſtituted to promote. He conſiders them as the Miniſters of his Kingdom, and inſtruments of conveying his benefits to mankind.

Whence he giveth ſalvation to Kings, he by his law, and by his providence doth guard and ſecure them from violence, from contempt, from diſreſpect.

In honouring them, we honour the authority of God; and the character of Divinity ſtamped on them; we ſerve our ſelves, for whoſe ſake they are conſtituted, for whoſe good they watch.

Rom. 14. 4. Εἰς ἀγαθόν.

It may alſo engage us the more gladly and fully to yield them their due reſpect, to conſider, that their condition is not invidious; or their caſe better than other mens; ſeeing they are accomptable to God for the advantages of it; ſeeing that God hath no regard to them upon accompt of that greatneſs which dazleth our eyes: ſeeing that for all the burthens they ſuſtain, for all the cares they take, for all the pains they endure, for our good and publick ſervice, they can receive ſo inconſiderable a recompence from us.

Finally,

It ſhould engage us to be very carefull of our ways, and diligent in our obedience; ſeeing there is no other way poſſible of pleaſing God, of gaining his favour and friendſhip, of appeaſing his diſpleaſure, of ſtanding upright, and coming off well in his judgment; this is St. Peter's inference, with which I conclude.

1 Pet. 1. 17. If ye call on the Father, who without reſpect of perſons judgeth according to every man's work, paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear.

Sermon XXXIX.

The Doctrine of Univerſal Redemption aſſerted and explain'd.

1 Tim. IV. 10.

——The living God; who is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe.

Θεοῦ γὰρ πολλῶν ὄντων, ἐφ' ὧν θαυμάζεται, οὐδὲν οὕτως ὡς τὸ πάντων εὐεργετεῖν ἰδιώτατον. Naz. Orat. 26.

THERE are two Points of Doctrine here plainly aſſerted by Saint Paul, which I ſhall endeavour to explain, and to apply: One, that God is the Saviour of all men; another, that he is peculiarly the Saviour of the faithfull. For the firſt, God in many reſpects may truly be conceived and called the Saviour of all men; for the word ſave doth in a large acception denote the conferring any kind of good: as implying a removal of need, or indigence. Whence God is the Saviour of all men as the univerſal preſerver and upholder of all things in their being and natural ſtate, as it is in the Pſalm: Thou, Lord, ſaveſt man and beaſt, or, as the general benefactour, who is good to all, and whoſe mercies are over all his works; who maketh his Sun to riſe upon the good and bad, rains upon the juſt and unjuſt, is kind and benign even to the ingratefull and evil: or, as the common aſſiſtent, protectour, and deliverer of all men who in need or diſtreſs have recourſe unto him for ſuccour and relief, according to what is ſaid in the Pſalms; The Lord is a refuge for the oppreſſed, a refuge in times of trouble: The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him. They cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he ſaved them out of their diſtreſſes.

Pſal. 36. 6. Old Tranſl. and the LXX. σώσεις, or σώζεις.
Pſal. 145. 9.
Matt. 5. 46.
Luke 6. 5.
Pſal. 9. 9.
145. 18.
146. 7, &c.
107. 13, &c.
68. 19, 20.

In theſe kinds of ſenſes eſpecially reſpecting natural and temporal good, it is manifeſt that God is the Saviour of all men. But that he is in this place termed ſuch in a higher ſenſe, with regard to mercies and bleſſings of a more excellent kind, and greater conſequence (to mercies and bleſſings of a ſpiritual nature, and relating to the eternal ſtate of men) may from ſeveral conſiderations appear.

1. For that according to Apoſtolical uſe the word Saviour, ſave, ſalvation, are wont to bear an Evangelical ſenſe, relating to the benefits by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt procured, purchaſed, and diſpenſed, concerning the future ſtate of men.

2. For that queſtionleſs St. Paul doth here intend God to be Saviour of the faithfull in this higher ſenſe, and conſequently he means him in the ſame ſenſe (although not in the ſame degree and meaſure, or not altogether to the ſame effects and purpoſes) a Saviour of all men.

3. Becauſe 'tis plain that in other places of Scripture, like and parallel to this, ſuch a ſenſe is deſigned. As, where in this very Epiſtle, we are enjoyned to pray for all men, for this reaſon; For (ſaith St. Paul) this is good and acceptable before God our Saviour, who would have all men to be ſaved, and to come to the knowledge (or acknowledgment) of the truth; where σωτὴρ ἡμῶν, the Saviour of us, ſeems to denote the Saviour of us as men (that interpretation beſt ſuting with the argument St. Paul uſeth) however it is expreſſed that God is, according to deſire or intention, the Saviour of all men, in reference to their ſpiritual and eternal advantage; as willing that all men ſhould embrace the Goſpel; which is farther moſt evidently confirmed by the words immediately following; For there is one God, and one Mediatour between God and man, the man Chriſt Jeſus.

1 Tim. 2. 4.

4. Becauſe according to the tenour of Scripture, and the analogy of Chriſtian doctrine, St. Paul's aſſertion thus interpreted is true, as our ſubſequent diſcourſe may declare.

5. I might add, that the living God in our Text may very well be underſtood and expounded to be our Lord Jeſus himſelf; not onely as partaking of the divine nature, but as exhibited in the Goſpel, the word incarnate, who as ſuch may ſeem commonly by St. Paul to be ſtyled, God our Saviour; God manifeſted in the fleſh; God, that purchaſed the Church with his own bloud; Chriſt, who is God over all, bleſſed for evermore. However it from the premiſſes is ſufficiently apparent, that God's being the Saviour of all men doth relate unto our Saviour Jeſus his undertakings and performances for the ſalvation of all men; ſince God in a ſenſe Evangelical is no otherwiſe ſaid to ſave, than in concurrence with what Jeſus did undertake and perform; than as deſigning, ordering, accepting, proſecuting, and

1 Tim. 1. 1.
2. 4.
2 Tim. 1. 9.
Tit. 2. 10, 13.
2. 4. 1. 3.
1 Tim. 3. 16.
Acts 20. 28.
Rom. 9. 5.

and accompliſhing our Lord's performances; Jeſus being the conduit through which all Evangelical Mercies and Bleſſings are from God convey'd and diſpens'd to Mankind. So that God being the Saviour of Mankind, is either directly and immediately, or by equivalence and in conſequence the Epheſ. 1. 3, 6. ſame with Jeſus being the Saviour of all men.

That our Lord Jeſus is the Saviour of all men; or that the moſt ſignal of his ſaving performances do in their nature and their deſign reſpect all men, as meant for, as conducing and tending to all mens Salvation, yea and as in their own nature (ſuppoſing mens due and poſſible concurrence with them) effectually productive of their Salvation; that I ſay this ancient Catholick point of Doctrine (the which we profeſs to believe, when with the Church we ſay in the Nicene Creed----Who for us men, and for our ſalvation came down from heaven, and the which particularly our Church in it's Catechiſm, in the miniſtration of Baptiſm, and in the Communion, doth moſt evidently and expreſly declare it ſelf to embrace) is very true, many full and clear teſtimonies of Scripture do ſhew, many reaſons grounded on Scripture do prove; the which we ſhall firſt touch, and then farther both illuſtrate and enforce the truth, by declaring upon what accompts, or in what reſpects our Lord is the Saviour of all men; as alſo by an application to practice, declarative of its uſefulneſs and ſubſerviency to the purpoſes of piety. For immediate teſtimonies:

1. Jeſus is called the Saviour of the World; who was ſent and came into the World to ſave the World; whoſe chief performances were de-ſigned and directed to the Salvation of the World; We have heard and known (ſaid the men of Samaria) that this is truly the Saviour of the World, the John 4. 42. Chriſt. We have ſeen and teſtified (ſaith St. John) that the father ſent the Son
1 John 4. 14. to be the Saviour of the World (that World, of which it is ſaid: He was in John 1. 10. the World, and the World was made by him, and the World knew him not.) And;
John 3. 17. 12. 47. God ſent his Son into the World, not to judge (or not to condemn) the World,
John 5. 22. but that the World by him ſhould be ſaved (that World, whereof a great Acts 10. 42. part he in effect would both judge and condemn for unbelief and diſobe-17. 31. Rom. 14. 10. dience, he did come primarily upon intent to ſave.) And, The bread which
2 Cor. 5. 10. I ſhall give, is (ſaith he) my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the World:
John 6. 52. John 1. 29. And, Behold (ſaid the Baptiſt) the Lamb of God, which taketh away the ſins of 2 Cor. 5. 19. the World. And, God was in Chriſt reconciling the World unto himſelf, not Coloſſ. 1. 20. imputing their offences (ſaith St. Paul) to the World, which otherwiſe he ex-1 John 2. 2. preſſeth by τὰ πάντα, by him to reconcile all things unto himſelf:) And, He
1 John 5. 19. is a propitiation not onely for our ſins, but for the ſins of the whole World, (the whole World, in contradiction from all Chriſtians, to whom S. John ſpeaketh in that place of his Catholick Epiſtle; that κόσμος ὅλος, of which he ſaith in that ſame Epiſtle, κόσμος ὅλος ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ κεῖται, the whole World lieth in wickedneſs.) In all which places that the World according to its ordinary acception, (and as every Man would take it at firſt hearing) doth ſignifie the whole community of Mankind, comprehending men of all ſorts and qualities, good and bad, Believers and Infidels, (not in a new, unuſual ſenſe, any ſpecial reſtrained World of ſome perſons particularly regarded, or qualified) will, I ſuppoſe, eaſily appear to him, who ſhall without prejudice or partiality, attend to the common uſe thereof in Scripture, eſpecially in St. John, who moſt frequently applieth it as to this, ſo to other caſes, or matters.

2. The object of our Saviour's undertakings and intentions is deſcribed by qualities and circumſtances agreeing unto all men. All the Sons of Adam are by diſobedience in a loſt condition (loſt in errour and ſin, loſt Matt. 18. 11. in guilt and condemnation, loſt in trouble and miſery) and, The Son of man (ſaith He himſelf) came to ſave, τὸ ἀπολωλὸς, that which was loſt (or whatever was loſt.) All men have ſinned, (ſaith St. Paul) and are fallen ſhort Rom. 3. 23.

of the glory of God; and, 'Tis a faithful ſaying (ſaith the ſame Apoſtle) and 1 Tim. 1. 15.
worthy of all acceptation, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the World to ſave ſinners. God commended his love to us, that we being yet ſinners Chriſt died for Rom. 5. 8.
us. All men naturally are weak, and wicked; are in a ſtate of alienation Epheſ. 2. 1, &c.
and enmity toward God: And, Even when we were without ſtrength, in Rom. 5. 6, 10.
due time Chriſt died for the ungodly: When we were enemies were reconciled to God by the death of his Son: Chriſt once ſuffered for ſins, the righ- 1 Pet. 3. 18.
teous for the unrighteous. All Men have ſouls and lives expos'd to miſery and ruine: And, The Son of man (ſo he aſſures us) came not to deſtroy, but to Luke 9. 56.
ſave the ſouls (or lives) of men. Thoſe propoſitions in form reſpecting an indefinite object are according to vulgar uſe equipollent to thoſe, wherein the object is expreſſed univerſally. However,

3. They are interpreted by others, expreſſed in terms as general, and comprehenſive as can be; ſuch as theſe Texts contain: The living God, who 1 Tim. 4. 10.
is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of the faithful (of all men univerſally, not onely of the faithful, though chiefly of them.) God our Saviour would have 1 Tim. 2. 4, 5.
all men to be ſaved; He is the mediatour of God and Men, who gave himſelf Rom. 11. 32.
a ranſom for all men; God hath ſhut up all men under ſin, that he might have mercy upon all. The love of Chriſt conſtraineth us, judging this, that if one 2 Cor. 5. 15.
died for all, then are all dead; and he died for all, that they who live may not live to themſelves, but to him that died for them, and roſe again. The ſaving Tit. 2. 11.
grace of God hath appeared to all men (or the grace of God, which is ſaving Heb. 2. 9, 10.
to all men, hath appeared, ἐπεφάνη ἡ χάρις Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις.) John 1. 9.
He taſted death ὑπὲρ παντὸς, for every man. He is the true light, that enlightneth every man coming into the World. Which propoſitions do ſufficiently determine the extent of our Saviour's ſaving performances.

4. Farther yet, to exclude any limitation or diminution of theſe ſo general terms (at leaſt to exclude any limitation in regard to all the members of the viſible Church, which are or have been incorporated thereinto) it is expreſſed, that our Saviour's undertakings did reſpect even thoſe, who Væ illis, qui (by their own default) might loſe the benefit of them, and who in effect auctorem pro- ſhould not be ſaved. For, of thoſe falſe teachers, who introduc'd pernicious priæ ſalutis negaverunt.
hereſies, 'tis ſaid, that they denied the Lord, who bought them. And St. Paul Ambr. Pſa. 39.
implies, that by a ſcandalous example a weak brother, for whom Chriſt died, 2 Pet. 2. 1.
being induced to ſin, might be deſtroyed. And by thy knowledge ſhall the weak 1 Cor. 8. 11.
brother periſh, for whom Chriſt died. And, Do not (ſaith He again) by thy eat- Rom. 14. 15.
ing deſtroy him, for whom Chriſt died. And, the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſig- Heb. 10. 29.
nifies concerning Apoſtates, that they do trample upon the Son of God, and pollute the Bloud of Chriſt, by which they are ſanctified.

5. The ſuppoſition thereof is the ground of Duty, and an aggravation of ſin.

Thus doth the Holy Scripture in terms very direct and expreſs declare this truth, indeed ſo clearly and fully, that ſcarce any other point of Chriſtian Doctrine can alledge more ample or plain Teſtimony of Scripture for it; whence it is wonderful that any pretending reverence to Scripture, ſhould dare (upon conſequences of their own deviſing) to queſtion it; and many reaſons confirming the ſame, may be deduced thence.

1. The impulſive cauſe, which moved God to deſign the ſending our Lord for to undertake what he did, is expreſſed to be philanthropy; or love to Mankind: But (ſaith St. Paul) when the kindneſs and love of God our Sa- Tit. 3. 4. viour unto man appeared —— according to his mercy he ſaved us. So God Ἡ φιλανθρωπία τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν θεοῦ.
loved

——Greg. Naz. ſaith of Julian, διὰ τοῦτο μισήσας Χριστὸν, ὅτι δι᾽ αὐτοῦ σέσωσο Athan. Orat. 32.

John 3. 16. loved the World, that he gave his onely begotten Son. Rom. 5. 8. God hereby commends his love unto us, that we as yet being ſinners, Chriſt died for us. Epheſ. 2. 4. It was not a particular fondneſs of affection (ſuch whereof no particular ground can be aſſigned or imagined) but an univerſal (infinitely rich and abundant) goodneſs, mercy and pity toward this eminent part of his Creation ſunk into diſtreſs and lamentable wretchedneſs, which induced God to ſend his Son for the Redemption of Mankind.

2. God declares himſelf impartial (moſt particularly) in this caſe; that as all men in regard to him ſtand alike related, and are in the ſame condition, ſo he proceeds with indifferent affection, and upon the ſame terms with all. He is equally the Lord and maker of all men; and all Men are equally involved in guilt, and expoſed to ruine; upon which grounds St. Paul inferreth, that as to God's regard of Man's ſalvation, there is no difference between Jews and Greeks; and by parity of reaſon there can be none between any other ſorts of perſons, antecedently to God's merciful Rom. 2. 11. intentions. There is (ſaith He) no reſpect of perſons with God (as to preparing the capacities and means, to propounding the terms and conditions of ſalvation, for about theſe he diſcourſes) for, Is he (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 3. 29. aſſigning the reaſon of that aſſertion) the God of the Jews onely, and not of Rom. 10. 12. the Gentiles? No: there is no difference (ſaith He) of Jew and Greek, for there is the ſame Lord of all, being rich (rich in mercy and bounty) unto all that call upon him; that is by conſequence ſimply unto all; for St. Paul implies, that God therefore provided that all Men ſhould have the means of calling upon him imparted to them; for that, how ſhould they call upon him without faith; and how ſhould they believe without Preachers, and how ſhould there be Preachers, if they were not ſent? whence he infers (againſt the ſenſe of thoſe Jews, with whom he diſputes) that it was neceſſary that Rom. 3. 22. the Apoſtles ſhould have a Commiſſion to preach unto all. And, The righteouſneſs of God by the faith of Chriſt is manifeſted unto all, and over all that believe, for there is no difference; for all have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God: The relation of God is the ſame to all Men; (He is the God and Lord of all) the ſtate and need of all Men are the ſame; there is therefore no difference, excepting that conſequent one, which compliance or non-compliance with the conditions offered unto all doth induce. Sap. 6. 7. 'Tis true in this reſpect, what the Wiſe-man ſaith, ὁ πάντων δεσπότης ὁμοίως προνοεῖ περὶ πάντων· He, that is Lord of all, careth (or provideth) for all alike; and what Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, as to this particular, All things lie equally for all from God; ſo that no man can complain of him; as partial to ſome, and deficient to others.

Πᾶσι πάντα ἴσα κεῖται παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ ἐστὶν αὐτὸς ἀμεμφής. Clem. Alexand. Strom. VII. p. 301.

3. We may obſerve, That the undertakings and performances of our Lord are for nature and extent compared with thoſe of Adam, (who was Rom. 5. 14. τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος, a type of him that was to come;) As Adam, being a repreſentative of Mankind, did by his tranſgreſſion involve all Men in guilt, and ſubject them to condemnation; provoked God's wrath, and drew the effects thereof upon us; brought all Men under the ſlavery of ſin, and neceſſity of death; ſo was our Lord the Proxy of Mankind, and by his performances in our behalf did undoe for our advantage, what the former did to our prejudice; by his entire obedience expiating the common guilt, ſuſpending the fatal ſentence, pacifying God's wrath, reducing righteouſneſs, and reſtoring life to all that would embrace them; ſo doth Rom. 5. 18. St. Paul at large (in the 5th Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Romans) propound and proſecute the compariſon; cloſing his diſcourſe thus: Therefore as by the offence of one man upon all men to condemnation, ſo by the righ-teouſneſs of one upon all Men to juſtification of life. As guilt, wrath and death forementioned were the fruits of what Adam did, falling upon all; ſo pardon, grace and life were (in deſign) the effects of what our Saviour performed relating unto all. Yea, The ſame compariſon S. Paul ſeems to intimate in his 2d Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where he ſaith, that if one died for all, then are all Men dead; that is, Chriſt's dying for all Men, implies all Men in a ſtate of condemnation and ſubjection to death; and that inference ſuppoſes the performances of the firſt and ſecond Adam to be in their nature and primary effects co-extended and commenſurate. The ſame St. Paul ſeemeth in expreſs terms to ſay, All men have ſinned, and are fallen ſhort (or are deſtitute) of the glory of God; being juſtified freely by his grace (or favour) by the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus. (All men are juſtified, that is according to God's favourable intention and deſign.) Yea, the very reaſon, why God permitted ſin and death to prevail ſo univerſally is intimated to be his deſign of extending a capacity of righteouſneſs and life unto all; ſo St. Paul tells us: God hath ſhut up all men under ſin, that he might have mercy upon all. And particularly, that by virtue of Chriſt's performances, death is aboliſhed, and immortality is conferred upon all men, St. Paul moſt expreſly teacheth us; For (ſaith he) as in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt ſhall all men be made alive.

2 Cor. 5. 15.
Rom. 3. 23.
Rom. 11.32.
1 Cor. 15. 22.
2 Tim. 1. 10.
Rom. 6. 23.

I obſerve that Proſper (an eager diſputant about points allied to this) ſeveral times confeſſeth that Chriſt may be moſt rightly affirmed to have been crucified for the redemption of the whole world, eſpecially upon two accounts, for his true ſuſception of humane nature, and for the common perdition of all men in the firſt man; we have touchd the latter, let us add, That Cùm itaque rectiſſimè dicatur Salvator pro totius mundi redemptione crucifixus, propter veram naturæ humanæ ſuſceptionem, & propter communem in primo homine omnium perditionem, &c. Proſ. ad Gall. c. 9.

4. Our Saviour aſſuming our nature, and partaking of our Fleſh, being made in the likeneſs of men, and found in faſhion as a man; yea endued with the paſſions and infirmities of man's nature, expoſed to the tribulations and inconveniences of man's life) did thereby allye himſelf, and put on a fraternal relation unto all men. Foraſmuch ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, as children, (the children he means of the ſame father, or brethren; as the tenour of his diſcourſe makes evident) are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf likewiſe took part of the ſame; that is, graciouſly deſigning to become a brother to the children of men, he aſſumed all that was proper to man's nature. God, ſaith St. Paul, made πᾶν ἔθνος ἀνθρώπων, the whole nation or race of men, dwelling upon the face of of the earth, of one blood; and of that one blood our Saviour was pleaſed to take part, entitling us thereby to a conſanguinity with him; and it was a Title of his, which he ſeemed to affect and delight in, the Son of man. He being ſuch did ſanctifie our nature, by the cloſeſt conjunction thereof to the divine nature, and rendring it more than a temple of the divinity; he dignified it, and (as that Apoſtle intimateth) advanced it above the angelical nature by an alliance to God himſelf; he thereby not only became qualified to mediate between God and man, and capable to tranſact that great buſineſs of man's ſalvation, but was engaged, and in a manner obliged to do it; for as he was a man, he ſurely was endued with the beſt of humane affections, univerſal charity and compaſſion, which would excite him to promote the welfare of all; as he was a man, he was ſubject to the common law of humanity, which obliges to endeavour the common benefit of men. As he was a brother in relation, ſo he could not, he would not be otherwiſe in affection; he

Phil. 2. 7.
Heb. 4. 15. 2. 17. 5. 2.
Gal. 4. 4.
Heb 2. 14, 11, 12, 16.
Acts 17. 26.

Ἡ πρόσληψις τῆς σαρκὸς οὐκ ἐδούλου τὸν λόγον φύσει Κύριον ὄντα, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον ἐλευθέρωσις ἦν ἡ γινομένη παρὰ τοῦ λόγου πάσης ἀνθρωπότητος, &c. Athan. c. Arr. Orat. 3. p. 385.

Heb. 2. 11.
Heb. 2. 7, 16.
1 Tim. 2. 5.

he is not to be conceived deficient in performance of the offices ſutable Matt. 5. 44. to that condition. That good-will which he requires us to bear toward Gal. 6. 10. all men indifferently, good and bad, friends and enemies, he queſtion-Acts 10. 38. leſs did bear himſelf in the higheſt degree, and to the utmoſt extent; the general beneficence, which in his converſation and practice he did expreſs, doth ſignifie how large his deſires and intentions were in regard to the welfare of men; ſo that we may thence well aver with St. Ambroſe:
Ambr. de pa-rad. 8. Incarnationis Dei myſterium eſt univerſæ ſalus creaturæ; The myſtery of God's Incarnation doth reſpect the ſalvation of all mankind, according to his deſire and deſign.

Ἄνθρωπον αὐτὸν ποιήσας ὁ πατὴρ οὐχ ἁπλῶς ἐποίησεν ἄνθρωπον, ἀλλ' εἰς τὸ κυριεῦσαι πάντων αὐτὸν, καὶ ἁγιάζειν πάντας διὰ τοῦ χρίσματος πεποίηκεν. Ath. Orat. 3. in Art. 385.

Apoc. 17. 14. Acts 10. 36.
1 Cor. 11. 3. Matt. 28. 18.
Matt. 11. 27.
John 3. 35. 13. 3.
Heb. 2. 8. 1. 2.
John 17. 2. 5. 22.
Phil. 2. 9. Pſal. 110. 7.

5. We are taught that our Lord, hath by his ſaving performances acquired a rightful propriety in, and a title of dominion over all men living; to him is committed the governance and protection of all mankind, as the reward of what he did and ſuffered for its ſake. He is called the Lord of all men; and the head of every man. It is ſaid that all things by his Father are given into his hand, and put under his feet; that power is given him over all fleſh; that All authority is given him in heaven and earth; all judgment is committed to him. Which priviledges, rights, digni-ties are declared to have been procured by the virtue of his ſaving perfor-
Rom. 14. 9. mances, and purchaſed by the price of his bloud. For, To this end, ſaith
St. Paul, Chriſt both died and roſe again, and revived, that he might be the Lord both of the dead and living; (or might exerciſe Lordſhip over both 1 Cor. 6. 20. the dead and living, ἵνα καὶ νεκρῶν καὶ ζώντων κυριεύσῃ) and, We are not our own Heb. 2. 9. (ſaith He again) we are bought with a price: And, we ſee Jeſus, for the ſuf-fering of death, crowned with glory and honour, that by the grace of God he might taſte death for every man, (or, for the ſuffering of death, that by God's grace he might taſte death for every man, crowned with glory and ho-Phil. 2. 8, 9. nour; for there ſeems to be ſuch a trajection in the words;) And he was Apoc. 5. 9, 12. obedient unto death, even to the death of the croſs; therefore hath God exalted him, and given him a name above every name. Subjection then and redemption, as they have one ground, ſo they are implied to have the ſame extent; as every one muſt call Chriſt Lord, ſo he may call him Saviour; therefore his Lord, becauſe his Saviour. And ſince Chriſt hath got an authority over all men, a propriety in every man; ſince he hath undertaken to govern and protect the world, he queſtionleſs as a Prince of incomparable benignity and clemency, doth ſeriouſly intend and deſire the beſt welfare of all his People; it ſurely cannot be a ſmall benefit to the community of men, that they are his ſubjects; the objects of his Princely care, Clem. Strom. 7. and of his mercy. ——κήδεται τῶν συμπάντων· ὅπερ καὶ καθήκει καὶ κυρίῳ πάντων
p. 505. γενομένῳ· σωτὴρ γάρ ἐστιν, οὐχὶ τῶν μὲν, τῶν δ' οὔ. He taketh care of all which doth become him that is Lord of all; for that he is indifferently the Saviour of all, ſaith Clem. Alexand.

1 Tim. 2. 1, 4. 6. We are commanded to pray, intercede and give thanks (indifferently) for all men, even for Heathens and Perſecutours; as for the objects of God's benevolent affection; whom he would have to be ſaved, and to come to the knowledge of his truth; expreſſing our charity in conformity to the unconfined goodneſs of God. Very good reaſon (argues St. Chryſoſtome) there is why we ſhould pray for all men; for if God doth will the ſalvation of all men, we in imitation of him, ſhould will the ſame; and if we deſire it, we ſhould pray for it. Upon which ſcore the Catholick Church hath conſtantly and carefully obſerved this precept; ſo the learned Writer de vocatione Gentium aſſures us: Which law of ſupplication, ſaith he, the devotion of all prieſts, and all the faithful people doth ſo obſerve, that there is no part of the World, in which ſuch prayers are not ſolemnized by the Chriſtian people. The Church of God doth therefore ſupplicate not only for the Saints, and the regenerate in Chriſt, but alſo for all infidels, and enemies of the Croſs of Chriſt; for all Idolators, all Perſecutors, all Jews, Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. And Proſper himſelf: Setting aſide, ſaith he, that diſtinction, which the divine knowledge contains within the ſecret of his Juſtice, it is moſt ſincerely to be believed and profeſſed, that God wills that all men ſhall be ſaved; ſince the Apoſtle, whoſe ſentence that is, doth moſt ſolicitouſly injoyn, that which is in all the Churches moſt piouſly obſerved that God ſhould be implored for all men. So doth he atteſt the common practice, and declare the ground thereof.

Μιμοῦ τὸν Θεόν —— εἰ πάντας θέλει σωθῆναι, εἰκότως ὑπὲρ πάντων δεῖ εὔχεσθαι, εἰ πάντας αὐτὸς ἠθέλησε σωθῆναι, θέλε καὶ σύ· εἰ δὲ θέλεις, εὔχου. Chriſoſt.

Quam legem ſupplicationis ità omnium ſacerdotum, & omnium fidelium devotio, concorditur tenet, ut nulla pars mundi ſit, in qua hujuſmodi orationes non celebrentur à populis Chriſtianis. Supplicat ergò ubique Eccleſia Dei non ſolùm pro Sanctis & in Chriſto jam regeneratis, ſed etiam pro omnibus infidelibus, & inimicis crucis Chriſti, &c.

Remotâ ergò diſcretione, quam divina ſcientia intra ſecretum juſtitiæ ſuæ continet, ſinceriſſimè credendum atque profitendum eſt Deum velle, ut omnes homines ſalvi fiant; ſiquidem Apoſtolus, cujus iſta ſententia eſt, ſolicitiſſimè præcipit quod in omnibus Eccleſiis piiſſimè cuſtoditur, ut Deo pro omnibus hominibus ſupplicetur. Proſ. ad obj. Vincent. 2.

7. For which practice, and for the confirmation of its ground (God's ſerious willingneſs and deſire that men ſhould be ſaved) we have the pattern of our Lord himſelf praying to his Father for the pardon of the worſt of men, his murtherers; which as it demonſtrated his Charity toward them, ſo it argues that he was their Saviour, for that otherwiſe he knew they could not be in any capacity of having pardon. His praying for them implies the poſſibility of their receiving forgiveneſs; and ſuch a poſſibility doth preſuppoſe a diſpoſition in God to grant it, and conſequently a ſatisfaction provided, ſuch as God requires and accepts, and which ſhall avail to their benefit, if toward the application thereof they perform their parts.

8. Indeed it is not eaſie to conceive how we can heartily pray for pardon, or for any other bleſſing either for our ſelves or for others, without ſuppoſing Chriſt to be our Saviour and theirs; without ſuppoſing God placable and well affected towards us and them in Chriſt, upon the accompt of his performances and ſufferings in our and their behalf. We are to offer up all our devotions in the name of Chriſt, and for his ſake muſt implore all mercies and bleſſings from God, which how can we do ſeriouſly and with faith, if we may reaſonably queſtion whether Chriſt's merits do reſpect us, and conſequently whether they can be available in our behalf? I will, ſaith St. Paul, that men ſhould pray in every place, lifting up pure hands without wrath or doubting; which precept how can any Man obſerve; how can any Man pray with calmneſs and confidence of mind, who is not aſſured that Chriſt is his Saviour, or that God for Chriſt's ſake is diſpoſed to grant his requeſts? but this point we may be obliged to proſecute ſomewhat farther in the application. 1 Tim. 2. 8.

9. Either our Saviour's performances do reſpect all men, or ſome men (the far greateſt part of men) do ſtand upon no other terms, than thoſe of the firſt creation, or rather of the ſubſequent lapſe and condemnation; being ſubject to an extremely rigorous Law, and an infallibly certain guilt; and conſequently to inevitable puniſhment; being utterly ſecluded from all capacity of mercy, and having no place of repentance left unto them (the place of repentance being a moſt ſignal part of Chriſt's purchaſe) ſo that if any ſuch man ſhould, according to the proportion of his light and ability, perform what is agreeable to God's law, doing Acts 5. 31. Luke 24. 47 what is poſſible to him (this may be ſuppoſed, for what is poſſible to a man he may do, what is poſſible is poſſible) in order to his ſalvation, he notwithſtanding ſhould be incapable of any mercy, favour or accep-Rom. 11. 32. tance. But, beſide that it is expreſly ſaid, that God did ſhut up all men under ſin, that he might have mercy upon all; and that we are plainly enough informed, that our Lord did reverſe the firſt fatal ſentence, and hath as the mediatour between God and Man evacuated all former covenants Heb. 8. 7. by eſtabliſhing a new one (for if any former covenant had been good, there had been no place ſought for a new one, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews diſcourſeth) beſides theſe conſiderations, I ſay, and beſide that ſuch ſuppo-ſitions do not well ſute to the nature of God, and do not well conſiſt with the tenour of his providence; God poſitively aud vehemently diſ-Acts 17. 30. claimeth this rigour of proceeding; he both under Law and Goſpel de-Ezek. 18. clares himſelf ready to admit any man's repentance; yea earneſtly invites all men thereto; yea grievouſly explains and expoſtulates with men Ezek. 33. 11. for not repenting, yea not only ſays it, but ſwears it by his own life, Iſa. 55. 3. 7. that he deſires any wicked man ſhould do it; He ſtrongly aſſerts, he

Mic. 7. 8.
Rom. 2. 4. earneſtly inculcates, he loudly proclaims to all his readineſs to pardon, and his delight in ſhewing mercy; the riches of his goodneſs and for-2 Cor. 8. 12. bearance, and long-ſuffering. He declares, that he will exact an ac-
Mat. 25. 25. compt of men, according to proportion, anſwerable to their willingneſs to do what they could; and to the improvements of thoſe talents (thoſe meaſures of light and ſtrength) which they had, or might have Luke 19. 17. had; that whoever is ἐν ἐλαχίστῳ πιστὸς, faithful in uſing the ſmalleſt 16. 10. power, ſhall be accepted and rewarded. He repreſents himſelf impartial Acts 10. 34. in his judgment and acceptance of mens perſons and performances;
1 Pet. 1. 17. any man, in any nation, his ſincere, though imperfect, piety and righ-teouſneſs being acceptable to him; The final ruine of men is not imputed to any antecedent defect lying in man's ſtate, or God's will, to no obſtacle on God's part, nor incapacity on the part of man, but wholly to man's blameable neglect, or wilful abuſe of the means conducible to his ſalvation: No want of mercy in God, or virtue in the paſſion of our Lord are to be mentioned or thought of; infidelity (formal or interpretative) and obſtinate impenitency diſappointing God's merciful intentions, and fruſtrating our Lord's ſaving performances, and endea-John 3. 19. vours, are the ſole banes of mankind; Here (ſaith our Lord) is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs ra-John 5. 34, 40. ther than light, becauſe their deeds are evil. And, I ſpeak theſe things, Mat. 23. 17. that ye might be ſaved; but ye will not come to me, that ye might have Luke 7. 30. life. And, How often have I willed to gather thy children, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but ye would not ? Of the Phariſees and Lawyers our Saviour ſaid, that they defeated the counſel of God toward themſelves (ἠθέτησαν τὴν βουλὴν θεοῦ εἰς ἑαυτοὺς) the counſel of God, who deſigned to bring them to repentance by the inſtruction and exhortation of St. John the Baptiſt. Our Saviour invited many to the Eſa. 25. 6. participation of the Goſpel (that great Feaſt of fat things to all people, as Matt. 22. 3, 5. the Prophet Eſay calleth it) but they would not come, ſaith the Text;
he iterated his meſſage, but they careleſly neglecting it (ἀμελήσαντες) went away, one to his farm, another to his merchandize, and the reſt took his Matt. 13. 19, ſervants, and intreated them ſpitefully, and ſlew them. The Sower (our 38. Lord) did ſow in the field (the world) the good ſeed of heavenly truth, but ſome would not admit into their heads or hearts; from others
John 7. 46. 15. temptation bare it away; in others woldly cares and deſires choaked it;
22. 15. 24. 9. Our Lord ſpake the moſt convincing words, ſuch as no man ever ſpake, 32.
ſuch

ſuch as drew Publicans and Harlots into the Kingdom of heaven; he performed moſt aſtoniſhing works ſuch as never the like were done, which were ſufficient to convert Tyre and Sydon, yea to have preſerved Sodom, but without effect, ſuch were the invincible obſtinacy, the groſs ſtupidity, the corrupt prejudices, and perverſe affections of his auditors and ſpectators, upon which cauſe our Lord chargeth the inefficacy and unſucceſsfulneſs of his endeavours for their ſalvation. So doth St. Stephen call the Jews, unto whom the Goſpel was offered, hard-necked, uncircumciſed in heart and ears; ſuch as did always reſiſt the holy Spirit. St. Paul gives the ſame character of them, and aſſigns the ſame cauſe of their rejecting the Goſpel. And of the Jews of Antioch 'tis ſaid, that they did thruſt away the word of ſalvation, judging themſelves unworthy of everlaſting life (that is, diſdaining to embrace the overture of everlaſting life made unto them.) And, deſpiſeſt thou the riches of God's goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, being ignorant, that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? ſo St. Paul expoſtulates with the incredulous Jew. And, How, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews, ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation? ſo do our Lord and his Apoſtles ſtate the reaſon of mens miſcarrying in this great affair; ſignifying all requiſite care and proviſion to be made on God's part for their ſalvation; and imputing the obſtruction ſolely to their voluntary default of compliance with God in his conduct and management thereof.

Matt. 21. 31. John 7. 31. John 5. 44. 12. 43. Luke 16. 14. Matt. 13. 13. 23. 14. Acts 7. 51. Acts 28. 26. Acts 13. 46. Rom. 2. 3. Heb. 2. 3.

Neither are the dealings and declarations of God toward thoſe who lived under the Law and Prophets, impertinent to this purpoſe; they are applicable upon conſideration of party in reaſon, or likeneſs in caſe.

What remonſtrances concerning the gentleneſs, kindneſs, and equity of his dealings, what exprobrations of their ſtubbornneſs and ſtupidity God did anciently make to Iſrael under that particular diſpenſation, (which yet in tendency and in repreſentation may be deemed general) the ſame he might now uſe toward all mankind, under this univerſal œconomy, wherein God hath given to his Son, the heathen for his inheritance, and the utmoſt parts of the earth for his poſſeſſion; whereby all the Kingdoms of the world are become the Kingdoms of the Lord, and his Chriſt; which hath erected an unconfined Kingdom of grace; to which all men in deſign and of right are ſubject; in reſpect to which every nation is in obligation and duty become the people of God. What (ſaid God to them) could I have done more to my Vineyard than I have done, wherefore when I looked for grapes did it bring forth wild grapes! O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thy ſelf, but in me is thy help. I have ſpread out my hands all the day-long to a rebellious and gainſaying Poople. I ſpake unto you riſing up early and ſpeaking, but ye heard not; I called, but ye anſwered not; I have called, and ye have refuſed; I have ſtretched out my hand, and no man regarded. But ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, and would none of my reproof. When I called, ye did not anſwer; when I ſpake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did chuſe that, wherein I delighted not. And, Behold their ear is uncircumciſed, and they cannot hearken; behold the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach, they have no delight in it. They refuſed to hearken, and pulled away the ſhoulder, and ſtopped their ears, that they ſhould not hear; yea they made their hearts as an adamant ſtone, leſt they ſhould hear the Law, which the Lord of hoſts hath ſent in his Spirit. Which paſſages, in many others of the like importance that occurr, do imply the large extent of God's merciful intentions; and the competency of the means, which God affords for the ſalvation of men; that he wants no affection or inclination to ſave them, Pſal. 2. 8. Apoc. 11. 15. Iſa. 5. 4. Hoſ. 13. 9. Iſa. 65. 2. Rom. 10. 21. Jer. 7. 31. Prov. 1. 24, 29. Iſa. 65. 12. 66. 4. 1. 18. Ezek. 12. 2. Jer. 6. 10. Zech. 7. 11, 12.

them, that he neglects no means proper for effecting it; that he draws them into the way leading thither by ſerious and earneſt invitation, directs them by needful light and inſtruction, excites them by powerful arguments and perſuaſions; and as St. Ambroſe ſpeaketh, Quod in Deo fuit, oſtendit omnibus, quod omnes voluit liberare: God ſhewed to all, that what was in him, he did will to deliver (or ſave) all men. Whence he may truly and properly be called the Benefactor and Saviour, even of thoſe, who by their wilful malice or neglect do not obtain ſalvation. For in reſpect to the ſame favours, which are exhibited and tendered to them, He is the Saviour of thoſe, who by hearkning to God's call, and complying with God's deſign; by well uſing the means vouchſafed, and performing the conditions required, do finally attain ſalvation.

De parad. 8.

—ἀπολογούμενος μετὰ ἀποδείξεως ὅτι πάντα τὰ εἰς αὐτὸν ἥκοντα ἐπὶ σωτηρείᾳ τῶν κρινομένων πεποίηκεν—(Baſ. in Pſ. 7.)

If it be ſaid, that theſe tranſactions do refer only to God's own people or to thoſe only, unto whom God pleaſed to diſpenſe eſpecial revelations of truth and overtures of mercy; that we therefore cannot thence infer any thing concerning the general extent of God's deſign, or the vertue of Chriſt's performances in reſpect to all mankind; we may to this ſuggeſtion rejoyn, that by obſerving the manner of God's proceedings toward them, unto whom he openly declareth his mind and will, we may reaſonably collect how he ſtandeth affected toward others, and by what rules, or upon what accompts he dealeth with them; taking in the analogy of reaſon, and parity or diſparity of the caſe. As to God's affection, it is the ſame every-where, agreeable to that nature, which inclineth him to be good to all, and merciful over all his creatures (as the Pſalmiſt tells us) unto which diſpoſition his providence yields atteſtation; for ὐκ ἀμάρτυρον ἀφῆκεν ἑαυτὸν ἀγαθοποιῶν, he did not leave himſelf without teſtimony, doing good to all, as St. Paul tells us; although he doth not diſpenſe his favours in the ſame method, or diſcover his meaning by the ſame light, or call all men to him with the ſame voice and language.

Pſal. 135. 9.

Acts 14. 17.

Neither was mankind ever left deſtitute of that divine grace, which (as the good Writer de vocatione Gentium ſaith) never denied it ſelf to any ages, with the ſame virtue, in different meaſure, with an unchangeable counſel, and multiform operation. So in one place; and in another, There was always (ſaith he) diſpenſed to all men a certain meaſure of inſtruction from above, which although it came from a more occult and ſparing grace, did yet ſuffice to ſome for remedy, to all for teſtimony.

Gratia Dei nullis ſeculis ſe negavit, virtute unâ, quantitate diverſâ, concilio incommutabili, opere multiformi. II. 5.

Adhibita eſt ſemper univerſis hominibus quædem ſupernæ menſura doctrinæ, quæ etſi occultioris parcioriſque gratiæ fuit, ſuffecit tamen quibuſdam ad remedium, omnibus ad teſtimonium. II. 15.

Comparing the different ſtates of men, we may ſubſtitute with St. Paul, for the law of revelation engraved upon tables, the law of nature written in mens hearts; for prophetical inſtructions the dictates of reaſon; for audible admonitions and reproofs, ſecret whiſpers of grace, and checks of conſcience; for extraordinary inſtances of divine power, the ordinary works of the creation (by which God's eternal divinity and power are diſcernable) for the ſpecial and occaſional influences of providence, the common and continual expreſſions of divine beneficence; then allowing for the diſparity (as to meaſure of evidence and efficacy) in theſe things; and as to the reſt, the caſe is the ſame. If one part hath means more clear and forcible, yet thoſe which are granted to the other are not void of uſe or virtue; by them all men in all places may ſeek God, if

Rom. 2. 14. 15.

—nulli nationi hominum bonitatis ſuæ, dona ſubtraxit, ut propheticas voces & præcepta legalia convincerentur in elementorum obſequiis, & teſtimoniis accepiſſe. De Voc. G. I. 5. Rom 1. 19,

Acts 14. 17.

Acts 17. 27.

if haply they may feel him and find him; ye may (as St. Paul implieth) Rom. 1. 18,20. be able to know God, and induced to ſerve him; to thank him and to Rom. 2. 15,26. glorifie him in ſome meaſure; in a meaſure anſwerable to ſuch light and Rom. 1. 21. ſtrength; no more doth God require, for no more will he reckon with them. If their helps be deemed more low and ſcanty, their duty in proportion is leſs high, and their accompt will be more eaſie. Enough certainly they have to excuſe God from miſpriſion of not having provi- Rom. 1. 20. ded competently for them, to render them, if they do not well uſe and improve it, inexcuſable; and what they have is an effect of God's mercy procured and purchaſed by their Saviour. But of this Point we may have occaſion afterward to ſay more; I ſhall now only add; that this ſuggeſtion, well conſidered, may afford another argument to confirm our doctrine; which is this:

10. If our Lord be the Saviour of all thoſe to whom God's truth is declared; and his mercy offered; or, if he be the Saviour of all the members of the viſible Church; particularly if he be the Saviour of thoſe, who among theſe, rejecting the overtures and means of grace, or by diſobedience abuſing them, ſhall in the event fail of being ſaved, then is he the Saviour of all men. But Our Lord is the Saviour of thoſe perſons; and therefore he is the Saviour of all men. The aſſumption we aſſayed to ſhew in the laſt argument; and many expreſs teſtimonies of Scripture before-mentioned eſtabliſh it; the common ſtyle of Scripture doth imply it, when in the Apoſtolical Writings to all the viſibly faithful indifferently the relation to Chriſt as their Saviour is aſſigned, an intereſt in all his ſaving performances is ſuppoſed, the title of σωζόμενοι and σεσωσμένοι (with others equivolent, of juſtified, ſanctified, regenerated, quickned, &c.) are attributed. And in our Text God is ſaid to be the Saviour chiefly τῶν πιστῶν, of the faithful; which word in its common acception denotes all viſible members of the Chriſtian communion. And for its confirmation we adjoin: The Apoſtles at firſt, and the Church ever ſince after them (except ſome heterodox people of late) have profeſſed readily to confer holy Baptiſm, and therein to diſpenſe remiſſion of ſins, together with other Evangelical graces and privileges, to every man profeſſing his faith in Chriſt, and reſolution to obſerve Chriſt's law, upon this ſuppoſition, that Chriſt is the Saviour of all ſuch perſons, and by his ſalutary paſſion hath purchaſed that remiſſion for them; although the diſpenſers of theſe graces could not diſcern what decrees God in his ſecret providence had paſſed upon them, or what the event ſhould be as to their final ſtate; yea although according to the Judgment of Prudence they could not but conceive, that all ſuch ſhould not be ſaved, but that many of them ſhould be of thoſe, who (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh) would draw back unto perdition, who (as St. Peter implies Heb. 10. 39. ſome might and would do) would forget the purgation, which they 2 Pet. 1. 9. had received of their ſins. That in thus doing the Church proceeds upon a perſuaſion that Chriſt is truly the Saviour of all its viſible members, duly admitted and incorporated thereinto, the thing it ſelf plainly ſignifies; the tenour of its practice makes palpable; the forms of ſpeech uſed in its holy adminiſtrations (of prayers, of ſacraments, of exhortations) do ſuppoſe, or expreſs. For how can each member ſingly be aſſerted in holy Baptiſm to be waſhed from his ſins, and ſanctified to God, and made regenerate or adopted into the number of God's children, and made partaker of Chriſt's death? how can thankſgiving in the common name, in moſt general terms, be offered up for Chriſt's ſaving performances? or the holy bread and cup be imparted to each communicant as ſymbols and pledges of Chriſt's charity and mercy towards him? how can every Chriſtian be inſtigated to obedience in gratitude to Chriſt, and thoſe who tranſgreſs Chriſt's laws, upbraided for their ingratitude toward him; their rejecting, or renouncing, deſpiſing, or abuſing him and his ſalvation? how can ſuch things be ſaid and done with any truth or conſiſtency; yea without forgery and mockery, if every baptized Chriſtian hath not an intereſt in our Lord's performances; if Chriſt be the Saviour only of an uncertain and unknown part in the Church? This conſideration of the Churches practice hath made even the moſt vehement aſſertours of St. Auſtin's doctrine (ſtrained to the higheſt pitch) in the more antient and modeſt times, fully to acknowledge this poſition; that Chriſt is the redeemer of every member of the viſible Church, as appears by this remarkable decree of the Council of Valentia in France (conſiſting of the Biſhops of three Provinces, favourers of Godſcalous his opinions.) We alſo do believe it moſt firmly to be held, that all the multitude of the faithful, being regenerated by water and the Holy Spirit, and hereby truly incorporated into the Church, and according to the Apoſtolical doctrine baptized into the death of Chriſt, is by his blood waſhed from their ſins. Becauſe there could be no true regeneration, unleſs there were made alſo a true redemption; ſince in the Sacraments of the Church there is nothing empty (or vain) nothing ludificatory; but all thoroughly true, and ſupported by its own very truth and ſincerity. Yet that out of the very company of believers and the redeemed, ſome are eternally ſaved, becauſe by God's grace they faithfully abide in their redemption, bearing the Lord's ſpeech in their hearts, He that perſeveres to the end ſhall be ſaved; and that others, becauſe they would not abide in the ſalvation of the Faith, which they at firſt received, and did rather chuſe to fruſtrate the grace of redemption by evil doctrine or life, than to keep it, do no-wiſe arrive to the plenitude of ſalvation, and to the perception of eternal beatitude. 'Tis then a Catholick and true doctrine, that at leaſt Chriſt is a Saviour of all appearing Chriſtians; and ſuppoſing the truth thereof, I ſay that by conſequence he is alſo the Saviour of all men. For it appeareth thence, that the deſign of our Saviour's Performances did not flow from, or was not grounded upon any ſpecial love, or any abſolute decree concerning thoſe Perſons, who in event ſhall be ſaved; ſince according to that ſuppoſition it extendeth to many others; wherefore it proceeded from God's natural goodneſs and common kind affection toward mankind; from the compaſſion of a gracious Creatour toward his miſerable creature, whence all men are concerned and intereſted therein. Why God's merciful intentions were not explicitly declared and propounded to Socrates and Epictetus, as they were to Judas Iſcariot and Simon Magus, is another queſtion, which we may afterward in ſome manner aſſoil; at preſent, it ſuffices to ſay, that the overture of mercy made to ſuch wretches doth argue God's kind diſpoſition and good intention toward all men; ſo it did in St. Ambroſe his opinion; who ſays, that our Lord ought not to paſs by the man who ſhould betray him, that all men might take notice, that in the choice even of his traytour, he did hold forth a pledge or mark of all mens being to be ſaved.

Anno 855.

Item firmiſſimè tenendum credimus, &c. ſuprà.

Et ideò nec proditurum debuit præterire ut adverterent omnes, quòd in electione etiam proditoris ſui ſervandorum omnium inſigne prætendit. Ambr. de parad. 8.

But the truth of this doctrine will farther appear by the declaration and ſurveyal of thoſe reſpects according to which Chriſt is repreſented the Saviour of men, as alſo by conſidering how uſeful and conducible to piety this doctrine is, as miniſtring grounds and obligations, encouragements and motives to the practice of moſt conſiderable duties required from all men. But theſe things muſt be reſerved to another occaſion.

Sermon XL.

The Doctrine of Univerſal Redemption aſſerted and explain'd.

1 Tim. IV. 10.

----The living God; who is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe.

THAT our Lord Jeſus is the Saviour of all men, we have before from plain teſtimonies of holy Scripture, and from ſome arguments grounded there, aſſayed to ſhew. The ſame will be made farther apparent by conſidering the reſpects according to which he is ſuch; and thoſe we may firſt conſider generally and in the groſs, then ſurvey them more particularly and diſtinctly.

In general we may ſay, that our Lord is the Saviour of all men, for that he hath rendred all men ſalvabiles, capable of ſalvation; and ſalvandos, deſigned to ſalvation. For that he hath rmeoved all obſtacles peremptorily debarring men from acceſs to ſalvation, and hath procured competent furtherances to their attainment of it. For that he hath reſcued mankind out of that dead and deſperate condition, wherein it lay involved; being the bread of God, who hath deſcended from heaven, that he might give life to the world, as he ſaith of himſelf. John 6. 33. For that he hath performed whatever on his part is neceſſary or fit in order to ſalvation, antecedently to the acceptance and compliance with thoſe reaſonable conditions, which by God's wiſdom are required toward the inſtating men into a full and immediate right to ſalvation, or to a complete and actual fruition thereof. He made the way to happineſs plain and paſſable: levelling the inſuperable cliffs, and filling up the chaſmes, and rectifying the obliquities, and ſmoothing the aſperities thereof, as the Prophet foretold; Luke 3. 5. ſo that all men, who would, might conveniently walk therein. He ſet the doors of Paradiſe wide open, ſo that who pleaſed might enter in; all the bonds and reſtraints under which men lay, he ſo far looſed, that any man might be free, who would concur to his own liberty and enlargement. All the protection, and encouragement which was needful toward obtaining ſalvation, he afforded and exhibited to every one, that would embrace and make uſe of them.

Ἡ γῆ ἀντὶ κατάρας εὐλόγηται, ὁ παράδεισος ἠνοίγη, &c. Athan. in paſſ.
Luke 4. 18. Αἰχμαλώτοις ἄνεσιν —

In reſpect to which performances he might be juſtly eſteemed and truly called a Saviour, altho all men do not in effect become ſaved. For the eſtimation and denomination of performances are to be grounded upon their own nature and deſign, not upon events depending upon the contingent and arbitrary behaviour of men. As he that freely offers a rich boon is no leſs to be accompted a benefactor and liberal, altho his gift be refuſed, than if it were accepted; as he that opens the priſon is to be ſtyled a deliverer, although the captive will not go forth; as he that miniſters an effectual remedy, although the Patient will not uſe it, deſerves the honour and thanks due to a Phyſician; ſo is our Lord in regard to what he hath performed for men, and offered to them (being ſufficient to prevent their miſery, and promote their happineſs) to be worthily deemed, and thankfully acknowledged their Saviour, although not all men, yea although not one man ſhould receive the deſigned benefit. Accordingly

Acts 16. 17. Καταγγέλλουσιν ὁδὸν σωτηρίας.— we may obſerve, that in the Scripture ſtyle, thoſe perſons are ſaid to be ſaved, who are only in a way toward ſalvation, although they do not arrive thither; and the means conducing to ſalvation are ſaid to ſave, although their effect may be defeated; 1 Cor. 1. 18. σωζόμενοι and σεσωσμένοι are terms applied to all Chriſtians, and Acts 2. 47. Chriſt is ὁ σώσας, he that hath ſaved them; and Apoc. 21. 29. Eph. 2. 5. Faith is ſaid to have ſaved them, although ſome of them εἰκῆ ἐπίστευσαν, 2 Tim. 1. 9. have believed in vain, or to no effect, forſaking and renouncing their faith; 1. Cor. 15. 2. Tit. 3. 8. and Baptiſm ſave them, who partakes it, although being waſhed, they 1 Pet. 3. 21. return to their wallowing in the mire. And as our Lord is ſo termed a 2 Pet. 2. 22. Saviour in reſpect to them, who are by faith and admiſſion into the Church Rom. 13. 11. put into a more near capacity of ſalvation, as St. Paul ſpeaketh: ἐγγύτερον ἡμῶν ἡ σωτηρία, ἢ ὅταν ἐπιστεύσαμεν (Now is our ſalvation nearer than when we believed;) ſo is he in reſpect of all thoſe, who are in any capacity thereof, although a more remote one.

But let us now view more nearly and diſtinctly the reſpects in which he is a Saviour of all men, or the particular benefits and advantages Clem. Alex. Pædag. 11. conducing to ſalvation, which by his performances accrue to mankind; for πάμπολυ τὴν σωτηρίαν ἁπάσῃ χαρίζεται τῇ ἀνθρωπότητι, In very many ways he beſtoweth ſalvation upon all mankind, as Clemens Alexandrinus ſpeaks.

1. Our Lord is the Saviour of all men, as having effected that Almighty God (who upon great provocations was juſtly diſpleaſed and angry with man, who had averted his face, and withdrawn his favour from mankind, whom our apoſtaſie and rebellion had rendred a ſtranger and an enemy to us) hath depoſed his wrath toward mankind, hath conceived a kind affection to it, doth caſt a favourable aſpect upon it; being throughly reconciled and made a friend thereto by our Saviour's media- Matt. 3. 17. tion. This is my beloved ſon, ἐν ᾧ εὐδόκησα, in whom I have been well plea- 12. 18. ſed, was the atteſtation given from God to our Lord; the meaning whereof in regard to men the holy choir of Angels did interpret, when Luke 2. 10, 14. after the gladſome report of his birth (that great joy, which ſhould be to all people) they ſang, Glory be to God on high, on earth peace, good-will Col. 1. 20. Eph. 1. 10. toward men. Which St. Paul farther declareth, when he ſaith, that by him εὐδόκησε, God pleaſed to reconcile unto himſelf all things, upon 2 Cor. 5. 29. earth, and in heaven; and when he ſaith, That God was in Chriſt reconci- Rom. 5. ling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their ſins. And, When we were enemies (ſaith he again) we were reconciled to God by the death of his ſon: When we were enemies, that implies God antecedently to any man's converſion to have been appeaſed, and become favourably diſpoſed toward all men, or toward thoſe, whom St. Paul ſpeaketh unto, as men; ſo the reaſon of the caſe doth import, and ſo the analogy which St. Paul immediately after propounds between the reſults of Adam's tranſgreſſion and our Saviour's obedience (as to provocation and reconciliation, to condemnation and abſolution, to the intents of bringing death and life upon all men) doth enforce. Whence it is, that God declareth himſelf now to bear an univerſal good-will to mankind, that he doth earneſtly deſire the welfare of all men, and is diſpleaſed with the ruine of any man; that he would have all men to be ſaved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth, becauſe there is one mediatour between God and man; that he would not have any periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance; this he affirms, yea (for the confirmation of our faith and our conſolation therein) he in the Evangelical Prophet ſwears it, As I live, ſaith the Lord, I have no pleaſure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live. So far toward our ſalvation is done, God meets us half way; he is reconciled unto us, it remains only that we be reconciled to him; that we hearken to the Embaſſie from him: Be reconciled to God.

1 Tim. 2. 4.
2 Pet. 3. 9.
Heb. 6. 16,18.
Ezek. 33. 11.
2 Cor. 5.

2. Jeſus is the Saviour of all men, by ſatisfying the divine juſtice, and repairing God's honour in their behalf. The diſloyal and ingratefull behaviour of man had ſo wrong'd, ſo endamaged, ſo diſhonour'd God (had ſo abuſed the goodneſs, diſparaged the wiſdom, ſlighted the power, impeached and ſlurr'd the authority of his Creator, had ſo prejudiced all the rights and intereſts of God) that by the divine wiſdom it was thought fit, that he ſhould not be reſtored into a capacity of mercy and favour, without a ſignal compenſation made, and an exemplary puniſhment undergone, whereby the right of God ſhould conſpicuouſly be aſſerted, his love of goodneſs and diſlike of wickedneſs ſhould be remarkably demonſtrated, and every creature in heaven and earth ſhould be ſolemnly admoniſhed of its duty; of the reverence and obedience it owes to the great Creator, of the heynous guilt and horrible miſchief it incurs by offending him. Such a compenſation man was no-wiſe able to make, or fit to undergo ſuch a puniſhment: Our Saviour therefore, out of infinite pity and charity, did undertake both; by a voluntary condeſcenſion putting himſelf into the low and weak ſtate of man; ſubjecting himſelf unto that Law which man was obliged unto, and ſuffering the pains which man had deſerved. This he was pleaſed to do in man's behalf, and in our ſtead; and God was pleaſed to accept it as ſo done. His incarnation (or exinanition of himſelf, as St. Paul calleth it) was an act of that high duty and goodneſs, that it in virtue ſurpaſſed all the obedience, which all creatures were able to render; that it yielded God more ſatisfaction and more honour than the joynt endeavours of all the world could confer. His with ſo intenſe charity and chearfulneſs fulfilling all righteouſneſs did far more pleaſe God, than all our moſt exact obedience could have done; his enduring bitter pains aad diſgraces (conſidering the infinite dignity of his perſon, his near relation and dearneſs to God, his perfect innocence and rectitude, yea his immenſe charity, contentedneſs and patience) more than countervailed the puniſhment due to the ſins of all men. Such a payment was more than ſerved to diſcharge all our debts, (it ſerv'd to purchaſe an overplus of graces and bleſſings) ſo rich a price was more than ſufficient to ranſome all the world from captivity; ſo goodly, ſo pure, ſo ſweet, ſo precious a Sacrifice might worthily expiate and attone all the guilts of men.

Λοιπὸν δὲ οἱ ἄνθρωποι οὐκέτι κατὰ τὰ ἴδια πάθη μένουσιν, ἁμαρτωλοὶ καὶ νεκροί· ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὴν τοῦ λόγου δύναμιν ἀναστάντες ἀθάνατοι καὶ ἄφθαρτοι ἀεὶ διαμένουσιν. Athan. in Arian. Orat. 4. 485.

Τότε γὰρ καὶ θάνατος, καὶ κατάρα ἐλύετο, καὶ δαίμονες κατεσχύνοντο καὶ ἐδειγματίζοντο θριαμβευόμενοι, καὶ τὸ χειρόγραφον τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τῷ σταυρῷ προσηλοῦτο, &c. Chyriſ. in John 1. 14.
Phil. 2. 7.

Ἡ ἔνσαρκος παρουσία τοῦ σωτῆρος θανάτου λύτρον καὶ κτίσεως πάσης σωτηρία γέγονεν. Athan. ad Adelph. Ep.

Vide Cyrill. in Eph. Conc. p. 133. Δικαιώσῃ τὴν ἀνθρώπου φύσιν, &c.

Eph. 5. 2.
Heb. 10. 10.
9. 12.
1 Pet. 1. 19.

Aug. in Pſal. 95.

Μὴ θαυμάζῃς εἰ κόσμος ὅλος ἐλυτρώθη· οὐ γὰρ ἦν ἄνθρωπος ψιλὸς, ἀλλ᾽ υἱὸς θεοῦ μονογενὴς, ὁ ὑπεραποθνήσκων, &c. Cyrill. Cat. 13.

Now if we enquire what our Saviour did redeem, the conſideration of what he paid may (as St. Auſtin tells) help to inform us; Quæritis quid emerit? videte quid dederit, & invenite quid emerit. Do ye ſee (ſaith he) what he bought? ſee what he gave, and find what he bought. However, that as the value and ſufficiency of our Lord's performances, ſo the deſign and effect thereof did reach ſo far in regard to man; that his charity was no leſs extenſive than his performance was complete, for our good, the holy Scripture teaches us. For, He is the lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world, (ſaith the Baptiſt.) And, The bread (ſaith he) which I gave is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world. And, He is a propitiation (ſaith St. John) for our ſins; and not onely for our ſins, but for the ſins of the whole world. And, He is the Mediatour of God and man, who gave himſelf ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων, a ranſome, in the ſtead, and for all men (ſaith St. Paul.) And, He taſted death for every one (ſaith the Author to the Hebrews.) And, He was that one man, who, as it was expedient, did dye for the whole nation of men. And, God was in him reconciling the world to himſelf, not imputing their ſins. And, He came into the world, not to condemn the world, but that the world might by him be ſaved (or freed from condemnation.) And, As by the offence of one man judgment came upon all men to condemnation, ſo by the righteouſneſs of one mercy came upon all to juſtification of life. The end we ſee of our Saviour's performances was, that he might wipe off the guilt of ſin from all mankind, that he might reverſe the condemnation paſſed thereupon, and that he might remove the puniſhment due thereto; or, that abſolving the firſt man's ſin, he might take it away from the whole race (as St. Athenatius ſpeaks.)

John 1. 29. 6. 51. 1 John 2. 2. 1 Tim. 2. 5. Heb. 2. 9. John 11. 50. 18. 14. 3. 17. 2 Cor. 5. 29. Rom. 5. 17.

Ἵνα ἐκείνου λύων τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, ἀπὸ παντὸς αὐτὴν ἄρῃ τοῦ γένους. Athan. in paſſ.

All men have ſinned, and come ſhort, (or are deſtitute) of the glory of God, being juſtified freely by his grace, by the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us. He was born under the law, that he might redeem thoſe which were under the law. He that knew no ſin, was made ſin (was puniſhed and dealt with as a ſinner) that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him; (that we might be capable of being eſteemed and dealt with as righteous by God upon this accompt.) So that the reſult is, Divine juſtice being fully ſatisfied, and the honour of God fully repaired (in regard to all ſins paſt and future) the mouth of vengeance being ſtopped, the claims of death and hell being evacuated, that general ſentence of condemnation (paſs'd upon all the ſons of Adam) is ſuſpended, death ceaſes to reign by any juſt power, or inevitable neceſſity; (it is, as St. Paul ſaith, aboliſhed or abrogated as to any lawful right, or neceſſary force it hath) the rigour and ſeverity of that law, which upon pain of death exacteth moſt punctual obedience (and which conſequently doth expoſe all men to unavoidable condemnation is tempered and abated, a foundation is laid for the ſhewing mercy, and granting pardon. In reſpect whereto,

Rom. 4. 23. Gal. 3. 13. 5. 5. 2 Cor. 5. 21. 2 Tim. 1. 10. Gal. 3. 10, 12. Rom. 10. 5.

3. Our Lord is the Saviour of all men, as having in the behalf of mankind tranſacted and ratified a new covenant, very neceſſary for, and very conducible to the ſalvation of mankind; whereby ſalvation is made attainable, and is really tendred unto all, upon feaſible and equal conditions. According to the purport whereof upon any man (however ſtained or loaded with the guilt of moſt heinous tranſgreſſions) his embracing the overtures thereof, conſenting to, and complying with the terms propounded therein, that is, ſincerely believing, and ſeriouſly repenting; returning to God with hearty deſires and earneſt reſolutions to ſerve him; God is ready to diſpenſe mercy and pardon, and immediately receiveth the perſon ſon into grace and favour with him ; yea, the man continuing to perform a faithfull (though imperfect) obedience, an obedience ſutable to man's natural infirmity and frailty, and proportionable to the aſſiſtances afforded him; God farther promiſeth to beſtow ineſtimable bleſſings and rewards of joy and happineſs. That covenant which the Prophets implied of old, when (beſide, and beyond what the Jewiſh law did import) they Preached thus, ----Waſh you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings, ceaſe to Eſa. 1. 16.

do evil ---- though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow, though they be red as crimſon, they ſhall be as wool. And, Let the Iſa. 55. 7.
wicked man forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon; And, If the wicked man will turn from all his ſins, that Ezek. 18. 21 he hath committed, and keep all my ſtatutes, and do that which is lawfull and right, he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die (ſo God in Eſay and Ezekiel declareth his intention to proceed with men, avowing that way of his to be moſt equal and fair.) This is that Covenant which our Lord commanded his Apoſtles to declare and propound to all mankind; Go ye (ſaid Mark. 16. 25.
he to them) into the whole world, preach the doctrine to every creature; that Goſpel, according to which, as it is expreſſed in St. Lukes repentance Luke 24. 47.
and remiſſion ought to be preached in his name to all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem; in reſpect to which St. Peter ſays, that God hath exalted our Acts 5. 31.
Lord to be a Prince and a Saviour, to grant repentance to Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins; (to grant repentance, that is, (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews and Clemens Romanus ſpeak) μετανοίας τόπον, room for repentance, or capacity to receive pardon upon repentance) concerning which Covenant that Clemens (the fellow-labourer of St. Paul, and whom Clemens Phil. 4. 3.
Alexandrinus calleth an Apoſtle) in that excellent, admirable and almoſt Θαυμασία. Euſeb.
Canonical Epiſtle to the Corinthians, which (as Euſebius and Hierome Ἐν πλείσταις tell us) was anciently publickly read in moſt Churches, hath theſe remarkably ἐκκλησίαις. Euſeb.
full and clear expreſſions; Let us (ſaith
he) look ſtedfaſtly upon the blood of Chriſt, and let us ſee how pretious to God his blood is, which being ſhed for our ſalvation, did bring the grace of repentance to the whole world. Let us attentively regard all ages, and obſerve that in every generation the Lord granted place of repentance to them, who would turn unto him. This is that new and better Covenant, eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes (cancelling all former, exceptionable, imperfect and ineffectual compacts, referring to man's intereſt and duty) about which the Apoſtle to the Hebrews diſcourſeth, and Heb. 8. 6. 9. 15. 12. 24. 7. 22.
whereof he calleth our Lord the Mediator and Sponſor ; in regard to which 2 Cor. 3. 6.
St. Paul calleth him the Mediator between God and man; plainly declaring all men to have a concernment and intereſt therein; for this ſuppoſition he uſeth as an argument proving God's univerſal deſire of man's converſion and ſalvation: Who would have all men to be ſaved, and to come to the 1 Tim. 2. 5.
knowledge of the truth. For there is one God and one Mediator between God and man, the man Chriſt Jeſus. By virtue of which Covenant it is, that any ſuch degrees of love or fear toward God (ſuch as men are capable of) are available, any righteous performances, ſuch as our weakneſs can produce, are acceptable, any honeſt endeavours do receive countenance and encouragement; and that (as St. Peter obſerved) in every nation Acts 10. 34.
he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted by him; although his fear of God be not ſo intenſe, or pure; his righteouſneſs not ſo

Ἀτενίσωμεν εἰς τὸ αἷμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ ἴδωμεν ὡς ἔστι τίμιον τῷ Θεῷ αἷμα αὐτοῦ, ὅτι διὰ τὴν ἡμετέραν σωτηρίαν ἐκχυθὲν, παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ μετανοίας χάριν ἐπήνεγκεν. Ἀτενίσωμεν εἰς γενεὰς πάσας, καὶ καταμάθωμεν ὅτι ἐν γενεᾷ καὶ γενεᾷ μετανοίας τόπον ἔδωκεν ὁ δεσπότης τοῖς βουλομένοις ἐπιστραφῆναι ἐπ' αὐτόν. Clem. ad Corinth.

Quo dicto oſtenditur nullum hominem ſecundum naturam eſſe pollutum, ſed æqualiter omnes ad Chriſti Evangelium provocari. Hier. ad Aug. Epiſt. XI.

exact and unblameable, as according to extremity of law and duty, they ſhould be. From which Covenant ſo far as is any man, according to God's intention and deſire, from being excluded, that all men are ſeriouſly invited, vehemently exhorted, earneſtly intreated to enter into it, and to partake the benefits exhibited thereby. Every man that feeleth himſelf to want thoſe benefits, and is deſirous of mercy and eaſe from the guilt and burthen of his ſins, may come and welcome. Hoe every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters; So the Evangelical Prophet proclaims; and, If any man thirſteth, let him come to me and drink, crieth our Lord; and, Come to me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. (Δεῦτε πάντες, Come all to me: All men therefore (ſaith Origen) who from the nature of ſin do labour and are burthened, are called to that reſt; which is with the word of God.) And, in Chriſt's name (ſaith St. Paul) we are Embaſſadours, as that God by us intreateth, we pray for Chriſt be reconciled to God; the purport of which Embaſſy, together with its extent, he otherwhere thus expreſſeth, τανῦν παραγγέλλει τοῖς ἀνθρώποις πᾶσι πανταχοῦ μετανοεῖν, He now proclaimeth to all men every where that they ſhould repent; he conſequently holds forth to all the benefits annexed to repentance. But of this we ſpake formerly.

Iſa. 55. 1. John. 7. 37. Mat. 11. 28.

Πάντες ἂν οἱ ἄνθρωποι διὰ τὴν τῆς ἁμαρτίας φύσιν κοπιῶντες καὶ πεφορτισμένοι καλοῦνται ἐπὶ τὴν παρὰ τῷ λόγῳ τοῦ θεοῦ ἀνάπαυσιν. Orig. in Celſ. 3

2 Cor. 5. 20. Acts 17. 30.

4. Our Lord Jeſus is the Saviour of all men as having purchaſed and procured for them competent aids, whereby they are enabled to perform the conditions required of them in order to their ſalvation; to acquire a ſufficient knowledge of their duty, to ſubdue their bad inclinations and luſts, to withſtand temptations; or briefly, whereby they are enabled ſincerely to repent of their ſins, and acceptably to perform their due obedience. The truth of this point, taking in the conſideration of man's natural ſtate, may by good conſequence be inferr'd from the truth of the Points foregoing. If men are naturally ſo dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, ſo enſlaved and ſold under ſin; ſo very prone to evil, and averſe to good; ſo dark and blind that they cannot well diſcern what they ſhould do, ſo corrupt and weak that they cannot perform what they know and confeſs to be good (as St. Paul affirmeth men to be) and conſequently are of themſelves indiſpoſed to perform the duties acceptable to God, and requiſite by his appointment toward their ſalvation, than either our Lord hath provided for them a communication of grace ſufficient to countervail or ſurmount that natural impotency, or all his deſigns for their good are imperfect or inconſiſtent (aiming at an end, without proving requiſite means, or removing neceſſary obſtructions) and his performances, whereby the forementioned benefits were procured, do prove ineffectual and fruitleſs. For God being appeaſed, and become well-affected to man's ſalvation, divine juſtice being ſatisfied, the rigour of law being mitigated, repentance being made available, and an obedience, agreeable to man's frailty, becoming acceptable, with all other the immediate reſults of our Saviour's tranſactions for man, would ſignifie nothing in regard to him, who ſtill lieth under a neceſſity of ſinning, or an inability of performing that, which is indiſpenſably exacted from him toward a complete enjoyment of thoſe benefits and favours. In vain is the debt paid, and the bond cancelled, and the priſon ſet open, and liberty proclaimed, and the priſoner called forth, if he be not himſelf able to knock off the fetters, which detain him, and there is no help afforded, by which he may do it. But our Lord hath ſurely laid his deſigns more adviſedly, and

Eph. 2. 1.
Coloſ. 2. 13.
Rom. 7. 14, 15.
Eph. 5. 8.
2 Cor. 4 6.
2 Pet. 1. 19.
&c.

Ὁ ἐπὶ τὰ αἰσχρὰ ὄλισθος αὐτοφυοῦς ἀσθενείας ἔργον. Max. Tir. diſ. 22.

Si Deus non operatur in nobis nullius poſſumus eſſe participes virtutis; ſine hoc quippe bono nihil eſt bonum, ſine hac luce nihil eſt lucidum, ſine hac ſapientia nihil ſanum; ſine hac juſtitia nihil rectum. De Voc. Gent. I. 8.

and hath proſecuted his work more perfectly. Wherefore we may ſuppoſe that a competency of grace and ſpiritual aſſiſtence is by virtue of our Saviour's performances really imparted to every man, qualifying him to do what God requires, and is ready to accept from him in order to his welfare; that our Saviour hath ſent abroad his holy Spirit (that fountain of all true goodneſs, of all ſpiritual light, ſtrength and comfort) like the Sun, to ſhine, to warm, to diſpence benign influences over the world; although it ſhineth not ſo brightly and vigorouſly; and its preſence is not ſo viſible and ſenſible in one place, as another; which holy Spirit, as it is in its eſſence omnipreſent, ſo it is likewiſe in its energy, inceſſantly working (in reaſonable meaſure, right manner, and fit ſeaſon, as wiſdom ordereth) upon the minds and affections of men, infuſing good thoughts and motions, impreſſing arguments and motives to good practice, cheriſhing and promoting good purpoſes; checking bad deſigns, reſtraining and reclaiming from bad courſes. Our reaſon, however aided by exteriour inſtruction and excitement, being unable to deal with thoſe mighty temptations, oppoſitions and diſcouragements we are to encounter with, he hath given us a wiſe and powerful ſpirit, to guide and adviſe us, to excite and encourage us, to relieve and ſuccour us in all our religious practice and ſpiritual warfare. So that all deliverance from the prevalency of temptation and ſin we owe to his grace and aſſiſtance. That to theſe purpoſes the holy Spirit is plentifully conferred upon all the viſible members of the Chriſtian Church we have plainly declared in Scripture; It was a promiſe concerning the Evangelical times that God would pour forth his ſpirit upon all fleſh; The collation thereof is a main part of the Evangelical Covenant (into a participation of which every Chriſtian is admitted) it being the finger of God whereby God's law is impreſſed upon their inward parts, and engraven in their hearts (as the Prophets deſcribe the effects of this Covenant.) And the end of our Saviour's paſſion is by St. Paul declared to be, that the bleſſing of Abraham might come unto the Gentiles, through Jeſus Chriſt, that we might receive the promiſe of the Spirit by faith; that is, that becoming Chriſtians we might partake thereof. And the Apoſtolical Miniſtery (that is, preaching the Goſpel, and diſpenſing the privileges thereof) is therefore ſtyled, διακονία πνεύματος, the miniſtery of the Spirit. And the taſting of the heavenly gift, and partaking the Holy Ghoſt is (according to the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) part of the character of a viſible Chriſtian (ſuch a Chriſtian, who might παραπεσεῖν, fall away, as he ſuppoſeth, and re-crucifie the Lord, and expoſe him to ſhame;) and St. Peter makes reception of the Holy Ghoſt to be a concomitant or conſequent of Baptiſm; Repent, ſaith he, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; for the promiſe (or that promiſe of the Spirit, which is called, the ſpirit of promiſe, peculiar to the Goſpel) is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God ſhall call. (That is, the Holy Spirit is promiſed to all, how far diſtant ſoever in time or place, who ſhall be invited unto, and ſhall embrace Chriſtianity;) and accordingly St. Paul ſaith of Chriſtians, that God according to his mercy hath ſaved us by the laver of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, And, Know ye not (ſaith he to the Corinthians) that ye are the temple of God; and that the ſpirit of God dwelleth in you? (that is, Do ye not underſtand this to be a common property and privilege of Chriſtians, ſuch as ye profeſs your ſelves to be?) And the union of all Chriſtians into one body, doth, according to St. Paul, reſult from this one Spirit, as a common ſoul imparted to them all, inanimating and actuating the whole body, and every Τοῖς εὖ βιοῦν ἐπαγγελλομένοις ἰσχὺν πρὸς τὴν λοιπὴν σωτηρίαν ἐμπνεῖ. Clem. Alex. Strom. VII. p 523.

Joel 2. 28.
Acts 2. 28.
Jer. 31. 33.
Ezek. 11. 19.
Heb. 8. 11.
2 Cor. 3. 3.
Gal. 3. 14.
1 Cor. 3. 8.
1 Theſſ. 2. 3.
Heb. 6. 4, 5.
Acts. 2. 38.
Eph. 1. 13.
Tit. 3. 4.
1 Cor. 3. 16.
1 Cor. 12. 13.

every member thereof. For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether bond or free, and have been all made to drink of one ſpirit. And it hath been the doctrine conſtantly with general conſent delivered in and by the Catholick Church, that to all perſons, by the holy myſtery of Baptiſm duly initiated into Chriſtianity, and admitted into the communion of Chriſt's body, the grace of the Holy Spirit is communicated, enabling them to perform the conditions of piety and virtue, which they undertake; and continually watching over them for accompliſhment of thoſe purpoſes; which Spirit they are admoniſhed not to reſiſt, to abuſe, to grieve, to quench; but to uſe it well, and improve its grace to the working out their ſalvation. Thus much concerning the reſult of our Saviour's performances, in this kind, in reſpect to the community of Chriſtians, we learn from the holy Scripture and Eccleſiaſtical Tradition interpreting it; whence we may diſcern, that the communications of grace do not always flow from any ſpecial love or abſolute decree concerning men, but do commonly proceed from the general kindneſs and mercy of God; by our Lord procured for mankind; and conſequently we may thence collect, that ſomewhat of this nature is to the ſame purpoſe, from the ſame ſource, and upon the ſame accompt, alſo granted and diſpenſed to others. Unto Chriſtians indeed this great benefit (for the reward, the encouragement, the ſupport of their faith; and for promoting their obedience, who are in a nearer capacity and more immediate tendency to ſalvation) is in a more plentiful meaſure, and a more conſpicuous manner diſpenſed; but that beſides that diſpenſation, there have been other (not ſo plainly ſignified, or expreſly promiſed, yet really imparted) communications of grace, in virtue of our Saviour's merits, there are (beſide the main reaſon alledged, inferring it from our Lord's being the Saviour of all men) divers good inducements to believe. For even thoſe Chriſtians, to whom upon their faith the Holy Spirit is promiſed and beſtowed, are by previous operations of God's grace (opening their minds, inclining their heart, and tempering their affections) induced to embrace Chriſtianity, faith it ſelf being a gift of God, and a fruit of the Holy Spirit. And before our Saviour's coming all good men have thereby been inſtructed and enabled to do well. And before any ſpecial revelation made, or any particular covenant enacted (before the encloſure of a particular People or Church, the confinement of God's extraordinary preſence and providence to one place) divine grace appears diffuſed over ſeveral Nations, being watchful in guiding and moving men to good, and withdrawing them from evil; neither is their reaſon why ſuch an appropriation of ſpecial graces and bleſſings (upon ſpecial reaſons) unto ſome ſhould be conceived to limit or contract God's general favour, or to withdraw his ordinary graces from others. God ſurely (who is, πλούσιος ἐν ἐλέει, rich in mercy; yea, hath ὑπερβάλλοντα πλοῦτον χάριτος, (an exceſſive riches of grace,) is not ſo poor or parſimonious, that being liberal to ſome ſhould render him ſparing toward others; his grace is not like the Sea, which if it overflow upon one ſhore, muſt therefore retire from another; if it grow deep in one place, muſt become ſhallower in another. Is the Spirit of the Lord ſtraitned? it is a queſtion in * Micha; and, Is my hand ſhortned at all, that it cannot redeem? is another queſtion in Eſay: No; The Lord's hand is not ſhortned that it cannot ſave, nor his ear heavy, that it cannot hear; at any time, in

Eph. 4. 30.
1 Cor. 12. 7.
Phil. 2. 13.

Eph. 2. 8.
Gal. 5. 22.
Luke 24. 45.
Matt. 16. 17.
John 16, 12.
1 Cor. 12. 3.

Ex quo perſpicuum fit naturâ omnibus ineſſe Dei notitiam, nec quenquam ſine Chriſto naſci, & non habere ſemina in ſe ſapientiæ, juſtitiæ, reliquarúmque virtutum. Unde multi abſque fide, & Evangelio Chriſti vel ſapienter faciunt aliqua vel ſanctè, &c. Hieron in Galat. 1.

Eph. 2. 4.
2. 7.

Secundum Scripturam credimus & piiſſimè confitemur, quod nunquam univerſitati hominum divinæ providentiæ cura defuerit.—Quem licèt exceptum ſibi populum ſpecialibus ad pietatem direxerit inſtitutis, nulli tamen nationi hominum bonitatis ſuæ dona ſubtraxit, &c. De Vocat. Gen. I. 5.

* Mic. 2. 7. Iſa. 50. 2. 59. 1.

in any place; he is no leſs able, no leſs ready than he ever was to afford help to his poor creatures, where-ever it is needful or opportune. As there was of old an Abimilech among the Philiſtines, whom God by ſpecial warning deterr'd from commiſſion of ſin; a divine Melchiſedeck among the Cananites; a diſcreet and honeſt Jetro in Madian; a very religious and vertuous Job in Arabia; who by complying with God's grace did evidence the communication thereof in in ſeveral Nations; ſo it is not unreaſonable to ſuppoſe the like cauſe now, although we cannot by like atteſtation certifie concerning the particular effects thereof. We may at leaſt diſcern and ſhew very conſpicuous footſteps of divine grace, working in part, and producing no deſpicable fruits of moral virtue, of juſtice and honeſty, temperance and ſobriety, benignity and bounty, courage and conſtancy in worthy enterpriſes, meekneſs, patience, modeſty; prudence and diſcretion; yea, of piety and devotion in ſome manner) even among Pagans, which if we do not allow to have been in all reſpects ſo complete, as to inſtate the perſons endewed with them, or practiſers of them in God's favour, or to bring them to ſalvation; yet thoſe qualities and actions (in degree, or in matter at leaſt, ſo good, and ſo conformable to God's law) we can hardly deny to have been the gifts of God, and the effects of divine grace; they at leaſt themſelves acknowledged ſo much; (for, Nulla ſine Deo mens bona eſt, No mind is good without God, ſaid Seneca; and, θείᾳ μοίρᾳ φαίνεται παραγιγνομένη ἡ ἀρετὴ, οἷς παραγίνεται, Virtue appears to proceed from a divine diſpenſation to them who partake of it, ſaid Socrates) and, αἱ ἄρισται φύσεις, ἀμφισβητήσιμοι ἐν μεταιχμίῳ τῆς ἄκρας ἀρετῆς πρὸς τὴν ἐσχάτην μοχθηρίαν καθωρμισμέναι, δέονται ξυναγωνιστοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ξυλλήπτορος τῆς ἐπὶ τὰ θάτερα τὰ κρείττω ῥοπῆς καὶ χειραγωγίας. The beſt-natured ſouls being conſtituted in the middle between the higheſt virtue and extreme wickedneſs, do need God to be their ſuccourer and aſſiſtant in the inclining and leading them to the better ſide; ſaith Max. Tyr. XXII. St. Auſtin himſelf, who ſeems the leaſt favourable in his judgment concerning their actions and ſtate, who calls their virtues but images and ſhadows of virtue (non veras, ſed veriſimiles) ſplendid ſins; acknowledges thoſe virtuous diſpoſitions and deeds to be the gifts of God, to be laudable, to procure ſome reward, to avail ſo far, that they, becauſe of them, ſhall receive a more tolerable and mild treatment from divine juſtice; which things conſidered, ſuch perſons do at leaſt by virtue of grace imparted to them obtain ſome part of ſalvation, or an imperfect kind of ſalvation, which they owe to our Lord, and in regard whereto he may be called in a ſort their Saviour.

Gen. 20. 3.
26. 8.

Exod. 18.

Καθ' ἑαυτὴν ἐδικαίου ποτὲ καὶ ἡ φιλοσοφία τοὺς Ἕλληνας. Clem. Alex.

Mortalem vitam honeſtare poſſunt, æternam conferre non poſſunt. Proſper in Collat. cap. 26.

(Prodeſſe ad ſalutem Aug. Proſper, Fulgent, &c.)

Nemo vir magnus ſine aliquo afflatu divino unquam fuit. Cic. de Nat. deorum II. ſub fin.

Sen. Epiſt. 73.

—Quæ ſecundum juſtitiæ regulam non ſolùm vituperare non poſſumus, ſed etiam meritò rectéque laudamus. Plat. Menon. fine.

Aug. deſp. &c. lit 27.

— Dei dona. Epiſt. 130. Aug.

But although the torrent of natural pravity hath prevailed ſo far, as that we cannot aſſign, or nominate any (among thoſe, who have lived out of the pale) who certainly or probably have obtained ſalvation, yet doth it not follow thence that a ſufficient grace was wanting to them. The moſt univerſal practice contrary to the intents of grace doth not evince a defect of graces. For we ſee that the ſame cauſe hath in a manner univerſally overborn and defeated other means and methods deſigned and diſpenſed by God for the inſtruction and emendation of Mankind.

Tolerabilius puniuntur. Minùs Fabricius quàm Catilina punitur, &c. — non veras virtutes habendo, ſed à veris virtutibus non plurimùm deviando. Aug.

God's

Gen. 6. 3. God's Spirit did long ſtrive with the Inhabitants of the old World; yet 1 Pet. 3. 20. no more than one Family was bettered, or ſaved thereby. God by his Neh. 9. 20. good Spirit inſtructed the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs (as Nehemiah ſaith) yet no more than two perſons did get into Canaan: That people afterward had afforded to them great advantages of knowledge and excitements to piety; (ſo that God intimates, that he could not have done more Iſa. 5. 4. for them, in that regard, than he had done.) Yet, There is none that underſtandeth, Pſal. 14. or ſeeketh after God, was a complaint in the beſt times. The Rom. 1. 21. Pagans had the means of knowing God, as St. Paul affirmeth, yet generally they grew vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkned; from which like caſes and examples we may infer, that divine grace might be really imparted, although no effect correſpondent to its main deſign were produced. Neither, becauſe we cannot alledge any evident inſtances of perſons converted or ſaved by virtue of this grace (this parcior occultiorque gratia, more ſparing and ſecret grace, as the good Writer de Vocatione Gentium calls it) are we forced to grant there were none ſuch; but 1 Kings 19. as in Iſrael when Elias ſaid, the children of Iſrael have forſaken God's Covenant, 14, 18. thrown down his Altars, and ſlain his Prophets with the ſword; And I, I only am left; there were yet in Iſrael, living cloſely, ſeven thouſand knees, who had not bowed to Baal: ſo among the generations of men, commonly overgrown with ignorance and impiety, there might (for all that we can know) be divers perſons indiſcernible to common view, who by complying with the influences of God's grace have obtained competently to know God, and to reverence him; ſincerely to love goodneſs, and hate wickedneſs; with an honeſt heart, to obſerve the laws of reaſon and righteouſneſs; in ſuch a manner and degree, which God might accept; ſo that the grace afforded might not only ſufficere omnibus in teſtimonium (ſuffice to convince all men) but quibuſdam in remedium (to correct and cure ſome) as that Writer de Voc. Gent. ſpeaks. The conſideration of God's nature and providence doth ſerve farther to perſuade the truth of this aſſertion. If Pſal. 145. 9. God be rich in mercy and bounty toward all his creatures, as ſuch (and ſuch he frequently aſſerts himſelf to be) if he be all-preſent, and all-provident, as he certainly is, how can we conceive him to ſtand as an unconcerned ſpectator of what men do, in affairs of this conſequence? that he ſhould be preſent beholding men to run precipitantly into deſperate miſchiefs and miſcarriages, without offering to ſtay or obſtruct them; ſtruggling with their vices and follies, without affording them any relief or furtherance; aſſaulted by ſtrong temptations, without yielding any ſupport or ſuccour;
panting after reſt and eaſe, without vouchſafing ſome guidance and aſſiſtance toward the obtaining them? how can he ſee men invincibly erring and inevitably ſinning, without making good what the Pſalmiſt ſays Pſal. 25. 8. of him: Good and upright is the Lord, therefore will he teach ſinners in the way; to withhold his grace in ſuch caſes ſeemeth inconſiſtent with the kind and compaſſionate nature of God, eſpecially ſuch as now it ſtands, being reconciled to mankind, by the Mediator of God and men, Chriſt Jeſus.
He alſo, that is ſo bountifull and indulgent toward all men in regard to their bodies and temporal eſtate; who preſerveth their life from deſtruction, Pſal. 103. 4. who protecteth them continually from danger and miſchief; *who
145. 16. openeth his hand, and ſatisfieth the deſires of every living thing, who ſatisfieth 107. 9. the longing ſoul, and filleth the hungry ſoul with goodneſs.* Who (as Acts 14. 17. St. Paul ſpeaketh) filleth mens hearts with food and gladneſs, is it likely that he ſhould altogether neglect their ſpiritual welfare; and leave their ſouls utterly deſtitute of all ſuſtenance or comfort; that he ſhould ſuffer them to lie fatally expoſed to eternal death and ruine; without offering any means of redreſs or recovery? to conceive ſo of God, ſeemed very unreaſonable even to a Pagan Philoſopher: Do you think (ſaith Max. Tyrius) that divination, poetry, and ſuch like things, are by divine inſpiration inſinuated into mens ſouls, and that vertue (ſo much better, and ſo much rarer a thing) is the work of moral art? you have forſooth a worthy conceit of God, who take him to be liberal in beſtowing mean things, and ſparing of better things. He that (as St. Paul ſaith) giveth to all men life, breath, and all things, will he withhold from any that beſt of gifts, and moſt worthy of him to give, that grace, whereby he may be able to ſerve him, to praiſe him, to glorify him, yea, to pleaſe and gratify him; to ſave a creature and ſubject of his; the thing wherein he ſo much delighteth? From hence alſo, that God hath vouchſafed general teſtimonies of his goodneſs, inducements to ſeek him, footſteps whereby he may be diſcovered and known, a light of reaſon and law of nature written upon mens hearts; attended with ſatisfactions, and checks of conſcience; ſo many diſpoſitions to knowledge and obedience (as St. Paul teacheth us) we may collect that he is not deficient in communicating interiour aſſiſtances, promoting the good uſe and improvement of thoſe talents; for that otherwiſe the beſtowing them is fruſtraneous and uſeleſs; being able to produce no good effect; yea, it rather is an argument of unkindneſs, being apt onely to produce an ill effect in thoſe, upon whom it is conferr'd; an aggravation of ſin, an accumulation of guilt and wrath upon them.

Max. Tyr. Diſſ. XXII.

Ἦ πολλοῦ ἄξιον νομίζεις τὸ θεῖον, πρὸς μὲν τὰ φαῦλα καλῶς καὶ ἀφθόνως παρεσκευασμένον, πρὸς δὲ τὰ κρείττω ἄπορον.

Acts 17. 25.

Acts 14. 17.
17. 27.
Rom. 1. 19.
2. 15.

If it be ſaid, that having ſuch grace is inconſiſtent with the want of an explicit knowledge of Chriſt, and of faith in him; why may not we ſay, that as probably (ſo St. Chryſoſtome, vid. Mont. App. I.) moſt good people before our Lord's coming received grace without any ſuch knowledge or faith; that as to Idiots and Infants our Saviour's meritorious performances are applied (in a manner unknowable by us) without ſo much as a capacity to know or believe any thing; that ſo we (to whom God's judgments are inſcrutable, and his ways uninveſtigable) know not how grace may be communicated unto, and Chriſt's merits may avail for other ignorant perſons? in reſpect to whom we may apply that of Saint John; The light ſhineth in darkneſs, and the darkneſs comprehended it not. However that ſuch perſons may have a grace capacifying them to arrive to that knowledge and faith, to which fuller communications of grace are promiſed; ſo that in reaſonable eſteem (as we ſhall preſently ſhew) the revelation of Evangelical Truth and the gift of faith may be ſuppoſed to be conferred upon all men---- ſo that we may apply to them that in the Revelation; Behold, I ſtand at the door and knock; if any man will hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in unto him, and ſup with him; and he with me (that is, Behold, I allure every man to the knowledge and embracing of Chriſtianity; if any man will open his mind and heart; ſo as to comply with my ſolicitations, I am ready to beſtow upon him the participation of Evangelical mercies and Bleſſings) and to ſuch perſons thoſe promiſes and rules in the Goſpel, may appertain; He that asketh receiveth, He that ſeeketh findeth; to him that knocketh it ſhall be opened: The heavenly Father will give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him. He that is ἐν ἐλαχίστῳ πιστὸς, (faithful in the uſe of the leaſt grace) ſhall be rewarded. And, to him that hath (or that diligently keepeth and huſbandeth what he hath) ſhall more be given.

Rom. 11. 33.

John. 1. 5.

Apoc. 3. 20.

Εἰ τυφλοὶ ἦτε οὐκ ἂν εἴχετε ἁμαρτίαν.

Joh. 9. 41.
15. 22.

Luke 11. 10, 13.

Luke 19. 17.
19. 26.

And how God ſometimes dealeth with ſuch perſons the eminent inſtances of St. Paul any Cornelius do ſhew. But concerning this point I ſpake ſomewhat before, and have perhaps been too large now; I ſhall only add that ſaying of the wiſe Writer de Voc. Gen. A pious mind (ſaith he) ſhould not, I think, be troubled at that queſtion, which is made concerning the converſion of all, or not all men; if we will not obſcure thoſe things which are clear, by thoſe things which are ſecret; and while we wantonly inſiſt upon things ſhut up, we be not excluded from thoſe which are open and plain: which in effect is the ſame with this; that ſince we are plainly taught, that our Lord is the Saviour of all men; and it is conſequent thence that he hath procured grace ſufficiently capacifying all men to obtain ſalvation; we need not perplex the buſineſs, or obſcure ſo apparent a truth by debating how that grace is imparted; or by labouring overmuch in reconciling the diſpenſation thereof with other diſpenſations of providence.

Puto quod pius ſenſus non debeat in ea quæſtione turbari, quam de omnium & non omnium hominum converſione generatur; ſi ea quæ clara ſunt non de his quæ occulta ſunt obſcuremus, & dum procaciter inſiſtimus clauſis excludamur ab apertis, &c. Lib. 1. cap. 8.

Sermon XLI.

The Doctrine of Univerſal Redemption aſſerted and explain'd.

1 Tim. IV. 10.

——The living God; who is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe.

5. JESUS is the Saviour of all men, as the conducter of all men into and through the way of ſalvation. It is a very proper title, and moſt due to thoſe brave Captains, who by their wiſdom and valour have freed their Countrey from ſtraits and oppreſſions. So were thoſe Judges and Princes, who anciently delivered Iſrael from their enemies, commonly ſtyled: In the time of their trouble (ſay the Levites in Nehemiah) when they cried unto thee thou heardſt them from heaven, and according to thy manifold mercies thou gaveſt them Saviours, who ſaved them out of the hand of the enemy; ſo are Othniel and Ehud particularly called; and Moſes ſignally: The ſame (ſaith St. Stephen of him) did God ſend to be ἄρχοντα ϗ λυτρωτὴν, a Commander and a Saviour (or Redeemer) to the children of Iſrael; for that he by a worthy and happy conduct did free them from the Egyptian ſlavery. And thus was Demetrius by the Athenians (for his delivering them from the Macedonian ſubjection, and reſtoring their liberty to them) entitled εὐεργέτης ϗ σωτὴρ, a Benefactour and Saviour. Thus with greateſt reaſon is Jeſus ſo called, as being ἀρχηγὸς τῆς σωτηρίας, the Captain of Salvation (ſo he is called by the Apoſtle to the Hebrews) ἀρχηγὸς ζωῆς (the Captain of Life, as St. Peter names him, the chief leader unto eternal life) ἀρχηγὸς πίστεως (the Captain of our faith; he that hath revealed

Neh. 9. 27.
Judg. 3. 9, 15.
Acts 7. 35.
Heb. 2. 10.
Acts 7. 35.
Heb. 12. 2.
Rom. 1. 16.

vealed that ſaving doctrine, which is the power of God to ſalvation) and theſe titles we have conjoyned by St. Peter in the Acts ; Him hath God Acts 5. 31.
exalted ἀρχηγὸν ϗ σωτῆρα, as a Captain and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Iſrael and remiſſion of ſins. This he is to us ſeveral ways, by direction both inſtructive, and exemplary; by his protection and governance ; by his mating and quelling the enemies of man's ſalvation ; which things more ſpecially and compleatly he hath perform'd in reſpect to faithful Chriſtians, yet in a manner alſo he hath truly done them for and toward all men; as we ſhall diſtinctly conſider.

6. Jeſus is the Saviour of all men (we ſay) as having perfectly diſcovered and demonſtrated the way and means of ſalvation ; the gracious purpoſes of God concerning it ; the duties required by God in order to it :
the great helps and encouragements to ſeek it ; the mighty determents from neglecting it ; the whole will of God, and concernment of man in relation thereto ; briefly, all ſaving truths he hath revealed unto all men ;
myſteries of truth, which were hidden from ages and generations, which no Col. 1. 26.
fancy of man could invent, no underſtanding could reach, no reaſon could Rom 16. 25.
by diſcuſſion clear (concerning the nature, providence, will and purpoſe of God ; the nature, original and ſtate of man ; concerning the laws and rules of practice, the helps thereto, the reward thereof, whatever is important for us to know in order to happineſs) he did plainly diſcover, and bring to light ; he did with valid ſorts of demonſtration aſſert and confirm. The doing which (as having ſo much efficacy toward ſalvation, and being ordinarily ſo neceſſary thereto) is often called ſaving ; as Jam. 5. 20.
particularly by St. James ; when he ſaith, He that turns a ſinner from the errour of his way ſhall ſave a ſoul from death. And by St. Paul ; Take heed 1 Tim. 4. 16.
to thy word and doctrine, for ſo doing thou ſhall ſave thy ſelf, and thy hearers That our Lord hath thus (according to his deſign, and according to reaſonable eſteem) ſaved all men, we are authorized by the holy Scripturs to 1 Cor. 9. 22.
ſay ; for he is there repreſented to be the light of the world ; the true light Rom. 11. 14.
that enlighteneth every man coming into the world ; the day-ſpring from on 2 Tim. 3. 15. σοφίσαι εἰς high, which hath viſited us, to give light to them that ſit in darkneſs and the σωτηρίαν.
ſhadow of death, and to guide our feet in the way of peace. By him the ſaving John 8. 12.
grace of God hath appeared unto all men. By him (as Eſay propheſied, 1. 9. Luke 1. 79.
and St. John the Baptiſt applied it) all fleſh did ſee the ſalvation of Tit. 2. 11.
God. Of him it was alſo foretold (as St. Paul teacheth us) I have ſet 3. 4. thee for the light of the Nations, that thou ſhouldeſt be for ſalvation unto the 2 Tim. 1. 10. Luke 3. 6.
ends of the earth. Coming he preached peace τοῖς μακρὰν ϗ τοῖς ἐγγύς (longè Acts 13. 47. latèque) to them that were far, aad them that were near, that is, to all Eph. 2. 17.
men every where. While I am in the World, ſaid he, I am the light of the John 9. 5.
world ; ſhining, like the Sun, indifferently unto all ; and when he withdrew his corporal preſence, he farther virtually diffuſed his light, for he ſent his meſſengers with a general commiſſion and command to teach all men concerning the benefits procured for them, and the duties required from them ; Going into the world, make all nations diſciples, teaching them to obſerve Mat. 28. 19.
all that I commanded you. Going into the world, preach the Goſpel unto 20. Mark 16. 15.
to every creature (or to the whole creation :) So it ought to be, that in his Luke 24. 47.
name ſhould be preached repentance and remiſſion of ſins unto all Nations. And, ſuch was the tenour of the Apoſtolical commiſſion ; Thou ſhalt be witneſs Acts 22. 15.
for him toward all men ; ſaid Ananias to St. Paul. Accordingly, in compliance 26. 17.
with thoſe orders, did the Apoſtles, in God's name, inſtruct and admoniſh all men, plainly teaching, ſeriouſly inviting to, ſtrongly perſuading and earneſtly entreating all men to embrace the truth, and enjoy the benefits of the Goſpel, and conſequently to be ſaved : The times of ignorance Acts 17. 30.

hence (ſaith St. Paul) God having winked at, doth now invite all men every-
2 Cor. 5. 20. where to repent; And, We are Embaſſadours for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us, We pray you in Chriſt's ſtead, be reconciled to God --- we pray you, you as members of that world, which God was in Chriſt reconci-Coloſ. 1. 28. ling to himſelf; And, We preach Chriſt --- Warning every man, and teaching Acts 2. 40. every man in all wiſdom, that we may preſent every man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus; (or render every man a good Chriſtian.) Thus was the Goſpel according to our Saviour's intent and order preached (as St. Paul ſaith of Col. 1. 23. it) ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει τῇ ὑπὸ τ̃ οὐρανὸν, in the whole creation under heaven; thus did God ſhew, that he would have all men to be ſaved, and to come
1 Tim. 2. 4. to the knowledge of the truth; whence our Lord (in regard to the nature and deſign of his performance in this kind) is the common Saviour, as the common Maſter of truth, and Enlightner of the world, and Proclaimer
John. 1. 18. of God's will to mankind.

If now it be required or objected; why then is not the Goſpel revealed unto men? how comes it to paſs that no ſouud of this ſaving word, no glimpſe of this heavenly light doth arive to many Nations? how can ſo general and large intention conſiſt with ſo particular and ſparing execution? what benefit can we imagin them capable to receive from this performance of our Saviour, who ſtill do ſit in total ignorance of the Luke 1. 74. Goſpel, in darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death? How can they call upon him,
Mat. 4. 16. in whom they believe not? and how can they believe in him, of whom they
Rom. 10. 14. have not heard?

To this ſuggeſtion I anſwer,

1. That God's intentions are not to be interpreted, nor his performances eſtimated by events, depending on the contingency of humane actions, but by his own declarations and precepts, together with the ordinary proviſion of competent means, in their own nature ſufficient to produce thoſe effects, which he declares himſelf to intend, or to perform. What he reveals himſelf to deſign he doth really deſign it, what he ſays, that he performeth, he (according to moral eſteem, that is ſo far as to ground duties of gratitude and honour, proceedings of juſtice and reward) doth perform, although the thing npon other accompts be not effected.

Thus for inſtance, God would have all men to live together here in peace, in order, in health, conveniently, comfortably, chearfully; according to reaſon, with vertue and juſtice; and in the beſt ſtate toward happineſs; for theſe purpoſes he hath endewed them with reaſonable faculties, he hath engraven on their minds a natural law, he hath furniſhed them with all ſorts of inſtruments and helps conducible to thoſe ends, he promoteth them by diſpenſations of providence, and (probably) by internal influences of grace; yet often all thoſe means (by the perverſeneſs and ſtupidity of men) do prove ineffectual, ſo that wars, diſorders, diſeaſes, vices, iniquities and opreſſions, troubles and miſeries do commonly abound in the world. Likewiſe God deſires, that in his Church knowledge and piety, peace and charity, and good order ſhould grow and flouriſh; to which purpoſes he hath appointed Teachers to inſtruct, and Governours to watch over his People; he hath obliged each man to adviſe and admoniſh his brother; he hath declared holy precepts and rules of practice; he hath propounded vaſt encouragements and rewards, and threatned dreadfull puniſhments; he hath promiſed and doth afford requiſite aſſiſtances; being himſelf always preſent and ready to promote thoſe ends by his grace; yet notwithſtanding by the voluntary neglect or abuſe of theſe means (the guides being blind, negligent, unfaithfull; or the people being indocil, ſluggiſh, refractary; or both perverted with bad affections) often ignorance, errour and impiety prevail, love is cool and dead, ſchiſms and factions are rife in the Church. Which events are not to be conceived derogatory to God's good-will and good intentions, or to his kind and carefull providence toward men; but we are notwithſtanding to eſteem and acknowledge him the author and donour of thoſe good things; in reſpect to them no leſs bleſſing and praiſing him, than if they were really accompliſhed by man's concurrence and compliance; he having done his part in that due meaſure and manner, which wiſdom prompts; having indeed done the ſame, as when they are affected. So God having expreſly declared that he would have all men to know and embrace the Goſpel, having made a univerſal promulgation thereof, having ſent forth Apoſtles to diſſeminate it every-where, having obliged every man to confer his beſt endeavour toward the propagation thereof; if by the want of fidelity, zeal, or induſtry in them, to whom this care is intruſted, or upon whom this duty is incumbent; or if by the careleſneſs and ſtupidity of thoſe, who do not regard what is done in the world; or if by mens voluntary ſhutting their eyes, or ſtopping their ears (as the Jews did of old to the Prophetical inſtructions and admonitions) God's heavenly truth becometh not univerſally known; 'tis not reaſonable to impute this defailance to God, or to conceive him therefore not univerſally to deſire and deſign mens inſtruction and ſalvation conſequent thereon. Let me (for the illuſtration of this matter) put a caſe, or propound a ſimilitude. Suppoſe a great Kingdom conſiſting of ſeveral Provinces ſhould have revolted from their Sovereign; diſclaiming his authority, neglecting and diſobeying his laws; That the good Prince, out of his goodneſs and pity toward them (and upon other good conſiderations moving him thereto, ſuppoſe the mediation of his own Son) inſtead of proſecuting them with deſerved vengeance, ſhould grant a general pardon and amneſty, in theſe terms, or upon theſe conditions, that whoever of thoſe rebels willingly ſhould come in, acknowledge his fault, and promiſe future loyalty, or obedience to his laws declared to them, ſhould be received into favour, have impunity, enjoy protection, and obtain rewards from him. Farther, for the effectuating this gracious intent, ſuppoſe that he ſhould appoint and commiſſionate Meſſengers, impowering and charging them to divulge the purport of this act of grace to all the People of that Kingdom. Admit now, that theſe Meſſengers ſhould go forth, and ſeat themſelves only in ſome Provinces of that Kingdom, proclaiming this univerſal pardon (univerſal as to the deſign, and as to the tenour thereof) only in thoſe, neglecting others; or that, ſtriving to Propogate it farther, they ſhould be rejected and repelled; or that from any the like cauſe the knowledge thereof ſhould not reach to ſome remoter Provinces; it is plain, that indeed the effect of that pardon would be obſtructed by ſuch a carriage of the affair; but the tenour of that act would not thereby be altered; nor would the failure in execution (conſequent upon the Miniſters or the peoples miſbehaviour) detract from the real amplitude of the Prince's intent; no more, than the willful incredulity, refuſal, or non-compliance of ſome perſons where the buſineſs is promulged and notified, would prejudice the ſame. 'Tis plain the Prince meant favourably toward all, and provided carefully for them; although by accident (not imputable to him) the deſigned favours and benefits do not reach all. The caſe ſo plainly ſutes our purpoſe, that I need not make any application. The holy Fathers do by ſeveral like ſimilitudes endeavour to illuſtrate this matter, and ſomewhat to aſſoil the difficulty. They compare our Saviour to the Sun, who ſhines indifferently to all the world, although there be ſome private corners and ſecret caves, to which his light doth not come; although ſome ſhut their windows or their eyes and exclude it; although ſome are blind and do not ſee it. That myſtical Sun of righteouſneſs (ſaith St. Ambroſe) is riſen to all, came to all, did ſuffer and roſe again for all ----, but if any one doth not believe in Chriſt, he defrauds himſelf of the general benefit. As if one ſhutting the windows ſhould exclude the beams of the Sun, the Sun is not therefore not riſen to all. They compare our Lord to a Phyſician, who profeſſes to relieve and cure all, that ſhall have recourſe to his help; but doth cure only thoſe, who ſeek for remedy, and are willing to take the medicine; becauſe all (ſaith * St. Ambroſe again) do not deſire cure, but moſt do ſhun it, leſt the ulcer ſhould ſmart by medicaments, therefore volentes curat, non aſtringit invitos; he cures only the willing, doth not compel thoſe that are unwilling; they onely receive health, who deſire medicine. Evangelical grace (ſay they) is like a fountain ſtanding openly, to which all men have free acceſs; at which all men may quench their thirſt; if they will enquire after it, and go thereto. The fountain of life (ſaith Arnobius) is open to all; nor is any man hindred or driven from the right of drinking it. The covenant of grace is (ſay they) a door ſtanding open to all, whereinto all have liberty to enter ---- when an entrance (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) being opened to all, and there being nothing that hinders, ſome being wilfully naught abide without, they have no other but their own wickedneſs to impute their deſtruction unto.

And again he puts the queſtion, If Chriſt enlighteneth every man that crmeth itno the world, how is it that ſo many remain unenlighten'd, &c. To which he anſwers, that if ſome, wilfully ſhutting the eyes of their minds, will not receive the beams of this light, it is not from the nature of light that thoſe remain ſtill in darkneſs, but from the wickedneſs of thoſe who wilfully deprive themſelves of the gift of it, &c.

Ἀκούσατε οὖν οἱ μακρὰν· ἀκούσατε οἱ ἐγγύς· οὐκ ἀπεκρύβη τινὰς ὁ λόγος· φῶς ἐστὶ κοινόν, ἐπιλάμπει πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις· οὐδεὶς Κιμμέριος ἐν λόγῳ. Clem. Alex. Protrep.

Hear ye that are far: hear ye that are near: the word is not hid to any: 'tis a common light; it ſhineth to all men; there is no Cimmerian to the word.

Nunquid non medicus idcirco proponit in publico, ut omnes ſe oſtendat velle ſalvare ſi velint. Ambr. 1. Tim. 2.

* Venit —— ut vulnera noſtra curaret, ſed quia non omnes medicinam expetunt, ſed plerique refugiunt, ne medicamentis compungatur vis ulceris, ideo volentes, &c. Ambr. de David. 3. 11.

Patet omnibus fons vitæ, neque ab jure potandi quiſquam prohibetur, ut pellitur. Arnob. lib. 2.

Ὅταν τῆς εἰσόδου πᾶσιν ἀνεωγμένης, καὶ μηδενὸς τοῦ κωλύοντος ὄντος, ἐθελοκακήσαντες τινες ἔξω μένωσι, παρ' οὐδένα ἕτερον, ἀλλ' ἢ παρὰ τὴν οἰκείαν πονηρίαν ἀπόλλυνται. Chryſ. in 1 Joh. homil. 7.

Εἰ φωτίζει πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν κόσμον, πῶς ἀφώτιστοι μεμενήκασι τοσοῦτοι· οὐ γὰρ δὴ πάντες ἐπέγνωσαν τοῦ Χριστοῦ τὸ σέβας· πῶς οὖν φωτίζει πάντα ἄνθρωπον; τόγε εἰς αὐτὸν ἧκον· εἰ δέ τινες ἑκόντες τοὺς τῆς διανοίας ὀφθαλμοὺς μύσαντες οὐκ ἠθέλησαν παραδέξασθαι τοῦ φωτὸς τούτου τὰς ἀκτῖνας, οὐ παρὰ τὴν τοῦ φωτὸς φύσιν ἡ σκότωσις ἐκείνοις, ἀλλὰ παρὰ τὴν κακουργίαν τῶν ἑκόντι ἀποστερούντων ἑαυτοὺς τῆς δωρεᾶς· ἡ μὲν γὰρ χάρις εἰς πάντας ἐκκέχυται —— πάντας ὁμοίως προσκαλουμένη, καὶ μετὰ τῆς ἴσης καλοῦσα τιμῆς· οἱ δὲ μὴ θέλοντες ἀπολαῦσαι τῆς δωρεᾶς ταύτης, ἑαυτοῖς δίκαιοι ταύτην ἂν εἶεν λογίσασθαι τὴν πήρωσιν. Chryſ. in Joh. 1. homil. 7.

Myſticus Sol ille juſtitiæ omnibus ortus eſt, omnibus venit, omnibus paſſus eſt & omnibus reſurrexit —— ſi quis autem non credit in Chriſtum, generali beneficio ſe fraudat, ut ſi quis clauſis feneſtris radios ſolis excludat, non ideo Sol non ortus eſt omnibus, &c. Amb. in Pſal. 118. Ser. 8.

Si dies omnibus æqualiter naſcitur, & ſi Sol ſuper omnes pari & æquali luce diffunditur, quanto magis Chriſtus Sol & dies verus, in Eccleſia ſua lumen vitæ æternæ pari æqualitate largitur? Cypr. Ep. 76.

St. Gregory Nazianzen reſembles the grace of Baptiſm (as to its community and freedom of uſe) to the breathing of the air, to the ſpreading of light, to the viciſſitude of ſeaſons, to the aſpect of the creation; things moſt obvious and common to all.

—— ὡς ἀέρος πνεῦσιν, ὡς φωτὸς χύσιν, καὶ ὡρῶν ἀλλαγάς, καὶ κτίσεως θέαν —— Naz. Orat. 40.

If this anſwer do not fully ſatisfie, I adjoyn farther,

2. That God beſide that ordinary proviſion is ready to interpoſe extraordinarily in diſcloſing his truth to them who are worthy of ſuch favour and fit to receive it: and that God's general deſire and deſign of revealing his truth to all men is very well conſiſtent with his providential (not only onely negative and permiſſive, but even poſitive and active) withholding the diſcovery thereof from ſome perſons, yea ſome Nations; for that neither his wiſdom, goodneſs, or juſtice might permit him, that he ſhould impart that revelation to ſuch perſons whom he ſeeth altogether indiſpoſed to comply therewith, and unfit to profit thereby; who have extremely abuſed the leſſer graces and not improved or miſ-improved the leſſer talents afforded them; detained inferiour truths in unrighteouſneſs, and have not liked to retain God in their knowledge, have therefore juſtly Rom. 1. 18.

been delivered up to a reprobate ſenſe; who have ſo depraved their 28.
minds with wicked prejudices and affections, that the truth being offered to them, they would certainly either ſtupidly neglect it, or ſcornfully reject it, (or if admitting it in ſhew) would unworthily abuſe it; ſo that from the imparting the means of knowing it, no glory to God, no benefit to man would accrue, but rather contempt of God, and prejudice to men would enſue upon it: there are ſome perſons of that wicked and Gi- Eſa. 30. 10.
gantick diſpoſition (contracted by evil practice) that ſhould one offer to inſtruct them in truth, or move them to piety, would be ready to ſay with Polyphemus in Homer:

Νήπιός εἶ ὦ ξεῖν, ἢ τηλόθεν εἰλήλουθας, Odyſſ. 1.
Ὅς με θεοὺς κέλεαι ἢ δειδίμεν, ἢ ἀλέασθαι.
Friend, you are a fool, or a great ſtranger to me, who adviſeſt me to fear or regard the Deity.

Or (which is the ſame) with Pharaoh: Who is the Lord, that I ſhould obey Exod. 5. 2.
his voice? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael go, (or neither will I doe as you in God's name admoniſh me) who like that unhappy Prince, Prov. 1. 24.
by no efficacy of arguments, no wonders of power are to be convinced of their folly, or converted from their wickedneſs: ſome, like thoſe of Chorazin and Bethſaida, whom not all the powerfull diſcourſes ſpoken to them, all the mighty works done in them, ſufficient to have brought Tyre Luke 11. 33.
and Sidon to repentance) can induce to mind or obey the truth: unto which ſort of people (except upon ſome particular occaſions, and for ſpecial reaſons) it is not expedient that divine truth ſhould be expoſed. We may alſo obſerve how our Lord being asked by St. Jude a queſtion like to ours; Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifeſt thy ſelf unto us, and not to Joh. 14. 22.
the world? thus reſolves it; If a man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him: implying the ordinary reaſon of God's making a difference in the diſcoveries of himſelf to be the previous diſpoſition and behaviours of men toward God; and interpretatively toward our Lord himſelf.

That God doth commonly obſerve this method (plainly ſuitable to divine juſtice, wiſdom and goodneſs) to diſpenſe the revelation of his truth according to mens diſpoſition to receive it, and aptneſs to make a fruitfull and worthy uſe of it, to bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, as Matt. 3. 8.
Saint John Baptiſt ſpake; and to withhold it from thoſe who are indiſpo- 1 Cor. 12. 7.
ſed to admit it, or unfit to profit by it: we may from divers expreſs paſſages and notable inſtances (beſide many probable intimations) of Scripture learn. We may on the one hand obſerve, that thoſe whom our Saviour did chuſe to call, were perſons diſpoſed eaſily upon his call to comply: to forſake their Fathers, and their nets; to leave their receipts of cuſtome; Matt. 4. 18.
to relinquiſh all (relations, occupations, eſtates) and to follow him; faith- Joh. 1. 24, 37.
full Iſraelites, without guile, like Nathanael (that is, as is probably con- Matt. 19. 27. jectured St. Bartholomew) men honeſtly devout, and charitable, like Za- Luke 19. 8, 9. John 1. 47. cheus; that he choſe to converſe with publicans and ſinners, men apt to Luke 19. 8, 9.
be convinced of their errours, and touched with the ſenſe of their ſins; Matt. 21. 31. Luke 5. 31.

apt to ſee their need of mercy and grace, and therefore ready to entertain the overtures of them: that he bleſſes God for revealing his myſteries to babes (to innocent and well-meaning, imprejudicate and uncorrupted perſons) ſuch as if men were not, they could in no-wiſe enter into the Matt. 18. 3. Kingdom of heaven, or become Chriſtians; thoſe poor in ſpirit, of whom is 19. 14. the Kingdom of heaven; thoſe fooliſh things which God chuſes as moſt fit
5. 3. 1 Cor. 1. 27. objects of his mercy and grace; that he enjoyn'd his Diſciples, in their travels for the promulgation and propagation of the Goſpel, to inquire concerning the worthineſs or fitneſs of perſons, and accordingly to make Matt. 10. 11. more cloſe applications to them: (Into what City or Village ye enter, en- quire who therein is worthy; and entring in abide there) of this proceeding we have a notable inſtance in Cornelius, who for his honeſt piety (correſpondent to the proportion of knowledge vouchſafed him) was ſo acceptable to God, that in regard thereto he obtained from him the revelation of truth in a peculiar and extraordinary manner. And St. Paul was another moſt remarkable example thereof; who for the like reaſon was ſo wonderfully called, as himſelf intimates, deſcribing himſelf to have been Acts 22. 3. ζηλωτὴς Θεοῦ, zealouſly affected toward God; according to the righteouſneſs in the
23. 1. law, blameleſs; one that had continually * behaved himſelf with all good Phil. 3. 6. * Πεπολίτευμαι. conſcience toward God; who even in the perſecution of God's truth did proceed with an honeſt meaning and according to his conſcience, for which Acts 26 9. cauſe he ſaith, that God had mercy on him; foreſeeing how willingly he Gal. 1. 14. Acts 26. would embrace the truth, and how earneſtly promote it: we may alſo ob-
1 Tim. 1. 3. ſerve, how in the Acts of the Apoſtles, the Holy Spirit commonly directed the Apoſtles to ſuch places, where a competent number of people were Luke 9. 62. well diſpoſed to receive the truth; who were εὔθετοι εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, Acts 13. 48. well-diſpoſed to the Kingdom of heaven, and conſequently by God's fore-
17. 11. ſight, (τεταγμένοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον) ordained to have the word of eternal
28. 28. life (the τὸ σωτήριον Θεοῦ, as it is in a parallel place called) diſcovered to them; ſuch people as the Beræans, men ingenuous and tractable; who conſequently entertained the word, μετὰ πάσης προθυμίας, with all prompti-Acts 18. 9. tude and alacrity, To ſuch perſons God ſometimes by extraordinary revelation directed the Apoſtles to preach; as to the Corinthians, in re-ſpect to whom, the Lord ſpake to St. Paul in a viſion, ſaying, Fear not, but ſpeak and be not ſilent, for I am with thee, becauſe----- πολὺς ἐστι μοι λαὸς, there is for me much people in this City; much people whom I ſee diſpoſed to comply with my truth. So in behalf of the Macedonians, ἀνήρ τις Μακεδὼν, Acts 16. 10. a certain man of Macedonia was in a viſion ſeen to St. Paul, exhorting him and ſaying, Paſſing into Macedonia help us: thus on that hand doth God take ſpecial care that his truth be manifeſted to ſuch, as are fitly qualified to embrace it and uſe it well: thus is God ready to make good that anſwer of Pothinus (Biſhop of Lions, and immediate ſucceſſour to St. Ire- Euſeb. V. 1. næus) to the Prefect, who asking him who was the Chriſtians God, was anſwered, ἐὰν ῇς ἄξιος γνώσῃ, If thou be worthy, thou ſhalt know; thus (as the Wiſe-man divinely ſaith) the divine wiſdom, ἀξίους αὐτῆς περιέρχεται ζητοῦσα, Sap. 6. 16. Goeth about ſeeking ſuch as are worthy of her; ſheweth her ſelf favourable unto them in their ways, and meeteth them in every thought.

And on the other hand, that God with-holds the ſpecial diſcoveries of his truth, upon account of mens indiſpoſitions and demerits, may like-wiſe very plainly appear. We may ſuppoſe our Lord to have obſerved himſelf, what he ordered to his Diſciples; Not to give that which is holy to Matt. 7. 6. dogs, nor to caſt their pearls before ſwine (not to expoſe the holy and pretious truth to very lewd and fierce People, who would ſnarl at it and trample upon it) we may allow God in his diſpenſation of his truth and grace to do, what ye bids the Apoſtles to do: before he enters into any houſe, or applies himſelf to any perſon, to * examine whether the houſe or * Ἐξετάζετε.

perſon be worthy; that is willing to receive him, and apt to treat him well; if not, to decline them. Our Lord we ſee did leave even his own Mat. 6. 5.
Country, ſeeing men there were not diſpoſed to uſe him with due honour and ragard; ſeeing they were poſſeſſed with vain prejudices, apt to obſtruct the efficacy of his divine inſtructions nnd miraculous performances; ſo that he was not likely (according to the ordinary way of divine providence) to produce any conſiderable effect towards their converſion.
He could not (it is ſaid) do many miracles there, becauſe of their unbelief; he could not, that is (according to the moſt juſt and wiſe rules he did obſerve, he would not do them; becauſe he perceived the doing them would not conduce to any good purpoſe; that they were not apt to look upon thoſe works as the effects of divine power and goodneſs, performed for their benefit (for inducing them to faith and repentance) but rather that the doing them would expoſe God's mercy to contempt or reproach, at leaſt to neglect or diſregard. Hence our Saviour declined converſing with perſons indiſpoſed to (thoſe ψυχικοὶ, who cannot δέχεσθαι τὰ τοῦ πνεύματος) 1 Cor. 2. 14.
receive benefit by his inſtruction and example; to grow wiſer or better by his converſation; as the Phariſees and Scribes; men prepoſſeſſed with Mat. 21. 31.
corrupt opinions and vitious affections, obſtructive to the belief of his doctrine, and obſervance of his laws; and worldly perſons; proud and ſelf-conceited, craſy and deceitful, covetous, ambitious and worldly men, incorrigibly tinctured with that φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς, carnal wiſdom and affection; Rom. 8. 7.
which is enmity to God; ſo that it is not ſubject to the Law of God, nor can be; inextricably engaged in the friendſhip of the World, which is James 4. 4.
enmity to God: To ſuch men the Goſpel would certainly be a ſcandal or 1 John 2. 15.
a folly: they would never be able to reliſh or digeſt the doctrine of purity, 1 Cor. 1. 23.
ſelf-denial, patience, and the like doctrines oppoſite to carnal ſenſe and conceit which it teacheth. From ſuch wiſe and prudent men (conceited Mat. 11. 25.
of their little wiſdoms, and doting upon their own fancies) God did conceal thoſe heavenly myſteries; which they would have deſpiſed 1 Cor. 1. 26.
and derided: Thoſe many wiſe according to the fleſh, many powerful; many James 2. 5.
noble, God did not chuſe to call into his Church: accordingly we may obſerve in the hiſtory of the Apoſtles, that God's Spirit did prohibit the Apoſtles paſſing through ſome places, it diſcerning how unſucceſsful (at thoſe ſeaſons in thoſe circumſtances, according to thoſe diſpoſitions of men) their preaching would be: Paſſing through Phrygia and Galatia, being Acts 16. 6. hindred by the Spirit to ſpeak the word in Aſia; coming to Myſia, they aſſayed to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit ſuffered them not. Moreover there is plainly the like reaſon, why God ſhould with-hold his ſaving truth from ſome people, as why he ſhould withdraw it from others; when it is abuſed or proves fruitleſs: but of ſuch withdrawing we have many plain inſtances, attended with the declaration of the reaſons of them, Our Lord Mat. 21. 43.
propheſied thus concerning the Jews; I ſay unto you, that the Kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you and ſhall be given to a nation doing the fruits thereof; they when our Saviour would have gathered them under his wings wilfully refuſing. Our Lord charged his Diſciples, when by any Mat. 10. 14.
they were repulſed or neglected in their preaching, to leave thoſe perſons and places ſhaking off the duſt from their feet, in token of an utter (εἰς μαρτύριον ἐπ' αὐτοὺς) deteſtation and deſertion of them: and accordingly we ſee them practiſing in their Acts; when they perceived men perverſely Luke 9. 5. Acts 13. 52.
contradictious, or deſperately ſenſeleſs and ſtupid, ſo that they clamoured Acts 18. 6.
againſt the Goſpel, and thruſt it from them, they abſtained from farther dealing with them, turning their endeavours other-where, toward perſons of a more docile and ingenuous temper; thence more ſuſceptive of Faith and repentance: To you (ſay Paul and Barnabas to the contradicting and reproachful Jews) it was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken, but ſeeing you put it from you (or thruſt it away from you, ἀπωθεῖσθε αὐτὸν) and judge your ſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, we turn to the Gentiles. So when the Church of Epheſus was grown cold in charity, and deficient in good works, God threatens to remove her Candleſtick; or to withdraw from her that light of truth, which ſhone with ſo little beneficial influence. It ſeems evident that God for the like reaſons may withhold the diſcovery of his truth, or forbear to interpoſe his providence; ſo as to tranſmit light thither, where mens deeds are ſo evil, that they will love darkneſs rather than light, where their eyes are ſo dim and weak, that the light will but offend and by the having it hurt them; where they by the having it declared to them will only incur farther miſchief and miſery; it would prove to them but ὀσμὴ θανάτου, a deadly ſcent, as the moſt comfortable perfumes are offenſive ſometimes and noxious to diſtempered bodies. Wherefore as where the light doth ſhine moſt clearly, it is mens voluntary pravity, that by it many are not effectually brought to ſalvation; ſo it is mens voluntary depraving and corrupting themſelves, (miſuſing their natural light, choaking the ſeeds of natural ingenuity, thwarting God's ſecret whiſpers and motions, complying with the ſuggeſtions of the wicked one) ſo as to be rendred unmeet for the ſuſception of God's heavenly truth and grace, which hinders God (who proceedeth ordinarily with men, in ſweet and reaſonable methods, not in way of impetuous violence and coaction) from diſpenſing them: we may ſay of ſuch in the words of the Prophet, They have choſen their own ways, and their ſoul delighteth in their abominations: Your iniquities have turned away theſe things, and your ſins have with-holden good things from you. Τῇ ἑαυτοῦ ἀγαθότητι πᾶσιν ὁ κύριος ἐγγίζει· μακρύνομεν δὲ ἑαυτοὺς ἡμεῖς διὰ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, God doth by his goodneſs approach to all, but we ſet our ſelves at diſtance by ſin, ſaith St. Baſil; and, ὅπου αὐτοπροαίρετος πονηρία, ἐκεῖ ϗ ἀποχὴ τῆς χάριτος, where there is ſelf-choſen, or affected wickedneſs, there is a with-holding of grace, ſaith another Father (apud Cyrill. Hier.) The Goſpel, if it be hidden, 'tis (as St. Paul ſays) (hidden ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις, in viris perditis, among loſt men (that is men deſperately gone in wickedneſs, incorrigible, unreclaimable people) in whom the God of this world (that is as St. Chryſoſtome expounds it, not the Devil, but the good God himſelf) hath blinded minds of them which believe not, ſo that the light of the glorious Goſpel hath not ſhined to them (πῶς οὖν ἐτύφλωσεν; how then did God blind them? ſaith St. Cryſoſtome) οὐκ ἐνεργήσας εἰς τοῦτο, ἄπαγε· not by any efficacy of his upon them toward that; fy on that: ἀλλ' ἀφεὶς ϗ συγχωρήσας, but by permiſſion and conceſſion; for ſo the Scripture is wont to ſpeak: Ἐπειδὰν γὰρ αὐτοὶ ἠπίστησαν πρῶτοι, ϗ ἀναξίους ἑαυτοὺς κατεσκεύασαν τοῦ ἰδεῖν τὰ μυστήρια, ϗ αὐτὸς λοιπὸν εἴασεν· ἀλλὰ τί ἔδει ποιῆσαι; πρὸς βίαν ἕλκειν, ϗ ἐκκαλύπτειν μὴ βουλομένοις ἰδεῖν; ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον ἂν κατεφρόνησαν, ϗ οὐκ ἂν εἶδον· Seeing (ſaith he) they disbelieved firſt, and conſtituted themſelves unworthy to ſee the myſteries, even God at laſt let them alone for what ſhould he have done? ſhould he have drawn them violently, and diſcovered it to them being unwilling to ſee? they would then have more deſpiſed it and not have ſeen it. God is ever willing and ready to diſpenſe his mercies and favours, but he is not wont to do it extraordinarily (or beſide the courſe of his ordinary proviſion) but in a proper and fit ſeaſon; (in that καιρὸς εὐπρόσδεκτος, acceptable time and day of ſalvation, when he ſeeth men capable of receiving them

Act. 13. 46.
28. 26.
Apoc. 2. 5.
Καὶ γὰρ τὰς ὗς (φασὶ) τὸ μῦρον πνίγει. Chryſ.
John 3. 19.
2 Cor. 2. 16.
Iſa. 66. 3.
Jer. 5. 25.
Baſ. in Pſ. 33.
2 Cor. 4. 3.
Εἰς τὸ μὴ αὐγάσαι αὐτοῖς. Chryſ. in 2 Cor. 4. 4.
Luke 19. 44.
2 Cor. 6. 2.
Rom. 13. 11.

them) which ſeaſon commonly dependeth upon man's will and choice, or the reſults of them. Καθόλου γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς οἶδεν τούς τε ἀξίους τῶν ἀγαθῶν, καὶ μὴ ὅθεν τὰ προσήκοντα ἑκάστοις δίδωσιν. Σωτὴρ γάρ ἐστιν οὐχὶ τῶν μὲν τῶν δ' οὔ· πρὸς δὲ ὅσον ἐπιτηδειότητος ἕκαστος εἶχεν, τὴν ἑαυτοῦ διένειμεν εὐεργεσίαν· for (ſaith Clemens Alex. in his 7th of the Stromata, where he clearly and fully affirms our preſent doctrine) Our Lord is not the Saviour of ſome, and not of others: but according as men are fitly diſpoſed, he hath diſtributed his beneficence to all. St. Auguſtine himſelf ſomewhere ſpeaketh no leſs; or rather more: Præcedit aliquid in peccatoribus (ſaith he) quo quamvis nondum ſint juſtificati, digni efficiantur juſtificatione: & idem præcedit in aliis peccatoribus quo digni ſint obtuſione. But, Clem. Strom. VII p. 105. Quæſt. 68, è Quæſt. 83. Tom. IV. Part. I. Venit de occultiſſimis meritis, &c. Ibid.

3. If all theſe conſiderations do not throughly ſatisfie us concerning the reaſon of God's proceedings in this caſe, we may conſider that God's providence is inſcrutable and impenetrable to us; that (according to the Pſalmiſt) as God's mercy is in the Heavens, and his faithfulneſs reacheth to the clouds; ſo his righteouſneſs is like the great mountains (too high for our reaſon to climb) and his judgments, πολλὴ ἄβυσσος, a great abyſs, too deep for our feeble underſtanding to fathom; that his ways are more ſubtile and ſpiritual than to be traced by our dim and groſs ſight. So upon contemplation of a like caſe, although as it ſeems, hardly ſo obſcure or unaccomptable as this, the cauſe concerning God's conditional rejection of that people, whom he in a ſpecial manner had ſo much and ſo long favoured) St. Paul himſelf doth profeſs. That therefore although we cannot fully reſolve the difficulty, we notwithſtanding without diſtruſt ſhould adhere to thoſe poſitive and plain declarations, whereby God repreſenteth himſelf ſeriouſly deſigning and earneſtly deſiring, that all men ſhould come to the knowledge of the truth; that none ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance; not doubting but his declared mind, and his ſecret providence, although we cannot throughly diſcern or explain their conſiſtency, do yet really and fully conſpire. But no farther at this time. Pſal. 36. 6. Rom. 11. 33. 2 Pet. 3. 9.

Sermon XLII.

The Doctrine of Univerſal Redemption aſſerted and explain'd.

1 Tim. IV. 10.

----- The living God; who is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe.

8. As our Saviour was ſuch to all men by his doctrine, or the general diſcovery of all ſaving truth; ſo may he be eſteemed ſuch in regard to his exemplary practice; whereby upon the open ſtage of the world and in the common view of all that would attend unto him He did repreſent a living pattern of all goodneſs; by imitating which, we may certainly attain Salvation. He that will conſider his practice ſhall find it admirably fitted for general inſtruction and imitation; calculated for all places and all ſorts of people; ſuted to the complexions, to the capacities, to the degrees, to the callings of all men; ſo that every ſort of men may from it draw profitable direction, may in it find a Coppy even of his particular behaviour: for He was a great Prince, illuſtrious in birth, excellent in glory, and abounding in all wealth, yet was born in obſcurity, lived without pomp, and ſeemed to poſſeſs nothing; ſo teaching men of high rank to be ſober, mild and humble, not to reſt in, not to regard much, not to hug and cling to the accommodations and ſhews of worldly ſtate; teaching thoſe of mean degree to be patient, content and chearful in their ſtation. He was exceedingly wiſe and knowing, without bound or meaſure; yet made no oſtentation of extraordinary knowledge; of ſharp wit, of deep ſubtilty; did not vent high, dark or intricate notions; had in his practice no reaches and windings of craft or policy; but was in his doctrine very plain and intelligible, in his practice very open and clear; ſo that what he commonly ſaid or did, not only Philoſophers and Stateſmen, but almoſt the ſimpleſt idiots might eaſily comprehend; ſo that thoſe might thence learn not to be conceited of their ſuperfluous wiſdom; theſe not to be diſcouraged in their harmleſs ignorance, both having thence an equally ſufficient inſtruction in all true righteouſneſs, a complete direction in the paths to happineſs, being thereby σοφιζόμενοι εἰς σωτηρίαν, made wiſe and learned to ſalvation. He did
2 Tim. 3. 15. not immerſe himſelf in the cares, nor engage himſelf into the buſineſſes of this World; yet did not withdraw himſelf from the company and converſation of men: he retired often from the crowd, that he might converſe with God and heavenly things; he put himſelf into it, that he might impart good to men, and benefit the World, declining no ſort of ſo-ſociety; but indifferently converſing with all; diſputing with the Doctors and eating with the Publicans; whence thereby both men of contemplative and quiet diſpoſition or vocations, and men of buſie ſpirits, or of active lives may be guided reſpectively; thoſe not to be moroſe, ſupercilious, rigid, contemptuous toward other men; theſe not to be ſo poſſeſſed or intangled with the World, as not to reſerve ſome leiſure for the culture of their minds, not to employ ſome care upon the duty of piety and devotion; both may learn whether in private retirement or in publick converſation and employment eſpecially to regard the ſervice of God and the benefit of men; thus was the example of our accommodated for all men; eſpecially conducting them in the hardeſt and rougheſt parts of the way leading to bliſs, the acclivities and aſperities of duty; ſelf-denial, or neglect of worldly glory and fleſhly pleaſure, patience, humility, general charity; ſhewing us the poſſibility of performing ſuch duties, and encouraging us thereto. Through theſe difficult and dangerous paſſages (as a reſolute Chieftain of liſe) he undauntedly marched before us, charging, beating back, and breaking through all oppoſite forces; all enemies, all temptations, all obſtacles; enduring painfully the moſt furious aſſaults of the World; boldly withſtanding and happily conquering the moſt malitious rage of Hell; ſo that victory and ſalvation we ſhall be certain of if we purſue his ſteps, and do not baſely (out of faintneſs or falſhood) deſert ſo good a leader; we ſhall not fail of the unfading Crown, if with patience we run the race that is ſet before us, looking unto the Captain and Perfectour of our faith, Jeſus who for the joy propoſed unto him, endured the croſs, deſpiſed the ſhame, and hath ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God. Would it not raiſe and enflame any courage to ſee his Commander to adventure ſo boldly upon all hazards, to endure ſo willingly all hardſhips; whom would not the ſight of ſuch a * forerunner animate and quicken in his courſe; who by running in the ſtreight way of righteouſneſs, with alacrity and conſtancy, hath obtained himſelf a moſt glorious Crown, and holdeth forth another like thereto, for the reward of thoſe, who follow him. Now as our Lord's doctrine, ſo did his example, in the nature and deſign therof, reſpect and appertain to all men, it being alſo like the light of Heaven, a common ſpectacle, a publick guide (to guide our ſteps in the way of peace) if it do not appear ſo, if it do not effectually direct all; it is by accident and beſide God's intention; 'tis by the fault of them who ſhould propound it, or of them who have not eyes fit, or worthy to behold it; briefly, what was ſaid concerning the univerſal revelation of Chriſtian doctrine may be applied to Chriſt's practice, Ἀρχηγὸς ζωῆς. Acts 3. 15.

1 Pet. 2. 21.
Heb. 12. 2.
1 Pet. 5. 4.
Ἀμαράντινον τ̃ δόξης στέφανον.

— στέφανος ζωῆς.
Apoc. 2. 10.
Jac. 1. 12.

* Πρόδρομος. Heb. 6. 20.

9. Jeſus is the Saviour of all men as having combated and vanquiſhed all the enemies of man's welfare and happineſs; diſpoſſeſſing them of all their pretences and uſurpations over man, diſarming them of all their power and force againſt him; enabling us to withſtand and overcome them: Man's ſalvation hath many adverſaries of different nature and kind; ſome directly oppugning it, ſome formally prejudicing it, ſome accidentally hindring it; ſome alluring, ſome forcing, ſome diſcouraging from it, or from the means conducing to it; the chief of them we may from the Scripture (with conſent of experience) reckon to be the Devil with all his envy and malice, his uſurpations, his deluſions and his temptations to ſin; the World with its ſnares and baits, its violences, perſecutions, and menaces; the fleſh or natural concupiſcence, with its bad inclinations and propenſities to evil, its luſts and pleaſures; Sin, with its guilt, and miſchievous conſequences; the Law with its rigorous exactions, actions, hard meaſure and harſh boding; Conſcience with its accuſations and complaints, its terrours and anguiſhes; Divine anger with its effects Death and Hell: all thoſe our Lord hath in ſeveral and ſuitable ways defeated; as to their malignity, contrariety, or enmity in reſpect of man's ſalvation; he hath (as Zachary propheſieth, in his Benedictus) Saved us from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us: So that being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, we might (ἀφόβως) ſafely and ſecurely, without danger or fear ſerve him, in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him all the days of our life.

—ὁ Χριστὸς ἐστὶν ὁ ἰδίῳ πειράσμασι προσκαλέλοιπε τῷ ἄρχοντι τοῦ κόσμου τούτου. Athan. contra Apoll. p. 628.

Luke 1. 71, 74.

The Devil (that enemy, that adverſary, that accuſer, that ſlanderer, that murtherer, that greedy Lion, that crafty Serpent; the ſtrong one, the miſchievous one, the deſtroyer) who uſurped an authority and exerciſed a domination over mankind, as the Prince of this world; who made priſe of them, captivated them at his pleaſure; who detained them under the power (or authority) of darkneſs and wickedneſs; who had the power of death; him our Saviour hath deſtroyed or defeated (κατήργησεν, as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh; that is, aboliſhed him as to any farther pretence of empire or power over us) him he hath dejected from Heaven (I ſaw Satan like lightning falling down from Heaven) him he hath caſt out: Now is the Judgment of this world, now ſhall the Prince of this world be caſt out; all his works he hath diſſolved; For this cauſe (ſaith St. John) the Son of God did appear, that he might diſſolve the works of the Devil. He combated this ſtrong one (this mighty and dreadful foe of ours) and baffled him, and bound him, and diſarmed him (taking away πανοπλίαν αὐτοῦ, the whole armour in which he truſted) and ſpoiled him (τὰ σκεύη διήρπασε, rifled all his baggage, bare away all his inſtruments of miſchief) and plundered all his houſe; leaving him unable (without our fault, our baſeneſs, our negligence) to do us miſchief; (as is intimated in the 12th of St. Mattew, and 11th of St. Luke) yea he triumphed over all thoſe infernal principalities and powers, and expoſed them (as St. Paul ſaith:) he imparted to his Diſciples ability to trample upon all his power, by him all his followers are ſo fortified as to conquer the wicked one (as St. John ſays) he affordeth light to diſcover all his wiles, and ſnares; ſtrength and courage to withſtand all his aſſaults, to repel all his fiery darts, to put him to flight.

Matt. 12. 28. Luke 11. 19. 1 Pet. 5. 8. Dragon, Apoc 12. 3. &c. Acts 10. 38. 1 John 2. 14. Apoc. 12 9. John 12. 31. 16. 11. 14. 30. Epheſ. 2. 2. 6. 12. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Coloſſ. 1. 13. Acts 26. 18. Acts 10 38. 2 Tim 2. 26.

Heb. 2. 14.

Luke 10. 18.
John 12. 31.
16. 11.

1 John 3. 8.

Mat. 12. 29.
Luke 11. 21.

Coloſ. 2 15.

ἐθριάμβευσεν,
Luke 10. 19.
1 John 2. 14.
Eph. 6. 11.
2 Cor. 2 11.
Eph. 6 16.
1 Pet. 5 9.
Eph. 4. 27.
Jam. 4. 7.

The World alſo (that is, the wicked principles, the bad cuſtoms, the naughty converſation and example which commonly prevail here among men; alluring to evil and deterring from good; the cares alſo, the riches, the pleaſures, the glories of the world, which poſſeſs or diſtract the minds, ſatiate and cloy the deſires, employ all the affections and endeavours; take up the time of men; all in the world which faſteneth our hearts to earth, and to thoſe low tranſitory things; or which ſink them down toward hell; and which detain them from ſoaring toward heaven) is an enemy; an irreconcileable enemy to our ſalvation; the friendſhip thereof being inconſiſtent with a friendſhip in us toward the God of our ſalvation; or in him toward us: for the friendſhip of the world is enmity with God; and, If any man love the world, the friendſhip of the father is not in him. And this enemy our Lord hath vanquiſhed, and enabled us to overcome. Being of courage (ſaith he) I have overcome the world; he, by a conſtant ſelf-denial and temperance, defeated the bewitching pleaſures, and flattering glories of it; he, by an immovable patience,

Jam. 4. 4.
1 John 2. 15.

John 16. 33.

patience, baffled the terrible frowns, and outrageous violences of it; he, by a reſolute and invincible maintenance of truth, in great meaſure routed and diſſipated the errours and oppoſitions thereof; he, by a general and intenſe charity, ſurmounted the provocations, envies and enmities thereof: he did it himſelf for us, and he alſo enabled us to do it; furniſhing us with ſufficient ſtrength, and fit weapons whereby we may combat and conquer it; may ſuſtain and repel its force; may ſhun and elude its baits; for, every one that (by faith in him) is born of God doth overcome the world: and this is the victory that overcomes the world, our faith: Who is he that overcomes the world, but he who believes that Jeſus is the Son of God? In all theſe things (that is in whatever concerns the world and its enmity; tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword) we are (ſaith St. Paul) more than conquerors through him that loves us; thanks be to God, which always cauſeth us to triumph in Christ: Our Lord hath procured for us hopes that will raiſe our minds and affections above the world; objects employing our care and endeavour far beyond it; ſatisfactions that will chear our hearts, and ſatiate our deſires without it; comforts, that will ſupport and ſuſtain our ſpirits againſt all the terrours, all the aſſaults, all the evils thereof; by his means it is, that we have no reaſon either to love it; or to fear it, or to value it, or to be concerned about it; but to contemn it as a thing unworthy of us and below us.

1 John 5. 4.
Rom. 8. 38.
2 Cor. 2. 14.
Phil. 1. 28.

The Fleſh alſo (that is, all that within us of bodily temper, or natural conſtitution, which inclineth and ſwayeth us to vitious exceſs in ſenſual enjoyments; which diſpoſeth us to the inordinate love of our ſelves and of other creatures; which luſts againſt the ſpirit, and is adverſary thereto: which blindeth and darkneth our minds in the apprehenſion of our judgment concerning divine things; which perverteth and diſableth (enfeebleth) our wills in the choice and proſecution of what is good; which diſcompoſeth and diſordereth the affections and paſſions of our ſoul; which continually enticeth and ſeduceth us to ſin) is alſo an enemy; a very powerful, very treacherous, very dangerous and very miſchievous enemy to us and our welfare; rendring us enemies to God (for the carnal mind is enmity againſt God; for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be,) being another law in our members, warring againſt the law of our mind, and captivating us to the law of ſin; engendring and foſtering thoſe fleſhly luſts, which war againſt the ſoul; whoſe works and fruits are all ſorts of intemperance, impurity, pride, envy, contentiouſneſs; this capital enemy of ours our Lord did in his own perſon firſt ſubdue, rejecting all the ſuggeſtions and thwarting the impulſes thereof; entirely ſubmitting to and performing the will of God; even in willingly drinking that cup, which was ſo diſtaſtful, ſo grievous to natural will and fleſhly deſire. He ſo conquered the fleſh in himſelf for us; he alſo conquers it in us, by the guidance and aſſiſtance of his grace enabling us to withſtand it, and to overcome it. The law of the ſpirit of life in Christ Jeſus (ſaith St. Paul) hath freed me from the law of ſin and death. He infuſes a light diſcuſſing thoſe foggs which ſteam from carnal ſenſe and appetite; ſo that we may clearly diſcern divine truths, the will of God, the way to happineſs; he inſerteth principles of ſpiritual life and ſtrength counterpoiſing and overſwaying corporeal and ſenſual propenſions; ſo that we can reſtrain ſenſual deſires, and compoſe irregular paſſions; and ſubmit readily to God's will; and obſerve chearfully God's law; and freely comply with the dictates of the Spirit or of right reaſon; he ſo continually aideth, en-

Gal. 5. 24.
1 Cor. 2. 14.
Matt. 26. 41.
Gal. 5. 17.
Rom. 7. 18, 19.
Jam. 1. 14.
Rom. 8. 7.
Rom. 7. 23.
1 Pet. 2. 11.
Gal. 5. 19.
1 Cor. 3. 3.
Col. 3. 5.
Luke 22. 42.
Matt. 26. 39.
John 17. 19.
Heb. 2. 10.
Rom 8. 2.
2 Cor. 4. 6.
1 Cor. 2. 15.
1 John 2. 27.
Eph. 5. 8.
Rom. 12. 2.
1 John 5. 3.
Phil. 2. 13.
Phil. 4. 13.
2 Cor. 3. 5.

Heb. 13. 21.
Gal. 5. 24.
Coloſſ. 3. 5. 2. 11.
Eph. 4. 22.
Rom. 6. 6, 12.
Rom. 8. 13.
Heb. 12. 1.
Eph. 4. 23. 2. 10.
Coloſſ. 3. 10.

encourageth and upholds us, that we can do all things through Chriſt that ſtrengtheneth us; ſo that by his power and help the fleſh with its affections and luſts are crucified; the earthly members are mortified; the old man (which was corrupted according to deceitful luſts) is put off; the body of ſin is ſo deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin; ſin doth not reign in our mortal bodies, ſo that we (muſt) obey it in the luſts thereof; we are renewed in the ſpirit of our minds; and do put on the new man, which is created according to God in righteouſneſs and true holineſs.

Heb. 12. 4. Πρὸς ἁμαρτίαν ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι.
Matt. 1. 21.

Ὁ Χριστὸς ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ θεοῦ ὁ κύριος ἡμῶν τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου πάθους πληρεστάτην ἀπέδωκε τὴν σωτηρίαν, ἵνα ὅλον τὸν ἄνθρωπον τῶν ἁμαρτίαις ἐνεχόμενον πάσης ἁμαρτίας ἐλευθερώσῃ. Damaſus Epiſt. apud Theod. 5. 9. 1 Tim. 1. 15.

Our Sins alſo are very grievous enemies of ours, loading us with heavy guilt, ſtinging us with bitter remorſe, and anxious fear, keeping us under miſerable bondage, expoſing us to extreme miſchief and miſery; them our Lord hath alſo routed and vanquiſhed: in regard to this performance was the name Jeſus aſſigned to him; as the Angel told Joſeph: She ſhall bear a Son, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus, for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins: [From their ſins; taking in all the cauſes and the conſequences of them; from all thoſe ſpiritual enemies, which draw us, or drive us into them; from the guilt and obnoxiouſneſs to puniſhment; the terrour and anguiſh of conſcience; the wrath and diſpleaſure of God following upon them; the ſlavery under their dominion; the final condemnation and ſufferance of grievous pains for them;] the guilt of ſin he particularly freed us from; for he loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood. Chriſt died for ſinners (for us then being ſinners) that is, that he might deliver us from our ſins, with all their cauſes, adjuncts and conſequences. He bare our ſins on his own body on the tree; the blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin: he is the propitiation for our ſins, and for the ſins of the whole world; he was manifeſted to take away our ſins; once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away ſin (εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, to the abolition of ſin) by the ſacrifice of himſelf; we are juſtified freely by God's grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus; by his obedience many are conſtituted righteous (or free from the guilt and imputation of ſin) he juſtifies the ungodly; covering their ſins and not imputing them unto them. So doth he wipe away the guilt of ſin; and he voids the condemnation paſſed for them; for there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus; who is there that can condemn, ſince Chriſt hath died, or rather hath riſen again?

Rev. 1. 5.
1 Pet. 1. 19.
1 Pet. 2. 24. 3. 18.
1 John 1. 7. 2. 2. 3. 5. 4. 10.
Heb. 1. 3. 9. 26, 28.
Rom. 3. 24.
Rom. 5. 19.
Rom. 4. 5, 6, 7.
Rom. 8. 1.
Rom. 8. 34.

He hath alſo appeaſed God's wrath for ſin, and removed the effects of it, (the puniſhment and vengeance due to ſin and threatned for it.) So that being enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; being juſtified by faith we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: Jeſus is the ὁ ῥυόμενος, who delivers us from the wrath to come; being juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved by him from wrath.

Rom. 5. 10. 1.
1 Theſ. 1. 10.
Rom. 5. 7.

The ſtrength and dominion of ſin he hath alſo broken; by the grace afforded us, whereby we are able to reſiſt and avoid it; ſo that ſin henceforth ſhall not domineer over us, or reign in our mortal body: Being freed from ſin we are enſlaved to righteouſneſs and made ſervants to God. The body of ſin is deſtroyed ſo that we no longer ſerve ſin------ Whence conſequently he hath ſubdued, utterly weakned, or quite deſtroyed (as to any force or miſchievous influence upon us) thoſe other adverſaries, which depend upon ſin, and by its power oppoſe and afflict us,

Rom. 6. 14.
Rom. 6. 12.
Rom. 6. 18, 22.
Rom. 6. 6.

Our Conſcience is ſuch an enemy accuſing us, condemning us, vexing us with the memory and ſenſe of ſin; ſuggeſting to us the depth of our guilt and the danger of our ſtate, terrifying us with the expectation of puniſhment and vengeance: but our Lord (by ſecuring us of mercy and favour upon repentance and ſincere obedience) hath ſilenced and ſtilled this adverſary; hath by his blood (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſays) purged our conſcience from dead works; hath delivered them, who through fear of death were all their life-time ſubject to bondage; ſo that thence we obtain a ſteady peace of mind, a joyſul ſatisfaction in the ſervice of God, a comfortable hope of future bliſs: peace, comfort and joy are the adjuncts of that ſtate he ſhall put us into, and the fruits of that Spirit he beſtoweth on us.

Heb. 9. 14. 2. 15.
Rom. 15. 13.
Rom. 14. 17.
Gal. 5. 22.

The Law alſo (in its rigour, as requiring exact obedience, and as denouncing vengeance to them who in any point violate it;) is, by reaſon of our weakneſs and inability ſo perfectly to obſerve it, an enemy to us; juſtifying no man, perfecting no man, cauſing, encreaſing, aggravating, quickening, declaring ſin; yielding occaſion to ſin of killing us, working wrath, miniſtring death and condemnation, ſubjecting us to a curſe (as St. Paul teacheth us) but our Lord by mitigating and abating the extreme rigour thereof, by procuring an acceptance of ſincere (though not accurate) obedience, by purchaſing and diſpenſing pardon for tranſgreſſion thereof upon repentance, by conferring competent ſtrength and ability to perform it in an acceptable degree, hath brought under this adverſary; hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law; hath juſtifyed and imputed righteouſneſs to us without the works of the law (without ſuch punctual performances, as the Law exacts) we are delivered from the law (as to thoſe effects of it; the condemning, diſcouraging, enſlaving us) we ceaſe to be under the law (in thoſe reſpects) being under grace, being led by the Spirit (as St. Paul tells us.) The Law indeed is ſtill our rule, our guide, our governour; we are obliged to follow and obey it; but it ceaſes to be a tyrant over us, a tormentor of us.

Gal. 2. 16. 3. 11.
Heb. 7. 19.
Rom. 10. 5.
Rom. 8. 3.
Rom. 3. 20.
Gal. 3. 12. 5. 3.
Rom. 7. 13.
Rom. 4. 15. 3. 20. 5. 20. 7. 7, 8, 10, 11.
1 Cor. 15. 56.
2 Cor. 3. 7, 9.
Gal. 3. 12.
Gal. 3. 13.
Rom. 3. 21. 28.
Rom. 4. 6.
Rom. 7. 6, 4.
Rom. 6. 14.
Gal. 5. 18.

Death is alſo an enemy (the laſt enemy, ſaith St. Paul, which ſhall be deſtroyed, is death;) the enemy, which naturally we moſt fear and abominate; that which would utterly deſtroy us.

1 Cor. 15. 26.
Acts 2. 34.

This enemy our Lord hath vanquiſhed and deſtroyed: by his death and reſurrection he opened the way to a happy immortality; he aboliſhed death, and brought life and immortality to light by the Goſpel: He by his death defeated him that had the power of death; and delivered them, who by fear of death were through their whole life ſubject to bondage; he pulled out ſin, which is the ſting of death, and reverſed the ſentence of condemnation, to which we all ſtood obnoxious. The wages of ſin (that which we had deſerved, and was by law due to us for it) was death; but the gift of God is everlaſting life, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

1 Cor. 15. 20
Acts 26. 23.
Col. 1. 18.
Apoc. 1. 5.
Acts 3. 15.
'Αρχηγὸς ζωῆς.
2 Tim. 1. 10.
Heb. 2. 14.
Rom. 6. 23.

Laſtly Hell, (that is utter darkneſs, extreme diſcomfort, intolerable and endleſs miſery) the moſt diſmal of all enemies, our Lord hath, by the virtue of his merits, and the power of his grace, put us into a capacity of avoiding; he hath (as St. Paul before tells us) delivered us from the wrath to come. O Hell, where is thy victory? Death and Hell ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire.

1 Theſſ. 1. 10.
1 Cor. 15. 55.
Apoc. 20. 14.

Thus hath our Lord in our behalf vanquiſhed and defeated every thing that is oppoſite, or prejudicial to our ſalvation and welfare. Many indeed of theſe things do in a more immediate, more peculiar, and more ſignal manner concern the faithful members of the Chriſtian Church, and are directly applied to them, yet all of them in ſome ſort, according to God's deſign, and in reſpect to a remote capacity, may be referred to all men. They are benefits which God intended for all men, and which all men (if they be not faulty and wanting to themſelves) may obtain.

How they more eſpecially appertain to the faithful we may ſhew afterward.

Application.

1. Hence ariſeth great matter and cauſe of glorifying God; both from the thing it ſelf, and its extent: for the magnitude of beneficence is to be eſtimated not only according to the degree of quality, but according to its amplitude of object; to redeem any doth ſignify goodneſs, to redeem many doth encreaſe it, to redeem all doth advance it to the higheſt pitch; the more are obliged, the greater is the glory due to the benefactour.

Hence the earth being full of the goodneſs of the Lord, the Lord being gratious unto all, and his mercy being over all his works, all creatures partaking of God's bounty is ſo often inſiſted upon in thoſe divine hymns, as a ground of praiſe to God.

Some do indeed ſpeak of glorifying God for his diſcriminating grace; as if grace the narrower it were, the better it were: but is not ſelfiſhneſs and envy at the bottom of this? Is not this the diſpoſition of thoſe in the Goſpel, who murmured ---- is thine eye evil, becauſe mine is good?

It is dangerous to reſtrain God's benevolence and beneficence within bounds narrower than they really are; thereby diminiſhing his glory.

2. Hereby is diſcovered the general obligation of men to love God; to praiſe him, to ſerve him in ſenſe of his goodneſs, in regard to his beneficence, out of gratitude toward him. If God hath been ſo kindly affected toward men, and ſo careful of their welfare, as for procuring and promoting their ſalvation to provide a Saviour for them, to deſign his own beloved ſon to that performance, in proſecution thereof depreſſing him into ſo low a ſtate, expoſing him to ſuch inconveniences and indignities, ſuch croſſes and afflictions, how much are then all men obliged to love him, as their gratious friend and Benefactor; to praiſe and celebrate him for his favour and mercy, to render all bleſſings and thanks unto him? this certainly is the duty of all, if the redemption in God's deſign reach to all; otherwiſe in reality it lieth on few, in practice it could ſcarce touch any. They cannot be obliged to thank God for their redemption, who are not obliged to him for the thing it ſelf; they cannot heartily reſent the kindneſs, who are not aſſured that it extends to them: And to ſuch aſſurance (according to the doctrine of particular redemption) it is certain that very few men, eſpecially of the beſt men, can arrive; it is a queſtion whether any men arrive thereto.

Apoc. 5. 9. Eph. 1. 6. Col. 1. 12.

According to the ſenſe of all men it is alſo no eaſie thing to know certainly, whether a man at preſent be in the ſtate of grace: and he that doth not know that, cannot (except upon the ſcore of general redemption) be aſſured that he is redeemed; and therefore cannot thank God.

It hath been the common doctrine of Chriſtendom for 15 hundred years together, that no man (without a ſpecial revelation) can in this life be aſſured of his perſeverance, and conſequently not of his ſalvation; and conſequently not of his election or redemption, in caſe only they who are ſaved are in the deſign of God redeemed: no man therefore without that ſpecial revelation, can thank God heartily for his redemption, as being uncertain thereof, it being a ſecret reſerved in God's breaſt.

It is yet a farther difficulty, ſuppoſing a man to have a good aſſurance of his preſent ſtate, to be aſſured of his final perſeverance in it: which he that hath not, cannot (except upon the ſaid ſcore) thank God for it.

The beſt men eſpecially, who out of modeſty and humility are apt to doubt of their preſent ſtate; who ſtudying their hearts and diſcovering many imperfections in themſelves, who reflecting on their lives, and obſerving in them many defects, are apt to queſtion whether they are qualified for God's favour, or fitted for the future accompt and enjoyment of heaven, who conſidering the treachery of their hearts, the feebleneſs of their reaſon, that unſteadineſs of their reſolution, will be apt to fear they may fall away, will be rendred hence uncapable to render God thanks for their redemption: only the bold and blind Bayards (who uſually out of ſelf-conceit are ſo exceedingly confident of their election and ſalvation) will be able to praiſe God for it.

Hence the aſſurance of ſalvation hapning to few, and of them to much fewer upon good grounds; it being neceſſary to none, it being perhaps (yet far more probably, according to the general ſenſe of Chriſtendom) groundleſs to any; few or none are capable to render God praiſe and thanks for it: ſo ſhall he loſe in effect all thanks for the greateſt benefit he did ever confer on mankind.

It is therefore a dangerous opinion, which checketh their gratitude, which ſtoppeth their mouths from praiſing God; which ſo depriveth God of his due praiſe. It is much more ſafe to praiſe God for the benefits we conceive we have, but have not, than to neglect to praiſe him, for that we have.

3. This doctrine doth afford great matter of comfort: if a man reflecting on his own heart and ways (obſerving in them many blemiſhes and defects) is apt to be diſcouraged, yet it will raiſe him to conſider that he is not thereby excluded from a poſſibility of ſalvation, ſeeing he is aſſured of God's favourable inclination, and who hath expreſſed ſo much good-will and favour toward him in his redemption, ſeeing he is perſuaded that he hath a Saviour ſo kindly and pitifully affected toward him; who wiſheth him well; who is concerned in his ſalvation, that he might not be croſſed or defeated in his deſigns, that he might not loſe the effects of his endeavours, the price of his blood. But he that ſeeth himſelf in ſo doubtful a condition, as to his own qualifications, and withal hath no aſſurance that God was ever gratiouſly diſpoſed toward him, cannot but thereby be much diſcouraged.

This doctrine therefore is ſafe and uſeful, it can do no man harm, it may do him great good by giving him hopes of being aſſiſted and accepted of his Redeemer. But the other is dangerous, as tending to diſcourage and deject men.

4. This doctrine is a great incitement to the performanc of duty; both as working upon mens ingenuity, and diſpoſing them in gratitude to ſerve God, from the reſentment of their obligation for ſo great a favour; and as aſſuring them of acceptance in caſe of endeavour to obey. How can he but be moved willingly to ſerve God, who hath an apprehenſion of God's ſuch merciful deſign to ſave him? of his having done ſo much in order thereto?

But how can he be moved to ſerve God in conſideration of ſuch a benefit, who is ignorant of its being intended him? how can any man apply himſelf chearfully to ſerve that maſter, whoſe favourable inclination toward him, whoſe readineſs to accept his ſervice he doubteth of.

The Apoſtles propound it as a ground of gratitude, and an obligation to the performance of duty, that they are redeemed by Chriſt; which ſuppoſeth they do all know and believe it. 1 Cor. 6. 20. 1 Pet. 1. 17.

Suppoſing Chriſt is not the redeemer of all but of thoſe only, who ſhall be finally ſaved, theſe grounds of thankfulneſs and enforcements of duty cannot properly or pertinently reſpect all Chriſtians, and indeed only thoſe who are ſure of their ſalvation.

My thanking Chriſt for his redeeming me, my diligently ſerving him as my redeemer, ſuppoſeth my opinion, and is grounded upon the truth of his being really ſo: ------ I cannot heartily, confidently or comfortably do it, except I know it, and am aſſured thereof: which I cannot do except Chriſt died for all men, or that I am aſſured of my particular election.

So that either Chriſt is an univerſal Saviour, or the greateſt part of Chriſtians are diſobliged and incapacitated reaſonably to thank him, to praiſe him, to ſerve him, as they are enjoined to do.

5. It is a great aggravation of Infidelity, of Apoſtaſie, of all diſobedience, that we are guilty of them, do fruſtrate the deſigns and undertakings of Chriſt, do reject the overtures of his grace, do abuſe the goodneſs and mercy of their redeemer; it conſequently deterreth from thoſe things.

The Phariſees and Lawyers rejected the counſel of God toward them, (God Luke 7. 30. therefore deſigned their good.)

Heb. 2. 3. How ſhall we eſcape, that neglect ſo great ſalvation? a ſalvation which they were capable of, which was deſigned for them, which was offered to them; otherwiſe there would have been no danger in neglecting it, no fault in doing it.

Acts 13. 26, It is ſaid of the Jews at Antioch in Piſidia, that they did, ἀπωθεῖσθαι,
46. thruſt away the Goſpel (the word of ſalvation, that was ſent them) judging themſelves unworthy of eternal life: God did think fit out of goodneſs ſeriouſly to offer it to them, but they did not think fit to embrace it.

2 Pet. 3 9. Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of God's goodneſs? how can any man deſpiſe that,
Rom. 2. 23. which doth not concern him, which never was offered him, which at leaſt he hath no ground of confidence, that it extendeth to him?

Theſe things I ſpeak that ye may be ſaved: ſo our Lord ſaith to thoſe John 5. 34. 38. ---who did not believe in him.

Mat. 23. 37. How often have I willed, &c.

2 Pet. 2. 1. Denying the Lord that bought them.

6. It is a great encouragement and excitement to devotion. Who can be backward of having recourſe to his Redeemer; or of uſing his mediation? whom will not ſuch an experiment of goodneſs invite and encourage?

But the contrary apprehenſion muſt needs damp devotion, and diſcourage from it. He can apply himſelf to God but faintly, and diſtruſtfully, who diſtruſteth whether he hath any Redeemer or Mediatour or no. Who muſt thus conceive and ſay to himſelf: perhaps God hath loved me, and perhaps he never had nor will have any regard to my welfare. Perhaps Chriſt died with intention do do me good, perhaps he never did mean any ſuch thing: perhaps thoſe expreſſions of kindneſs ſounding ſo generally do not include me, perhaps I am excluded, and only deluded by them. When a man cannot ſay to Chriſt, O my Saviour--O my Mediatour, &c. nor uſe his interceſſion with God for the procurement of faith, of grace, of any good thing.

7. It is a ground and motive of charity; there ariſing thence a more conſiderable relation between all men; being all the objects of Chriſt's love and mercy, ſhould endear men to one another; it rendereth every man valuable in our eyes, as dear and pretious in God's ſight. It ſhould make his ſalvation deſireable to us.

Pray for all men, ſaith St. Paul.

The contrary opinion removeth this ground of charity; and ſo cooleth it.

8. It ſhould conſequently render us careful to promote the ſalvation of others, and fearful to hinder it by ill example, by ill doctrine, by any miſbehaviour. So doth St. Paul argue, when he ſaith, Deſtroyeſt thou him for whom Chriſt died?

9. It is a piece of juſtice to acknowledge the right and intereſt of every man in his Saviour.

A wrong to exclude any; to confine and appropriate this great bleſſing; to engroſs, to encloſe a Common; to reſtrain that by forging diſtinctions, which is ſo unlimitedly expreſſed.

The undertakings and performances of our Saviour did reſpect all men as the common works of nature do; as the air we breath in, as the Sun which ſhineth on us; the which are not given to any man particularly, but to all generally; not as a proper Incloſure, but as a Common---they are indeed mine, but not otherwiſe than as they do belong to all men.

A gift they are to all equally, though they do not prove to all a bleſſing; there being no common gift, which by the refuſal, neglect, or ill uſe of it may not prove a curſe---- a ſavour of death.

Sermon XLIII.

The Nativity of our Lord tidings of great Joy.

LUKE II. 10.

And the Angel ſaid unto them, Fear not, for Behold, I bring you tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people.

Ἰδοὺ γὰρ εὐαγγελίζομαι χαρὰν μεγάλην, ἥτις ἔσται παντὶ τῷ λαῷ.

THE proper buſineſs of a Feſtival is ſpiritual joy, conceived in our hearts, by reflexion on ſome notable bleſſing conferred on us; accompanied with a grateful ſenſe and expreſſion, anſwerable to the ſpecial bounty and mercy of God, in due proportion to the nature and degree of that bleſſing.

Such

1 Theſſ. 5. 16. Rom. 12. 12. Phil. 4. 4. Such joy is a duty, or a part of religious devotion, required by God, and very acceptable to him; for as God would have his ſervants perpetually content, well ſatisfied, and chearful in all ſtates, and upon all occurrences; ſo he doth eſpecially demand from us, that we ſhould entertain his favours with delight and complacence; it being proper, it being ſeemly, it being juſt ſo to do; for ſince joy is a natural reſult of our obtaining wha ever we do apprehend good, or eſteem and affect; the conception of it is^t a plain argument, that we do well underſtand, do rightly prize, do cordially like, do thankfully embrace God's favours; as on the contrary a defect of it doth imply, that we do not mind them, or take them to be little worth, that we do not ſenſibly reliſh them, or accept them kindly. And if ever we are obliged, if ever we are concerned ſo to rejoyce, then ſurely it is now; when the faireſt occaſion, and higheſt cauſe of joy, that ever was, is preſented to us; when certain news from heaven, and the beſt that ever came from thence, of the moſt admirable, the moſt glorious, the moſt beneficial event, that ever happened in the world, is in a manner ſutably rare conveyed to us; for Behold, ſaith the Angel, I bring you tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people.

Upon which Words (each whereof is emphatical, and pregnant with matter obſervable) we ſhall firſt make a brief deſcant or paraphraſe, ſupplying the room of a curious Analyſis; then we ſhall urge the main duty couched in them.

'Ιδȣ̀, Behold: this is a word denoting admiration, exciting attention, intimating aſſurance: Behold and admire; it is no mean, no ordinary matter, that I report, but a moſt remarkable, a very marvellous event: Behold, and attend; it is a buſineſs not to be paſſed over with ſmall regard, but moſt worthy your conſideration, of high moment, and concernment, to you. Behold, and ſee; 'tis no uncertain, no obſcure thing; but that whereof you may be fully aſſured, as if it were moſt evident to your ſenſe, and which by conſpicuous proofs ſhall be demonſtrated; in the mean while you have no ſlight authority for it; for

Εὐαγγελίζομαι, I bring good tidings; I, an Angel, a ſpecial Meſſenger of God purpoſely ſent on this errand, that by the ſtrangeneſs of my apparition I may excite you to regard it, by the weight of my teſtimony I may incline you to believe it; by the dignity of my nature I may declare the importance of it: I, a faithful ſervant of God, and a kind friend to men, very willing at his command to perform good offices to them, do bring a meſſage, well becoming an Angel's mouth, worth my deſcent from heaven, and putting on this viſible ſhape; for I bring

Εὐαγγ' χαρὰν μεγάλην, good tydings of great joy: I bring tidings, that may gratifie the curioſity of any man, the mind of man naturally being greedy of news; good tidings, thoſe are welcome to all men, and apt to yield more pleaſure, than any knowledge we had before: tidings of joy; ſuch as may not only miniſter a dry ſatisfaction to your reaſon, but ſenſibly touch your affections, by the comfortable nature, and beneficial tendency of them: tidings of great joy; as not touching any indifferent or petty buſineſs, but affairs of neareſt concernment, and higheſt conſequence to you: (ſuch indeed, as you ſhall underſtand, which do concern not the poor intereſts of this world, not the ſorry pleaſures of ſenſe, not any ſlender advantage of your preſent life, and temporal ſtate; but your ſpiritual welfare, your everlaſting condition, the future joy and happineſs of your ſouls) tidings indeed the moſt gladſome, that ever ſounded upon earth, that ever entred into mortal ear; theſe I bring

'Υμῖν,

Ὑμῖν, to you: to you ſhepherds; perſons of mean condition, and ſimple capacity, leading this innocent and humble ſort of life, employed in your honeſt vocation, undergoing toilſome labour, and ſore hardſhip; witneſs the open field, witneſs the cold ſeaſon, witneſs the dark night in which I find you watching, and guarding your ſheep; to you, who could expect no very welcome tidings; who are little concerned in any great tranſactions; and can have ſmall ambition or hope of bettering your condition by any changes here; even to you (not in the firſt place to the mighty Princes, to the crafty Stateſman, to the ſage Philoſophers, or learned Rabbies, to the wealthy Merchants, or fine Citizens, who now are warm in their houſes, enjoying their eaſe and pleaſure; repoſing on their beds, or ſitting by their fires, or revelling at their banquets and ſports; but to you) poor, harmleſs, ſilly, induſtrious ſouls; who well may repreſent the greater and better part of mankind, in this ſurpriſing and abſolute free way, the gratious Lord of heaven by me his ſpecial miniſter doth vouchſafe to ſend from thence tidings of great joy; which ſhali be Pauperibus atque vigilantibus, &c. Bern. de Nat. Serm. 5.

Luke 2. 8.

Παντὶ τῷ λαῷ, to all people; or rather to all the people; that is to God's ancient and peculiar people, in regard to which it is ſaid, I was not ſent but to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; to that people I ſay eſpecially, primarily, and more immediately this joy did appertain; it by a cloſer relation to God, and ſpecial intereſt in his promiſes having plaineſt title thereto; it from anticipations of knowledge, faith and hope being more capable to admit ſuch an overture; it indeed being the repreſentative of all the ſpiritual Iſrael, or faithful ſeed of Abraham, for whom the benefits which theſe tidings import were deſigned; to it firſt indeed, but mediately and conſequentially to all people diſperſed on the face of the earth: The expreſſion ſeemeth adapted to the preſent conceits of that Nation, which apprehended nothing about God's favourable intentions to the community of men; but in effect it is to be underſtood extenſively in reference to all people: for the Saviour, the Chriſt, the Lord, of whom this good news did report, was not only to be the Redeemer, and Governour of that ſmall people, but of the World, of every Nation, of all mankind: Here indeed we have παντὶ τῷ λαῷ, to all the people; but in the nunc dimmittis of old Simeon, we have πάντων τῶν λαῶν, of all the peoples; Mine eyes (ſaid he) have ſeen thy ſalvation, which thou haſt prepared before the face of all the peoples: As he was the glory of his people Iſrael; as in him God did viſit and redeem that his people; ſo he was made a light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be for ſalvation to the uttermoſt ends of the earth; He was the expectation of Iſrael; but he was likewiſe the deſire of all nations; He was deſtin'd to rule in Sion; but the Heathen alſo were given for his inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the earth for his poſſeſſion; He was the root of Jeſſe, which ſhould ſtand for an enſign of the people, to which the Gentiles ſhould ſeek; He was that Royal perſon, of whom the Pſalmiſt did ſing, Men ſhall be bleſſed in him, all nations ſhall call him bleſſed.

Matt. 15. 24.
10. 6.
Rom. 9. 4.
Luke 24. 47.
Acts 13. 46.
Iſa. 2. 3.
Zech. 9. 9.
Rom. 9. 4.
Luke 2. 31.
Luke 2. 32.
1. 68.
Acts 13. 47.
Iſa. 49. 6. 42. 6.
Luke 2. 38.
Hag. 2. 7.
Pſal. 2. 8.
Mic. 5. 2.
Iſa. 11. 10.
Pſal. 72. 17.

He was to be born by Nation a Jew, but a man by nature; the Son of man, was a ſtyle which he commonly did own, and affect no leſs, than the Son of Abraham, or of David; he was born indeed under the law, but of a woman; and therefore brother to us all, as partaker of the ſame fleſh and blood; Hence was he endued with an humane compaſſion, and with a fraternal affection toward all men; hence was he diſpoſed to extend the benefit of his charitable and gratious performances unto them all.

Gal. 4. 4.
Heb. 2. 14.

Rom. 15. 10.
Deut. 32. 43.

Pſal. 97. 1. 96. 1.
Τὴν περὶ ἔργων τῦ σωτῆρος ἐπιφάνειαν προλέγει
Totum ad Christum revocemus, ſi volumus iter rectæ intelligentiæ tenere. Aug. in Pſ. 96. 7.
Iſa. 54. 1. 35. 1. 42. 10.

Judæa therefore muſt not engroſs this angelical Goſpel; it is of importance moſt univerſal and unlimited, reaching through all ſucceſſions of time, and all extenſions of place; filling all ages and regions of the world, with matter, and with obligation of joy: Hence even by Moſes antiently (according to St. Paul's interpretation) were all nations upon this account invited to a common joy; Rejoyce, ſaid he, O ye nations with his people. Hence, in foreſight of this event, the Holy Pſalmiſt (as the Fathers expound him) did ſing, The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoyce, let the multitude of Iſles be glad thereof: Hence Sing, O thou barren, thou that didſt not bear, break forth into ſinging and cry aloud, thou that didſt not travel with child---The wilderneſs and the ſolitary place ſhall be glad, the deſart ſhall rejoyce and bloſſom as the roſe------Sing unto the Lord a new ſong, and his praiſe from the end of the earth, ſaid the Evangelical Prophet in regard to this diſpenſation; In fine, this Angel himſelf did interpret his own words, when in conſort with the heavenly Choir he ſang that Antheme, Glory be to God in the higheſt; on earth peace, and good-will toward men; whence we may collect that a piece diffuſed over the earth, and a good-will extended toward all men were implied in theſe tidings of great joy to all people.

Luke 2. 14.

We then are all concerned in theſe tidings, and we may look on them as by this heavenly Evangeliſt imparted to us; whence our duty muſt be to liſten with reverent attention unto them, ſeriouſly to weigh the purport of them, diligently to contemplate the reaſons of that great joy, which effectually ſhould be produced in us by them, as their proper and due reſult; to further which practice, let us take ſome proſpect of this Goſpel, whereby it may appear pleaſant, and apt to kindle a ſprightly joy in our hearts. The matter of it, is the Nativity of our ever bleſſed Lord, and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; for, To you, ſaith our Angel, is born this day a Saviour, who is Chriſt the Lord, an occurrence fraught with all the greateſt cauſes of joy imaginable; as importing innumerable, unexpreſſibly and unconceivably vaſt advantages thence ſpringing to us.

It doth miniſter occaſion of rejoycing for all the bleſſings which did flow from each of his ſalutary undertakings and performances; for all the mercies purchaſed by the merits of his obedience, and by the price of his blood; for all the graces iſſuing from his diſpenſation of the Holy Spirit; for all the benefits conſequent on his illuſtrious reſurrection, aſcention and glorification; as being a good entrance to them, yea, a great progreſs in them, and a certain pledge of their full accompliſhment; for all the work of our redemption was in a manner atchieved, when our Saviour did appear; his incarnation was the great ſtep toward it; as being an act of the humbleſt obedience, and of the higheſt merit, that could any-wiſe be performed, for ſatisfying the juſtice of God, and winning his favour toward us: His taking up life may well ſeem more meritorious, than his laying it down, and the chief paſſion which he could ever undergo; His death was a paſſion, great as death could be; His life alſo was a continual paſſion, or exerciſe of huge patience; but his birth ſeemeth to be the greateſt and ſtrangeſt paſſion of all; involving the loweſt ſubmiſſion, and the deepeſt ſuffering: What nobler ſacrifice could there be, than God's offering himſelf up to mortality, to infirmity, to ſlavery? What obedience can be thought of comparable to that which he did expreſs when he ſaid, Lo I come to do thy will, O God: I came down, not that I might do my own will, but the will of him that ſent me? for him to deſcend from heaven, the region of light and bliſs, into this gloomy and ſad world, for him in a manner to deveſt himſelf of celeſtial Majeſty, and to aſſume the ſorm of a ſervant; for him to be encloſed in a womb, and to come out wailing thence, to ſuck at a breaſt for life, to be carried in arms, and laid in a manger; to enter on a ſtage of Being ſo very low and homely; for him, I ſay, the Lord of Glory, thus to empty, and abaſe himſelf, may not this reaſonably be deemed more, than after his becoming man to ſuſtain all the grievances incident to our nature and ſtate? whence the very aſſumption of fleſh was (ſaith St. Athanaſius) the redemption of all mankind: He was at leaſt thence engaged in the way of acting and ſuffering what-ever was needful for our recovery; and having gone ſo far, aſſuredly he never would flinch or recoil, but would go through with all; being come he would ſhew himſelf come to purpoſe, leaving no part unfiniſhed of his grand deſign.

Heb. 10. 7.
John 6. 38.

Phil. 2. 7, 8.
Ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσεν, ἑαυτὸν ἐταπείνωσεν.

Ἡ πρόσληψις τῆς σαρκὸς ἐλευθέρωσις ἦν πάσης τῆς ἀνθρωπότητος. Ath. Or. 3. c. Arr. p. 385. vid. p. 618.

Λύχνον ἧπτε τὴν ἑαυτοῦ σάρκα, &c. Greg. Naz. Or. 38.

Creatoris ad creaturam deſcenſio credentium eſt ad æterna provectio. Leo M. de Nat. Serm. 5.

So that as they, who celebrate the birth of a Prince, do mean thereby to expreſs their joy for all the good which they do hopefully preſume to enjoy from his protection and conduct afterward in all his life; and as they who welcome the Sun-riſing, do imply their ſatisfaction in the conveniences of his light through the whole enſuing day; ſo may the Nativity of our Lord afford matter of rejoycing for all the train of mighty bleſſings which do ſucceed it. We may therefore now well conſider him born to inſtruct us by his excellent doctrine, and to guide us by his perfect example; born to merit God's mercy and favour toward us by an entire ſubmiſſion to God's pleaſure; in the whole conduct of his life, and in the final reſignation of it: born to renew and ſanctifie our nature, to ſupport and ſtrengthen us in obedience to God's commandments, to ſuccour us in temptations, to comfort us in diſtreſſes by his grace; born to rear himſelf from the grave for confirming our faith, and enſuring our hopes of ſalvation; born to aſcend up above all the heavens to God's right hand, there effectually to intercede for us, thence liberally to diſpenſe all heavenly bleſſings to us: Well may we now rejoyce, as ſeeing him come to diſcloſe the way of happineſs, to eſtabliſh the covenant of Grace, to void all the obſtructions, and ſubdue all the enemies to our welfare: well may we celebrate this birth, as by its virtue bleſſing the Patriarchs, enlightning the Prophets, inſpiring Martyrs with faith and courage, endewing all the Saints, that e'er have been, with grace, and crowning them with glory; ſo that in this Day we have the Paſſion, the Paſch, the Aſcenſion, the Pentecoſt, the Memorials of every Saint ſuggeſted to us; the joys of all our Feſtivals do conſpire or commence in this; which is the head and ſpring, which is the fruitful ſeed, which is the hopeful morning of them all. Πάντα ταῦτα τῆς παρούσης ἡμέρας χάρις ἐστίν· αὕτη γὰρ ἦρξεν τῶν ἐφεξῆς ἀγαθῶν. All theſe things (ſaith St. Gregory Nyſſene) are the grace of this preſent day, for it began the goods, which did in order ſucceed.

Οὐκοῦν καὶ τὰ τοῦ Πάσχα καλὰ τῶν περὶ τὴν γέννησιν εὐφημιῶν μέρος ἐστί. Greg. Nyſſ.

Greg. Nyſſ. Tom. 2. p. 784.

But waving the numberleſs benefits ſo conſequent on the Nativity, we ſhall only touch ſome of thoſe which have a more formal and cloſe relation thereto.

I paſs over the contemplation of that ſweet harmony between the old, and the new World; in which, to our comfortable ſatisfaction, the ſweeteſt attributes of God (his goodneſs, his wiſdom, his fidelity and conſtancy) do illuſtrate themſelves, by completion of the ancient promiſes, prefigurations and predictions touching this event.

I forbear alſo to reflect on the happy alteration and amendment of the World, which our Lord's coming did induce, by comparing the ſtate of things before it, with that which followed it; the conſideration of which caſe is very pleaſant, and productive of joy. Firſt then,

Sapientia & benignitas Dei ac ſalutiferi operis mora capaciores nos ſuæ vocationis effecit, ut quod multis ſignis, multis vocibus, multiſque myſteriis per tot fuerat ſecula pronunciatum, in his diebus Evangelii non eſſet ambiguum, &c. Leo P. de Nat. Serm. 3.

1. Let us conſider, that the Nativity doth import the completion of many ancient promiſes, predictions and prefigurations concerning it; that whereas all former diſpenſations of favour and mercy were as preludes or preambles to this; the Old Law did aim to repreſent it in its myſterious pomps; the chief of providential occurrences did intimate it; the Prophets often in their myſtical raptures did allude to it, and often in clear terms did expreſs it; the gracious deſigns of God, and the longing expectations of mankind being ſo variouſly implied in regard thereto; now all is come to be fulfilled, and perfected in moſt clear, moſt effectual, moſt ſubſtantial accompliſhment:
Now is ſprung up that ſeed of the woman, which according to the firſt Go-
Gen. 3. 15. ſpel preached to Abraham, ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head; Now is the myſti-
22. 18. cal Iſaac, the miraculous Son of promiſe born; Now is that grant to Abra-
Gal. 3. 8, 16. ham, In thy ſeed ſhall all nations of the earth be bleſſed, made good; Now is
Gen. 49. 10. Shiloh come, of whom Jacob foreboded, unto him the gatherings of the people
Deut. 18. 15. ſhall be; Now is that Oracle of Moſes more than verified, A Prophet ſhall
Acts 3. 22. the Lord your God raiſe up unto you of your brethren, like to me, him ſhall ye
7. 37. Num. 24. 16. hear; Now the ſtar is come out of Jacob, The viſion whereof dazled Bala- am, and ſtopped him from curſing that people, in which it ſhould ariſe; Pſal. 132. 11. Now is that oath diſcharged, to David, Of the fruit of thy body will I ſet
Luke 1. 33. upon thy throne; Now thoſe illuſtrious predictions of Iſay, There ſhall come
Iſ. 11. 1. 7. 14. forth a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe-----A Virgin ſhall conceive and bear a ſon;
9. 6. 59. 20. Rom. 11. 26. to us a child is born, to us a ſon is given, and the government ſhall be on his
Jer. 22. 5. ſhoulders; There ſhall come out of Sion the deliverer, and ſhall turn ungodli- 33. 15. Zech. 3. 8. neſs from Jacob, are fully accompliſhed: Now the righteous branch (of
6. 12. which Jeremy and Zachary ſpake) is ſprouted forth; And Ezekiel's One
Ezek. 34. 23. Shepherd, Daniel's Son of man, coming with the clouds of heaven; Micah's
37. 25. Dan. 7. 13. Ruler in Iſrael, whoſe goings forth have been from old; Haggay's Deſire of all
Mic. 5. 2. Nations; Malachy's Angel of the Covenant, and Son of Righteouſneſs have Matt. 2. 6. Hag. 2. 7. all in truth appeared: Now is that glorious King and Captain arrived, Mal. 3. 1. 4. 2. whom the holy Oracles do ſo magnificently deſcribe; whom Moſes and Joſhua, whom David and Solomon in ſo many pat circumſtances did fore-Pſ. 2. 6. 45. 6. ſhadow; whom God would ſet upon his holy hill of Sion; The ſcepter of
72. 11. whoſe Kingdom is a mighty ſcepter; who ſhould raiſe the tabernacle of David Acts 15. 16. that is fallen; before whom all Kings ſhould fall down, and whom all nations
Am. 9. 11. Luke 1. 13. ſhould ſerve; who ſhould reign over the houſe of Jacob for ever, and of whoſe
Dan. 7. 13. Kingdom there ſhall be no end.

Mic. 4. 7. Aug. in Pſ 96. Now what can be more delightful, or ſatisfactory to our mind, than to reflect on this ſweet harmony of things, this goodly correſpondence between the old, and new World; wherein ſo pregnant evidences of God's chief attributes (of his goodneſs, of his wiſdom, of his fidelity and conſtancy) all conſpiring to our benefit do ſhine? Is it not pleaſant to contemplate how provident God hath ever been for our welfare? what trains from the world's beginning, or ever ſince our unhappy fall he hath been laying to repair and reſtore us? how wiſely he hath ordered all diſpenſations with a convenient reference and tendency to this maſterpiece of grace? how ſteady he hath been in proſecuting his deſigns, and how faithful in accompliſhing his promiſes concerning it?

Non itaque novo conſilio Deus rebus humanis, nec ſerâ miſeratione conſuluit, ſed à conſtitutione mundi unam eandémque omnibus cauſam ſalutis inſtituit. Leo P. de Nat. Serm. 3.

If the holy Patriarchs did ſee this day, aud were glad; if a glimpſe there- Jo. 8. 56.
of did cauſe their hearts * to leap with them; if its very dawn had on the Spirits of the Prophets ſo vigorous an influence; what comfort and complacence ſhould we feel in this its real preſence, and bright aſ-pect on us? how ſenſibly ſhould we be affected with this our happy advantage above them; the which our Lord himſelf then did teach us to eſtimate duly, when he ſaid, Bleſſed are your eyes, for they Mat. 13. 16.
ſee; and your ears, for they hear; for verily I ſay unto you, that many Pro- 17.
phets and righteous men have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them; and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

* Ἠγαλλιάσατο.
Magnam enim jocunditatem tunc carpebant ipſi Sancti Prophetæ, cùm ea videbant in Spiritu, non jam impleta, ſed adhuc futura —Aug. in Pſ. 96.

2. Let us conſider what alteration our Lord's coming did induce, by comparing the ſtate of things before it to that which followed it. The old Eph. 2. 14.
World then conſiſting of two parts, ſevered by a ſtrong wall of partition, made up of difference in opinion, in practice, in affection, together with Acts 10. 28.
a ſtrict prohibition to one of holding entercourſe with the other.

Of one, and that far the greater part, St. Paul hath given us theſe deſcri-ptions and characters; They were aliens from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, Eph. 2. 12.
and ſtrangers from the covenant, having no hope, and being without God in the world; They were by nature the children of wrath, and of diſobedience; 2. 3.
They were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, walking according to the courſe of this 2. 1.
world, according to the Prince of the power of the air, the Spirit that worketh in the children of diſobedience; They did walk in the vanity of their Eph. 4. 17—mind, having their underſtanding darkned, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that was in them, becauſe of the blindneſs of their heart; and being paſt feeling, did give themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs; They had their converſation in the luſts of the fleſh, fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind; being foooliſh, 2. 3.
diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and plea-ſures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another: Such was the caſe (the diſmally wretched caſe) of the Gentile world; ſuch were our foreſathers (ſuch after them of courſe, by fatal conſequence, ſhould we have been) They were in their minds blinded with groſs ignorance, and deluded with foul errours; they were in their wills and affections corrupted with great diſorder, perverſneſs, ſenſuality, malice; they did in their converſation practice all ſorts of impiety, iniquity and impurity; their conceptions of God were very unworthy, and their worſhip anſwera-bly ſuch (full of ſottiſh, ſavage, beaſtly ſuperſtitions) their principles were vain, and their life conformably diſſolute; in ſhort, they lived under the domination and influence of wicked Spirits; who thence are ſtyled Lords and Princes of this world, of this air, of this ſecular darkneſs: Even of the wiſeſt among them (the number of whom, notwithſtanding the clatter their writings made, was very ſmall and inconſi-derable) of thoſe who by the conduct of natural light ſtrove to diſengage themſelves from vulgar miſtakes and miſcarriages, the caſe was little better; for even their minds after all their ſtudious diſquiſitions and debates) proved dark and giddy; full of ignorance, of errour, of doubt in regard to the main points of religion, and of morality; ſome of them flatly denying the exiſtence, or (which in effect is the ſame) the providence of God;
the natural diſtinction between good and evil, the ſpiritual nature and future ſubſiſtence of our ſouls, the diſpenſation of rewards and puniſhments after

Tit. 3. 3. Col. 3. 7.
(Eph. 5. 8. Col. 2. 13.
1 Cor. 6. 11. 2 Cor. 4. 4.
1 Theſſ. 4. 5. 1 Pet. 4. 3.
Gal. 4. 8. Rom. 1. 29.)

Eph. 6. 12. 2. 2.
(John 12. 31. 14. 30. 16. 11.
2 Cor. 4. 4. 2 Tim. 2. 16.
Col. 1. 13. 2. 15. Acts 26. 18.)

Διαλογισμοῖς.
Rom. 1. 21—28.

after this life; others wavering in doubt, or having but faint perſuaſions about theſe matters; few or none having clear notions, or ſteady opinions about any ſuch things; whence their practice, in correſpondence to their rules, muſt needs have been very looſe, or very lame; ſo that well might our Apoſtle ſay of them, They became vain in their reaſonings, and their fooliſh heart was darkned; profeſſing themſelves wiſe, they became fools; And as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do thoſe things which are not convenient.

Col. 2. 17.
Heb. 8. 5. 10. 1.
Rom. 8. 3.
Gal. 3. 21.
Heb. 7. 18, 19.

As for the other part, or little parcel of men, the condition of that was alſo very low; if the reſt of the world did lie in dark night, they did live but in a dusky twilight; their Religion was much wrapt up in ſhadow and myſtery; they had but dilute Idea's of God's nature, and ſcant diſcoveries of his will; their law or rule of practice, in divers reſpects was defective and infirm; they were lock'd under the diſcipline of childiſh rudiments, ſuting their raw capacities, and under the bondage of ſlaviſh yokes befitting their ſtubborn diſpoſitions; which defailances in notion their practice commonly did out-ſtrip; being fond, corrupt, hypocritical, void of interiour, ſubſtantial and genuine righteouſneſs; as the old Prophets did often complain, and as our Lord, with his Apoſtles, did urge.

Gal. 3. 22.
Rom. 11. 32.
3. 9, 19.
Iſa. 9. 1.
Mat. 4. 15.
Rom. 8. 22.
Iſa. 60. 1.
Pſal. 98. 2.

Such was the ſtate of the World in its parts, and joyntly of the whole it may be ſaid, that it was ſhut up under ſin and guilt; under darkneſs and weakneſs, under death and corruption, under ſorrow and woe: that no full declaration of God's pleaſure, no clear overture of mercy, no expreſs grant of ſpiritual aid, no certain redemption from the filth, or the force of ſin, from the ſtroak of death, from due puniſhment hereafter; no encouragements ſutable to high devotion, or ſtrict virtue, were any-wiſe in a ſolemn way exhibited or diſpenſed before our Lord's appearance: ſo that well might all men be then repreſented as Cimmerians, ſitting in darkneſs, in the region and ſhadow of death; well may we ſuppoſe all ages foregoing to have teemed with hope, and deſire of this happy day; or that (as St. Paul ſaith) the whole creation (that is, all mankind) groneth together, and travelleth together until now; as labouring with pangs of implicit deſire, or under a painful ſenſe of needing a Saviour; well might Eſay thus proclaim his coming; Ariſe, ſhine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is riſen upon thee; for behold darkneſs ſhall cover the land, and groſs darkneſs the people; but the Lord ſhall ariſe upon thee, and his glory ſhall be ſeen upon thee, and the Gentiles ſhall come to thy light, and Kings to the brightneſs of thy riſing: for, Now the Lord hath made known his ſalvation, his righteouſneſs hath he openly ſhewed in the ſight of the heathen; The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth do ſee the ſalvation of our God.

1 Theſſ. 5. 5.
(2 Cor. 3. 18. 4. 6.)
Heb. 8. 11.
Jer. 31. 33.

Now we are all children of the light, and of the day; all do know God from the leaſt to the greateſt; the rareſt, the deepeſt notions are grown common and obvious; every Child is inſtructed in the higheſt truths, every Peaſant is become a great Philoſopher, (beyond Ariſtotle, or Plato, or Epictetus) skilful of the beſt knowledge, able to direct his life in the beſt way, capable of obtaining the beſt good.

Acts 2. 17.
Joel. 2. 16.
Tit. 2. 11.
Luke 24. 47.

Now the Spirit of God (the ſpirit of direction, of ſuccour, of comfort ſpiritual) is poured upon all fleſh. Now the grace of God, that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared to all men; fully inſtructing them in their duty, and ſtrongly enabling them to perform it, freely offering them mercy, mightily encouraging them with hopes of moſt bleſſed rewards.

Now Jew and Gentile are re-united and compacted in one body; walking in the ſame light, and under obligation to the ſame laws; ſharing in a common redemption and inheritance; being inſeparably linked together with the bands of faith, of charity, of ſpiritual fraternity; thus old things are paſſed away, behold all things are become new, in virtue and conſequence of our Lord's appearance: In contemplation of which ſo great, ſo general, ſo happy a change, how can we forbear to rejoyce?

Eph. 3 6.
2. 15.
2 Cor. 5. 17.
Διόρθωσις.
Heb. 9. 10.

But farther, that we may yet more nearly touch the point:

3. Let us conſider that the Nativity of our Lord is a grand inſtance, a pregnant evidence, a rich earneſt of Almighty God's very great affection and benignity toward mankind: for, In this (ſaith St. John) the love of God was manifeſted, that God ſent his only begotten ſon into the world; and Through the tender mercies of our God (ſang old Zachary) the day ſpring from on high did viſit us: This indeed is the peculiar experiment, wherein that moſt divine attribute did ſhew and ſignalize it ſelf. The power of God doth brightly ſhine in the creation, the wiſdom of God may clearly be diſcerned in the government of things; but the incarnation of God is that work, is that diſpenſation of grace, wherein the divine goodneſs doth moſt conſpicuouſly diſplay it ſelf: How indeed poſſibly could God have demonſtrated a greater exceſs of kindneſs toward us, than by thus for our ſake and good ſending his deareſt Son out of his boſom into this ſordid and ſervile eſtate, ſubjecting him to all the infirmities of our frail nature, expoſing him to the worſt inconveniences of our low condition? what expreſſions can ſignifie, what compariſons can ſet out the ſtupendious vaſtneſs of this kindneſs? If we ſhould imagine, that a great prince ſhould put his only ſon (a ſon moſt lovely, and worthily moſt beloved) into rags, ſhould diſmiſs him from his Court, ſhould yield him up into the hardeſt ſlavery, merely to the intent, that he thereby might redeem from captivity the meaneſt and baſeſt of his ſubjects, how faint a reſemblance would this be of that immenſe goodneſs, of that incomparable mercy, which in this inſtance the King of all the World hath declared toward us his poor vaſſals, his indeed unworthy rebels?

1 John 4. 9.
Joh. 3. 16, 17.
Eph. 2. 4.
Luke 1. 78.

Apparuerat antè potentia in rerum creation, apparebat ſapientia in earum gubernatione, ſed benignitas miſericordiæ nunc maximè apparuit in humanitate. Bern. de Nat. Serm. 1.

Semper quidem diverſis modis, multiſque menſuris humano generi bonitas divina conſuluit, & plurima providentiæ ſuæ munera omnibus retrò ſeculis clementer impartiit; ſed in noviſſimis temporibus omnem abundantiam ſolitæ benignitatis exceſſit; quando in Chriſto ipſa ad peccatores miſericordia, ipſa ad errantes veritas, ipſa ad mortuos vita deſcendit, &c. P. Leo M. de Nat. Serm. 4.

(Pſal 36. 6.
108. 4.)

And what greater reaſon of joy can there be, than ſuch an aſſurance of his love, on whoſe love all our good dependeth, in whoſe love all our felicity conſiſteth? what can be more delightful than to view the face of our Almighty Lord ſo graciouſly ſmiling upon us?

Should we not be extremely glad, ſhould we not be proud, if our earthly prince by any ſingular mark would expreſs himſelf kindly affected to us? how much more ſhould we reſent ſuch a teſtimony of God's favour; how worthily may our ſouls be tranſported with a ſenſe of ſuch affection?

4. We may conſider our Lord's nativity, as not only expreſſing ſimple good-will, but implying a perfect reconciliation, a firm peace, a ſteady friendſhip eſtabliſhed between God and us: or that it did not only proceed from love, but did alſo produce love to us. We did ſtand at a great diſtance, in eſtrangement, yea in enmity toward God; our firſt parents had by preſumptuous diſobedience revolted from him; and we inſiſting on the footſteps of their Apoſtaſie continued in defiance of him; all men had ſinned, and fallen ſhort of the glory of God; There was not a righteous man upon earth, that did good, and ſinned not; whence unavoidably the wrath of the moſt holy God was incenſed, the juſtice of the moſt righteous Lord was engaged againſt us; thence did iſſue a ſad doom, thence a juſt ſentence of capital puniſhment was denounced on us; no pretence of favour, no over-

Rom. 3. 24.
9. 23.
Gal. 3. 22.
Eccl. 7. 20.
Leo de Nat. Serm. 2.

Ἀδύνατον γέγονε τῇ φύσει λογικῇ οὔσῃ, καὶ ἑκουσίως ἁμαρτησάσῃ, καὶ ὑπὸ καταδίκην θανάτου γενομένῃ ἑαυτὴν ἀνακαλέσασθαι εἰς ἐλευθερίαν. Ath. p. 638.

Ἀδύνατον ἑτέρως τὰ καθαρὸν καὶ ἀναμάρτητον ἐπ' ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεως παραδειχθῆναι, εἰ μὴ Θεὸς ἐν σαρκὶ πιστεύοιτο εἶναι, ὁ τὴν ἀναμάρτητον δικαιοσύνην εἰς κόσμον εἰσαγαγών, &c. Ath. de Incarn. Verbi.

Eph. 2. 15, 16,

Rom. 8. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 19.

Τὸ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ σύμπτωμα εἰς ἀσύγκειτον ἀνάστημα χειρὸς ἀνεστήσατο, ἐν ὁμοιώματι σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας ἀφθεὶς, καὶ κατακρίνας τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ἐν τῇ σαρκί. Ath. p. 620.

Εἰ γὰρ μὴ ἐν τῇ ἁμαρτησάσῃ φύσει ἡ ἀναμαρτησία ὤφθη, πῶς κατεκρίθη ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῇ σαρκί. Id. p. 368.

(1 Pet. 1. 19. Heb. 7. 26.)
John. 14. 30.——ἐν ἐμοὶ οὐκ ἔχει οὐδέν.
John 19. 6. ——οὐχ εὑρίσκω ἐν αὐτῷ αἰτίαν.
Matt. 3. 17. 1 Tim. 3. 16.
Jer. 23. 6. 33. 16.

overture of peace, no hope of redreſs did then appear; we no-wiſe being able to expunge our guilt, to repair our offences, to recover out of that corruption in the mind and will, which did ſeal us up to ruine, indiſpoſing us either to find, or to entertain mercy; But our Lord's coming did appeaſe that anger, did mollify that juſtice, did ſuſpend that condemnation, did cloſe the breach, and ſlay the enmity; God (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) ſending his Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin, did condemn ſin in the fleſh: for, how can God now avert his face from us, whom his only dear Son hath vouchſafed to make and own for his brethren? how can he look with an eye of diſpleaſure on that nature, wherewith that Son of his love ſtandeth clothed before him? how can he abide offended with our race, in which pure innocence and perfect obedience are found; he now appearing with us, and for us, in whom not the ſtricteſt juſtice, no the ſhrewdeſt malice can deſcry any fault or blemiſh; in whom therefore God is throughly well-pleaſed? Since we have Emanuel, God with us,---God manifeſted in our fleſh. The Lord our righteouſneſs partaker of our infirmity, interceſſour and advocate for his own fleſh and blood, ready to do and ſuffer whatever God pleaſeth to require on our behalf, how can God be againſt us? Shall God and man perſiſt at diſtance or diſaffection, who are ſo cloſely related, who are indeed ſo intimately united in one perſon? ſhall heaven and earth retain enmity, which have ſo kindly embraced, and kiſ-Pſal. 85. 11. ſed each other; ſince truth hath ſprouted from the earth, and righteouſneſs hath looked down from heaven? ſhall the war go on, when the great Medi-
Iſa. 9. 6. atour and Umpire of peace is come; preaching peace to them that are afar off
Acts 10. 36.
Eph. 2. 17. and to them that are near? Can death any longer reign over us, or our diſ-
1 Cor. 2. 8. grace and miſery continue, now that the Prince of life, the Lord of glory, the Captain of ſalvation doth appear for our relief?

Now then what can be more worthy of joy, than ſuch a bleſſed turn of affairs? how can we otherwiſe than with exceeding gladneſs ſolemnize ſuch a peace? a peace accorded with him, who in forces ſo infinitely doth overmatch us; who at his pleaſure can utterly quell us; who with the greateſt eaſe, with leſs than a word of his mouth, can daſh us to nothing, or hurl us down into an abyſs of remedileſs woe? how can we avoid being extremely ſatisfied at the recovery of his favour and friendſhip, which alone can be the foundation of our ſafety and welfare, which is the ſole fountain of all good, of all comfort, of all felicity?

5. Our Lord's nativity doth infer a great honour, and a high preferment to us: no-wiſe indeed could mankind be ſo dignified, or our na-
Eph. 3. 10, 17. ture ſo advanced as hereby: No wiſdom can deviſe a way beyond this, whereby God ſhould honour his moſt ſpecial favourites, or promote them (Ἡνωμένος πατρὶ κατὰ πνεῦμα, ἡμῖν δὲ κατὰ σάρκα. Ath p. 612.) to a nearneſs unto himſelf. For hence we become allied to God, in a moſt ſtrait affinity, his eternal Son being made our brother; hence as touching the blood-royal of heaven we do in dignity o'er-top all the creation; ſo that what the Pſalmiſt uttered concerning man, is verified in the Pſal. 8. 5. moſt comprehenſive ſence, Thou haſt crowned him with glory and honour,
Heb. 2. 7. and haſt ſet him over the works of thy hands; thou haſt put all things in ſub-
Col. 2. 10.
Eph. 2. 22. jection under his feet: for now the Son of Man, being alſo the Son of God, is the Head of all principality and power, is the Lord of all things, is the Sovereign Prince of all the world; is placed far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but alſo in that which is to come. That is a peculiar honour, to which the higheſt Angels cannot pretend; for, he took not the nature of Angels, but he took the ſeed of Abraham; whence thoſe noble creatures are become in a manner inferiour to poor us; and according to juſt obligation, willingly to adore our nature; for, when God brought his firſt begotten Son into the world, he ſaid, Let all the Angels of God worſhip him: Is not indeed our fleſh become adorable, as the true Shechinah, as the everlaſting place of the ſupreme Majeſty, wherein the fulneſs of the God-head dwelleth bodily; as the moſt holy ſhrine of the divinity; as the Orb of inacceſſible light; as more than all this, if more could be expreſſed, or if we could expound that text, the word was made fleſh, and dwelt in us? May not our ſoul worthily claim the higheſt reſpect, all whoſe faculties (being endewed with unmeaſurable participations of the Holy Spirit) have been turned to a perfect harmony with the all-wiſe underſtanding, and the moſt pure will of God? yea, which hath been admitted into the neareſt conſortſhip, into the ſtricteſt union with the eternal Word; hath become an ingredient of him, who is the wiſedom, and the power of God? It was a great dignity that man ſhould be made according to the image of God, but it is a more ſublime glory, that God ſhould be made after the image of man, κατὰ πάντα ὁμοιωθεὶς, being made like to us in all things, bating only ſin, whch is no part of us, but an unnatural excreſcence, or a deflection from our nature: How could we be ſo raiſed up to God as by his thus ſtooping down to us? what can be imagined more honourable to us, than that God ſhould deem us worthy of ſuch condeſcenſion? this, this indeed is our exaltation, that God for us ſhould expreſs not only ſo vaſt charity, but ſo prodigious humility.

Acts 10. 36.
Eph. 1 21.
Phil. 2. 9.
1 Pet. 3. 22.
Heb. 2. 17.
Heb. 1. 6.
Ἡ σὰρξ ἐθεολογήθη. Ath. p. 597.
Col. 2. 9.
Totum corpus implet tota divinitas. Leo de Nat. Ser. 10.
John 1. 14.
3. 34.
1 Cor. 1. 24.
Qui cùm origini humanæ multum dederit, quod nos ad imaginem ſuam fecit, reparationi noſtræ longè amplius tribuit, cùm ſervili formæ ipſe ſe Dominus coaptavit. Leo de Nat. Serm. 4.
Heb. 2. 17.
Exultent ergo in laudem Dei corda credentium, & mirabilia ejus confiteantur filii hominum, quoniam, in hoc præcipuè Dei opere humilitas noſtra cognoſcit, quanti eam ſuus conditor æſtimârit. Leo Serm. 4.

And is it not good matter of joy to be thus highly graced? when are men better pleaſed, than when they are preferred; then eſpecially, when from the meaneſt ſtate, from the dunghil, or from the duſt, they are raiſed to be ſet among Princes, and made to inherit the throne of glory? wherefore this being our caſe, that we ſons of earth, children of corruption, and brethren of worms (in Job's ſtyle) we exiles of paradiſe, we heirs of death and miſery; we, that by our nature are the loweſt of all intelligent creatures, that by our merits were debaſed beneath the Beaſts that periſh, that we are aſſumed to ſuch relations, that we are ennobled to ſuch a pitch, that our nature hath mounted ſo high above all creatures, with what enlargement of heart ſhould we entertain a diſpenſation ſo wonderful; how welcome ſhould that day be, which doth introduce it?

Pſal. 113. 7, 8.
1 Sam. 2. 8.
Job 17. 14.
Pſal. 39. 12.
Hic infirmitatis noſtræ ſuſpiciens conditionem, propter quos ad inferna deſcendit eoſdem in cœleſtibus collocavit. Leo de Nat. 5.

6. Finally, if we ſurvey all principal cauſes of joy, and ſpecial exultation, we ſhall find them all concurring in this event.

Is a meſſenger of good news embraced with joy? Behold the great Evangeliſt is come, with his mouth full of news, moſt admirable, moſt acceptable: He, who doth acquaint us, that God is well pleaſed, that man is reſtored, that the adverſary is caſt down, that paradiſe is ſet open, and immortality retrieved; that truth and righteouſneſs, peace and joy, ſalvation and happineſs are deſcended, and come to dwell on earth; He of whom the Prophet told, How beautiful upon the Mountains are the feet of him,

Apoc. 12. 10.
John 14. 30.
Luke 10. 18.
Iſa. 52. 7.

Nah. 1. 15. him that bringeth good tidings; that publiſheth peace, that bringeth good ti-
Rom. 10. 15. dings of good, that publiſheth ſalvation, that ſaith unto Sion, Thy God reign- eth; He who doth himſelf thus declare the drift and purport of his meſſage;
Iſa. 61. 1, 2. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, to preach good tidings unto the meek;
Luke 4. 18. he hath ſent me to bind up the broken hearted; to proclaim liberty to the cap- tives, and opening of the priſon to them that are bound; to proclaim the accep- table year of the Lord, to comfort all that mourn.

Is the birth of a Prince by honeſt ſubjects to be commemorated with Iſa. 11. 2. joyous feſtivity? Behold a Prince born to all the world; a Prince under-Pſal. 45. & 72. taking to rule mankind with ſweeteſt clemency, and exact juſtice; a Prince Jer. 23. 6. bringing with him all peace and proſperity; in whoſe days Judah ſhall be ſaved, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely; who ſhall protect us in aſſured reſt and ſafety; ſhall ſecure us from all danger and miſchief; ſhall atchieve moſt gallant and glorious exploits in our behalf; ſhall vanquiſh all the enemies of our welfare, ſhall reſcue us from the worſt ſlaveries and miſchiefs;
Luke 1. 71, 74. ſhall ſettle us in a moſt free and happy ſtate: He who bringeth ſalvation from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us, that being delivered from the hands of our enemies, we might ſerve him without fear, in holineſs and righteouſneſs before him, all the days of our life: Now therefore it is Apoc. 19. 6. ſeaſonable to cry out, Allelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, let us
11. 15. be glad and rejoyce, and give honour to him.

Iſa. 9. 3. May victory worthily beget exultation? See the invincible warriour
Apoc. 6. 2. doth iſſue forth into the field conquering and to conquer: He that ſhall baffle Luke 11. 22. and rifle the ſtrong one, our formidable adverſary; that ſhall rout all the
Col. 2. 15. forces of hell, and triumph over the powers of darkneſs; that utterly ſhall (John 6. 33.) defeat ſin, and ſlay death it ſelf; and ſhall ſubdue the world, and lay all things proſtrate at his feet; behold the Captain of our ſalvation; arrayed with glorious humility, and armed with a mighty patience; See, the great 1 John 3. 8. blow it ſtruck, at which the infernal powers do ſtagger; the Devil's pride Rom. 16. 20. and envy are abaſed; all the enemies are amazed, are daunted, are confounded at his preſence; they cannot ſtand, they break, they ſcatter, they flee before him.

Is a proclamation of peace, after rueful wars, to be ſolemnized with alacrity? Behold then everlaſting peace between heaven and earth, a general Eph. 2. 17. peace among men, a ſound peace between each good man and himſelf are
(Iſa. 57. 2.) ſettled and publiſhed; the illuſtrious herald, the noble hoſtage of them is Acts 10. 36. arrived; the prince of peace himſelf doth bring all peace unto us.
Iſa. 9. 6.

Is ſatisfaction of deſire, and hope very pleaſant? Behold the deſire of all nations, the expectation of Iſrael, he for whom the whole creation groaned, is come.

Is recovery of liberty delectable to poor ſlaves and captives? Behold, the Redeemer is come out of Sion; the pretious ranſome, ſufficient to purchaſe the freedom of many worlds, is laid down; unblemiſhed innocence, purity (Gal. 3. 22.) and perfection appearing in humane nature have procured a releaſment for us; have unlocked the priſon of ſin detaining us, have knocked off the ſhackles of guilt ſorely pinching and galling our conſciences; have wreſted us from the hands of thoſe proud Maſters, who claimed a right, who exerciſed a moſt tyrannous power over us; He is come, that proclaimeth liberty to the captives, and opening of the priſon to them that are bound; The time is come of which the Prophet foretold -----The ranſomed of the Lord ſhall return, and come to Sion with ſongs, and everlaſting joy upon their heads; they ſhall obtain joy and gladneſs; and ſorrow and ſighing ſhall flee away.

Nam ſuperbia hoſtis antiqui non immeritò ſibi in omnes homines jus tyrannicum vindicabat nec indebito dominatu premebat, quos à mandato Dei ſpontaneos in obſequium ſuæ voluntatis allecerat. Leo de Nativ. Serm. 2.

Luke 4. 18. Iſa. 35. 10.

Is an overture of health acceptable to ſick and languiſhing perſons? Behold the great Phyſician, endewed with admirable skill, and furniſhed with infallible remedies, is come, to cure us of our maladies, and eaſe us of our pains; to bind up our wounds, and to pour in balm (the moſt ſovereign balm of his own blood) into them; to free us not only from all mortiferous diſeaſes, but from mortality it ſelf: He, who was ſent to bind up and heal the broken-hearted; He, who himſelf took our infirmities, and bare our ſickneſſes; He, of whom the Prophet (in relation to corporal, and much more to ſpiritual infirmities) did foretel; ---- God will come and ſave you; then the eyes of the blind ſhall be opened, and the ears of the deaf ſhall be unſtopped; then ſhall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb ſhall ſing; He whoſe art no diſeaſe can reſiſt, who is able to cure our moſt deſperate, our moſt inveterate diſtempers; to heal the corruption and impotency of our nature, to avoid the ignorances and errours of our underſtanding, to correct the ſtupidity of our hearts, the perverſeneſs of our wills, the diſorder of our affections; to mitigate our anguiſh of conſcience, and cleanſe our ſores of guilt; by various efficacious medicines, by the wholeſome inſtructions of his doctrine, by the powerful inſpirations of his grace, by the refreſhing comforts of his Spirit, by the ſalutary vertue of his merits and ſufferings.

Luke 10. 33.
Matt. 9. 12.
1 Pet. 2. 24.
Iſa. 61. 1.
Luke 4. 18.
Iſa. 53. 4.
Mat. 8. 17.
Iſa. 35. 5.
Mat. 11. 5.
Luke. 5. 17.
(John 12. 40.
Acts 10. 38.
Luke 10 34.)
(Ezek. 36. 26.
Eph. 2. 10.)

Is mirth ſeaſonable on the day of marriage? Behold the greateſt wedding that ever was, is this day ſolemnized: heaven and earth are contracted; divinity is eſpouſed to humanity; a ſacred, an indiſſoluble knot is tyed between God and man, The bridegroom is come forth out of his chamber (Verbum Dei de utero Virginali) clad in his nuptial garment of fleſh, and ready to wed the Church his beloved Spouſe; Let us therefore be glad and rejoyce; for the marriage of the lamb is come, and his wife hath made her ſelf ready.

In natali Domini quaſi in nuptiis ſpiritalibus ſponſæ ſuæ Eccleſiæ Chriſtus adjunctus eſt ———— tunc proceſſit ſponſus de thalamo ſuo, hoc eſt, Dei de utero virginali. Aug. de temp. Serm. 2.

Ἡ παστὰς ἐν ᾗ ὁ λόγος ἐνυμφεύσατο τὴν σάρκα. Procl. in Eph. p. 1.

Joel 2. 16.

Apoc. 19. 7.

Is the acceſs of a good friend to be received with chearful gratulation? Behold the deareſt and beſt friend of all mankind (moſt able, moſt willing, moſt ready to perform all good offices; to impart wholeſome advice, needful aid, ſweet converſe, and ſeaſonable conſolation) is arrived to viſit us, to ſojourn with us, to dwell with us for ever.

Is opportune relief grateful to perſons in a forlorn condition, pinched with extreme want, or plunged in any hard diſtreſs? Behold, a merciful, a bountiful, a mighty ſaviour and ſuccourer, undertaking to comfort all that mourn; inviting all ſuch to receive from him a plentiful ſupply for their needs, a comfortable eaſe in their preſſures, a happy riddance from their calamities; who crieth aloud, If any one thirſteth, let him come to me and drink; Come to me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt.

*Ἐκέκραξε.
John 7. 37.
Iſa. 55. 1.
44. 3.
Mat. 11. 28.

Is the Sun-riſing comfortable, after a tedious, darkſome and cold night? See, the Sun of righteouſneſs is riſen with healing in his wings, diſpenſing all about his pleaſant rays, and kindly influences: The day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us; diffuſing an univerſal light upon the ſouls of men, whereby the night of ignorance is diſpelled, the ſpectres of errour are vaniſhed, the miſts of doubt are ſcattered; whereby we clearly and aſſuredly diſcern all truths of importance to us, and worthy of our knowledge; concerning the nature and attributes, the works and providence, the will and pleaſure of God; concerning our ſelves, our natural and original, our duty and intereſt, our future ſtate, and final doom: Our light is come, and the glory of the Lord is riſen upon us; the light of the world, the true light, enlightning every man;

Mal. 4. 2.
Luke 1. 78, 79.
Iſa. 60. 1.
John 8. 12.
9. 5. 1. 9.

Luke 1.79. man; by whoſe luſtre all fleſh may ſee the ſalvation of God, and which guideth our feet in the way of peace, doth viſibly ſhine forth upon us.

Never indeed did heaven with ſo fair and ſerene a countenance ſmile upon earth, as then it did, when this (ἀςὴρ λαμπρὸς ϗ ὀρθρινὸς,) bright and morning-ſtar did ſpring up above our horizon, bringing this goodly day; and with it ſhedding life and chear among us. Apoc. 22. 16.

From this auſpicious day did commence the revocation of that fatal curſe, by which we were expelled from paradiſe, adjudged to death, and committed to hell; from thence we became re-inſtated in a condition of hope, and in a fair capacity of happineſs; from thence is to be dated a return of joy into this Region of diſconſolateneſs. In this nativity mankind was born, or did revive from manifold deaths; from a legal, a moral, a natural, an eternal death; from lying dead in irreparable guilt, and under an inſuperable power of ſin; from having our bodies irrecoverably diſſolved by corruption, and our ſouls immerſed into that ſecond more ghaſtly death, of perpetual incurable anguiſh.

It is the birth-day of the Church.

Generatio enim Chriſti origo eſt populi Chriſtiani, & natalis capitis natalis eſt corporis. P. Leo de Nat. Serm. 6.

Sicut cum Chriſto in paſſione crucifixi, in reſurrectione reſuſcitati, in aſcenſione ad dextram Patris collocati ità cum ipſo ſumus in hac nativitate congeniti. Ibid.

It is in effect therefore the birth-day of the world; the beginning of a new, better, eternal life to men, (offered to all, and effectually beſtowed on thoſe, who will embrace it) which we now do celebrate; all reaſon therefore we have to rejoyce moſt heartily, and moſt abundantly; As the goods thence accruing to us are in multitude innumerable, in quality ineſtimable, in duration immenſe; ſo in ſome correſpondence ſhould our Joy be very intenſe, very effuſe, very ſtable; The contemplation of them ſhould infuſe ſomewhat of that unſpeakable joy, whereof St. Peter ſpeaketh; we ſhould be filled (according to St. Paul's expreſſion) with all joy and peace in believing them; we ſhould hold faſt (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews adviſeth.) the confidence and rejoycing of hope, grounded on them, firm to the end.

Χαρᾷ ἀνεκλαλήτῳ. 1 Pet. 1. 8.
Rom. 15. 13.
Phil. 1. 25.
Heb. 3. 6.
Rom. 12. 12.

Having ſo many, ſo great cauſes of joy, are we not very ſtupid, are we not ſtrangely croſs and perverſe if we neglect ſo pleaſant a duty?

To conclude, Of all the days that riſe upon us this undoubtedly is the Queen, crowned by God's own hand with ſovereign bleſſings; God hath avowed it to be the day of his peculiar making, and therefore of our ſpecial rejoycing; for thus of old the inſpired Pſalmiſt did teach and exhort us to keep Chriſtmas; This is the day, which the Lord hath made, let us rejoyce and be glad therein.

Pſal. 118. 24.
Mat. 21. 42.
21. 9.
Acts 4. 11.
1 Pet. 2. 7.

SER-

Sermon XLIV.

The Sufferings of Christ foretold in the Old Testament.

ACTS III. 18.

But thoſe things, which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his Prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled.

MANY good arguments there are, different in kind, which conſpire to perſuade the truth of our religion; ſuch as are the intrinſick reaſonableneſs, excellency and perfection of its doctrine; the miraculous works performed in atteſtation thereto; the ſpecial favour of providence declared in the ſupport and propagation thereof; but upon no other ground do the Scriptures ſo much build its truth, and our obligation to embrace it, as upon the exact correſpondence and conformity thereof to all the ancient Scriptures, which did foreſhew or foretell its revelation and introduction into the World; to thoſe eſpecially which deſcribed the perſonal characters, circumſtances and performances of our Lord: to this our Lord in his diſcourſes, and diſputes with incredulous people, referred them; Search the Scriptures, (ſaid he) becauſe in them ye expect to have eternal life (that is, to find the true way of ſaving truth leading thereto) and thoſe are they which teſtify of me; by this he inſtructed and convicted his Diſciples; beginning from Moſes and from all the Prophets he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himſelf: and, Theſe (ſaid he to them preſently before his departure) are the words which I ſpake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things muſt be fulfilled which were written in the Law of Moſes, and in the Prophets, and in the Pſalms concerning me: This the Apoſtles in all their preaching (whereby they taught, proved and perſuaded, the Chriſtian doctrine) did chiefly inſiſt upon; Moſes (ſaith St. Peter) truly ſaid unto the Fathers, yea, and all the Prophets from Samuel, and thoſe that follow after, as many as have ſpoken, have likewiſe foretold of theſe days; and, To him (ſaith he again) give all the Prophets witneſs, that through his name whoſoever believeth in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins. And, of St. Paul 'tis ſaid, that he mightily convinced the Jews------ſhewing by the Scriptures, that Jeſus was the Chriſt; and ---- he expounded, and teſtified the Kingdom of God, perſuading them concerning Jeſus, both out of the law of Moſes, and out of the Prophets; thus the chief Apoſtles and founders of our religion in their publick diſcourſes; and in their Epiſtles, they obſerve the ſame method; as particularly aſſerting Chriſtian doctrines and duties by the teſtimonies of prophetical Scriptures, ſo generally affirming our religion to be chiefly grounded on them; of which Salvation (ſaith St. Peter, concerning the ſalvation exhibited by the Go-

Joh. 5. 39.

Luke 24. 27.
22. 37.
1. 70.
24. 44.

Acts 3. 22, 24.

Acts 10. 43.
13. 27. 15. 15.
24. 14.
John 1. 45.
Acts 18. 28.
28. 23.

1 Pet. 1. 10.

Goſpel) the Prophets did inquire, and ſearch diligently, who propheſied of the grace to come unto you; and (in regard to the conviction of others) he ſeems to prefer the atteſtation of this kind before the ſpiritual revelation immediately made to the Apoſtles; for having ſpoken of it, he ſubjoyns, 2 Pet. 1. 19. καὶ ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον τὸν προφητικὸν λόγον. We have alſo a more ſure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well, that ye do take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts. And, St. Paul ſaith, that the myſtery which was kept ſecret ſince the world bagan, Rom. 16. 26, 26. 1. 2. was then made manifeſt, and by the prophetical ſcriptures, according to the commandment of the everlaſting God, made known to all nations, to the obedience of faith; and, The Holy Writings (he telleth Timothy) were able 1 Tim. 3. 15. to make him wiſe to the ſalvation, which is, by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt; that is, they were able to ſhew, and perſuade to him the truth of Chriſtianity, which promiſeth ſalvation to all that heartily embrace it, and obſerve its Laws.

Such a ſtreſs was laid upon this probation by the founders of our Religion; and no wonder; for that is not only extremely forcible in it ſelf, but hath ſome particular uſes, and ſome peculiar advantages beyond others. The fore-knowledge of future contingent events (ſuch as were many of thoſe concerning our Saviour, depending upon the freeſt acts of humane will) as it is for the manner of attaining it moſt incomprehenſible to us, ſo it is moſt proper to God, and by all men ſo acknowledged ; future contingencies being ſecrets, which no man, no angel, no creature can dive into, they being not diſcernible in their cauſes, which are indeterminate; nor in themſelves, who are finite.) The prediction therefore of ſuch events could not otherwiſe than proceed from his pleaſure; neither could he yield it in way of favour and approbation to that, which was not perfectly true, and good : This way therefore doth abſolutely confirm the truth and goodneſs of Chriſtian doctrine; it withal manifeſts the great worth and weight thereof, as implying the particular regard and care God had of it, deſigning it ſo anciently, laying trains of providence toward it, and preparing ſuch evidences for the confirmation thereof; it together into the bargain maintaineth the truth of the Jewiſh diſpenſation, the ſincerity of the ancient Patriarchs and Prophets, and the vigilant care the divine goodneſs hath always had over the ſtate of Religion; and toward the welfare of mankind; never leaving it deſtitute of ſome immediate revelations from himſelf. It had a peculiar aptitude to convert the Jews, who were poſſeſſed with a full perſuaſion concerning the veracity and ſanctity of their ancient Prophets; and could not therefore doubt concerning the truth of that, which appeared conformable to that, which they had foretold ſhould be declared, and diſpenſed for their benefit. This probation alſo hath this advantage, that it ſingly taken doth ſuffice to convince ; whereas others can hardly do it otherwiſe than in conjunction with one another, and eſpecially with its aid: for the goodneſs of the doctrine may be conteſted in ſome points, and however good it ſeem, it may be imputed to humane invention: ſtrange effects may be deemed producible by other cauſes beſide divine power; and they may be ſuffered to be done for other ends than for confirmation of truth; they are alſo commonly tranſcient, and thence moſt liable to doubt: Providence alſo is in many caſes ſo myſterious, and unſearchable, that the incredulous will never allow any inferences to be drawn from it : But the plain correſpondence of events to the ſtanding records of ancient Prophecies (obvious, and conſpicuous to every one, that will conſult and compare them) concerning a perſon to be ſent by God, who ſhould have ſuch circumſtances, and be ſo qualified; who ſhould in God's name preach ſuch doctrines, and perform ſuch works, is a proof which alone may aſſure any man, that ſuch a perſon doth come from God, and is in what he declareth or doth approve by him; no counterfeiting can here find place; no evaſion can be deviſed from the force of this proof.

This way therefore of diſcourſe our Lord and his Apoſtles (whoſe buſineſs it was by the moſt proper and effectual methods to ſubdue the reaſons of men to the obedience of faith, and entertainment of Chriſtian truth) did eſpecially uſe; as generally in reſpect to all things concerning our Lord, ſo particularly in regard to his paſſion: declaring it to happen punctually according to what had been foreſeen by God, and thence foreſhewed by his Prophets, rightly underſtood; He took the twelve (ſaith St. Luke of Luke 18. 31. our Lord) and ſaid unto them; behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and all things that are written by the Prophets concerning the Son of man ſhall be accompliſhed; for he ſhall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and ſhall be mocked, and ſpitefully entreated, and ſpitted on; and they ſhall ſcourge him, and put him to death, And again, after his reſurrection, he thus reproves his Diſciples; O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all that the Prophets have ſpoken; ought Luke 24. 25, 26. 46. not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory? they did not then (partly being blinded with prejudice, partly not having uſed due induſtry, and perhaps not excelling in natural capacity, however not yet being ſufficiently enlightned by divine grace) apprehend, or diſcern, that according to the prophetical inſtructions our Lord was to ſuffer; but afterward, when he had opened their underſtanding, that they might under- Luke 24. 45. ſtand the Scriptures, they did ſee, and ſpecially urge this point: then Saint 1 Pet. 1. 11. Peter declared, that the Spirit of Chriſt, which was in the Prophets did teſtifie beforehand the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow; then it was their manner to reaſon (as is ſaid of St. Paul) out of the Scriptures, Acts 17. 2. opening, and alledging, that Chriſt muſt needs have ſuffered; ſaying none other 26. 22. things, than thoſe, which the Prophets and Moſes did ſay ſhould come, that 1 Cor. 15. 3. Chriſt ſhould ſuffer; delivering firſt of all, that Chriſt died for our ſins, according to the Scriptures: this is that which in my Text St. Peter doth inſiſt upon, affirming about the paſſion of Chriſt, that it not only had been predicted by one, or more, but foreſhewed by an univerſal conſent of all the Prophets; to illuſtrate and confirm which aſſertion of his is the ſcope of our preſent diſcourſe; to perform which, after having briefly touched the ſtate of the matter in hand, we ſhall apply our ſelves.

That the Meſſias was to come in an humble and homely manner (without appearance of worldly ſplendour, or grandeur) that he was to converſe among men in a ſtate of external poverty, and meanneſs; that he was to cauſe offences, and find oppoſitions in his proceedings; that he was to be repulſed and rejected, to be hated and ſcorned, to be diſgracefully and harſhly treated, to be grievouſly perſecuted and afflicted; yea that at laſt he was to be proſecuted, condemned and executed as a malefactor, is a truth indeed, which the Jews (although they firmly believed, and earneſtly expected the coming a Meſſias) did not, and indeed were hardly capable to entertain. It was a Point repugnant to the whole frame of their conceits; yea, inconſiſtent with the nature and drift of their Religion, as they did underſtand it; for their Religion in its ſurface (deeper than which their groſs fancy could not penetrate) did repreſent earthly wealth, dignity and proſperity, as things moſt highly valuable; did propound them as very proper, if not as the ſole rewards of piety and obedience; did imply conſequently the poſſeſſion of them to be certain arguments of the divine good will, and regard: they could not therefore but eſteem poverty, affliction and diſgrace as curſes from heaven, and plain indications of God's diſ-favour toward thoſe on whom they fell: they particularly are ſaid to have conceited, that to be rich was a needful qualification for a Prophet (no leſs needful, than to be of a good complexion; of a good capacity, of a good converſation and life) Spiritus Dei non requieſcit ſuper pauperem, The Spirit of God doth not reſt upon a poor man; (that is, no ſpecial communications of grace, or of wiſdom and goodneſs, are by God ever afforded to perſons of a low and afflicted condition) being a maxim which they had framed, and which currently paſſed among them: that he therefore, who was deſigned to be ſo notable a Prophet; who was to have the honour of being ſo ſpecial an inſtrument of promoting God's ſervice and glory; who therefore ſhould be ſo highly favoured by God, that he ſhould appear deſpicable, and undergo great afflictions, was a notion that could not but ſeem very abſurd; that could not otherwiſe than be very abominable to them.

They had farther (in congruity to theſe prejudices, abated by that extreme ſelf-love, and ſelf-flattery, which were peculiar to that Nation) raiſed in themſelves a ſtrong opinion, that the Meſſias was to come in a great viſible ſtate and power; to atchieve deeds of mighty prowess and renown; to bring the Nations of the world into ſubjection under him; and ſo to reign among them in huge majeſty and proſperity; when Jeſus therefore (however otherwiſe anſwerable in his circumſtances, qualifications and performances, Matt. 16. 20. to the prophetical characters of the Meſſias) did firſt appear ſuch as he did, with ſome pretences, or intimations rather, that he was the Meſſias) their ſtomach preſently roſe at it; they were exceedingly ſcandalized at Matt. 13. 57. him; they deemed him not only a mad-man (one poſſeſſed or diſtracted) and 26. 65. an impoſtour; but a blaſphemer; for no leſs than blaſphemy they took it to be for ſo mean and pitiful a wretch (as to their eyes he ſeemed) to aſſume unto himſelf ſo high a dignity, and ſo near a relation unto God, as being the Meſſias did import: we even ſee the Diſciples themſelves of our Lord ſo deeply imbued with this national prejudice, that, even after they had avowed him for the Chriſt, they could ſcarce with patience hear him foretelling Matt. 16. 22. what grievous things ſhould befall him: St. Peter himſelf, upon 17. 2. that occaſion, even juſt after he ſeriouſly confeſſed him to be the Chriſt, John 16. 12. did, as it is expreſſed, take him, and began to rebuke him, ſaying, Be it far Matt. 20. 21, 25. from thee, Lord: yea, preſently after that our Lord moſt plainly had deſcribed his ſufferings to them, they could not forbear dreaming of a Kingdom, and of being Grandees therein; yea farther, even after our Lord's paſſion and reſurrection, this fancy ſtill poſſeſſed them; for even then they demanded of him, whether he would at that time reſtore the Kingdom unto Acts 1. 6. Iſrael; meaning ſuch an external viſible Kingdom.

Hence of all things, notifying the Meſſias, this ſeemeth to be the only particular, which in general the Jews did not, or would not ſee, and acknowledge; and this cauſed them to overſee all other glorious marks, how clearly ſoever ſhining in, and about the perſon of Jeſus: this cloud hindred them from diſcerning the excellency of his doctrine, from regarding the ſanctity of his life, from being duly affected with the wonderfulneſs of his works; from minding, or from crediting all the teſtimonies from heaven 1 Cor. 1. 23. miniſtred unto him; this, as St. Paul telleth us, was the main ſcandal which Acts 13. 27. 3. 17. obſtructed their embracing the Goſpel. As it was their ignorance or errour John 15. 21. in this point, which diſpoſed them to perſecute our Lord (niſi enim igno- Tert. in Marc. 3. 6. ratus nihil pati poſſet, as Tertullian ſaith; if they had known, they would not 2 Cor. 2. 8. have crucified the Lord of glory, ſaith St. Paul) ſo it was that, which maintained their obſtinate hatred of his name and memory; although graced with ſo illuſtrious teſtimonies of divine power and providence.

We cannot therefore here, as in other particulars concerning our Lord, alledge the general conſent of God's people in expounding the Prophets according to our ſenſe, this being one of thoſe points, in reſpect to which the Prophets themſelves did foreſee, and foretel their perverſe ſtupidity, and incredulity; that they ſhould look, and not ſee; hear, and not underſtand; yielding herein ſpecial occaſion to that complaint, Who hath believed our report? Yet notwithſtanding their affected, and culpable blindneſs, there is no particular concerning the Meſſias in the ancient Scriptures, either more frequently in way of myſtical inſinuation and adumbration, glanced at, or more clearly, in direct and plain language expreſſed; or which alſo by reaſonable deduction thence may be more ſtrongly inferred than this.

Vid. Tert. ibid.
Iſa. 6. 9.
Matt. 13. 13.
Ezek. 12. 2.
Acts 28. 26.
Iſa. 53. 1.

1. I ſay, firſt, it is frequently glanced at by myſtical inſinuations; for explaining the intent of which aſſertion, we ſhall premiſe ſomewhat, which may ſerve to declare the pertinency of many citations produced out of the ancient Scripture in the New Teſtament; the which, together with others connected with them, or bearing juſt analogy to them, we alſo, being aſſured of their deſign by the authority of our Lord and his Apoſtles, may ſafely preſume after them to apply to the ſame purpoſes.

We may then conſider, that the All-wiſe God, (who worketh all things after the counſel of his own will, and to whom all things are preſent) having before eternal times (as St. Paul ſpeaketh) determined in due time to ſend the Meſſias, for accompliſhing the greateſt deſign that ever was to be managed in this World (that which ſhould bring the higheſt glory to himſelf, and procure the richeſt benefits to the principal of his Creatures here) did by his incomprehenſible providence ſo order things, that all the ſpecial diſpenſations preceding it ſhould have a fit tendency, and an advantageous reference thereto; ſo that, when it came upon the ſtage, it might appear that the main of the plot conſiſted therein; and that whatever was acted before, had principally a reſpect thereto: As therefore from the beginning of things God did in a gradual method make real preparations towards it, by ſeveral ſteps imparting diſcoveries of his mind about it, or in order thereto, (ſomewhat to Adam himſelf, more to Abraham and the Patriarchs, ſomewhat farther to Moſes, much more yet to divers of the Prophets, among his choſen people, who not only foretold largely concerning it, but delivered divers kinds of inſtruction conformable to it, and conducible to the promoting and entertainment thereof) ſo he did alſo take eſpecial care by many oppoſite repreſentations (νοητὰ θεωρήματα, intelligible Spectacles, or objects of mental ſpeculation, Euſebius calleth them) handſomely inſerted into all his diſpenſations, to ſet it out, and to inſinuate his meaning about it; that ſo it might at length ſhew it ſelf with more ſolemnity, and leſs ſurpriſe: the moſt eminent perſons therefore, whom he raiſed up, and employed in his affairs, tending to that end, as they did reſemble the Meſſias, in being inſtruments of God's particular grace and providence (being indeed inferiour Chriſts, and Mediatours, partial Saviours, and Redeemers of his people, as they are ſometimes called) ſo they were ordered in ſeveral circumſtances of their perſons, in divers actions they performed, in the principal accidents befalling them to repreſent him (becoming εἰκονικοὶ χριστοὶ, Chriſts in image, as Euſebius again ſtyleth them:) the rites alſo and ſervices of Religion inſtituted by them in God's name were adapted to the ſame purpoſe; they and all things about them, by God's eſpecial direction and wiſe care, being fitted ſo as to be congruous emblems and ſhadows prefiguring Chriſt, and whatever appertained to him: thus was Adam (as St. Paul calleth him) a type of Chriſt; and Abel, Melchiſedec,

Eph. 1. 11.
2 Tim. 1. 9.
Tit. 1. 2.
1 Cor. 2. 7.
Eph. 1. 3.
3. 9.
Rom. 16. 25.
Col. 1. 26.
Euſeb. Hiſt. 1. 3.
Pſal. 105. 15.
Iſa. 45. 1.
Heb. 8. 6.
Gal. 3. 19.
Nah. 9. 27.
Acts 7. 35.
Euſeb. Hiſt. 1. 14.
Heb. 8. 5.
Exod. 25. 40.
Rom. 5. 14.
Vid. Euſeb. ib.

chiſedec, Iſaac, Moſes, Joſhua, David, Solomon, Zorobabel are intimated to have been ſuch; the moſt ſignal things done by them or befalling them, having been ſuted to anſwer ſomewhat remarkable concerning him; ſo that we may ſay of them all, as the Apoſtle to the Heb 8. 5. Οἵτινες ὑποδείγματι καὶ σκιᾷ λατρεύουσι τῶν ἐπουρανίων.
Hebrews did of the Jewiſh Prieſts, they ſerved to the ſubindication, and ſhewing of heavenly things. In David particularly this relation is ſo plain, that becauſe thereof, in the Prophets Jeremy, Ezekiel and Hoſea, Jer. 30. 9. Hoſ. 3. 5. Ezek. 34. 23, 24. 37. 24. 25.
the Meſſias is called by his name; as if he were revived in the Meſſias. It indeed well ſuted the dignity of this great perſonage, and the importance of his buſineſs, that he ſhould (Heb. 5. 8. 10. 1. 9. 23. Gal. 4. 24. Col. 2. 17.)
have appointed ſo notable heralds and harbingers to go before his face; furniſhed with conſpicuous enſigns and badges denoting their relation to him. It was proper, that God ſhould appear to have had always an expreſs regard toward him: It conſequently doth ſerve to our edification; for that we duly comparing things, and eſpying this admirable correſpondency, may be inſtructed thereby, and eſtabliſhed in our faith; may be excited to the admiration of God's wiſdom, ſo harmoniouſly connecting things, and of his goodneſs, ſo provident for our welfare; may alſo be induced thereby the more highly to adore the Meſſias, and to eſteem his deſign: ſuch uſes St. Paul ſignifieth, when having compared divers things 1Cor. 10. 11, 6. 1 Pet. 1. 12.
concerning Moſes to things concerning Chriſt, he ſaith; All theſe things happened as types, and they were written for our admonition, on whom the ends of the world are come.

It is alſo (both for illuſtration, and proof of theſe things) to be obſerved, that becauſe thoſe eminent Servants of God were Repreſentatives of Chriſt, many things are ſpoken of them, as ſuch; many things are aſcribed to them; which only, or chiefly were intended of him; their names are uſed as veils to cover divers things concerning him, which it ſeemed to divine wiſdom not ſo convenient in a more open and clear manner to diſcloſe promiſcuouſly to all men. That this obſervation is true; that, I ſay, under the names of perſons repreſenting Chriſt, (or of things, we may add, adumbrating his things) many things are intimated principally concerning him, and his diſpenſations, may be collected, and confirmed from hence, that many things are attributed to perſons (and to things alſo) which do not agree to them; many things were promiſed, which appear never accompliſhed, except after an improper and hyperbolical manner of expreſſion, or according to an enormous wideneſs of interpretation; ſuch as do not well ſeem to ſute the nature of true hiſtories, and ſerious promiſes: thus, for inſtance, many things are foretold concerning the large extent, and proſperous ſtate of
Iſa. 25. 8.
the Jewiſh Church; which hiſtory and experience do teſtify never (according to ſtrictneſs of literal acception, yea not in any tolerable degree, near the height of what the words import) to have come to paſs: thus
Heb. 10. 4.
alſo (as the Apoſtle to the Hebrews argueth) effects are attributed to the Jewiſh rites and ſacrifices, which according to the nature of things cannot belong to them, otherwiſe than as ſubſtitutes, and ſhadows of things more high in ſubſtance, and efficacy: thus alſo what is with ſolemn oath promiſed to Solomon (concerning the vaſt extent, and endleſs Pſal. 45. 72, 83, &c.
duration of his empire in righteouſneſs, peace and proſperity; together with his mighty acts, and ſucceſsful atchievements (doth not appear directly in any competent meaſure to have been accompliſhed: thus alſo
Acts 2. 29.
David (as St. Peter in the 2*d* of the Acts obſerveth, and groundeth his argumentation on it) ſpeaketh divers things of himſelf; which cannot be con-conceived properly and literally agreeable to him: ſuch things therefore (having ſome truth under them) are reaſonably ſuppoſed to be intimations of ſomewhat appertaining to the future more perfect ſtate of things under the Meſſias; to concern him (who was to be the end of the law) and his diſpenſation, which was to be the accompliſhment of all things predicted and preſignified: that is that, which St. Auſtin ſignifieth, when he ſaith of Chriſt, that, Him all the promiſes of the Jewiſh Nation, all their prophecies, prieſthoods, ſacrifices, their temple, and all their ſacraments whatever did reſound, or expreſs.

Rom. 10. 4. 2 Cor. 13. 13.
Luke 22. 37. 1 Pet. 1. 10, &c.

Quem Chriſtum —— omnia gentis illius promiſſa, omnes prophetiæ, ſacerdotia ſacrificia, templum, & cuncta omninò ſacramenta ſonuerunt. Aug. ad Voluſ. Ep. 3.

Neither are theſe things only ſaid according to ſuppoſitions aſſumed in the New Teſtament; but they agree (as to their general importance) to that ſenſe of the ancient Jews, who did conceive ſuch myſterious references often to lie couched under the letter of the Scriptures: they did ſuppoſe every where a Midraſh, or myſtical ſenſe; which they very ſtudiouſly (even to an exceſs of curioſity and diligence) ſearched after: it was a conſtant and confident opinion of their Doctours, that all things in Moſes his Law were typical, and capable of allegorical expoſition; and Philo's writings (compoſed immediately after our Saviour's times) do ſhew that opinion then to have been paſſable. We have alſo ſeveral inſtances and intimations thereof in the New Teſtament: neither is it probable that our Lord and the Apoſtles would in their diſcourſes and diſputations with the Jews have uſed this way of alledging and interpreting paſſages of Scripture, if they in general had not admitted and approved it.

Vid. Capell. in Exerc. ad Zohar.

Why God ſhould chuſe to expreſs matters of this nature in ſuch a manner, we need not to determine; it might be perhaps for reaſons only known to himſelf, above our ken, or cogniſance; yet divers probable reaſons may be aſſigned for it, yea ſome more than probable, ſeeing they are expreſſed, or hinted in Scripture: It might be for a decent, and harmonious diſcrimination of times, of diſpenſations, of perſons; it might be from the depth of things to conciliate reverence to them, and to raiſe the price of knowing them, by the difficulty of attaining thereto; it might be by exerciſe to improve the underſtandings of men, to inflame their deſire, to excite their induſtry, to provoke their devotion, to render them modeſt and humble; it might be for occaſion to reward an honeſt, and diligent ſtudy of God's word; and to convey ſpecial gifts of interpretation; it might be to conceal ſome things from ſome perſons unworthy, or unfit to know them; eſpecially from haughty and ſelf-conceited perſons; it might be to uſe the ignorance of ſome as a means to produce ſome great events; ſuch as was the miſuſing and perſecuting our Lord: for ſuch reaſons it might be, and there is no good reaſon againſt it; for it cannot be ſuppoſed neceſſary, that all things ſhould be plainly diſcovered at all times, and to all perſons; it is evident that ſome things are couched in parabolical, and myſterious expreſſion; it is particularly the manner of prophetical inſtruction frequently to involve things, the full and clear knowledge of which is not congruous to every ſeaſon, nor ſuitable to every capacity; but reſerved for times, and perſons, for which the divine wiſdom only knows them moſt proper.

Vid. Chryſ. Tom. 6. p. 649, &c. 658. &c.

Apoc. 2. 7.
13. 18. 17. 9.
Mat. 13. 9.
24. 15.
Dan. 9. 1.
John 5. 39.
Luke 24. 45.
1 Cor. 12. 10.
14. 26.
Eph. 1. 9, 10.
Matt. 13. 13.
11. 25. 7. 6.
1 Cor. 2 8.
Acts 3. 17.

Gal. 4. 4.
Eph. 1. 10.
1 Tim. 2. 6.

Theſe things being thus premiſed, we come to our particular caſe, and ſay, that (according to what our Lord, and his Apoſtles teach) the Meſſias his being to ſuffer was in divers paſſages of the ancient Scripture prefigured: ſuppoſing the thing it ſelf determined to be, there are peculiar reaſons, why it rather ſo, than in a more open manner, ſhould be re-

Utique ſacramentum paſſionis ipſius figurari in prædicationibus oportuerat quantóque incredibile, tanto magìs ſcandalum futurum, quantóque magnificum, tanto magìs adumbrandum; ut difficultatas intellectûs gratiam Dei quæreret. Tert. in Jud. 10.

repreſented, contained in thoſe words of Tertullian: The Sacrament indeed (ſaith he) of Chriſt's paſſion ought to have been figured in the (ancient) predications; for as much as that the more incredible it was (if it ſhould have been preached nakedly) the more offenſive it would have been; and the more magnificent it was, the more it was to be overſhadowed, that the difficulty of underſtanding it might be cauſe of ſeeking of God's grace. Suppoſing it alſo that it ſhould be, it is plain that the paſſages about Abel, Iſaac, Joſias, Jeremy, and the like may congruouſly be applied thereto; that the elevation of the Brazen Serpent, and the ſlaying the Paſchal Lamb may appoſitely repreſent it; the Jewiſh Prieſts, with all their Sacrifices, may alſo with reaſon be brought in, and accommodated thereto: theſe things indeed by themſelves ſolitarily are not apt peremptorily to evince, that it ſhould be; yet do they handſomly ſute it, and adorn the ſuppoſition thereof; according to the notion premiſed about the figurative relation between the matters of the Old World before the Meſſias, and the New one after him. But with a clearer evidence, and ſtronger force we may affirm, that the Meſſias his ſufferings were implied in the afflictions, aſcribed to his repreſentative King David, ſuch as he in ſeveral Pſalms (in the 35, 69, 109, 118, and eſpecially in the 22 Pſalm) deſcribeth them; wherein divers paſſages, expreſſing the extreme ſadneſs; and forlornneſs of his condition, occur, which by the hiſtory of his life do not ſo well according to the literal ſignification of words, appear congruous to his perſon; which therefore there is a neceſſity, or at leaſt much reaſon, that they ſhould be applied to the Meſſias, whom that Holy King did repreſent.

Which being admitted, comparing the paſſages we find there to that which beſel Jeſus, we may obſerve an admirable harmony; there being ſcarce any part of his affliction in his life, or at any circumſtance thereof at his death, which is not in expreſs and emphatical terms there ſet out: there we have expreſſed his low, and deſpicable ſtate (I am a worm, Pſal. 22. 9. and no man; the reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people) the cauſeleſs hatred and enmity of the populacy, and of the great ones toward him (They that hate me without a cauſe are more than the hairs of my head;
Pſal. 69. 4. 35. 7. 109. 3. they that would deſtroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty; they compaſſed me about with words of hatred, and fought againſt me without a cauſe) the ingrateful requital for all the good intended, and perfor-Pſal. 35. 12. 109. 5. med by him; (They rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my love) their rejecting him (The ſtone which the builders refuſed is become the head- Pſal. 118. 22. ſtone in the corner.) Their inſidious, and calumnious proceeding againſt Pſal. 35. 7. 11. 109. 2. him, (without cauſe have they hid for me their net, in a pit, which without cauſe they have digged for my ſoul. And, Falſe witneſſes did riſe up; they laid to my charge things that I knew not; and, The mouth of the wicked, and the mouth of the deceitful are opened againſt me; they have ſpoken againſt me with a lying tongue.) Their bitter inſulting over him in his Pſa. 35. 15. 69. 26. affliction; (But in mine adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together; yea the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me:) They perſecute him, whom thou haſt ſmitten, and they talk to the grief of thoſe, whom thou haſt wounded: καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ ἄλγος τῶν τραυμάτων μου προσέθηκαν, and to the ſmart of my wounds they have added; ſay the LXXII.) Their ſcorn-Pſal. 109. 25. 35. 22. 16. 22. 6, 7. ful, reviling, flouting, and mocking him; (All they that ſee me, laugh me to ſcorn; they ſhoot the lip, they ſhake the head; ſaying, He truſted in the Lord, that he ſhould deliver him, let him deliver him, ſeeing he delighteth in him. And, I became a reproach unto them; when they looked upon me, they ſhaked their heads; they opened their mouth wide againſt me, and ſaid, Aha, aha, our eye hath ſeen it. Ἐπείρασάν με, ἐξεμυκτήρισάν μυκτηρισμόν, ἔβρυξαν ἐπ' ἐμὲ τοὺς ὀδόντας αὐτῶν· they tempted me, they extremely mocked me, they gnaſhed their teeth upon me.) Their cruel and contemptuous uſage of him; (Dogs have compaſſed me; the aſſembly of the wicked have encloſed Pſal. 22. 16.

me; they pierced my hands, and my feet; I may tell all my bones; they look, and ſtare upon me.) Their abuſive dealing with him, when he in his diſtreſs called for ſome refreſhment; (They gave me gall for my Pſal. 69. 21. meat, and in my thirſt they gave me vinegar to drink.) Their diſpoſal of his garments upon his ſuffering, (They part my garments among them, Pſal. 22. 18. and caſt lots upon my veſture.) His being deſerted of his friends and followers; and thence deſtitute of all conſolation; (I am become a ſtranger to my Pſal. 69. 9. 20.
brethren, and an alien unto my mother's children; ----- I am full of heavineſs, and I looked for ſome to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none.) The ſenſe of God's with-holding his favour, and help; (My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? why art thou ſo far from help- Pſal. 22. 1.
ing me?) His charitable diſpoſition and demeanour toward his enemies 69. 17. and perſecutours; (But as for me, when they were ſick (when they did Ἐν τῷ αὐτοὺς trouble me, ſay the LXX.) my cloathing was ſackcloath, I humbled my ſelf παρενοχλεῖν with faſting, and my prayer returned into my own boſome; I behaved my ſelf μοι. Pſal. 35. 13, as though it had been my friend, or brother, I bowed down heavily, as one &c.
that mourneth for his mother.) Which paſſages, and the like, how patly, and punctually they do ſquare to reſpective paſſages in the Goſpels, I need not to ſhew; we do, I preſume, all of us well enough remember that both moſt doleful and comfortable hiſtory, to be able our ſelves to make the application.

But there farther are not only ſuch oblique intimations, of ſignifications of this matter ſhrowded under the coverture of other perſons, and names; but very direct, and immediate predictions, concerning the Meſſias his being to ſuffer, moſt clearly expreſſed: that whole famous Chapter
(the 53d) of Eſay, doth moſt evidently and fully declare it, wherein the Eſ. 53.
kind, manner, cauſes, ends, and conſequences of his ſufferings, together with his behaviour under them, are graphically repreſented: his appearing meanneſs (He hath no form, or comelineſs; and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty, that we ſhould deſire him:) the diſgrace, contempt, v. 2. repulſes, and rejection he underwent (He is diſpiſed and rejected of men v. 3.
---- we hid our faces from him; he was deſpiſed, and we eſteemed him not,) v. 3, 4.
His afflicted ſtate (He is a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief; we did eſteem him ſtricken, ſmitten of God, and afflicted,) the bitter, and painful manner of his affliction (He was ſtricken; he bare ſtripes; he was v. 5, 8. wounded and bruiſed) his being accuſed, adjudged and condemned as a malefactour (He was taken from priſon, and from judgment ---- he was num- v. 8, 12.
bred among the tranſgreſſours) his death conſequent (He poured out his ſoul unto death; he was cut out of the Land of the living) the deſign and end of his ſufferings; they were appointed, and inflicted by divine providence for our ſake, and in our ſtead; for the expiation of our ſins; and our ſalvation. (It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him; he hath put him to grief -- v. 10, 5, 4, 8, 6. 12.
when thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin ------ he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities ---- the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed -- -- ſurely he hath born our griefs, and carried our ſorrows ------ for the tranſgreſſion of my people he was ſmitten ------ the Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all) his ſuſtaining all this with a willing, quiet, humble patience, and perfect meekneſs (He

v. 7. was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth ; he is brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before the ſhearer is dumb, ſo he opened not his mouth) his charitable praying for his perſecutors, and deſigning their welfare v. 12. (He made interceſſion for the Tranſgreſſours) the bleſſed conſequences, and happy ſucceſs of his ſufferings, in the converſion, and juſtification of men ; in performing God's will and work ; in being v. 10, 11, 12. ſatisfied, rewarded, and exalted himſelf (He ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand ; he ſhall ſee of the travail of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied ; by his knowledge ſhall my righteous ſervant juſtify many ; -----I will divide him a portion with the great, and he ſhall divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong) which paſſages as they do moſt exactly ſuit unto Jeſus, and might in a ſort conſtitute a true hiſtorical narration of what he did endure ; together with the doctrines delivered in the Goſpel concerning the intents, and effects of his ſufferings ; ſo that they did according to the intention of the divine ſpirit, relate to the Meſſias may from ſeveral conſiderations be made apparent ; the context, and coherence of all this paſſage with the matters precedent and ſubſequent, Iſa. 27. 5, 13. the which plainly do reſpect the Meſſias, and his times, do argue it : How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him, that bringeth good tidings ; and, Behold my ſervant ſhall deal prudently, &c. are paſſages immediately going before ; to which this Chapter is knit in way of continuation ; and Iſa. 54. 1, &c. immediately after it doth follow : Sing, O barren, thou, that didſt not bear, &c. being a no leſs perſpicuous, than elegant deſcription of the Church, enlarged by acceſſion of the Gentiles, which was to be brought to paſs by the Meſſias. The general ſcope of this whole prophecy enforceth the ſame concluſion ; and the incongruity of this particular prediction to any other perſon imaginable beſide the Meſſias doth farther evince it ; ſo high are the things aſcribed to the ſuffering perſon ; as that he ſhould bear the ſins of all God's people, and heal them ; that he ſhould by his knowledge juſtify many (or the multitude) that the pleaſure of the Lord ſhould proſper in his hand to theſe grand purpoſes ; that God would divide him a portion with the great, and that he ſhould divide the ſpoil with the ſtrong ; the magnificency and importance of which ſayings (rightly underſtood and weighed) do well agree to the Meſſias, but not to any other perſon, or ſimple man: whence if the ancient Jews had reaſon to believe a Meſſias was to come (as they with general conſent did ſuppoſe they had) they had as much reaſon to apply this place, as any other, to him, and thence to acknowledge that he was deſigned to be an eminent ſufferer. And indeed divers of the ancient Targumiſts, and moſt learned Rabbins did expound this place of the one Meſſias, which was to come ; as the Pugio fidei, and other learned Writers do by ſeveral expreſs teſtimonies declare. This place alſo diſcovereth the vanity of that figment, deviſed by ſome later Jews ; who to evade it, and to oppoſe Jeſus, have affirmed there was to be a double Meſſias ; one, who ſhould be much afflicted ; another, who ſhould greatly proſper ; ſince we may obſerve, that here both great afflictions and glorious performances concurrently are aſcribed to the ſame Perſon.

The ſame things are by parts alſo clearly foretold in other places of this Prophet, and in other prophetical Scriptures : By Eſay again in the Iſa. 52. 13, 14. Chapter immediately preceeding ; Behold (ſaith God there) my ſervant ſhall deal prudently, he ſhall be exalted, and extolled, and be very high ; there is God's ſervant (he, who in way of excellency is ſuch, that is, in the ſtyle of this Prophet, the Meſſias) in his real glorious capacity ; it followeth concerning his external appearance ; His viſage was ſo marred more than any mans, and his form more than the ſons of men : and again, in the 49th Chapter; Thus ſaith the Lord, the redeemer of Iſrael, and his Iſa. 49. 7.

Holy one; to him, whom man deſpiſeth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a ſervant of rulers, Kings ſhall ſee, and ariſe, Princes alſo ſhall worſhip:
what can be more expreſs and clear, than that it is ſignified here, that the Meſſias, who ſhould ſubject the World, with its ſovereign powers, to the acknowledgment and veneration of himſelf, was to be deſpiſed by men, to be deteſted by the Jewiſh people, to appear in a ſervile, and baſe condition?
the ſame Prophet doth again in the 50th Chapter bring him in ſpeaking thus: I give my back to the ſmiters, and my cheeks to them that Iſa. 50. 6.
plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from ſhame, and ſpitting: his offending the Jews, ſo as thereby to aggravate their ſins, and accelerate their puniſhments, is alſo thus expreſſed by the ſame Prophet: And he he ſhall be Iſa. 8. 14.
for a ſanctuary, but for a ſtone of ſtumbling, and for a rock of offence to both the (Pſal. 2. 2.)
houſes of Iſrael; for a gin, and for a ſnare to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem.

The Prophet Zachary doth alſo in ſeveral places very roundly expreſs his ſufferings; his low condition in thoſe words; Behold thy King cometh Zech. 9. 9. unto thee lowly, and riding upon an Aſs; (that is, pauper, mean and ſorry to appearance.) His manner of death in thoſe words: Awake, O ſword, Zech. 13. 7. againſt my Shepherd, and againſt the man, that is my fellow, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; ſmite the Shepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered; and again;
I will pour upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem Zech. 12. 10.
the ſpirit of grace, and of ſupplications, and they ſhall look upon me, whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn, &c. The Prophet Daniel alſo in that place, from which probably the name Meſſias was taken, and which moſt expreſly mentioneth him, ſaith, that after 62 weeks the Meſſias ſhall Dan. 9. 25.
be cut off, but not for himſelf------Now from all theſe paſſages of Scripture (beſide divers others to the ſame purpoſe, obſervable by thoſe, whoſe induſtry is aſſiſted by divine illumination) we may well conclude with our Lord, Ὅτι ȣ̃τω γέγραπται, ϗ ȣ̃τως ἔδει παθεῖν τ̃ χριϛὸν· that thus it was written, Luke 24. 46.
and thus (according to the Prophet's foreſhewing) it was to happen, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer; ſuffer in a life of penury, and diſgrace, in a death of ſorrow and ſhame.

That it was to fall out thus, might alſo be well inferred, by reaſons grounded upon the qualities of the Meſſias his perſon, and upon the nature of his performances, ſuch as they are deſcribed in Prophetical Scripture:
He was to be really, and plainly to appear a perſon of moſt admirable virtue, and goodneſs; but never (as even Pagan Philoſophers are obſerved) Plato, Seneca, was, or can there be any ſuch without undergoing the trial of &c.
great affliction. He was to be an univerſal pattern to men of all ſorts (eſpecially to the greateſt part of men, that is, to the poor, and afflicted) of all righteouſneſs; to exemplify particularly the moſt difficult pieces of duty; (Humility, Patience, Meekneſs, Charity, Self-denial, entire reſignation to God's will) this he ſhould not have had opportunity, or advantage of doing, ſhould he have been high, wealthy, ſplendid, and proſperous in ſecular matters, he was to exerciſe great pity, and ſympathy toward all mankind; toward the doing what it was requiſite that he ſhould himſelf taſte and feel the inconveniences, troubles, pains and ſorrows incident to us. He was to advance the repute of ſpiritual goods, and eternal Vide Theodoti, bleſſings, depreſſing the value of thoſe corporeal and temporal things, Orat. in Eph. 1. Concil. p. 997.
which men do ſo fondly admire, and dote on: the moſt compendious, and effectual way of doing which, was by an exemplary neglect, or rejection of worldly glories, and enjoyments; refuſing the honours, profits and pleaſures here, adjoyned to a high ſtate. He was by the moſt kindly, gentle and peaceable means to erect a Spiritual Kingdom; by pure force of reaſon to ſubdue the hearts and conſciences of men to the love, and obedience of God; by wiſe inſtruction to raiſe in us the hopes of future recompences in Heaven; to the accompliſhment of which purpoſes temporal glory (working on the carnal apprehenſions and affections of men) had rather been prejudicial, than conducible. He was to accompliſh and manage his great deſigns by means ſupernatural, and divine, the which would ſurely become more conſpicuous by the viſible meanneſs, and impotency of his ſtate. He was alſo moſt highly to merit from God, for himſelf, and for us (to merit God's high approbation of what he did, God's favour and grace to us) this he could not perform ſo well, as by willingly enduring for God's ſake, and in our behalf the moſt hard and grievous things. He was in fine deſigned perfectly to ſave us; and conſequently to appeaſe God's wrath, to ſatisfy divine juſtice, to expiate our ſins; whereto it was requiſite, that he ſhould undergo what he had deſerved, being puniſhed and afflicted for us.

Now that Jeſus, our Lord, did moſt thoroughly correſpond to whatever is in this kind declared by the Prophets concerning the Meſſias, we need not by minutely relating the known hiſtory of his life, and death make out any farther, ſince the whole matter is palpably notorious, and no adverſary can deny it; I ſhall therefore conclude, that it is a clear, and certain truth, which St. Peter in our text affirmeth, that, Thoſe things which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled.

Apoc. 1. 5. Now, unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood, and hath made us Kings, and Prieſts unto God, and his Father; to him be glory, and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him, that ſitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Amen.

Sermon XLV.

A Whit-Sunday Sermon of the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

ACTS II. 38.

---And ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

AMong the divers reaſonable grounds and ends of the obſerving Feſtival Solemnities (ſuch as are comforting the poor by hoſpitable relief, refreſhing the weary labourer by ceſſation from ordinary toil, maintaining good-will among neighbours by chearful and free converſation, quickning our ſpirits and raiſing our fancies by extraordinary repreſentations and divertiſements, infuſing and preſerving good humour in people; ſuch as are alſo the decent conſpiring in publick expreſſions of ſpecial reverence to God, withdrawing our minds from ſecular cares, and engaging them to ſpiritual meditations) the two principal deſigns of them ſeem to be theſe.

Θεοὶ δὲ οἰκτείραντες τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπίπονον πεφυκὸς γένος, ἀναπαύλας τε αὐτοῖς τῶν πόνων ἐτάξατο, τῶν ἑορτῶν ἀμοιβὰς τοῖς θεοῖς. Plato 2. de Leg.

Legum conditores feſtos inſtituerunt dies, ut ad hilaritatem homines publicè congerentur, tanquam neceſſarium laboribus interponentes temperamentum. Sen. de Tranq. an. 15.

1. The affording occaſion (or rather impoſing a conſtraint upon us) with a competent frequency to attend unto, to conſider upon, to inſtruct our ſelves and others in the myſterious doctrines and inſtitutions of our Religion.

2. The engaging us ſeaſonably to practice that great duty of thankfully remembring and praiſing God for thoſe eminent mercies, and favours, which by his great grace and goodneſs have been vouchſafed to us.

For theſe purpoſes chiefly did God himſelf appoint the Jewiſh Feſtivals; for inſtance the Paſſover, the reaſon of which being inſtituted is thus expreſſed; that thou mayſt remember the day, when thou cameſt forth out of the land of Egypt all the days of thy life; (Deut. 16. 3.) which words imply that the obſervation of that Solemnity did ſerve to preſerve the memory, yea the continual remembrance of that ſo notable a bleſſing, which otherwiſe might have been totally forgotten, or ſeldom conſidered; the ſame did alſo ſuggeſt occaſion of inquiry concerning the reaſons of its appointment, procuring conſequently needful information in that material point of their religion; as doth appear by thoſe words of God. And it ſhall come to paſs, Exod. 12. 26. when your children ſhall ſay unto you, what mean ye by this ſervice? that ye ſhall ſay, it is the Sacrifice of the Lord's Paſſover;----

In compliance with which prudent deſigns, the Chriſtian Church, from her firſt infancy, hath embraced the opportunity of recommending to (Aug. de Civ. D. 10. 4.) her children the obſervation of her chief holy Feſtivals, continuing the time, and retaining the name, although changing or improving, the matter and reaſon of thoſe ancient ones; the divine providence concurring to further ſuch proceeding, by ſo ordering the events of things, that the ſeaſons of diſpenſing the Evangelical bleſſings ſhould fall in with thoſe, wherein the Legal benefits moſt reſembling and repreſenting them were commemorated; that ſo there might be as well a happy co-incidence of time, as correſpondence in matter between the ancient and new Solemnities; whence as the exhibitation of Evangelical doctrines and myſteries did meet with minds more ſutably prepared to entertain them, and as leſs innovation from former uſage did appear (a thing obſervable to be reſpected in moſt, or all the poſitive inſtitutions of our religion) ſo withall Chriſtians were engaged, while they conſidered the greater mercies by God vouchſafed to them, to reflect alſo upon the favours, from the ſame ſtock of goodneſs, indulged by him to his ancient people; that as thoſe ſhould chiefly be remembered, ſo theſe ſhould not wholly be forgotten: thus did god diſpoſe, that our Saviour ſhould then ſuffer, when the Paſchal Lamb was to be offered; or that the redemption of the world from ſin and miſery ſhould then be celebrated by us, when the deliverance from the Egyptian ſlavery was commemorated by them: and ſo (that we may approach to our purpoſe) at the time of Pentecoſt, (Deut. 16.) when the Jews were obliged to rejoyce before the Lord, rendring thanks unto him for the harveſt newly gathered in, and the earths good fruits (the main ſupports and comforts of this life) were by God's bleſſing be-beſtowed on them, then did God bountifully impart the firſt fruits of his Holy Spirit, the food of our ſouls and refreſhment of our hearts; then did he cauſe his labourers to put their ſickle into the ſpiritual harveſt; converting ſouls and gathering them as mature fruits into the garners of the Church.

At the very ſeaſon (which is remarkable) that the Law was delivered to the Jews, and the ancient Covenant eſtabliſhed which did happen at Pentecoſt, as may be probably collected from the Text, and is commonly ſuppo-Exod. 19. 1. ſed by the Jewiſh Doctours, who therefore call this Feaſt שמכה חירח, the joy (or joyful Feaſt) of the law, in ſignification of their joy, uſing then to crown their heads with garlands, and ſtrew their houſes with green herbs) at that very time was the Chriſtian Law moſt ſignally promulged, and the new Covenant's ratification moſt ſolemnly declared by the miraculous effuſion of the divine Spirit.

Πεντηκοστὴν ἑορτάζομεν, καὶ πνεύματος ἐπιδημίαν, καὶ προθεσμίαν ἐπαγγελίας, καὶ ἐλπίδος συμπλήρωσιν, &c. Naz. Orat. 44.

The benefit therefore and bleſſing, which at this time we are bound eſpecially to conſider and commemorate, is in effect the publication and eſtabliſhment of the Covenant Evangelical, the foundation of all our hopes, and all our claims to happineſs; but more immediately and directly the donation of the Holy Spirit to the Chriſtian Church, and to all its members; for the better underſtanding, and more truly valuing of which moſt excellent benefit, let us briefly declare the nature, and deſign thereof.

Almighty God, ſeeing the generality of mankind alienated from himſelf by groſs ignorance of its duty toward him, and by habitual inclinations to violate his holy laws (originally implanted by him in our nature, or anciently revealed to our firſt parents) immerſed in errour, enſlaved to vice, and obnoxious to the woful conſequences of them, ſevere puniſhment, and extreme miſery; was pleaſed in his immenſe goodneſs and pity to deſign its reſcue from that ſad condition; and in purſuance of that gracious deſign did reſolve upon expedients the moſt admirable, and moſt efficacious that could be: for to redeem men from the tyranny of ſin and hell, to reconcile them to himſelf, to recover them into a happy ſtate, he ſent his own only beloved Son out of his boſome into this world, clothed with our nature; by him, as by a plenipotentiary Commiſſioner from himſelf, inviting all men to return unto him; declaring himſelf by the meritorious obedience, the expiatory paſſion, the effectual interceſſion of his dear Son abundantly ſatisfied for, and ready to grant a full pardon of all offences committed againſt him in their ſtate of errour and eſtrangement; to admit them into a ſtate of preſent indempnity and peace, yea to ſettle them in perpetual alliance and friendſhip with himſelf: upon moſt fair and gentle terms; namely, that renouncing their erroneous principles, and reforming their vitious courſe of life, they chearfully would embrace his merciful overtures, and thereafter conform their lives to his righteous laws; the which, together with all his good intentions concerning them, he, by the ſame bleſſed Agent, clearly diſcovered to them; fully by him inſtructing them in their duty, and ſtrongly encouraging them to the performance thereof by the promiſe of moſt bountiful rewards; his certain love and favour attended with end-
Tit. 2. 11. leſs joy and bliſs: thus did, as St. Paul expreſſeth it, the ſaving grace of God appear unto all men, teaching us, that, denying ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world, expecting that bleſſed hope.

But to render this wonderfully gracious deſign ſucceſsful, in a way of wiſdom, and reaſonable proceeding, accommodated to the capacities of humane nature, it was requiſite, that there ſhould be provided convincing arguments to perſuade men of the truth and reality of theſe things (that indeed ſuch an extraordinary Agent, with ſuch a meſſage was come from heaven) effectual means of admoniſhing and exciting men to a heedful advertency towards them, competent motives to a cordial acceptance of them; a power alſo ſufficient, notwithſtanding their natural impotency and inſtability, to continue them in the belief, to uphold them in the practice of the duties preſcribed, in the performance of the conditions required.

For if it were not very credible, that God had truly thoſe intentions towards us, or if we did not much regard the overture of them, or if we did not conceive the buſineſs highly to concern us; or if reſolving to comply with the Goſpel, we yet were unable to diſcharge the conditions thereof, the deſign would totally be fruſtrated, and of it ſelf come to nothing: to prevent which diſappointment of his merciful intentions, Almighty God did abundantly provide, in a manner and meaſure ſuitable to the glorious importance of them; for to the miniſtery of his eternal wiſdom he adjoyned the efficacy of his eternal love, and bleſſed Spirit; the which not only conducted God our Saviour into his fleſhly tabernacle, and with unmeaſurable communications of himſelf did continually reſide John 3. 34.
within him, but alſo did attend him in the conſpicuous performance of numberleſs miraculous works, implying divine power and goodneſs, as exceeding not only any natural, but all created power (ſuch as were by mere word and will healing the ſick, and reſtoring the maimed; ejecting evil ſpirits, diſcerning the ſecret thoughts of men, foretelling contingent events, reviving the dead, raiſing himſelf from the grave) which works, (ſome expreſly, others by parity of reaſon) are aſcribed to the Holy Spirit; for, If (ſaith our Lord) I by the ſpirit of God caſt out De- Matt. 12. 28.
vils----, and, God (ſaith St. Peter) anointed him with the Holy Ghoſt, and Acts 10. 38.
with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed by the Devil: and, Who (ſaith St. Paul) was declared to be the Son of God, according to the Holy Spirit, by the reſurrection from the dead: So did God Rom. 1. 4.
afford the moſt evident atteſtation that could be to the truth of our Saviour's quality, commiſſion and doctrine; by ſo clear, and rouſing ſignifications did God invite men to take notice of theſe things.

But farther to induce them heartily to comply with theſe gracious overtures, and to render them thoroughly available to the purpoſe deſigned, the ſalvation of men, according to the terms preſcribed of faith in God, and obedience to his commandments, God was pleaſed farther to reſolve, and he faithfully did promiſe that he would impart the ſame Bleſſed Spirit, as a continual guide and aſſiſtance to all thoſe, who ſeriouſly would entertain thoſe tenders of mercy, ſincerely reſolving the performance of the conditions.

Now although the natural and ordinary manner of this divine Spirit's operation (like that of all Spirits, and more ſubtile ſubſtances) is not by violent and ſenſible impreſſions, but rather in way of imperceptible penetration, or gentle inſinuating of it ſelf into the ſubject upon which it worketh, hardly diſcovering it ſelf otherwiſe than by the notable effects reſulting from it; and altho likewiſe the proper and principal effects thereof, according to divine deſignation, do relate to the furthering our performance of the ſaid conditions requiſite toward our ſalvation, that is, to the cheriſhing our faith, and quickning our obedience; diſpoſing men to perform vertuous actions, rather than to atchieve wondrous exploits; yet more fully to ſatisfie the doubtful, to convince the incredulous, (to confound the obſtinate) world about the truth of his intentions, more illuſtriouſly to manifeſt the completion of his promiſe, more ſurely to fortifie the faithful againſt the ſcandals and temptations, which their profeſſion would incur, God was pleaſed after our Lord's aſcenſion, and when the Apoſtolical promulgation of the Chriſtian Doctrine did commence, to diſpence both to the Teachers and the Diſciples thereof more liberal communications of that Holy Spirit, attended with notorious, ſtrange and wonderful effects, apt to provoke the admiration of men, to perſuade their judgments, to prevail upon their affections, to produce within them ſtrong deſires of partaking ſo high a privilege, and excellent endowment.

Καὶ γὰρ σὺ θείας ἀπέλαυσας χάριτος βαπτιζόμενος, καὶ πνεύματος μετέσχες, εἰ καὶ μὴ πρὸς τὸ σημεῖα ποιεῖν, ἀλλ' ὅσον ἀρκεῖ πρὸς τὸ πολιτείαν ὀρθὴν, καὶ ἠκριβωμένην λαβεῖν. Chryſ. Tom. 6. Orat. 12. ad Demet.

Τῶν γὰρ χαρισμάτων τῶν πνευματικῶν τὰ μὲν ἀόρατά ἐστιν καὶ πίστει καταλαμβάνεται μόνῃ, τὰ δὲ καὶ αἰσθητὸν ἐνδείκνυται σημεῖον πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀπίστων πληροφορίαν. Chryſ. T. 5. Orat. 88.

Acts 2. 12, 43. 4. 14. 9. 11, 16.
1 Cor. 14. 25.

The memorial therefore of that moſt gracious and glorious diſpenſation, the Chriſtian Church wiſely and piouſly hath continually preſerved, obliging us at this time peculiarly to bleſs God for that incomparable and ineſtimable gift, conferred then moſt viſibly upon the Church, and ſtill really beſtowed upon every particular member, duly incorporated thereinto.

I ſay beſtowed upon every particular member of the Church; for the Evangelical Covenant doth extend to every Chriſtian; and a principal ingredient thereof is the collation of this Spirit; which is the finger of God, whereby (according to the Prophet Jeremy's deſcription of that Covenant) God's law is put into their inward parts, and written in their hearts; inſcribed (as St. Paul alluſively ſpeaketh) not with ink, but by the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of ſtone, but in the fleſhly tables of the heart; not only as the Jewiſh Law repreſented from without to the ſenſes, but impreſſed within upon the mind and affections; whence God's Spirit is called the Spirit of promiſe, the donation thereof being the peculiar promiſe of the Goſpel; and the end of our Saviour's undertaking is by St. Paul declared, that we might receive the promiſe of the Spirit by faith, that is by embracing Chriſtianity might partake thereof, according to God's promiſes; and the Apoſtolical miniſtery or exhibition of the Goſpel is ſtyled the miniſtration of the Spirit, and taſting of the heavenly gift, and participation of the Holy Ghoſt is part of a Chriſtian's Charter; and the ſuſception of Chriſtianity is thus deſcribed by St. Paul; But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, becauſe God hath choſen you from the beginning to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth; and our Saviour inſtructed Nicodemus, that No man can enter into the Kingdom of God (that is become a Chriſtian or ſubject of God's ſpiritual Kingdom) without being regenerated by Water, and by the Spirit, that is without Baptiſm, and the ſpiritual grace attending it; according as St. Peter doth in the words adjoyning to our Text imply, that the reception of the Holy Spirit is annexed to Holy Baptiſm; Repent (ſaith he) and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt for the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; for the promiſe (that great promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt) is unto you, and to your Children, and to all that are afar off, even to as many as the Lord our God ſhall call; that is, the Holy Spirit is promiſed to all, how far ſoever diſtant in place or time, whoever ſhall be invited unto, and ſhall embrace the Chriſtian profeſſion. St. John alſo

Luke 11. 20.
Jer. 31. 33.
Heb. 8. 10.
Ezek. 11. 19.
John 6. 45.
2 Cor. 3. 3.
Πνεῦμα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας. Eph. 1. 13.
Gal. 3. 14.
Διακονία τοῦ πνεύματος. 2 Cor. 3. 8.
Heb. 6. 4.
2 Theſſ. 2. 13.
John 3. 5.
Acts 2. 38.

maketh it to be the diſtinctive mark of thoſe, in whom Chriſt abideth, and who dwell in Chriſt, that is of all true Chriſtians, to have this Spirit; Hereby (ſaith he) we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us; and Hereby we know that we dwell in him and he in us, becauſe he hath given us of his Spirit; and, St. Paul denieth him to be a good Chriſtian who is deſtitute thereof; Now (ſaith he) if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his; and, Know ye not, ſaith he to the Corinthians, that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? that is, do ye not underſtand this to be a common privilege of all Chriſtians, ſuch as ye profeſs your ſelves to be? and the converſion of men to Chriſtianity he thus expreſſeth; After the kindneſs and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared; not by any righteous works which we had done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us by the laver of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt; And all pious diſpoſitions qualifying us for entrance into heaven and happineſs (faith, charity, devotion, every grace, every vertue) are repreſented to be fruits of the Holy Spirit: and, the union of all Chriſtians into one body; the Catholick Society of all truly faithful people, doth, according to St. Paul, reſult from this one Spirit, as a common ſoul animating and actuating them: for (ſaith he) by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether bond or free; and have all been made to drink of one Spirit.

1 John 3. 24.
1 John 4. 13.
Rom. 8. 9.
1 Cor. 3. 16.
Tit. 3. 4.
Gal. 5. 22.
Eph. 5. 9.
Rom. 4. 5.
1 Cor. 12. 13.

In fine, whatever ſome few perſons, or ſome petty Sects (as the Pelagians of old, the Socinians now) may have deemed, it hath been the doctrine conſtantly, and with very general conſent delivered in the Catholick Church, that to all perſons by the holy myſtery of Baptiſm duly initiated to Chriſtianity, or admitted into the communion of Chriſt's body, the grace of God's Holy Spirit certainly is beſtowed, enabling them to perform the conditions of piety and vertue then undertaken by them; enlightning their minds, rectifying their wills, purifying their affections, directing and aſſiſting them in their practice; the which holy gift (if not abuſed, ill treated, driven away, or quenched by their ill behaviour) will perpetually be continued, improved and encreaſed to them; it is therefore by Tertullian (in his preſcriptions againſt Hereticks) reckoned as part of that fundamental rule, which was grounded upon the general tradition, and conſent of the Chriſtian Church, that Chriſt had ſent the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt, in his room, which doth act believers; to which that Article doth anſwer of the Apoſtolical Creed, in which we profeſs to believe the Holy Ghoſt; meaning I ſuppoſe, thereby not only the bare exiſtence of the Holy Ghoſt, but alſo its gracious communication and energy.

Tert. de præſc. 13 —miſiſſe, vicariam vim Spiritus Sancti, qui credentes agat.

Since therefore the collation of this eminent gift and favour ſo nearly doth concern us all; ſeeing it is our preſent duty more eſpecially to praiſe and bleſs God for it; ſeeing alſo we are wont to commenſurate our gratitude to our eſtimation of the benefit, unto which it relateth, let us a little conſider the worth and excellency of this divine gift conferred on us.

That it is tranſcendently valuable we may in general hence collect, that even in our Lord's eſteem it did not only countervail, but in a manner ſurmount the benefit of his preſence; Συμφέρει, It is (ſaid he) expedient (or profitable) for you that I go away; God having deſigned, that my abſence ſhall be ſupplied by the Comforter's more beneficial preſence: and wonderfully beneficial ſurely muſt that preſence be, which could not only compenſate, but render advantageous the loſs of that moſt benign and ſweet converſation, that tender and watchful inſpection, that wholſome and powerful advice, that clear and lively pattern of all goodneſs ſhining forth in our Saviour's life upon his diſciples: could there be a more indulgent Maſter, a more diſcreet guide, a more delightful companion, a more faithful friend, a mightier protectour, a ſurer aſſiſtant, a ſweeter comforter than he? Yes, it ſeemeth that our Saviour did apprehend, that upon ſome accompts thoſe benefits with greater advantage might accrue to them by the gift of his Spirit, than by his own immediate preſence; that it by internal operation could more clearly inform the mind, more ſtrongly incline the will, more vigorouſly affect the heart, than any exteriour word or example could do: neither could our Saviour, according to the condition of his humanity, limited to particularities of time and place, ſo perfectly correſpond to the various exigencies of mankind; as that omnipotent Spirit, intimately preſent to, uniformly diffuſed through all things: him therefore did our Saviour leave the guardian of his otherwiſe Orphan diſciples; him did he ſubſtitute to undergo the care and tuition of them; to conduct them in the right way, to preſerve them from dangers, to comfort them in diſtreſſes, to manage all their concernments, to be their counſellour, monitour, advocate and patron; by him he meant fully to make good his word, that he would be with them till the end of this world.

John 16. 7.

Οὐκ ἀφήσω ὑμᾶς ὀρφανούς. John 14. 18.

Ἕως τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος. Matt. 28. 20.

But more diſtinctly to ſurvey the many benefits and advantages proceeding from this excellent gift unto us, we may obſerve, that on it the foundation, the improvement, the completion of all our good and happineſs do depend; that to the Holy Spirit in truth and juſtice are to be aſcribed, 1. Our better ſtate and being. 2. Our ſpiritual powers and abilities. 3. Our good and acceptable performances; whatever we are, whatever we can do, whatever we actually do perform as Chriſtians.

1. We owe to the Holy Spirit our ſpiritual ſtate and being; our ſpiritual life, our freedom, our honourable condition.

It is by virtue of this quickning Spirit that from death and corruption we are raiſed to an immortal and indefectible ſtate of life; that (as St. Paul ſaith) we that were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins are quickned together with Chriſt; we by this incorruptible ſeed are born again, not as formerly to a life of vanity and miſery, or to the enjoyment of a few tranſitory delights, tempered with many vexatious inconveniences, pains and troubles; but to ſure capacities of moſt ſolid and durable contentment, to a living hope of an incorruptible inheritance reſerved in heaven for us.

Πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν. 1 Cor. 15. 45. John 6. 63. 2 Cor. 3. 36. Eph. 2. 1, 5. 1 Pet. 1. 23.

1 Pet. 1. 3, 4.

It is thereby we are free-men, enjoying a true and perfect liberty; being enfranchiſed from divers intolerable ſlaveries, to which we naturally are ſubjected, and from which otherwiſe we could not be exempted; from the dominion of a rigorous law, which preſcribeth hard duties, but doth not afford ſtrength to perform them; apt to condemn us, but not able to convert us; from the clamorous accuſations of a guilty conſcience, with anxious fears of puniſhment, that ſpirit of bondage unto fear, of which St. Paul ſpeaketh; from the tyranny of a moſt crafty, ſpiteful and cruel enemy, that wicked one who did captivate us at his pleaſure, and detained us under his power; from the no leſs unjuſt, no leſs miſchievous domination of our own fleſh, or natural concupiſcence, impoſing grievous tasks and deſtructive neceſſities upon us; It is (ſaith St. Paul) the law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus, which ſetteth us free from theſe laws of ſin and of death; ſo that, where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom.

Gal. 4. 24. Lex os omnium potuit obſtruere, non potuit mentem convertere. Ambr. Rom. 8. 15. 2 Tim. 2. 26. Eph. 2. 2.

Rom. 8. 2. 2 Cor. 3. 17.

From ſuch baſe thraldoms we thereby are redeemed, and not only ſo, but are advanc'd to an honourable condition, are ennobled with illuſtrious relations, are entitled to glorious privileges: all the benefits and immunities contained in the charter of the new Jeruſalem, all the advantages and privileges appropriated to God's Court and Family thereby appertain unto us; for we have (ſaith St. Paul) acceſs by one Spirit unto the Father and Eph. 2. 18, 19. Rev. 1. 6. are thence no more ſtrangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens of the Saints, and of the houſhold of God: 1 Pet. 2. 9. by this holy unction we are conſecrated Kings and Prieſts unto God; by participation of this immortal ſeed, we are engrafted into alliance with the heavenly King, become children of God, brethren of Chriſt, heirs of paradiſe (an infinitely better paradiſe than that, from which we formerly were excluded;) for this is that πνεῦμα Rom. 8. 15. υἱοθεσίας, John 1. 13. that Spirit, which conſtituteth us the Sons of God, qualifying us to be ſo by diſpoſitions reſembling God, and filial affections toward him; certifying us that we are ſo, and cauſing us by a free inſtinct to cry Abba Father, Gal 4. 6. running into his boſome of love, and flying under the wings of his mercy in all our needs and diſtreſſes; whence as many as are Rom. 8. 14. led by the Spirit, they (ſaith St. Paul) are the Sons of God; and, the Spi- Rom. 8. 16. rit it ſelf beareth witneſs with our ſpirit that we are the children of God; yea, which may ſeem yet a farther pitch of dignity, we, by intervention of this Spirit, are united and incorporated into Chriſt himſelf, being made living members of his body, partaking a common life and ſenſe with him; by it we are compacted into the ſame ſpiritual edifice, dedicated to the worſhip and inhabitation of God; our bodies and ſouls are made temples of his divinity, thrones of his majeſty, orbs of his celeſti- Eph. 2. 26. al light, paradiſes of his bliſsful preſence; for, In whom (ſaith St. Paul) 1 Cor. 3. 16. ye are built together for an inhabitation of God through the Spirit; and, Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

By the Holy Spirit we are enſtated in theſe unconceivably glorious privileges, and by it onely we are aſſured of them, to our comfort; the gift of it as it is a great part of them, and the chief cauſe, ſo it is a ſure Eph. 1. 13. confirmation and pledge; Ye, ſaith St. Paul, were ſealed by the Holy Spirit Rom. 8. 9, 11. of promiſe, which is the earneſt of our inheritance; and It is God who did 2 Cor. 1. 21. eſtabliſh us with you in Chriſt, and anointed us, and alſo ſealed us, and gave the earneſt of the Spirit in our hearts; all which phraſes do import the ſame thing, that is, a comfortable aſſurance concerning the reality of the benefits by divine grace exhibited and promiſed to us.

2. Neither only relatively and extrinſecally is our ſtate bettered and exalted from death to life, from ſlavery to freedom, from baſeneſs to dignity; but our ſelves anſwerably are changed, and amended by the ſame Holy Spirit, with a real and intrinſecal alteration, transforming us 2 Cor. 5. 17. into other things, much different from what we were in our former natural ſtate; by that renovation of the Holy Ghoſt, of which St. Paul ſpeak- Tit. 3. 5. eth, we are (ſaith he) renewed in the Spirit of our mind; ſo that not Eph. 4. 23. onely the decayed frame of our ſoul is thereby repaired, and reformed, but its powers are much improved and inlarged; we are thence endowed with new and better faculties, as it were; with quicker apprehenſions, with ſincerer judgments, with righter inclinations, with nobler paſſions, than we had before (yea than we could have had in our original ſtate;) Eph. 4. 24. 2 Cor. 5. 17. ſo that in the language of Holy Scripture we thence become new men, and Col. 3. 10. new creatures, created according to God in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; Eph. 4. 23. 2. 10. according to God, that is in conformity to the divine perfections of rectitude in mind and will, ſo as to reſemble God in a higher degree, and Col. 3. 10. more worthy reſpects than formerly. Our Father Adam was made εἰς 1 Cor. 15. 45. ψυχὴν ζῶσαν, a creature endowed with life and ſenſe, furniſhed with powers and appetites diſpoſing to acquire, preſerve and enjoy the conveniences 1 Cor. 2. 14. agreeable to that frame; and we naturally are ψυχικοὶ ἄνθρωποι, animal, mal men ; ſuch as naturally do apprehend, do affect, do purſue things concerning this preſent life; the pleaſures of ſenſe, and the ſatisfactions of fancy; freedom from want and pain, ſecurity from danger and diſturbance, together with the means we ſuppoſe conducible to thoſe, wealth, honour Θελήματα σαρκὸς καὶ τῶν διανοιῶν. Eph. 2. 3. and power; theſe are thoſe deſires of the fleſh and of the mind, the things which according to our natural temper and frame we like and approve; which moſt men therefore do highly value, paſſionately love, and earneſtly ſeek: Nor doth nature only incline us to a complacence in theſe things, but cuſtomary fruition greatly endeareth them to us; ſo that we continually improve our acquaintance, and contract a firmer alliance with them; Τὰ τοῦ πνεύματος τοῦ Θεοῦ. 1 Cor. 2. 14. *Δέχεσθαι. but ſpiritual and divine things (the things of the Spirit of God, as St. Paul calleth them) we cannot * receive, that is, ſimply of our ſelves, without aid of another interiour principle, we have no capacity to apprehend them, no diſpoſition to entertain them, no ſtrength to purſue them; they (as the Apoſtle ſaith) are fooliſhneſs to us, that is, incongruous to our prejudicate notions, and inſipid to our corrupt palates.

Such doctrines as theſe; that our felicity conſiſteth not in affluence of temporal enjoyments, but in diſpoſitions of ſoul croſſing our humours, curbing our appetites, and quelling our paſſions; in conformity of practice to rules diſtaſtful to our ſenſe; in the love and favour of an inviſible Being: in reverſion of an eſtate not to be poſſeſſed until after our death in another world; that none of theſe preſent things do well deſerve our ſerious regard, affection or care, and that it is blamable to be ſollicitous about them; that naked goodneſs (how low, weak and poor ſoever) is to be choſen before all the ſpecious pomps and glories of this world; that the ſecret teſtimony of conſcience is to be preferred before all the approbation and applauſe of men; that the hope of future joy ſhould overſway the deſire of preſent moſt certain and ſenſible delights; that the loſs of all things may ſometime be deemed our greateſt gain, being contemned our higheſt honour, enduring afflictions our moſt deſirable condition, death our ſureſt welfare, a croſs preferrible to a crown; that accordingly it is often advantageous and expedient for us, and a duty incumbent on us willingly to diſcard our deareſt contents of life, to ſacrifice our moſt valued intereſts, to forſake our neareſt relations, to refuſe what we moſt affect, to undertake what we moſt diſtaſt, to undergo without reluctancy or regret the moſt bitter accidents that can befall us; that we John 12. 25. Luke 14. 26. 2. 13. Luke 14. 33. Matt. 16. 24. 5. 29. Col. 3. 5. Gal. 5. 24. 6. 14. Rom. 6. 6. Phil. 3. 7, 8. muſt (to uſe the holy ſtyle) hate our own ſouls, deny our ſelves, and take up our croſs, quit houſes and lands, deſert kindred and friends ; ἀποτάσσεσθαι πᾶσι τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ ὑπάρχουσι· to renounce (or bid farewel) to all that he hath, or owneth; cut off our right hands, and pluck out our right eyes ; circumciſe our hearts, mortifie our members; crucify our fleſh with its affections and luſts ; be crucified to the world ; to accompt all worldly things damage, droſs, and dung in compariſon to ſpiritual goods. That we muſt ſo far remit and reſtrain our ſelf-love, as to love all men, not excluding our greateſt enemies, as our ſelves; ſo as not only to part freely with our particular accommodations, but upon occaſion, in imitation of our Saviour, to lay down our lives for them; ſo as not only to comport with their infirmities, but to requite their extremeſt injuries with good will and good turns; ſo Matt. 6. 44. as to do all good to all men, to return no evil to any; to bleſs them that curſe us, to do good to them that hate us, to pray for them which deſpitefully uſe us, and perſecute us.

John 6. 60. Theſe, and ſuch like dictates of the Spirit are hard, and harſh ſayings, abſurd to our natural conceit, and abominable to our carnal humour; we cannot readily ſwallow them, we cannot eaſily digeſt them; in reſpect to them we as mere men are ἐχθροὶ τῇ διανοίᾳ, enemies in our mind, or reaſon; our diſcourſe preſently doth contradict and oppoſe them: Our reaſon is ſhut up, and barr'd with various appetites, humours and paſſions againſt ſuch truths, nor can we admit them into our hearts, except God by his Spirit do ſet open our mind, and work a free paſſage for them into us; it is he who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, muſt as St. Paul ſpeaketh) illuſtrate our hearts with the knowledge of theſe things; an Unction from the holy one, clearing our eyes, ſoftning our hearts, healing our diſtempered faculties muſt (as St. John informeth us) teach and perſuade us this ſort of truths; a hearty faith of theſe ſeemingly incredible propoſitions muſt indeed be, as St. Paul calleth it, the gift of God, proceeding from that Spirit of faith, whereof the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaketh; ſuch faith is not (as St. Baſil ſaith) engendred by Geometrical neceſſities, but by the effectual operations of the Holy Ghoſt: Fleſh and bloud will not reveal unto us, nor can any man with clear confidence ſay, that Jeſus (the Authour, Maſter and Exemplifier of theſe doctrines) is the Lord, (the Meſſias, the infallible Prophet, the univerſal Law-giver, the Son of the living God) but by the Holy Ghoſt: Every Spirit, which ſincerely confeſſeth him to be the Chriſt, who hath enjoyned theſe Precepts, we may with St. John ſafely conclude to be of God; for of our ſelves we are not ſufficient (as the Apoſtle ſaith) λογίζεσθαί τι, to reaſon out, or collect any of theſe things; we never of our own accord, without divine attraction ſhould come unto Chriſt, that is ſhould effectually conſent unto, and embrace his inſtitution, conſiſting of ſuch unplauſible Propoſitions, and Precepts; hardly would his own Diſciples, who had ſo long enjoyed the light of his inſtruction and converſation, have admitted it, if he had not granted to them that Spirit of truth, whoſe work it was ὁδηγεῖν, to lead them in this unknown and uncouth way, ἀναγγέλλειν, to tell them again and again, that is, to inſtill and inculcate theſe crabbid truths upon them, ὑπομιμνήσκειν, to admoniſh, excite and urge them to the marking and minding them; hardly, I ſay, without the guidance of this Spirit would our Lord's Diſciples have admitted divers Evangelical truths, as our Lord himſelf told them; I have (ſaid he) many things beſide to ſay to you, but ye cannot as yet bear them; but when he, the Spirit of truth ſhall come, he ſhall conduct you into all truth.

Col. 1. 21.

Διανοίγειν τὸν νοῦν.

Luke 24. 45. Acts 16. 14. 2 Cor. 4. 6.

1 John 2. 27.

Eph. 2. 8. Phil. 1. 29. 1 Cor. 12. 9.

Πνεῦμα τῆς πίστεως.

2 Cor. 4. 13. 1 Cor. 12. 9.

Πίστις οὐκ ἐν γεωμετρικαῖς ἀνάγκαις, ἀλλ' ἐν ταῖς τοῦ πνεύματος ἐνεργείαις ἐγγινομένη. Baſ. in Pſ. 115.

Matt. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 12. 3.

1 John 4. 2. 2 Cor. 3. 5.

John 6. 44. John 16. 13. 14. 26.

John 16. 12.

As for the mighty Sages of the world, the learned Scribes, the ſubtile diſputers, the deep politicians, the wiſe men according to the fleſh, the men of moſt refined judgment, and improved reaſon in the world's eye, they were more ready to deride, than to regard, to impugn, than to admit theſe doctrines; to the Greeks who ſought wiſdom, the preaching of them did ſeem fooliſhneſs.

1 Cor. 1. 20. &c.

It is true ſome few ſparks or flaſhes of this divine knowledge may poſſibly be driven out by rational conſideration; Philoſophy may yield ſome twilight glimmerings thereof; common reaſon may dictate a faint conſent unto, may produce a cold tendency after ſome of theſe things; but a clear perception, and a reſolute perſuaſion of mind, that full aſſurance of faith, and inflexible confeſſion of hope: which the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſpeaketh of; that all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding, that abundant knowledge of the divine will in all ſpiritual wiſdom and underſtanding, with which St. Paul did pray that his Coloſſians might be repleniſhed; theſe ſo perfect illuſtrations

Πληροφορία τῆς πίστεως. Heb. 10. 22. Ὁμολογία τῆς ἐλπίδος ἀκλινής. Heb. 10. 23.

Πᾶς πλοῦτος τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνέσεως. Col. 2. 2. Col. 1. 9.

ons of the mind, ſo powerful convictions of the heart do argue immediate influences from the fountain of life and wiſdom, the divine Spirit: no external inſtruction could infuſe, no interiour diſcourſe could excite them; could penetrate thoſe opacities of ignorance, and diſſipate thoſe thick miſts of prejudice, wherein nature and cuſtom do involve us; could ſo thoroughly awaken the lethargick ſtupidity of our ſouls; could ſupple the refractary ſtiffneſs of our wills, could mollify the ſtony hardneſs of our hearts, could void our natural averſation to ſuch things, and quell that
Rom. 8. 7. φρόνημα τ̃ σαρκὸς, that carnal mind, the which St. Paul ſaith is enmity againſt God, for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be;
2Cor. 10. 4, 5. could depreſs thoſe ὑψώματα, thoſe lofty towers of ſelf-conceit, reared againſt the knowledge of God, and demoliſh thoſe ὀχυρώματα, thoſe bulwarks of ſelf-will and perverſe ſtomach oppoſed againſt the impreſſions of divine truth; and captivate πᾶν νόημα, every conceit and device of ours to the obedience of Chriſt, and his diſcipline: Well therefore did St. Paul pray in
Eph. 1. 17. behalf of his Epheſians, that God would beſtow on them that Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the acknowledgment of him, and that the eyes of their mind
Τῆς διανοίας. (or reaſon) might be enlightned, ſo as to know the hope of their calling; that is, to underſtand and believe the doctrines of Chriſtianity, which upon condition of obedience did promiſe felicity to them.

So is the light of ſpiritual knowledge, together with a temper of mind diſpoſing to receive it, communicated to us; but farther alſo by the ſame divine power and ſpirit are our vital heat and vigour, our active ſtrength and courage imparted. For as mere men we are not only blind to diſcern, dull to conceive, backward to undertake the neceſſary duties of vertue and piety, but we are alſo dead, heartleſs and unwieldy, lame and impotent, indiſpoſed and uncapable to perform them: though we ſhould competently apprehend our duty, and our ſpirit thence ſhould be Matt. 26. 41. willing, yet our fleſh, or natural power, is weak; we may (as St. Paul inſtructeth us) in our judgment conſent that the law
Rom. 7. 12, 16. Σύμφημι τῷ νόμῳ ὅτι καλός. is holy, juſt and good; and conſequently to will may be preſent to us; that is, we may be deſirous, and in
Rom. 7. 18. ſome meaſure reſolved to obey it; yea we may have Συνήδομαι τῷ νόμῳ κτ̄ τ̃ ἔσω ἄνθρωπον. Rom. 7. 22. ſome interiour rational complacence therein; and yet not have ability to act according to theſe dictates and deſires; for to will is preſent to me (ſaith he in the perſon of a man
Rom. 7. 18. Τὸ δὲ κατεργάζεσθαι τὸ καλὸν οὐκ εὑρίσκω. endewed only with natural ſtrength, abſtracting from the ſubſidiary vertue and operation of the divine Spirit,) but to perform that which is good, I find not; I perceive not any means, or way of affecting it; knowledge therefore and willingneſs to do good doth not ſuffice; we need a prevalent force to ſtir and raiſe this unweildy bulk; to overpoiſe our natural propenſions, to ſubdue the reluctancies, and check the importunities of ſence, to correct bad nature, and reclaim from bad cuſtom: The natural might and policy of our ſingle reaſon, being very feeble and ſhallow, is not fitly matched to encounter that potent confederacy of enemies, which continually with open violence doth invade and aſſail us; or which by clandeſtine wiles doth watch to circumvent and ſupplant us: Is it eaſie for us not to dread the frowns, nor to be charmed by the flatteries; to ſlight both the hatred and favour; to abide the perſecutions, and to avoid the allurements of this world; this wicked, violent, deceitful world, which is ever ready to deter from good, and entice us to evil? Is it eaſie to reſtrain and repreſs thoſe fleſhly luſts, which (as St. Peter ſaith)
1 Pet. 2. 11. James 4. 1. do war againſt our ſouls, combating them with their own forces; uſing their own faculties and members as weapons againſt them? Is it eaſie to reſcue our ſelves from that other law in our members, that warreth againſt Rom. 7. 23.

the law of our underſtanding, and captivateth us to the law of ſin? Is it a ſmall matter to ſet upon, to grapple with, to knock down that Gigantick-Philiſtine, inordinate ſelf-love (the root of injuſtice, pride, envy, malice, ambition and avarice within us) which naturally is ſo tall and ſtout; which, if not checked in its progreſs, will daily grow in ſtature and ſtrength? Is it a ſlight buſineſs to detect, to counterplot, to decline or defeat thoſe μεθοδείαι, thoſe devices, or ſubtile trains, and ſleights of the Eph. 6. 11.
Tempter; to wreſtle with principalities, with powers, with the rulers of this Ἡμῖν ἡ πάλη. Eph. 6. 12.
darkſome world, with the ſpiritualities of wickedneſs, ſurrounding us? may we not reaſonably in compariſon to theſe mighty Anakim be (as the children of Iſrael anciently were) in our own ſight as Graſhoppers, quite deſpair- Num. 13. 33.
ing by our own ſtrength to vanquiſh, to reſiſt them?

In our ſpiritual conflict with ſuch dangerous and dreadful adverſaries, we do need an ἐπιχορηγία τοῦ πνεύματος, (as St. Paul ſpeaketh, that is) Phil. 1. 19.
a large ſupply of the Spirit, a collation of auxiliary forces, an habitual ſupport derived from that invincible and infallible ſpirit, which only is ſtronger, and wiſer than they; we need to be armed with that δύναμις ἐξ ὕψους, Luke 24. 49.
that power from on high, or heavenly might, whereby the Apoſtles were (Eſa. 59. 19.) enabled to fight their noble battles, and to atchieve their glorious conqueſts, ſubduing the rebellious world, and baffling the powers of darkneſs; we need δυνάμει κραταιωθῆναι, to be ſtrengthened with might by Eph. 3. 16.
Chriſt's ſpirit in the inward man, as St. Paul expreſſeth it; whereby, as he, Col. 1. 11.
we may πάντα ἰσχύειν, be able to do all things, or to accompliſh the moſt Phil. 4. 13.
difficult parts of our duty; without which we can do nothing, that is, can- John 15. 5.
not diſcharge the moſt eaſie things required of us; all our ſufficiency is of God; it is he, who out of his goodneſs doth effect in us both to will and to perform; his ſpirit taking part with our infirmities, and thereby giving us advantage over all oppoſition and difficulty. The chief reaſon why we do not ſin, or perſiſt in a courſe of diſobe- 1 John 3. 9.
dience to the Laws of God, is, as St. John telleth us, becauſe the divine ſeed 1 Pet. 1. 23.
abideth in us, that root of divine life, and vital activity implanted in us by the Holy Spirit; that divine nature (as St. Peter ſtyleth it) that principle and ſpring of ſpiritual motion by him inſerted in us; from which only ſeed or nature do ſprout all heavenly graces and ver-tues.

2 Cor. 3. 5. Phil. 2. 13.
Col. 1. 12.
Τὸ πνεῦμα συναντιλαμβάνεται ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν——Rom. 8. 26.

1 Pet. 2. 4. Θεία φύσις.
Vis divinæ gratiæ, potentior utique natura. Tertull.

Οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἁμαρτημάτων ἀπαλλαγῆναι ἄνευ τῆς τοῦ πνεύματος ἐνεργείας. Chryſ.
Ῥίζα, καὶ πηγὴ, καὶ μήτηρ ἁ πάντων τῶν ἀγαθῶν. Chryſ.
Rom. 5. 5. Eph. 5. 9.

The principal and original virtue, charity (the root, the fountain, the mother of all goodneſs, as Saint Chryſoſtome calleth it) even that ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto us, as St. Paul telleth us; and the fruit (ſaith he) of the Spirit is in all goodneſs, righteouſneſs and truth; and, Love, peace, long-ſuffering, benignity, goodneſs, faith, meekneſs, temperance are by the ſame Gal. 5. 22.
divine Apoſtle reckoned ſtreams from the ſame ſource, fruits of the ſame rich and goodly ſtock: to it generally are attributed all purification of our hearts, mortification of our luſts, ſanctification of our lives, and con-ſequently ſalvation of our ſouls: Ye (ſaith St. Paul) are waſhed, ye are 1 Cor. 6. 11.
ſanctified, ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the ſpirit of our God; and, God hath choſen us from the beginning to ſalvation by ſancti- 2 Theſ. 2. 13.
fication of the Spirit, and belief of the truth; and, Having (ſaith St. Peter) purified our ſouls in obedience to the truth, by the Spirit, unto charity 1 Pet. 1. 22.
unfeigned; and, If (ſaith St. Paul again) by the Spirit ye mortify the deeds Rom. 8. 13.
of the Fleſh, ye ſhall live; Thus doth our ſpiritual being and ſtate, together with our life and active powers depend upon the Holy Spirit; and not only ſo, but

3. The continued ſubſtance and preſervation, the actual uſe and exerciſe of them, all our diſcreet conduct, all our good practice do rely Pſal. 104. 29. upon him: It is true of our ſpiritual no leſs than of our natural life. If he doth avert his face, we are troubled; if he doth ſubſtract his influence, we die and return unto our duſt: upon all occaſions we do need his direction, aid
Jer. 10. 23. and comfort; for the way of man (as the Prophet ſaith) is not in himſelf, Pſal. 37. 23. it is not in man that walketh to direct his ſteps; It is the Lord (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) that ordereth the ſteps of a good man, and upholdeth him with Pſal. 143. 8. his hand; we have all need to pray with that good man; Cauſe me to know
10. the way, wherein I ſhould walk; teach me to do thy will, for thou art my God; thy ſpirit is good, lead me into the Land of uprightneſs.

We are vain and uncertain in our opinions, fickle and irreſolute in our purpoſes, ſlow and heavy in our proceedings; apt to faint and faulter, to ſtumble and ſlip in all our practice; we do need therefore this ſure Oracle to conſult in our doubts and darkneſſes; this faithful friend to direct and adviſe us in our affairs; this conſtant Monitor to rouſe, and quicken us in our undertakings; this powerful Guardian to ſupport and eſtabliſh us in our ways; It is, in reſpect to good men, this ſteady hand that holdeth the helm, and gently ſteereth their courſe through the blind tracts of religious practice; withdrawing them from thoſe dangerous ſhelves of errour and temptation, upon which they are apt to ſplit; it is this heavenly gale, that filleth their ſails with conſtant reſolution, and fairly driveth them forward in their voyage toward eternal bliſs. He ſoftly doth whiſper and inſinuate good thoughts into us; doth kindle pious deſires, doth cheriſh virtuous intentions, doth promote honeſt endeavours; he ſeaſonably checketh and reſtraineth us from ſin; he faithfully reproveth and upbraideth us for committing it; he raiſeth wholſome remorſe, ſhame and diſpleaſure for our unworthineſs and folly; He ſweetly warmeth our cold affections, inflaming our hearts with devotion toward God; he qualifieth us, and encourageth us to approach the throne of grace, breeding in us faith and humble confidence, prompting us fit matter of requeſt, becoming our advocate and interceſſour for the good ſucceſs of our prayers;
Eph. 2. 18. Through Chriſt Jeſus (ſaith St. Paul) we have acceſs by one ſpirit unto the Rom. 8. 26. Father; and, The ſpirit helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we ſhould ask for as we ought, but the ſpirit it ſelf intercedeth for us.

He guardeth us, he ſtandeth us, he ſuſtaineth by us in all trials, and 2 Cor. 12. 2. temptations, affording grace ſufficient to eſcape or to endure them; not ſuf-
1 Cor. 10. 13. fering us to be tempted above what we are able.

He ſupporteth and comforteth us in our afflictions and diſtreſſes of all kinds, of our inward and outward eſtate: this David knew when in his Pſal. 51. 12. penitential agonies he prayed, Caſt me not away from thy preſence, and take not thy holy Spirit from me; reſtore unto me the joy of thy ſalvation, and up-
Act. 13. 14. hold me with thy free ſpirit; this thoſe firſt Chriſtians felt, who under per-
9. 31, &c. ſecutions and all outward diſcouragements were yet filled with joy, and did walk in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt; whence that teſtimony of St. Paul
1 Theſ. 1. 6. concerning the Theſſalonians; Ye were followers of me, and of the Lord, receiving the word in much affliction with joy of the Holy Ghoſt; by it the bleſſed Saints, Martyrs and Confeſſors being inſpired did not only with admirable patience, but incredible alacrity undergo the extremeſt loſſes, ignominies and tortures which the ſpite of hell, and rage of the world could inflict on them.

It is in fine, this Holy Spirt, which is the ſole Author and ſpring of all true delight, of all real content within us; of that unſpeakable joy in believing, that gayety of hope, that ſatisfaction in well doing; the partaking of his ſociety, influence and conſolation is indeed the moſt delicious repaſt, and richeſt cordial of our ſoul; the neareſt reſemblance, the ſweeteſt foretaſt of Paradiſe.

1 Pet. 1. 8.
Rom. 15. 13.
Heb. 3. 6.

So many, ſo great; yea far more, far greater than, ſhould the time give me leave, I could enumerate or expreſs, are the benefits accruing to us from this moſt excellent gift of God, by him graciouſly conferred upon all good Chriſtians; for which we ſhould correſpondently endeavour with all our hearts to praiſe, and thank him; in all our lives to make grateful and worthy returns for it; eſpecially by well uſing it to the greateſt purpoſes, for which it was beſtowed, of enabling us to ſerve God, of preſerving us from ſin, of conducting us to eternal ſalvation.

Let us earneſtly invite this Holy gueſt unto us, by our Prayers unto him, who hath promiſed to beſtow his Spirit upon thoſe, which ask it; to impart this living ſtream to every one, which thirſteth after it; let us willingly receive him into our hearts, let us treat him with all kind uſage, with all humble obſervance. Let us not exclude him by ſupine neglect, or rude reſiſtance; let us not grieve him by our perverſe and froward behaviour toward him: let us not tempt him by our fond preſumptions, or baſe treacheries; let us not quench his heavenly light and heat by our foul luſts and paſſions: But let us admit gladly his gentle illapſes; let us hearken to his faithful ſuggeſtions; let us comply with his kindly motions; let us demean our ſelves modeſtly, conſiſtently, and officiouſly toward him; that we may ſo do, God of his infinite mercy grant unto us, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; to whom with the ſame Holy Spirit for ever be all glory, and praiſe. Amen.

Luke 11. 13.
John 7. 37, 38, 39.
Acts 7. 51.
Eph. 4. 30.
Iſa. 63. 10.
Acts 5. 9.
1 Theſ. 5. 19.

O God the ſtrength of all them, that put their truſt in thee, mercifully accept our prayers; and becauſe through the weakneſs of our mortal nature we can do no good thing without thee, grant us the help of thy grace, that in keeping of thy commandments we may pleaſe thee both in will and deed, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

SER-

UMI

A DEFENCE OF THE
B. TRINITY.

Trinity Sunday, 1663.

Φύσει μὲν ἅπας λόγος σαθρὸς καὶ εὐκίνητος, καὶ διὰ τὸν ἀντιμαχόμενον λόγον ἐλευθερίαν οὐκ ἔχων· ὁ δὲ περὶ Θεοῦ τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον, ὅσῳ μεῖζον τὸ ὑποκείμενον, καὶ ὁ ζῆλος πλείων, καὶ ὁ κίνδυνος χαλεπώτερος· καὶ γὰρ νοῆσαι χαλεπὸν, καὶ ἑρμηνεῦσαι ἀμήχανον, καὶ ἀκοῆς κεκαθαρμένης ἐπιτυχεῖν ἐργωδέστερον. Greg. Naz. Orat. 26.

COL. III. 2.

Set your Affections on things above.

Φρονεῖτε τὰ ἄνω.

FOR underſtanding this Apoſtolical Precept, two Particulars muſt be conſidered; firſt the Act, φρονεῖν (which is rendred to ſet our Affections) then the Object, τὰ ἄνω, things above; theſe we briefly ſhall explain.

The word φρονεῖν doth primarily, and alſo according to common uſe, denote an advertency, or intent application of the mind upon any Object: Of the mind, that is, of a man's Soul, eſpecially of its rational part; ſo as to include the powers of Underſtanding, Will, Affection, Activity; whence it may imply direction of our Underſtanding to know; of our Will to chuſe and embrace; of our Affection to love, deſire, reliſh; of our Activity to purſue any good (real or apparent) which is propoſed: according to which moſt comprehenſive ſenſe (ſuting the nature of the thing) I do take the word, ſuppoſing that St. Paul doth enjoin us to employ all our mental Faculties in ſtudy, choice, paſſion, endeavour upon ſupernal things.

The τὰ ἄνω (things above) may be ſo taken, as to import all things relating to our ſpiritual Life here, or our future ſtate hereafter; the which do either actually ſubſiſt above in Heaven, or have a final reference thither: ſo they may comprize, 1. The ſubſtantial Beings, to whom we ſtand related, owe reſpect, perform duty. 2. The ſtate and condition of our ſpiritual Life here, or hereafter, as we are Servants and Subjects of God, Citizens of Heaven, Candidates of Immortal Happineſs. 3. Rules to be obſerved, Qualities to be acquired, Actions to be performed, Means to be uſed by us in regard to the ſuperior Place and State.

Of theſe things the incomparably Principal and Supream, the τὸ ὑπερέχον, is the ever moſt Glorious and Bleſſed Trinity; to the minding of which this Day is peculiarly dedicated, and the which indeed is always the moſt excellent, moſt beneficial, moſt comfortable Object of our Contemplation and Affection; wherefore upon it I ſhall now immediately fix my Diſcourſe.

The Sacred Trinity may be conſidered, either as it is in it ſelf wrapt up in unexplicable folds of Myſtery; or as it hath diſcovered it ſelf operating in wonderful methods of Grace towards us.

As it is in it ſelf, 'tis an Object too bright and dazling for our weak Eye to faſten upon, an Abyſs too deep for our ſhort Reaſon to fathom; I can only ſay, That we are ſo bound to mind it, as to exerciſe our Faith, and expreſs our Humility, in willingly believing, in ſubmiſſively adoring thoſe high Myſteries which are revealed in the Holy Oracles concerning it, by that Spirit it ſelf, which ſearcheth the Depths of God, and by that only Son of God, who reſiding in his Father's Boſom, hath Ἐκεῖνος ἐξηγήσατο. Joh. 1. 18. thence brought them forth, and expounded them to us, ſo far as was fit for our capacity and uſe: And the Lectures ſo read by the Eternal Wiſdom of God, the Propoſitions uttered by the Mouth of Truth it ſelf, we are obliged with a docile Ear, and a credulous Heart, to entertain.

That there is one Divine Nature or Eſſence, common unto Three Perſons incomprehenſibly united, and ineffably diſtinguiſhed; united in Eſſential Attributes, diſtinguiſhed by peculiar Idioms and Relations; all equally infinite in every Divine Perfection, each different
Joh. 10. 38. from other in order and manner of ſubſiſtence; that there is a mutual
14. 10. inexiſtence of one in all, and all in one; a communication without any
17. 21. deprivation or diminution in the Communicant; an Eternal Generation, and an Eternal Proceſſion, without precedence or ſucceſſion, without proper cauſality or dependence; a Father imparting his own, and the Son receiving his Father's Life, and a Spirit iſſuing from both, without any diviſion, or multiplication of Eſſence: theſe are Notions which may well puzzle our Reaſon in conceiving how they agree, but ſhould not ſtagger our Faith in aſſenting that they are true; upon which we ſhould meditate, not with hope to comprehend, but with diſpoſition to admire, veiling our Faces in the preſence, and proſtrating our Reaſon at the feet of Wiſdom ſo far tranſcending us.

There be thoſe, who, becauſe they cannot untie, dare to cut in ſunder theſe ſacred Knots; who, becauſe they cannot fully conceive it, dare flatly to deny them; who, inſtead of confeſſing their own infirmity, do charge the plain Doctrins and Aſſertions of Holy Scripture with impoſſibility. Others ſeem to think they can demonſtrate theſe Myſteries by Arguments grounded upon Principles of natural Light; and expreſs it by Similitudes derived from common Experience. To repreſs the Preſumption of the former, and to reſtrain the Curioſity of the latter, the following Conſiderations (improved by your Thoughts) may perhaps ſomewhat conduce.

1. We may conſider, that our Reaſon is no competent or capable Judg concerning Propoſitions of this nature: Our Breaſt (as Minutius ſpeaketh) is a narrow Veſſel, that will not hold much Underſtanding; 'tis not ſufficient, nor was ever deſigned to ſound ſuch depths, to deſcry the radical Principles of all Being, to reach the extreme poſſibilities of things. Such an intellectual Capacity is vouchſafed to us as doth ſute to our degree (the loweſt Rank of Intelligent Creatures) as becometh our Station in this inferiour part of the World, as may qualify us to diſcharge the petty Buſineſſes committed to our management, and the facile Duties incumbent on us: but to know what God is, how he ſubſiſteth, what he can, what he ſhould do, by our natural perſpicacity, or by any means we can uſe, farther than he pleaſeth to reveal, doth not ſute to the meanneſs of our Condition, or the narrowneſs of our Capacity; theſe really are the moſt elevated Sublimities, and the abſtruſeſt Subtilties that are, or can be in the nature of things; he that can penetrate them, may erect his Tribunal any where in the World, and pretend juſtly that nothing in Heaven or Earth is exempted from his Judgment; But in truth, how unfit our Reaſon is to exerciſe ſuch univerſal Juriſdiction, we may diſcern by comparing it to our Senſe; it is obvious that many Beaſts do (by advantage of a finer Senſe) ſee, hear, ſmell things imperceptible to us; and were it not very unreaſonable to conclude that ſuch things do not exiſt, or are in themſelves altogether inſenſible, becauſe they do not at all appear to us? Is it not evident, that we ought to impute their imperceptibility (reſpecting us) to the defect of our Senſe, to its dulneſs and groſſneſs, in regard to the ſubtilty of thoſe Objects? Even ſo may Propoſitions in themſelves, and in regard to the capacity of higher Underſtandings (for there are gradual differences in Underſtanding, as well as in Senſe) be true and very intelligible, which to our inferior Reaſon ſeem unintelligible, or repugnant to the Prenotions with which our Soul is imbued; and our not diſcerning thoſe Truths, may argue the blindneſs and weakneſs of our Underſtanding, not any fault or inconſiſtency in the things themſelves; nor ſhould it cauſe us any wiſe to diſtruſt them, if they come recommended to our belief by competent Authority.

Nobis ad intellectum pectus anguſtum eſt, &c. Min. F. Τὸν μὲν οὖν ποιητὴν, καὶ πατέρα τοῦδε τοῦ παντὸς εὑρεῖν τε ἔργον, καὶ εὑρόντα εἰς πάντας ἀδύνατον λέγειν. Plato in Tim.

To ſuch purpoſes indeed the Holy Scripture frequently doth vilify our Reaſon and Knowledg: Every man (ſaith Jeremiah) is brutiſh in Jer. 10. 14.
knowledg. The Lord (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) knoweth the thoughts of men Pſal. 103.14.
(of wiſe men, as St. Paul quoteth it) that they are vanity. Vain man 1 Cor. 3. 10.
(ſaith he in Job) would be wiſe, tho man be born like a wild Aſſes Colt; Job 11. 12.
(that is, however we affect to ſeem wiſe, yet to be dull as an Aſs, to be wild as a Colt, is natural to us.) My thoughts (ſaith God in the Pro- Iſa. 55. 8.
phet) are not your thoughts, nor are your ways my ways: for as the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo are my ways than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. God's Wiſdom is as the Heavens, the higheſt and top of all Wiſdom; Man's as the Earth, beneath which there is no degree, but that of Hell and Darkneſs: We therefore in this reſpect are unfit to determine concerning things ſo exceedingly ſublime and ſubtile.

2. We may conſider, that not only the imperfection of our Reaſon it ſelf, but the manner of uſing it doth incapacitate us to judg about theſe matters. Had we competent skill to ſail in this deep Ocean, yet we do want a Gale to drive us, and a Compaſs to ſteer our Courſe by therein; we have not any firm grounds to build our Judgment on, or certain Rules to ſquare it by. We cannot effectually diſcourſe or determine upon any Subject, without having Principles homogeneous and pertinent thereto (that are ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ συγγενείᾳ, cognate and congruous to the Subject-matter, as the Philoſopher ſpeaketh) upon which to found our Argumentation. Now all the Principles we can have, are either originally innate to our Minds; or afterward immediately infuſed by God, or by external Inſtruction from him diſcloſed to us; or acquired by our Experience, and obſervation of things incurring our Senſe; or framed by our Reaſon, comparing thoſe means; of which the three former ſorts are moſt arbitrarily communicated, and both for number and kind depend upon the free pleaſure of him, who diſtributeth them according to a meaſure ſutable to each man's occaſions, eſtimated by himſelf: how many thoſe are, and how far they may qualify us to judg, or diſcourſe about thoſe tranſcendent Matters, is hard to define; but moſt certainly they never can claſh with one another; no Light in any manner imparted by God can obſcure the Doctrine declared by him, no Doctrine can thwart Principles inſtilled by him. The latter ſorts appertain only to material and ſenſible Objects; which therefore can only enable us to deduce, or to examine Concluſions relating to them; and being applied to things of another kind, are abuſed, ſo as to become apt to produce great miſtakes: As for inſtance, moſt Antient Philoſophers obſerving, that the Changes and Viciſſitudes in Nature were generally, by the ſame Matters, undergoing ſeveral Alterations, or putting on different Shapes; and that Bodies once being in reſt, did uſually conſiſt in that ſtate, until by impulſe of other Bodies they were put into motion, did thence frame ſuch Axioms, or Principles of Diſcourſe, Ex nihilo nihil fit; and Quicquid movetur, ab alio movetur: which Propoſitions, ſuppoſing them true in relation to the preſent Conditions and Powers of ſenſible things, yet were it unlawful to ſtretch them unto Beings of another kind and nature (to Beings immaterial and inſenſible,) or to infer thence generally, that in the utmoſt poſſibility of things there is not any creative, or any ſelf-motive Power: Even as from the like Premiſes it would be vain to conclude, that there be no other Beings ſubſiſtent beſide thoſe which ſtrike our Senſes, or diſcover themſelves by ſenſible Effects. In like manner, it cannot be reaſonable out of Principles drawn from ordinary Experience, about theſe moſt low and imperfect things, to collect, that there can be no other kind of Unions, of Diſtinctions, of Generations, of Proceſſions, than ſuch as our own groſs Senſe doth repreſent to us: Reaſon it ſelf more forcibly doth oblige us to think that to ſublimer Beings there do pertain modes of Exiſtence and Action, Unions and Diſtinctions, Influences and Emanations of a more high and perfect kind, ſuch as our coarſe Apprehenſion cannot adequate, nor our rude Language expreſs; which we, perhaps, have no Faculty ſubtile enough to conceive diſtinctly, nor can attain any congruous Principles, from which to diſcourſe ſolidly about them: to judg of theſe things, if we will not againſt the Philoſopher's Rule, μεταβαίνειν εἰς ἄλλο γένος, ſhift kinds, or uſe improper and impertinent Arguments, we muſt compare ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, ſo as to draw Concluſions about Spirituals only from Principles revealed by God's Spirit, the ſole Maſter of Spiritual Science; ſo alſo as to expreſs them not ἐν διδακτοῖς ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, in terms deviſed by human Wiſdom, but in ſuch as the Holy Spirit hath ſuggeſt-

Annal. I. 7.

Ὡς ἑκάστῳ Θεὸς ἐμέρισε μέτρον. Rom. 12. 3.

Id quod Deus eſt, ſecundum id quod eſt nec humano ſermone edici, nec humanis auribus percipi, nec humanis ſenſibus colligi poteſt. Novat. de Trin. cap. 7.

Ὠνομάσαμεν γοῦν, ὡς ἡμῖν ἐφικτὸν, ἐκ τῶν ἡμετέρων τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ. Naz. Or. 37. de Sp. S.

Cùm quæritur quid tres, magnâ inopiâ humanum laborat eloquium; dictum eſt tamen tres perſonæ, non ut illud diceretur, ſed nè taceretur. Aug. de Trin. 5. 9.

Κύριον ὄνομα τῶν νοητῶν καὶ ἀσωμάτων οὐδέν. Naz. Orat. 45. (ad Evagr.)

1 Cor. 2. 13.
Πνευματικὰ πνευματικοῖς συγκρίνειν.

ſuggeſted; for ψυχικὸς ἄνθρωπος, a man endowed merely with common Senſe (or natural Reaſon) cannot δέχεσθαι, apprehend, or perceive thoſe things of God, which only the Spirit of God doth know. To improve and preſs which Conſideration farther,

3. We may conſider the weakneſs and ſhortneſs of our Reaſon, even about things moſt familiar and eaſy to us; the little or nothing we by our utmoſt diligence can attain to know concerning their intrinſick Eſſences, their Properties, their Cauſes and manners of production. What do we more commonly hear, than earneſt Complaints from the moſt induſtrious Searchers of natural Knowledg concerning the great obſcurity of Nature, the difficulty of finding Truth, the blindneſs of our Mind, and impotency of our Reaſon? And ſhould they be ſilent, yet Experience plainly would ſpeak how difficult, if not impoſſible, it is to arrive unto any clear and ſure knowledg of theſe common Objects; ſeeing the moſt ſedulous Inquiries, undertaken by the choiceſt Wits for above two thouſand Years, have ſcarce perhaps exhibited one unqueſtionable Theorem in Natural Philoſophy, one unexceptionable Maxim of Ethical Prudence or Policy; all things being ſtill expoſed to doubt and diſpute, as they were of old, when firſt Admiration and Curioſity did prompt men to hunt after the Cauſes of things; the moſt however that after all our care and toil we can perceive doth not exceed ſome faint Colours, ſome ſuperficial Figures, ſome groſs effects of things, while their radical Properties, and their immediate Cauſes remain inveloped, and debarred from our ſight in unacceſſable Darkneſs. Shall we then, who cannot pierce into the nature of a Peble, that cannot apprehend how a Muſhroom doth grow, that are baffled in our Philoſophy about a Gnat, or a Worm, debate and decide (beyond what is taught us from above) concerning the preciſe manner of Divine Eſſence, Subſiſtence, or Generation? I do (ſaith St. Chryſoſtom) eat Meats, but how they are divided into Flegm, into Blood, into Juice, into Choler, I am ignorant; theſe things which every day we ſee and taſte, we do not know; and are we curious about the Eſſence of God? We are (as * Ariſtotle himſelf, no Dunce, no Idiot, doth confeſs) but Owl-eyed, πρὸς τὰ τῇ φύσει φανερώτατα πάντων, in regard to things naturally moſt evident, and palpable; and can we be ſuch Lynceus's, as to ſee through the fartheſt Receſſes of Infinity? Hardly (ſaith the Wiſdom of Solomon) do we gueſs aright of things upon the earth, and with labour do we find the things that are before us; but the things that are in heaven, who hath ſearched out? Yea, and the genuine Solomon himſelf, I ſaid I will be wiſe, but it was far from me; that which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out? What is more remote, what more profound, than God's Nature, who then can find it out? ſooner with our hands may we touch the extreme ſurface of the Skies, ſooner with our Eyes may we pierce to the Center of the Earth: So it is expreſly told to us in Job; Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? canſt thou find out the Almighty to perfection? it is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper than hell, what canſt thou know?

Κενούσθω σοι τὸ φιλότιμον ἐν ἀκινδύνοις. Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

Βρώματα ἐσθίω, τὸ δὲ πῶς μερίζονται εἰς φλέγμα, εἰς αἷμα, εἰς χυμὸν, εἰς χολὴν, ἀγνοῶ· ταῦτα ἃ περιβλέπομεν καθ᾽ ἑκάστην ἡμέραν ἐσθίοντες ἀγνοοῦμεν, καὶ τὴν οὐσίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ πολυπραγμονοῦμεν; Chryſ. Περὶ ἀκαταλήπτου. α.

* Ariſt. Met. 2. 1.

Sap. 9. 13.

Eccleſ. 7. 23

Job 11. 7.

4. It may be conſidered, that we daily ſee and obſerve things, which, did not manifeſt Experience convince us of their being, we ſhould be apt to disbelieve their poſſibility; Senſe no leſs than Faith doth preſent us with Objects, to bare Reaſon improbable and unconceivable; ſo that ſhould we attend to the Scruples injected thereby, we ſhould hardly take things for poſſible, which we behold exiſtent; we ſhould diſtruſt the greateſt Evidence of Senſe, and by our Logick put out our Eyes. Who would believe, that, did he not every day ſee it; who can conceive how, altho he ſeeth it, from a little, dry, illſavoured, inſipid Seed thrown into the Earth, there ſhortly would riſe ſo goodly a Plant, endewed with ſo exact figure, ſo fragrant ſmell, ſo delicate taſte, ſo lively colour; by what Engines it attracteth, by what Diſcretion it culleth out, by what Hands it mouldeth its proper aliment; by what Artifice it doth elaborate the ſame ſo curiouſly, and incorporate it with it ſelf? What Virtue could we imagine in Nature able to digeſt an earthy Juice into the pellucid clearneſs of Chryſtal, into the invincible firmneſs of a Diamond? Who would not be an Infidel, did not his ſight aſſure him of the Miracles atchieved by that blind plaſtick force, which without Eye or Hand doth frame ſuch varieties of exquiſite Workmanſhip, unimitable, and far ſurpaſſing the skill of the greateſt Artiſt? That a little Star, from ſo vaſt a diſtance, in a moment, ſhould make impreſſion on our Eyes, repleniſhing with its Light or Image ſo ſpacious a Region all about it, were we blind we ſhould hardly believe, we ſcarce could fancy: How, without knowing the Organs of Speech, or the manner of applying them, without any care or pain imployed by us, we ſo conform our Voice, as to expreſs what Word, what Accent we pleaſe; how we do this, or that we can do it, as it will confound our Thought to imagine, ſo it would ſtagger our Faith to believe, did not our Conſcience perſuade us that we can, and do ſpeak. It is upon occaſion very commonly ſaid, I ſhould never have believed it, had I not ſeen it; and that men ſpeak ſo in earneſt, many ſuch Inſtances declare. Now if we can give credit to our Senſe againſt the ſuffrage or ſcruple of our Reaſon in things not ſo diſcoſted from our capacity of Knowledg, ſhall we not much more yield our Belief unto God's expreſs Word in things ſo infinitely diſtant from it? If common Experience can ſubdue our Judgments, and compel us to a belief of things incredible, ſhall our Reaſon demur at ſubmitting to Divine Authority? If the dictate of our Conſcience doth convince us, 1 John 3. 20. ſhall not we much more ſurrender to the Teſtimony of God, who is greater than our Conſcience, and knoweth all things? If we do believe, becauſe we ſeem to know by ſeeing our ſelves; we ſhould rather believe, becauſe we ſurely know by hearing from God: for Senſe may deceive us, and often needeth correction from Reaſon; God cannot deceive, and Reaſon often is by him corrected: which leadeth me to a farther Conſideration, that

5. The Propoſitions clearly delivered unto us by God himſelf, are upon many accounts more unqueſtionably true, more credible than the Experiments of any Senſe, or Principles of any Science: whence if there happen to ariſe any ſeeming Conteſt between theſe, a precedence is due to the former, in derogation to the latter; it is fit that we rather give our Eyes and our Ears, our Fancies and our Reaſons the lie, than any wiſe, by diffidence to his Word, put an affront on God; (for to 1 Joh. 5. 10. disbelieve him, is, as St. John telleth us, to give him the lie.) 1 Cor. 1. 25. Τὸ μωρὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the folly of God (as St. Paul ſpeaketh; that is, the Points of Faith declared by God, which ſeem moſt irrational, and croſs to the Decrees of Humane Wiſdom) is σοφώτερον τῶν ἀνθρώπων, wiſer wiſer than men, that is, more aſſuredly conſonant to real Truth, than our moſt undoubted Theorems of Science, and moſt current Maxims of Policy. God is the Father of all Lights, both of that which immediately ſhineth from Heaven, and of that which glimmereth here below; he is the Fountain of all Truth, whether natural or ſupernatural: but his Light and his Truth he conveyeth into us by manners different; ſome Light ſtreameth directly from him, other cometh obliquely, being refracted through divers mediums, or reflected from ſeveral Objects upon us; the firſt ſort muſt needs be more bright, and more pure, ſhould be more powerful and efficacious upon our Minds: the latter is often blended with material Tinctures, is weakned by the interruptions it meeteth with, loſeth of its purity and its force by the many Conduits it paſſeth through, by the many Shades it mixeth with. Obſervations of Senſe do often prove fallacious, and their not ever doing ſo, dependeth upon divers Conditions, a right temper of the Organ, a fit diſpoſition of the Medium, a juſt diſtance of the Object; ſo that Concluſions derived from them cannot be ſo abſolutely certain, nor conſequently the Principles grounded on them: but Divine Revelation is not obnoxious to ſuch Conditions; as the Doctrines revealed are in themſelves ſimply true, according to the higheſt pitch of neceſſity, becauſe Supreme Wiſdom doth conceive them, and Truth it ſelf doth vent them; ſo the manner of declaring them muſt be competent, becauſe God himſelf doth chuſe, and uſe it; there plainly needeth no more, than yielding an attentive Ear, and skill in the Language wherein they are expreſſed, to ſecure us from Error, and uncertainty about them: So that well might St. Auſtin ſay, that in other things our Conjecture is exerciſed; but Faith alone doth aſſure our Mind.

Ad cætera exercemur per fortaſſe; at cùm de rebus fidei agitur, ibi eſt certè ſine fortè. Aug.

There have been thoſe, you know, who have not only advanced Doubts concerning Propoſitions atteſted to by cleareſt Senſe, and inferr'd by ſtrongeſt Diſcourſe; but have by their argute Cavillations bid fair to ſhake the Foundations of all Humane Science: but I never heard of any, who believed a God to be, that di[illegible]nteſt the infallible Truth of his Oracles: Socrates we may be ſure (his excellent Scholar aſſuring us) who was ſo incredulous, as to diſclaim all pretence to Wiſdom or Science, being Author of the famous Saying, Hoc tantùm ſcio; yet greatly did rely upon Divine Significations, and Teſtimonies, ſo deemed by him, and ſuch as he could come at; alledging, that who followeth the Conduct of his own Reaſon, inſtead of God's Direction, chuſeth a blind and ignorant Guide, before one that beſt ſeeth, and knoweth the way: He, ſaith the * Hiſtorian, deſpiſed all Humane Conceits in reſpect of God's Advice.

'Απομν. α.

* 'Αὐτὸς δὲ πάντ' ἀνθρώπινα ὑπερεώρα πρὸς τὴν παρὰ τῶν θεῶν ξυμβουλίαν.

He that formeth the eye (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ſhall not he ſee? he that planted the ear, ſhall not he hear? he that teacheth man knowledg, ſhall not he know? He that indued us with all our knowing Faculties, and preſideth over us in the management of them, ſhall not he ſupereminently know all that we can? muſt not they in reaſon continue ſubordinate to his Direction? Should they not always diſcern and judg under correction by him, with an appeal and ſubmiſſion reſerved to his better Judgment?

Pſal. 94. 9.

I might adjoin, that the Object and the End (as well as the Author and the Manner) of Divine Revelation, doth argue it to ſurpaſs all Reaſon, and all Senſe, in certainty and credibility; for Senſe and Reaſon converſe wholly, or chiefly about Objects material and mutable; Revelation about immaterial and immutable things: They direct us in Affairs concerning this Tranſitory Life. This leadeth us toward Eternal Felicity; to miſtake about thoſe Objects, to miſcarry in thoſe Affairs, is in it ſelf of little, in compariſon of no importance: but to judg rightly about theſe things, to tread ſafely in theſe paths, is of infinitely vaſt concernment; a ſmaller competency therefore of Light and certainty might well ſuffice to the purpoſes of Reaſon and Senſe, but to Faith the greateſt degree of aſſurance is worthily due, and ſeemeth requiſite. But farther,

6. Not only the conſideration of this Myſtery, but of all the Divine Attributes, will in like manner extort from our feeble Reaſon the Queſtion of Nicodemus, How can theſe things be? (John 3. 9.) they will all of them equally puzzle our ſhallow Imagination, and baffle our ſlender Underſtanding: For who can imagine, or underſtand, how God's Immenſity doth conſiſt with his perfect Simplicity; or that without any parts he doth coexiſt to all poſſible extenſion of Matter; being all here, and wholly there, and immenſely every where? Who can apprehend his Indiviſible Eternity, or how all ſucceſſions of Time are ever preſent to him, and ſubject to his view; ſo that he is not older now than he was when the World began, nor younger than he will be after innumerable Ages are paſt; ſo that he foreſeeth the moſt contingent Events, depending upon Cauſes in their nature arbitrary and indeterminate? Who can fancy, how out of mere Nothing, or out of extreme Confuſion and Indiſpoſedneſs the World could be created, and framed into ſo goodly order, by a mere act of Will, or by the bare ſpeaking of a word? How without any diſtraction of thought he governeth Affairs, attending to the infinite varieties of Thoughts, Words, and Actions occurring here; (Confeſſ. 3. 11.) and ità curans univerſos tanquam ſingulos, ità ſingulos tanquam ſolos, as St. Auſtin ſpeaketh? How he is truly ſaid to reſolve and to reverſe, to love and hate, to be pleaſed and grieved, all without any real change, or ſhadow of alteration? how he ſuffereth many things to happen, which extremely diſpleaſe him, and which he can eaſily hinder; and doth not effect many things, which are much deſired by him, and very feaſible to his Power? why to equal Men he diſtributeth his Gifts ſo unequally; affording to divers abundant means of becoming happy, leaving others deſtitute of them? What Wit of man can reconcile his infinite Benignity with his moſt ſevere Decrees; or compoſe the ſeeming differences between his Mercy and his Juſtice? Many ſuch Perfections and Diſpenſations of God we muſt ſtedfaſtly believe, becauſe they are plainly taught in Scripture; to diſtruſt them being to renounce Chriſtianity; to deny them being to raſe up the very foundations of our Religion: yet he that ſhall with his utmoſt attention of mind endeavour to conceive how they can be, or how they conſiſt together, according to our ordinary notions of things, and the vulgar meaning of words, applied by us to theſe inferior matters, ſhall find himſelf gravelled with innumerable ſemblances of contradiction, plung'd in depths inſcrutable, involved in Labyrinths inextricable.

What in practice the Croſs of Chriſt was, a ſcandal to Jews (men dull, but obſtinate, and invincibly poſſeſſed by vain Prejudices) and folly to Greeks (men of wit and ſubtilty, but overweeningly conceited of them) that in Speculation may a great part of Divine Truths be,

apt

Πλέον ἐςὶ τοῦ περὶ Μουσικῶν ἀμούσους, καὶ πολεμικῶν ἀστρατεύτους διαλέγεσθαι, τὸ τὰ θεῖα καὶ δαιμόνια πράγματα διασκοπεῖν ἀνθρώπους ὄντας, οἷον ἀτέχνους τεχνιτῶν διάνοιαν ἀπὸ δόξης καὶ διανοίας κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς μετιόντας. Plut. de ſera num. Vind.

apt to ſtumble froward and arrogant Men; but as there, ſo here, bleſſed are they who are not ſcandalized; whom no fond Scruple, or haughty Conceit can pervert from readily embracing all neceſſary Verities; ſuch are thoſe we pointed at, which if without extreme folly and impiety we cannot reject, or be diffident of, altho ſurmounting our Conceit, and dazling our Reaſon; then upon the ſame account, with like facility, we muſt ſubmit our Faith to the Doctrines concerning the B. Trinity, ſtanding upon the ſame Authority.

7. Laſtly, We may conſider and meditate upon the total Incomprehenſibility of God in all things belonging to him; in his Nature, his Attributes, his Decrees, his Works and Ways; which all are full of depth, myſtery, and wonder. God inhabiteth, φῶς ἀπρόσιτον, a light inacceſſible to the dim and weak ſight of mortal Eyes; which no man hath ſeen, or can ſee: No man (as he told his Servant Moſes) can ſee his face (the very exteriour appearance of him) and live: He is a conſuming fire, that will ſcorch, and devour ſuch as by raſh Inquiries approach too near him; the ſight ('tis ſaid) of the glory of the Lord, was like devouring fire in the ſight of the children of Iſrael. Even thoſe ſpiritual Eagles, the quick and ſtrong-ſighted Seraphims, are obliged to cover their faces, as not daring to look upon, nor able to ſuſtain the fulgour of his immediate preſence, the flaſhes of Glory and Majeſty iſſuing from his Throne: And the moſt illuminate Secretaries of Heaven, unto whom Secrets were diſcloſed, into which Angels themſelves were ambitious to pry, were ſometimes nonpluſt in contemplation of God's Attributes and Actions; being in their aſtoniſhment forced to cry out, ὦ βάθος· O the depth of the riches of the wiſdom and knowledg of God! Even his Methods of exterior Providence are inſcrutably Myſterious; his judgments are ἀνεξερεύνητα, like inexhauſtible Mines, to the bottom whereof we cannot any wiſe dig by our inquiry; his paths are ἀνεξιχνίαστοι, ſo obſcure as not to be traced by any footſteps of our Diſcourſe; his gifts are ἀνεκδιήγητοι, not to be interpreted, or expreſſed by our Language. And if all concerning God be thus incomprehenſible, why ſhould any thing ſeem incredible? why out of ſo many unconceivable Myſteries do we chuſe ſome, reprobate others? wherefore do we ſtretch our Judgment beyond its limits to things ſo infinitely exceeding it? Why do we ſuffer our Reaſon to be pragmatical, unjuſtly invading the Office not belonging thereto; intruding into things which it hath not ſeen, nor can comprehend; thoſe ſecret things which belong to the Lord our God, and the comprehenſion whereof he hath reſerved unto himſelf?

These Conſiderations may ſuffice in ſome manner to ſhew, that S. * Chryſoſtom had reaſon to exclaim ſo much againſt the madneſs, as he ſtileth it, of thoſe, who do πολυπραγμονεῖν τὴν οὐσίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, are buſily curious in ſpeculation about the Eſſence of God; daring, τοῖς οἰκείοις ὑποβάλλειν λογισμοῖς, to ſubject Divine Myſteries to their own Ratiocinations: that S. Baſil's Advice was wholeſom, μὴ περιεργάζεσθαι τὰ σιωπώμενα, not to be meddleſom about things, about which Holy Scripture is ſilent: That another Antient Writer did ſay no leſs truly, than † prettily, Εἰ γὰρ αἱ οἰκονομίαι ἀκατάληπτοι, πολλῷ μᾶλλον αὐτός. Chryſ. ἀκατ. α.

1 Tim. 6. 16.

Exod. 33. 20.

Deut. 4. 24.

Exod. 24. 17.

Scrutator majeſtatis opprimetur à gloria. Aug.

Iſa. 6. 2.

1 Pet. 1. 12.

Rom. 11. 33.

Τὶ πρὸς οὐρανὸν ἀνίπτασαι πεζὸς ὤν; τί καὶ σὺ μετρεῖς τῇ χειρὶ τὸ ὕδωρ, καὶ τὸν οὐρανὸν σπιθαμῇ, καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν δρακί; Greg. Naz. Or. 26.

2 Cor. 9. 15.

Δόξῃ ἐστὶν ἀχώρητος, μεγέθει ἀκατάληπτος, ὕψει ἀπερινόητος, σοφίᾳ ἀσυμβίβαστος, ἀγαθωσύνῃ ἀμίμητος, καλοποιΐᾳ ἀνεκδιήγητος. Theoph. ad Autol.

Col. 2. 18.

Deut. 29. 29.

* Μανίαν γὰρ ἔγωγε εἶναι ἐσχάτην φημὶ φιλονεικεῖν εἰδέναι τί τὴν οὐσίαν ἐστὶν ὁ Θεός. Chryſ. περὶ ἀκαταλ. α.

Cogitemus ſi valemus, ſi non valemus credamus. Aug. Serm. 5. de Temp.

Τίς ἡ τοιαύτη ὑμῶν φιλονεικία τῶν ἐφθορέστεων ὥστε ἀνθρωπίνῃ φρονήσει ὑπὲρ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην νόησιν ὁρίζεσθαι; Athan. T. 1. 625.

† Zeno Veronenſ.

prettily, that in theſe matters curioſitas reum facit, non peritum; we may eaſilier incur blame, than attain skill by nice inquiry into them:
that many of the Fathers do with great wiſdom diſlike and diſſuade the ſearching τὸ πῶς, the manner of things being true, Σαφὴς ἔλεγχος ἀπιστίας τὸ πῶς περὶ Θεοῦ λέγειν. Expoſ. fid. apud Juſt. M. or poſſible, as a ſuſpicious Mark, or a dangerous Motive of Infidelity: that St. Paul's Rules, φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ
Rom. 12. 3. σωφρονεῖν, to be wiſe ſo as withal to be ſober, and modeſt;
1 Cor. 4. 6. and μὴ φρονεῖν ὑπὲρ ὃ γέγραπται, not to conceit any thing without warrant of Scripture; are in this Caſe moſt eſpecially to be heeded: that, according to St. Peter's Admonition, 1 Pet. 2. 2. Ἐπιποθεῖν. we ſhould, as new born babes (unprepoſſeſſed with any Notions or Fancies of our own) long for, and greedily ſuck in the ſincere milk of the word; not diluting it with baſer Liquors of Humane Device: that where God doth interpoſe his definitive Sentence, our Reaſon hath nothing to do but to attend and ſubmit; no right to vote, no licence to debate the matter; its Duty is to liſten and approve whatever God ſpeaketh, to read and ſubſcribe to whatever he writeth; at leaſt in any Job 40. 4. caſe it ſhould be mute, or ready to follow Job, ſaying, Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth. In fine, The Teſtimony of God, with a ſufficient clearneſs repreſented to the Capacity of an honeſt and docile Mind (void of all partial reſpects, and clear from all ſorts of prejudice; loving Truth, and forward to entertain it; abhorring to wreſt or wrack things, to uſe any fraud or violence upon any Principle, or ground of Truth) the Teſtimony of God, I ſay, ſo revealed, whatever exception our ſhallow Reaſon can thruſt in, ſhould abſolutely convince our Judgments, and conſtrain our Faith. If the Holy Scripture teacheth us plainly, and frequently doth inculcate upon us (that which alſo the uniform courſe of Nature, and the peaceable government of the World doth alſo ſpeak) that there is but One True God; if it as manifeſtly doth aſcribe to the Three Perſons of the Bleſſed Trinity the ſame Auguſt Names, the ſame Peculiar Characters, the ſame Divine Attributes (eſſential to the Deity) the ſame ſuperlatively admirable Operations of Creation and Providence; if it alſo doth preſcribe to them the ſame ſupreme Honours, Services, Praiſes and Acknowledgments to be paid unto them all; this may be abundantly enough to ſatisfy our Minds, to ſtop our Mouths, to ſmother all Doubt and Diſpute about this High and Holy Myſtery. It was exceeding Goodneſs in God, that he would condeſcend ſo far to inſtruct us, to diſcloſe ſo noble a Truth unto us, to enrich our Minds with that τὸ ὑπερέχον τῆς γνώσεως, that moſt excellent knowledg of himſelf; and it would be no ſmall Ingratitude and Unworthineſs in us any-wiſe to ſuſpect his Word, or pervert his meaning; any-wiſe to ſubject his Venerable Oracles to our rude Canvaſes and Cavils. In fine, The proper employment of our Mind about theſe Myſteries, is not to ſearch and ſpeculate about them, to diſcourſe flippantly and boldly about them; but with a pious Credulity to embrace them, with all humble Reſpect to adore them.

I have thus endeavoured in ſome meaſure to defend the Outworks of the Orthodox Doctrine concerning the Bleſſed Trinity; it was beſide my intent to inſiſt ſo long thereon, but the Matter did ἐφέλκεσθαι, was ſo attractive, that I could not wave ſhewing my Reſpect thereto.

I proceed now to that which I principally deſigned, the propoſing briefly ſome practical Conſiderations, apt to excite us to the exerciſing our Underſtanding and Affections upon thoſe wonderful Diſpenſations of Grace and Mercy, vouchſafed to us by the Holy Trinity, either conjunctly, or (as they κατ' οἰκονομίαν are expreſſed) ſeparately.

We firſt ſhould carefully ſtudy, and duly be affected with that gracious Conſent, and (as it were) Confederacy of the Glorious Three in deſigning and proſecuting our good; their unanimons agreement in uttering thoſe three mighty words of favour to Mankind, Faciamus, Redimamus, Salvemus, Let us make Man out of nothing, let us recover him from Sin and Perdition, let us crown him with Joy and Salvation; we ſhould, with grateful Reſentments, obſerve them conſpiring to employ their Wiſdom in contriving fit Means and Methods to exert their Power in effectual accompliſhment of what was requiſite to the promoting of our Welfare, the reſcue of us from all Miſery, the advancing us to the higheſt degree of Dignity, and inſtating us in the moſt perfect Condition of Happineſs of which our Nature is capable; in proſecution of that gracious Deſign, which their joint Goodneſs had projected for us. More diſtinctly,

1. We ſhould ſet our Mind on God the Father, before the Foundation of the World from all Eternity, pleaſing to forecaſt with himſelf the Creation of us, and communication of his own Image to us; endowing us with moſt excellent Faculties of Body and Soul; ſubjecting the viſible World to our uſe and governance; placing us in a ſtate of great accommodation and delight; permitting us to fall, that he might raiſe us to a higher and better Condition, reſolving to ſend his own dear Son from his Boſom to procure and purchaſe the Redemption of Mankind; preparing and diſpoſing the World for the reception of ſo great a Mercy, by a general teſtification of his Patience and Beneficence (giving ſhowers, and fruitful ſeaſons, and filling the hearts of men with Act. 14. 17.
food and gladneſs) but more eſpecially by prophetical Promiſes, Predictions, and Prefigurations; alſo ſuffering the generality of Mankind ſo to proceed in its ways, as might render it ſenſible of its Error and Unhappineſs, of the need and benefit of a Deliverance; then in the ful- Gal. 4. 4.
neſs of time, when the creature did earneſtly groan, and long for its re- Rom. 8. 22.
covery from vanity and ſlavery, actually ſending his only Son, and clothing him with Humane Fleſh, that converſing with us, he might diſcover to us his gracious Intentions toward us, might confirm the truth thereof by Miraculous Works, might inſtruct us by his Heavenly Doctrine and Holy Life in our Duty, and the Terms of our Salvation; then freely delivering him over unto Death, and accepting his Paſſion as a Sacrifice expiating our Sins, and meriting his Favour toward us: Then raiſing him as the firſt fruits from the Dead, ſetting him at his right Hand, inveſting him with Authority to govern and ſave thoſe who ſincerely would believe in him, and faithfully obey him; alſo ſending and beſtowing his Holy Spirit to dwell in them, to conduct, confirm, and comfort them in the ways of Truth and Righteouſneſs. Theſe, with manifold other intercurrent Paſſages of gracious Providence, aſcribed to God the Father, we ſhould ſeriouſly mind, and ſo reſent, as to be raviſhed with admiration of his Mercy; to be enflamed with love of his Goodneſs; to be poſſeſſed with gratitude toward him; to become thorowly devoted to his Service.

2. We ſhould likewiſe mind the Bleſſed Son of God concurring with his Father in all his purpoſes of Love and Mercy toward us, in making all things, and ſuſtaining them by the word of his power; but eſpecially in his (toward the freeing us from the deſperate Miſeries, Corruptions, and Slaveries, into which we were plunged) aſſuming Humane Nature, leading therein a troubleſom and toilſom Life, for our benefit and inſtruction; undergoing a bitter and ſhameful Death, for the atonement of our Sins, and reconciliation of us to Divine Favour; purchaſing great and precious Promiſes, procuring high and glorious Privileges for us; aſcending into Heaven to prepare us Manſions of Bliſs; interceding for us with God, and pouring from above manifold Bleſſings upon us: the aſtoniſhing Miracles of Goodneſs, of Wiſdom, of Condeſcenſion and Patience, diſplayed in the management of which Undertakings for us, what Heart can well conceive, what Tongue can utter? What amazement ſhould it produce in us to conſider the brighteſt efflux of Divine Glory eclipſing and ſhrowding it ſelf under ſo dark a Cloud of Mortal Frailty; the moſt High ſtooping into the quality of ſo mean a Creature; the Firſt-born, and Heir Apparent of Heaven deſcending from his Throne of Eternal Majeſty, and voluntarily degrading himſelf into the form of a ſervant, clad in Rags, worn with labour and travel, expoſed to contempt and diſgrace? To reflect upon the great Creator and Sovereign Lord of all the World, who reared the Heavens, and founded the Earth, who poſſeſſeth and upholdeth all things, needing himſelf a Shelter, pinched with Want, taking Alms from his Slaves, and paying Tribute to his Subjects; to contemplate the Son of God willingly ſtiling himſelf the Son of Man, really ſubjecting himſelf to the Duties, the Neceſſities, the Infirmities of Humane Nature; ſuffering the coarſeſt Hardſhips, and extremeſt Diſaſters thereof; all this upon freeſt Choice, with full Contentment, and perfect Submiſſion to ſo mean and ſo diſtaſtful a Condition.

We may obſerve with how admirable Goodneſs he did vouchſafe to converſe with a froward Generation of Men, to inſtruct a ſtupid and indocile ſort of People, with all ſorts of Beneficence to oblige an Incredulous, Inſenſible, and Ingrateful Crew; with how invincible a Meekneſs and Patience he endured the contradiction of ſinners; the ſcornful Reproaches, the wrongful Calumnies, the ſpiteful and cruel Uſages of the envious and malicious World; being to the higheſt extremity deſpiſed, hated, maligned, and abuſed by thoſe whom he had moſt highly honoured, moſt affectionately loved, and conferred the greateſt Favours upon. We may with aſtoniſhment contemplate that ſtrange Conteſt between Divine Patience, and Humane Wickedneſs, ſtriving which of them ſhould excel; when we do peruſe and weigh thoſe enigmatical Paſſages, God accuſed by Man of Blaſphemy, the Eternal Wiſdom aſperſed with Folly, Truth it ſelf impleaded of Impoſture, eſſential Love made guilty of Miſchief, and ſupreme Goodneſs ſtiled a Malefactor; Infinite Power beat down, and trampled upon by Impotent Malice; the Judg of all the World, the Fountain of all Authority and Right, Arraigned, Condemned, and Executed for Injuſtice; the deſire of all Nations rejected by his own Country and Kindred; the Joy of Paradiſe (whoſe lightſom Countenance doth cheer Heaven it ſelf) almoſt overwhelmed with Grief, uttering lamentable Groans, tortured with grievous Agonies; the very Heart of God bleeding, and the ſole Author of Life expiring.

We may farther ſtudy Jeſus with a hearty Compaſſion, and Tears guſhing from his inmoſt Bowels, pitying not theſe his own Sufferings, but for the Vengeance for them due and decreed unto his Perſecutors; we ſhould mark him excuſing their Fault, and praying for their Pardon; dying willingly for their Good, when he died violently by their Hand; paſſionately deſiring their Salvation, when they maliciouſly procured his Deſtruction.

We ſhould mind all the Actions of the Son of God, our Saviour, with the moſt wiſe Grounds, endearing Circumſtances, and precious Fruits of them; his Birth, Life, Death, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion, Interceſſion; as containing Inſtances of the greateſt Charity and Humility poſſible ſhewed unto us, as Arguments of the greateſt Love and Gratitude due from us: Mind them we ſhould moſt ſeriouſly, ſo as to be heartily affected with them, ſo as to eſteem worthily the tranſcendent Honour done us by God aſſuming our Nature, and exalting us to a conjunction with the Divine Nature; ſo as to be deeply ſenſible of our Obligation to ſo immenſe a Charity, that could do and ſuffer ſo much for us, without any Deſert of ours, yea notwithſtanding our exceedingly bad Deſerts, our Rebellions and Enmities againſt him; ſo as to deteſt the heinouſneſs of our Sins, that needed ſo mighty an Expiation, that cauſed ſo horrid a Tragedy; ſo as not to neglect ſo great Salvation ſo frankly offered, ſo dearly purchaſed for us; not to fruſtrate the Deſigns of ſo unconceivable Love and Goodneſs, ſo as to obey readily ſo gracious a Maſter, to follow carefully ſo admirable an Example; ſo as in imitation of him, and for his ſake, to be meek, and humble in heart, and in deed, ſeeing he did ſo infinitely condeſcend and abaſe himſelf for us; to be patient and ſubmiſſive to his Will, who ſtooped ſo low, and ſuffered ſo much for us; ſo as to bear a general affection to Mankind, grounded like his, not upon any particular Intereſts, nor limited by any partial Reſpects, but extended freely, in real deſire and intention, toward all; liberally to impart the good things we poſſeſs, and patiently to brook the Croſſes we meet with, and heartily to forgive the Offences done to us; for that he freely did part with the greateſt Glories of Eternity, with the higheſt Dignities, and the richeſt Treaſures of Heaven for our ſake; when we were enemies in our minds by wicked works, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, guilty of numberleſs grievous Offences againſt him, by his Blood redeeming us from Wrath, reconciling us to the Mercy and Favour of God.

3. We ſhould alſo meditate upon the Bleſſed Spirit of God, with equal Goodneſs conſpiring, and co-operating with all the Purpoſes, to all the Effects of Grace, which conduce to our everlaſting Happineſs; more eſpecially as the Repairer of our decayed Frames, the Enlivener of our dead Souls, the Infuſer of ſpiritual Light into our dark Minds, the Kindler of ſpiritual Warmth into our cold Hearts; the Raiſer of ſpiritual Appetite to Righteouſneſs, and the Reliſh of Goodneſs in our ſtupid Senſes; the Imparter of ſpiritual Strength and Vigour to our feeble Powers; the Author of all Liberty, looſing us from Captivity under the Tyranny of Satan, from Vaſſalage unto our own Carnal Luſts and Paſſions; from ſubjection to a hard and imperious Law, from bondage to the Terrors of a guilty Conſcience: As him, that enableth us to perform the Duties, and accompliſh the Conditions required of us in order to our Salvation, that qualifieth us to be the Sons of God by his effectual Grace, and aſſureth us that we are ſo by his comfortable

Teſtimony; as our ſure Guide in the ways of Truth and Virtue; our faithful Counſellor in all Doubts and Darkneſſes; our mighty Support and Succour in all Needs, in all Diſtreſſes; our ready Guard againſt all Aſſaults and Temptations; our ſweet Comforter in all Sadneſſes and Afflictions: Who doth inſinuate good Thoughts, doth kindle holy Deſires, doth cheriſh pious Reſolutions, doth further honeſt Endeavours in us: Who only doth inflame our Hearts with Devotion toward God; doth encourage, doth inable us to approach unto him; doth prompt us with fit matter of requeſt, and becometh Advocate for the good ſucceſs of our Prayers.

We ſhould mind him as the Root of all good Fruits growing in us, or ſprouting from us; the Producer of all good Habits formed in us, the Aſſiſter of all good Works performed by us; the Spring of all true Content that we enjoy; to whom our embracing the Faith, our continuing in Hope, our working in Charity, the purification of our Hearts, the mortification of our Luſts, the ſanctification of our Lives, the Salvation of our Souls are principally due, are moſt juſtly aſcribed: As the Author and Preſerver of ſo ineſtimable Benefits unto us, let us mind him; and withal let us conſider him as condeſcending to be a loving Friend and conſtant Gueſt to ſo mean and unworthy Creatures; vouchſafing to attend over us, to converſe with us, to dwell in us, rendring our Souls holy Temples of his Divinity, Royal Thrones of his Majeſty, bright Orbs of his heavenly Light, pleaſant Paradiſes of his bliſful Preſence; our Souls, which naturally are profane Receptacles of wicked and impure Affections, dark Cells of falſe and fond Imaginations, cloſe Priſons of black and ſad Thoughts: As graciouſly ſtriving with us, ſtriving to open and enter into our Hearts, barr'd againſt him by vain Conceits, and vicious Inclinations; ſtriving to reclaim us from the Sins and Errors into which we are wont heedleſly or wilfully to precipitate our ſelves; ſtriving to make us, what in all duty and wiſdom we ſhould be, capable of Divine Favour, and fit for Everlaſting Happineſs: As enduring patiently manifold Diſpleaſures and Diſreſpects from us; our rude Oppoſitions againſt him, our frequent neglects of his kind Admonitions; our many perverſe Humours, wanton Freaks, wilful Miſcarriages, and unworthy Dealings toward him.

We ſhould thus mind the Bleſſed Spirit of God, and be ſutably affected toward him; ſo as to be duly ſenſible and thankful for thoſe unexpreſſible Gifts and Bleſſings indulged to us by him, ſo as to render all Love and Reverence, all Praiſe and Glory, all Obedience and Service to him, eſpecially ſo as to admit him cheerfully into our Hearts; yea, invite him thither by our earneſt Prayers; to make fit preparations for his Reception and Entertainment (by cleanſing our Hearts from all loathſom Impurities) to make him welcom, and treat him kindly, with all civil reſpect, with all humble obſervance; not grieving and vexing him by our diſtaſtful Croſneſs and Peeviſhneſs, not tempting him by our fond Preſumption, or baſe Treachery; not extinguiſhing his heavenly Light, and holy Fire by our foul Luſts, our damp Stupidities, our cold Neglects, our Neglects to foment and nouriſh them by the food of devout Meditations and zealous Deſires: So let us mind him, as to admit gladly his gentle Illapſes, to delight in his moſt pleaſant Society, to hearken to his faithful Suggeſtions, to comply with all his kindly Motions, to behave our ſelves modeſtly, conſiſtently, and officiouſly toward him.

Thus ſhould we employ our Mind, all the Faculties of our Soul, our Underſtanding, our Will, our Affections upon the Bleſſed Trinity, the Supreme of all things above, the Founder of that Celeſtial Society, into which as Chriſtians we are inſerted; the Sovereign of that heavenly Kingdom to which we are Subjects; the Fountain of all the Good and Happineſs we can hope for in that ſuperior State. To the performance of which Duty there be Arguments and Inducements innumerable; 'tis the moſt proper and connatural Object of our Mind, that for which it is fitteſt, and for which it was deſigned; the beſt Intelligible, and infinitely moſt Amiable of all things. 'Tis the moſt worthy and noble Object, the contemplation of which, and affection whereto, will moſt elevate, moſt enrich, moſt adorn, moſt enlarge the Capacities, and moſt ſatisfy the Appetites of our Souls: 'Tis the moſt ſweet and pleaſant Object, wherein all Light, all Beauty, all Perfection do ſhine; the ſight and love of which do conſtitute Paradiſe, and beatify Heaven it ſelf. 'Tis the moſt uſeful and beneficial Object of our Mind, which will beſt inſtruct us in what it concerneth us to know, will moſt incite us to thoſe Duties which we are obliged to perform, will be moſt efficacious to the begetting in us thoſe Diſpoſitions, which are indiſpenſably requiſite for the attainment, and for the injoyment of that Everlaſting Bliſs; unto which that one Bleſſed Unity, and Glorious Trinity in its infinite Mercy bring us all: To whom be all Glory, Honour, and Praiſe for ever. Amen.

FINIS.

A

A TABLE OF THINGS, or Chief MATTERS Contained in the Third Volume.

A.

ABraham. His Faith, and Example, Page 14, 15.

Adam's Sin and Puniſhment, 356, 357. Chriſt, the ſecond Adam, 384.

Afflictions. Their Original, and End, 40. Benefits of them, 71. how born, 149, 155, 156.

Αὐτάρκεια. The Import of the word, Philip. IV. 11. 43.

B.

BAptiſm. 392, 408.

Baptiſm and Faſting, &c. of Chriſt, the End of them, 29. Divine Grace beſtowed in Baptiſm, 453.

Biſhops, and their Preſidency, 240.

C.

CAllings, as referred to Chriſtians, 201. The Reward of Induſtry therein.

Canaanites. The Divine Proceedings againſt them vindicated, 358.

Cenſures of the Primitive Church, 225.

Cenſures of men how born, 257.

Ceremonies of the Chriſtian Church, 248.

Charity, 250, 252, 296, 316, 459, 460.

Charity. How wrought in us, 26, 126. The delight therein, 115, 116. Directions concerning it, 306.

Chriſt's Living, Abiding, Dwelling, being Formed in us; The meaning of thoſe Expreſſions in H. Scripture, 25.

Chriſt's Example. The Tranſcendent Excellence and Power thereof, 24. his Divinity, 29, 32. Humanity, 385. Sufferings, 393, &c.

Church Governours and Government, 238. Obedience to them in ſeq. Diſcipline, 242, 256, 257.

Civility, and Courteſie. Non-compliance therein by whom thought to bring an Imputation on Religion, 336, &c.

Clemens Romanus, called by Clemens Alexandrinus an Apoſtle, 394. A Character of his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, Ibid. Euſebius and S. Hierom's Note of its being antiently read in Churches, Ibid.

Compliance. Baſe Compliance, 327.

Company (Good) A Remedy againſt Diſcontent, 93.

Company (Bad) The Danger, and Remedy, 326.

Conſcience (Good) The Comfort, 89, 90, 112, 115.

Conſideration. The Benefits, 95.

Converſation, and outward Demeanour, the great Care to be had thereof on a Religious and Civil Account, 304, &c.

Of Contentment, 43, &c. The Neceſſity. Arguments to it. The Nature and way to it.

Covetouſneſs. Remedies againſt it, 133, 144.

Courage, enflamed by Example, 20.

Curioſity. The Power, 23.

Cuſtom. 131, 308, 336, 338. in Sin, the danger, 158, 162.

D.

DEacons, 243.

Death, 136. Benefits, 151. 77, 78. Conquered by Chriſt, 419. The wiſdom to Philoſophers in Contemplation thereof.

Death of Friends, 64, 65.

Death. No Knowledg after Death of Things done in this World, 146.

Degrees of Rewards hereafter, 174.

Delay in Matters of Religion. The Danger, 161, &c.

Deluge, (Univerſal) 357.
Deſpair, 72.
Detraction. Fear thereof how prejudicial to Religion, 332.
Diſhonour, how born, 62, 63.
Diſcipline, of the Primitive Church, 242, 256, 257.
Devotion (Publick and Private) 308, 309.
Devotion. An excellent Means of Contentment, 91.

E.

ECcleſiaſtical Government, 247.
Eccleſiaſtical Orders. Their Antiquity, and Diſtinction, 236.
Empires. Their Ruin from neglect of Religion, 338.
Emulation. Power thereof to Virtue, 21.
Endeavours (Our own) neceſſary to Happineſs, 35, 184, 185.
Enemies. Love of them, 50, 53, 100, 101, &c. 387.
Enemies. A Chriſtian's Enemies, how conquered by Chriſt, 416, &c.
Enemies of Religion, 35, 55.
Envy, 330.
Evil-ſpeaking, 125.
Examination. The Duty, 122.
Example. Humane Example, no ſure Pattern, 27, 28.
Example. The Power, 33.
Examples of Piety, how they exceed all others in Valour, 23.
Examples. The Delight in conſidering them, 23.
Example of Chriſt. The Neceſſity of the Imitation, 416. V. 447. We are to give, and follow good Example, 14, 15. The Advantages, and how much Examples exceed Precepts, in ſeq.
Example (Publick) The Power and Practice, 315.

F.

FAith, 5, 6. The Power, and Neceſſity.
Faith in God. The Benefit, 96.
Faith. Open Confeſſion thereof, 113, 114, 313.
Faith. The Foundation of Joy, 114.
Faith. Implicit Faith, 270, 271.
Fathers of the Church, 266.
Favour of God. The Happineſs, 68.
Fear of God, 336, &c.
Fear. The Prejudice to Religion from baſe Fear, 336.
Feſtivals (Jewiſh and Chriſtian) their Inſtitution, Correſpondence, and End, 423, 448, 449.
Flattery, 127. how avoided, 319.
Flood (Univerſal) The Goodneſs of God therein, 349, &c.
Fortune, and Chance, 46.
Friendſhip obtained and preſerved by Religion, 324.

G.

GEntleman's Calling, and Duty to be induſtrious, 212, &c.
Ghoſt. Gift of the Holy Ghoſt, the Benefits, 448, &c.
Gift of God in Scripture, whence ſometimes ſaid to be the Effect of Man's Induſtry, 183.
Glorifying God, 310, 312.
God's Attributes, 110, 229.
God's Exiſtence, 349.
Of the Goodneſs, the Patience of God, 348.
Goſpel. Some Nations Ignorance thereof, no Argument againſt Divine Providence, or Univerſal Redemption by Chriſt, 397.
Governours, and Guides Spiritual, 236, &c.
Grace of God. The Danger of not asking, and uſing the ſame, 168, 169. V. 398.
Grace. Communication and Effects in Heathens, 401.
Grace. When a Perſon in a State of Grace, 420, 421.
Great Men. Their Conditions in this World, 83.

H.

HAppineſs. Future Happineſs. Degrees therein, 90, 91, 174.
Happineſs. Conſideration of Future Happineſs, a ſovereign Means of Content, 90.
Happineſs (Future) ſought after from remembrance of this Life's ſhortneſs, and vanity, 54, 190.
To Hear, in Scripture-language, is to obſerve attentively, 120.
Hearers. The Character of truly Religious Hearers, 297.
Heart to be kept with all Diligence, 118. The Heart by whom ſuppoſed to be the chief Seat of the Soul, 119.

Hereſy, 270.
Hieruſalem. Deſtruction thereof no Argument againſt Providence, 360, 361.
Holy Life how advanced, 130, 134. from conſideration of our Hearts, and Chriſt's Example, 26.
Honeſty and Publick Behaviour, 303.
Honour and Reputation of the World, 140, 141, 374.
Honour in Religion, 375, 432.
Honour how attained and kept, 197, 222.
Hope, 73, 194.
Hope in God, 5, 115.
Hope Reviſed by Example, 19.
Humility, 94, 128, 129, 229, 286.
Hypocrites, 326, 335.

I.

I Can do all things through Chriſt that ſtrengtheneth me, Phil. 4. 13. 7.
Jeſus. The Name, and Extent of the Salvation by Him, and whence, 456.
Idleneſs. The Miſery, 93.
Jews diſeſteem of Chriſt, 104, 105, 107. Their Rejection by God, 228.
Ignorance in this State, 227, 229, 230.
Ignorance. Miſchiefs ariſing from Ignorance of our ſelves, 224.
Ignorance of Mankind before Chriſt's coming, 430.
Imitation of Chriſt, 15, &c.
Impartiality. A Divine Attribute, 364, &c.
Incomprehenſibility of God, 471.
Indifferency in Matters of Religion, the danger, 346.
Induſtry. Nature thereof, and Arguments to it, 180, &c.
Injuries. Chriſt the Example of bearing them, and our Duty of Imitation, 97.
Intentions. The beſt alone unavailable, 4.
Joſeph's Example. The Power, 16.
Joy. True Joy wherein, 109, 423.
Iſraelites. God's great goodneſs to them in his Judgments, 358.
Judgment (Future) 41, 160, 171. All to appear, 371.
Judgments of Almighty God, the Unſearchableneſs of them, 228, &c.
Juſtice of God, 364.
Juſtice to our Neighbour, 316, &c.

K.

Kings. The Honour and Obedience to them, 380.
Knowledg. Secular Knowledg. The Imperfection, Vanity, when ſeparated from Religious Performances, 146, 286.
Knowledg how gained, 200, 220, 266.
Knowledg. Divine Knowledg, 55, 123, 215. The Delight, and other Benefits, 195, 196.
Knowledg of our ſelves, the Benefits therein, 121.

L.

Learning. Vid. Knowledg.
Laws. Humane Laws, 135.
Laws. Man governed by them, 121.
Life. Shortneſs thereof, 75. Uſe of this Conſideration, and of our latter End, 136. & in ſeq.
Life. To know the fixed Time thereof, thought no fit Subject of Prayer, 137.
Life preſent and future compared, 153.
Life (Preſent) a State of Probation, 80.
Life (Wicked) the Scandal and Danger, 314.
Life. An H. Life, 456.
Love. The Power, 33.
Love of our Neighbour, 2, 94, 361.
Loving of God. The Duty, and Joy there is in it, 116.

M.

Martyrdom, 332.
Magiſtrates, 378, 379.
Mercy of God in Pardon of Sin, 348, &c.
Merit. All pretended Merit diſclaimed, 5, 6, 9, 58, 59, 60, 286, 287.
Midraſh, or myſtical Senſe in the Old Teſtament, the Antient Jews conſtant Belief thereof, 443.
Miniſters of the Goſpel. Their Character, and Titles, 265. The Duty of their Hearers, 261. The Influence of Miniſters Example, 272, 273.
Miracles, 194.
Modeſty, how preſerved by Example, 23. what kind blameable, 327.
Monarchy, and Democracy, 241.
Moſes's Example, 17, 18. The Power thereof.

N.

Name. What is ſignified by doing any thing in another's Name, 1. All to be done in Chriſt's Name, ibid.
Name. A good Name attended by being Religious, 322.
Nativity of Chriſt, 423.
Neceſſity, and Chance, 72.
Novatians, and Pelagians; their Pretenſions to Perfection, and Purity noted, 287.

O.

Obedience to God, 161, 162. muſt be Univerſal, 310.
Omniſcience of God, 350.
Omnipreſence of God. The Reſtraint on Sin thence, 134.
Ordination, 241, &c.
H. Orders among the Jews, ibid.
Original Sin, 6, 350, &c.

P. Pagans.

P.

PAgans. Their State with reference to receiving Divine Grace, 401. and whether ſuch Grace is conſiſtent with the want of an Explicit Knowledg of Chriſt, and Faith in him, 402. & in ſeq.

Paſſion of Chriſt. The infinite Merit thereof, 395. The ſame foretold in the Old Teſtament, 423.

Patience, and how learnt, 97. St. Paul's Character and Example, 17.

Peace in Religion, 110.

Pelagians, 453.

Pentecoſt. The Feaſt, 449. how obſerved by the Jews of old, 450.

Performances to be judged by their Natures, not by contingent Events, 396.

Perſecution, 332.

Perſeverance in Religion, 344.

Pleaſures of the World. The Vanity, 96, 145.

Poor. God's peculiar care of them, 371.

Poverty. How born, 62.

Power. Worldly Power, the Character of it, 140.

Power in God only originally, and eſſentially, 3, 4.

Practice of Religion ſhewed from Examples, 20.

Prayer, 133. Its Power, 91, 92. What to pray for, 133, 134. To be offered to God alone in the Name of Chriſt, 8, 9. The neceſſity of Prayer, 10, 11.

Prayer, its Benefit againſt Diſcontent, 91.

Prayer promoted by Knowledg of our ſelves, 129.

Prayers. Whence to be made for all Men, 386.

Predeſtination, 375.

Prejudice, 32, 35, 36, 95, 261, 411, 457.

Preſumptuous. This World made for them, A ſaying of the Rabbins, 78.

Pride, 299, 301.

Prieſts, 240. or Presbyters.

Profeſſion. Outward Profeſſion only unavailable, 3, 4.

Promiſes of the Goſpel, 114, 183.

Profanation of God's Name by a wicked Life, 311, &c.

Prophecies and Types of Chriſt, 438, &c.

Prophets. Antient Prophets, 268.

Propoſitions deliver'd by God, on many accounts more credible than Experiments of Senſe, 468, 469.

Proſperity of the Wicked, 78, 142. No Argument againſt Divine Providence, 142.

Proſperity. The Miſeries, if without Virtue, 71.

Provide Things honeſt in the ſight of all Men (Rom. 12. 17.) 303.

Providence of God, 6, 7. Truſt therein, 289, 290. Vid. 56, 350.

Providence (Unſearchable) 230. Inferences thence, 236, 237.

Publick. What Duties to be publickly performed, 307, 308.

Purgatory, a Fable, 76.

To Put on Chriſt; the Explanation of the Phraſe in H. Scripture, 25.

R.

REaſon, of what things it is no competent Judg, 465, 470. Not to be us'd in ſome things, were it more perfect, 466. Its ſhortneſs with reſpect to things moſt familiar to us, 467, 468. Ought to conſent to what the Scripture teaches, 472.

Redemption by Chriſt, 8. Univerſal, 399. & in ſeq. The mighty love therein.

Regeneration, 455.

Rejoice Evermore, 1 Theſſ. 5. 16. 109.

Religion. The Practice whence eaſy, 110, 189.

Remiſſion of Sins, 168, &c.

Repentance, 110. Danger of the Delay, 161, &c.

Reproach undergone by the knowledg of our ſelves, 129. The vain Fear of being reproached for the ſake of Religion, 358.

Reputation in Religion, 322.

Reſignation of the Will, vid. Will, 34, &c.

Reſolution, 20, 128, 129.

Retirement, 318.

Revenge, and Love of our Enemies, 54, 100, 101, 126.

Rewards (Future) 90. Degrees thereof, 76.

Riches, 142, 143; 185. how gained, with their Advantages, 212, &c.

Be not Righteous overmuch, Eccleſ. 7. 18. The fooliſh Plea ſome aſſume from thence, 346.

S.

SAcraments, 392.

Sacrilege, 224.

Saints. The Power of their Example, 24. Who ſo called, 310.

Saviour of all Men, &c. 380. What the Term Salvation implies, ibid.

Schiſmaticks, 242, &c.

Scholars Calling, 218. & in ſeq.

Scoffing at Religion.

H. Scriptures. The Rule of Faith and Manners, 27. How they are to be taught and heard, 233. An earneſt Exhortation to the ſtudy of them, and practice, 122, 271. and the duty of ſearching.

Self-conceit. The Sin, 280.

Self-confidence and Complacence, 289, 290.

Self-intereſt, 293.

Self-Love. The Kinds of it, 125. and how to be avoided, 302.
Self-Praiſe, and thinking of our ſelves, 300, 301.
Self-Will, 291.
Servants of Chriſt, who, and why? 3.
Shame in Sin, 166, 167, 331, 333.
Sin. The Miſery, 93.
Sincerity, 159.
Singularity. Fear of Imputation thereof in Matters of Religion, and the Folly, 342, 343.
Sloth, 171.
Society. The Good thereof, 295.
Societies flouriſh by obſervation of Religion, 322.
Socinians, 453.
Solomon. The Account of his Wiſdom, 220, &c.
Stoicks. Their Doctrines, and Example, 149.
Soul of Man. Motions thereof how order'd, 134, 135. The Duty and Neceſſity of caring for the Soul, 236, &c.
Soul's Activity, 11.
H. Spirit of God, 398. 451. and Gifts, 452.
Spiritual Guides, and Governors, 238, &c.
Sufferings of Chriſt in the old Teſtament, 132.
Sufferings of Chriſt, 37, 38, 39.
Synods.

T.

Talents. Their Improvement, 211.
Teach us to number our days, Pſal. XC. 12.—136. The full Importance of the Words.
Temperance, 189.
Temptations, 36. how conquered, 459.
Thankſgiving, 9, 57, 58.
Things above, what meant thereby in Col. 3. 2. 463, 464.
Thoughts, 121, 182. how they work on the Affections, 11. Government of the Thoughts, 136.
Time. Improvement thereof, 157, 175. The Wiſdom therein, ibid.
Times (Good and Bad) 65, 66.
Tongue. Government of the Tongue, 52, 99.
Tradition. Univerſal Tradition, 242.
Trinity. The Glorious Trinity [the great Object of our Faith, tho above our Reaſon, 464. Our Underſtanding and Affections to be employ'd in the contemplation of it, whether conſider'd conjunctly, 473. or ſeparately, 473—477.
Truſt in God, 5, 114.
Truth. Diſcovery thereof, 408.
Types (Antient) and Prophecies, whence it pleaſed Almighty God to make uſe of them, 436, 437.

V.

Vain-glory, 297.
Virtue attained by Induſtry, and inſeparable from it, 187, 206.
Virtue and Vice. The Advantages of the former with relation to this Life, as well as the next, 178, 179.
Union with Chriſt, 26, &c.
Unity. Church Unity, 249.
Uſe. Popular Uſe, no good Argument of Truth or Right, 327.

W.

Watchfulneſs, 120.
How the Will of God our Sanctification, 40.
Will. Freedom thereof, 35, 36.
Will. Submiſſion to the Divine Will, 34, &c. 40.
Be wiſe as Serpents, Mat. 10. 16. 346.
Wiſdom, 187. How attained.
Wiſdom of God, 46.
Wiſdom. Worldly Wiſdom, 346.
World. A Character of this World, 78, 139.
World's Creation and Harmony, declare the Divine Providence, 350.
Worldlymindedneſs, 74, 143. an Occaſion of Diſcontent, 94.
Works. Rewards hereafter according to them, 368.
Worſhip. The Publick Worſhip of Almighty God, 307.

Y.

Youth, and Old Age, 126, 127. compared with regard to Religious Practice, ibid.

Z.

ZEAL, 339, 397.

THE END.

UMI